hundred thousand homes in this country. Mr. Tiemat Fard—he has a brother, John Fard, an artist of great ability—was born in 1826. His father did while he was quite young; but aided by his brother John, who was then working his way to a reputation as an artist in Edinburg, he resolved to follow the bent of his inclination, and study for the same profession.

While a student, he was annually successful in competing for the prizes in various departments of art, and at length succeeded in becoming an associate of the Royal Scottish Academy. From that time his rise began, and among his most successful pictures, may be mentioned, "Scott and his Friends," "The Motherless Bairn," "Rome and the Homeless," "The First Break in the Family," "The Little Mother," and many others that appeal directly to the home sympathies, and mark Mr. Fard in art, what Burns was in poetry—a domestic genius.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, MARCH 17, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE.—We have no travelling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are impostors.

Ourselves.

THIS number finishes the volume, and we take the opportunity of saying a few words about ourselves that may be called egotism, but is truth.

Firstly, we are making a paper that has no equal on this continent. In excellence of engravings, good selection of reading matter, and superior typography, we feel sure that we are in advance of every other, and taking these great advantages into account, we know that we publish the cheapest paper in the country.

With each new volume we have new attractions to offer, and everything that can be procured by enterprise or money will add to them.

With this, we can only say to those who have followed us for years through our improving career, that the coming volume will offer attractions beyond those of all the past; and to those who have not already known how pleasant it is to have a journal like FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER brought each week to their home, this is now the time to take it, and for $4, receive sufficient art and literature for twelve months to satisfy any family.

Getting Out of Mexico.

THE response to the French Emperor's address, by the French Senate, by no means justifies the anticipations of the speedy evacuation of Mexico, which some of our optimist statesmen founded on the very vague declarations of the address—declarations which many of us supposed (time will show with what reason) were merely made to gain time and restrain any practical influence of American opinion, until the overthrow of Republicanism in Mexico should be complete.

The response of the French Senate is couched in the form of an affirmation, that the interests which France went to Mexico to protect will will be hereafter protected—the incident of the overthrow of the Republican institutions of the country being a necessity thereto—and that whatever France may do in the premises will not be through deference to the will or policy of the United States, which are enjoined to observe neutrality and international law; both flagrantly violated by France in going to Mexico, and constantly by remaining there!

We copy the language of the Senate:

"Your Majesty informs us that the memorable expedition to Mexico approaches its termination. It is unbecoming to applaud France that the protection of her commercial interests secured in a vast and wealthy market now restored to security. As regards the United States, if, from mere consideration, the presence of the French flag in America appears to them less opportune than at a period of civil war, it illustrates periods of their history, the firm tone of the communications made by your Majesty's Government has demonstrated with haughty and menacing language will not decide us to withdraw. A promise is sacred; to move only at a given time; but the, nevertheless, wishes to remember the ancient friendship between herself and the United States. What your Majesty asks of the United States is mutuality and observance of international law."

In the debate on this address, Marshal Forey, Napoleon's first General in Mexico, and to whom he wrote the famous letter, declaring that his object was to build up a barrier or race in America against the United States—we say this Marshal Forey stated that the French people must not expect to see the French contingent speedily withdrawn from Mexico; that the "high and chivalrous objects" which sent France there were by no means realized; and ended by advising reinforcements, which, according to last accounts, were constantly arriving in Vera Cruz. This is perfectly in harmony with the language of Marshal Bazaine. Napoleon's actual General-in-Chief in Mexico, who says, according to the Journal des Debats, that, "In order that the intervention may be fruitful, we [the French] must remain in Mexico until the boys who are to-day eight years of age become men; for the men of these days are either robbers, unprincipled, or incapable of doing anything good of themselves."

The Constitutionel, the organ of the French Foreign Office, speaks in the same strain—that is to say, it declares that the Emperor will not withdraw until he has accomplished his original objects; one of which he openly avowed to Marshal Forey to be, to put "metes and bounds" on the United States. This paper says:

"The Imperial Government will never yield to intimidation, whether it proceeds from within or from abroad, will make the Emperor relax in his habitual moderation. The moral and material interests of the country. The troops from Mexico will return precisely when the Emperor, after consulting the interests of the throne, namely—without endangering the French interests—we have gone to defend in those distant countries."

The same ideas, or declarations, are embodied in the newspaper La France, also a Government organ:

"We desire that France shall come out of Mexico, but that she shall come out as befits a grand people, in obedience to the injunctions of the time; not shaken, having secured all the interests, moral and material, which called her to those distant shores, as grand and as respected in leaving as she was on her arrival."

It may be said that these expressions are a mere fluidine, a noisy demonstration to cover a retreat and fill the ears of the people while the work of evacuation goes on. But the evacuation does not go on. It is not commenced. On the contrary, fresh French troops are constantly arriving in Mexico. Meantime the nature of the "arrangements," to which the Emperor alluded in his speech, are now on between himself and the "Austrian adventurer," is gradually coming out. The latest and most reliable report is, that France is to furnish transportation, provisions, arms and munitions of war for 100,000 troops, which Maximilian is to recruit in Austria, Belgium and Europe generally. When a sufficient number of these shall reach French shores, then the nucleus—shall have been recruited, then the regular French troops will be withdrawn. In other words, it is plain enough that France has been withdrawing from Rome, or rather pretending to be about to do so, for years, and will do so, perhaps, when the Pope, if ever, shall be able to form for himself a force his own people, and when Italy shall herself not to insist on the incorporation of the Papal States in the Italian Kingdom. France will go out of Mexico in precisely the same way.

1st.—When the will of the people of Mexico shall be effectually crushed, Republican institutions overthrown, and a counterpoise established to the United States.

2d.—When the "Austrian adventurer" shall have secured a sufficiently large army of mercenaries to sustain himself; and,

3d.—When the United States, if not openly recognizing him, shall bind itself not to interfere with him, or permit others to do so!

THE latest number of the Edinburgh Review speaks of "the pleasant town of Poughkeepsie, containing 12,000 inhabitants," as one of a century ago was the site of a few miserable cottages, and had only a solitary building for public worship." Now Poughkeepsie is settled over 150 years ago; and was so large a place 90 years ago that the legislature of the State met there in 1778, and adopted the Articles of Confederation, and the convention which ratified the Constitution of United States sat there, in 1788, and that "a quarter of a century ago" it had a population of 10,000 inhabitants.

MR. FERNANDO WOOD, in response to a letter from Mr. Henry A. Wise, of Virginia, writes:

"The war is now over. Slavery has been abolished. The great questions which made issues between political parties have ceased, and a new and entirely different state of affairs has arisen. Under such circumstances that we shall realize this change and conform to it. It is folly to fight battles over again that are dead, and let the GREAT FUTURE open so brightly and beautifully before us."

A MACON (GA.) newspaper tells us that more than 4,000 colored people, of both sexes and all ages, are enjoying the privilege of instruction in the schools of that city, established by the benevolent of peace, by the charitable people of the North.

IT is comforting to know that the Spanish royal baby, born last month, has received at the font 113 names, "comprehending," so the official papers assures us, "all the inventions of the Most Holy Virgin."

THE following letter from President Johnson, of the date of August last, has found its way into print, and is now invested with special interest:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 16, 1865.

GOV. WM. L. SHARKEY, Jackson, Miss.

I am entitled to say that the next session of Congress will assemble in December next. Your Convention without difficulty, I hope that without delay your Convention will assemble, repeal the secession ordinance, abolishing slavery, and denying to all future pretenders, absolutely and forever, the right to claim it as property. In man; also that they will adopt the Amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery. If you could extend the elective franchise to all persons of color who can read the Constitution of the United States in English and write their names, and to all persons of color who own real estate valued at not less than $250 and pay taxes thereon, you would completely disarm the adversary, and set an example which other States will follow. This you can do with perfect safety; and by thus placing the Southern States in a position to Free persons of color, upon the same basis with the free States. I hope and trust your Convention will do this; and, as a consequence, the radicals, who are wild upon negro franchise, will be completely foiled in their attempts to keep the Southern States from renewing their relations to the Union by not accepting their Senators and Representatives.

ANDREW JOHNSON, President United States.

THE London Spectator, in the course of a caustic and denunciatory criticism of a new poet, remarked: "And this extraordinary production Mr. ——— modestly conceives to be equal to Goethe!" The assiduous publisher managed to make a favorable notice out of this for his advertisement, thus: "Extraordinary production * * * equal to Goethe."

THE following resolutions have been adopted by the House of Representatives, by majorities ranging from 80 to 122. The last of the list was adopted by a vote of 134 ayes to 8 noes:

Resolved—That, in the language of the Proclamation of the President, of May 29, 1865, the rebellion, which was waged by a portion of the people of the United States against the lawful and constituted authorities of the Government thereof, in the most violent and revolting form, but which armed and organized forces have now been almost entirely overcome,' has, in its revolutionary progress, deprived the people of the States in which it was organized of all civil Government."

"Resolved—That, whenever the people of any State are thus deprived of all civil Government, it become the duty of Congress, by appropriate legislation, to enable them to organize a State Government, and, in the language of the Proclamation, to guarantee to each State a republican form of Government."

Resolved—That it is the deliberate sense of the House that the condition of the rebel States fully justifies the President in the exercise of the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus in those States."

Resolved—That it is the deliberate sense of this House that the condition of the rebel States fully justifies the President in maintaining military possession of the United States in those States, and declared to be the thanks of the nation for employing the war power for the protection of the Union citizens and the freedmen in those States."

FEMALE education is not altogether a modern introduction. Queen Elizabeth received, under the instruct- ion of Roger Ascham, a profound knowledge of the learned languages. Abundant evidence of this exists in a comment on Plato, in Greek, written at Oxford. Plutarch, Sallust, Xenophon, Horace, Plutarch and Sophocles; in translations into Latin of two orations of Demosthenes, and a tragedy of Euripides; in a translation from the French of the meditations of the Queen of Navarre; in a translation of the prayers of Queen Catharine of Parr, Italian and French; in a volume of prayers written by herself in French, Italian and Spanish; and lastly, in a Greek oration delivered extempore at Oxford. Prayer are still extant a number of letters and prayers written or dictated by Elizabeth, and some small poems.

THE murrain among cattle in Great Britain has not abated with the winter. Since July last, 190,000 head have been attacked, of which only 15,000 have recovered. The pecuniary loss is estimated at about $20,000,000 in our present currency. History shows us that some of the great murrains of the past have carried off millions of cattle in some countries, and given rise to a desolation by hind. In England, now, it is said, that many farms are nearly abandoned, and property has followed this fearful pestilence where comfort used to dwell. The poor-rates are increasing; rents cannot be paid, and a panic has seized the whole country.

SENATOR DOOLITTLE, in a speech at New Haven, stated that it was the opinion that "at least 1,000,000 negroes perished in the South during the war." Another opinion, he added, had been expressed by Gov. Aiken, of South Carolina, Kendall Hunt, of New Orleans, and other well informed men, that the estimate that 50,000 had perished in battle or of their wounds; "but this has not been the principal source of their destruction. Smallpox and the various diseases that follow the march of armies have prevailed among them to a terrible extent, all the way from the Rappahannock to the Gulf of Mexico. The smallpox has swept them away in camp and on plantations, and everywhere by thousands upon thousands. It is also a fact that the most malignant diseases ever among those not accustomed to attend to the diseases, among themselves, they have, to a great extent, been swept off from the whole people. The masters and those connected with them lost interest in them. They perished by hundreds of thousands. They were appalling facts, and yet they are true. I have no doubt that when we come to take the census of 1870, two-fifths of the whole colored population will have perished."

THE question whether trout will rise to a fly, or fish bite in the night-time, is thus answered by Mr. G. G. Scott, who says he will rise to the fly on a night as dark as Erebus. The experiment has been proven by many here, on nights so dark that the angler could not see his rod-hook, and commenced casting to the Seven Rocks for bass; and the fish responded so generously, that we returned with a basket of fish collected at night, though it was as dark as pitch, and we were forced to land our fish without a gaff or a net, because we could not see them. The fish bore ourselves away when they were biting fiercely."

REPUBLICS are not always ungrateful. Gen. Grant, on the occasion of his late visit to this city, was presented with a purse of $100,000, from a few capitalists, besides a carriage costing $2,000. Since the close of the war, Gen. Grant has been presented as follows:

By citizens of Philadelphia, with a house and furniture, valued at	$30,000
By citizens of Galena, Ill., a house, furniture, and stock, valued at	15,000
With swords and equipments to the value of	10,000
Horses	10,000
Library by citizens of Boston	5,000
In cash from the citizens of New York	100,000
Total	$170,000

The total of this sum is less than the annual income of the estates presented to the Duke of Wellington by the British Government and people.

DURING the great rebellion, the ranks of the New York Seventh Regiment furnished to the army of volunteers, the following colonels: Major-Generals, 3; Brigadier-Generals, 19; Colonels, 22; Lieutenant-Colonels, 47; Majors, 86; Captains, 214; Lieutenants, 194; Surgeons, 7; Chaplain, 1; Adjutants, 18. Total, 561. The New England Guard Battalion, of Boston, furnished about the same proportion of officers. In April, 1861, it numbered 173 men, more than one-half of whom served as officers during the war. Their rank distribution is as follows: Generals, 2; Colonels, 16; Lieutenant-Colonels, 5; Majors, 8; Captains, 32; Lieutenants, 22. Total, 90.

THE prospects of emigration for the current year are very promising. Although, during the war, it was said that emigration was encouraged by high bounties, and that most of the emigrants came over to serve in our armies; yet, for the month of January, of that year, the arrivals were double those of the corresponding month of last year. For the year 1865, the arrivals at this port were 300,000, nearly all Germans, the arrivals for 1866, promise to be little, if any, short of 500,000.

DR. J. H. SALISBURY publishes, in the American Journal of Medical Sciences, an elaborate paper on the cause of fever, in which he asserts that this curse of the richest lands of our country consists in the minute oblong cells of the acne pustilla, plant-like fungi to the lowest order of vegetable organisms, and which are found in all agne districts. The breathing in of the minute cells and spores of these plants, which are elevated in the night exhalations, is, according to him, the cause of the disease. The details of the doctor's experiments are elaborate, and the whole one giving an account of his producing the fever in sound constitutions, by placing these plants at night in a room prepared for the decaying department of two young men, is of special importance. The remedy of quinine is also spoken of as treating the disease, as also included in the article.

A FRENCH lithographer, M. Rigaut, has just published a method for reproducing either old or new lithographs with great ease. The lithograph to be transferred to stone is first laid, face uppermost, on a solution of gum water, whereby all those parts that are not inked absorb water. It is then put between two sheets of blotting-paper, which carry off the excess of liquid; after which the lithograph is laid, face downward, on the stone, to which it adheres perfectly with a little pressure. Upon it about fifty sheets of bad, moistened with one part of nitric acid and ten of water, and the whole is subjected to the action of the press. The process is said to demonstrate through the lithograph, and the stone receives its action equally in all the lights of the picture.

TOWN GOSSIP.

THERE are two days in the year, in this great city of New York, which to the lady part of the congregation, have wondrous significance and deep and shining interest. Those are spring and fall, occurring regularly in the spring and fall. On that day the world of fashion in the aforesaid what it will to allowed to wear the coming year, and where they can get, and what it will cost, and all the minor points in connection with it. They will see the shape of the coming bonnet, and what color will be au fait for trimming. They will know whether Joby's ear is or not, and whether gold trimming is to be worn on them. They will know what style of vest they shall waste money on, and what cut of skirt is and does for popularity. In fact, opening day is a most important occasion for the lady portion of society, and may be announced by the wading milliners and modistes, that the latest portion of our people are agitated, and the time for that sad season each year come on.

To evince the deep sympathies we have in them, we will endeavor to give the ladies outside of New York, and those inside who did not see the opening—some idea of what they will have to wear.

The dress will be worn very full as ever, may be, in the case of bonnets. Dresses will be worn nearly all gored, and the skirts of silk will be much extended in circumference, so as to show the border of the petticoat, which, by the way, is expected to be rich. Failing this short cutting, the dress will be looped with the gilded cord tassels. The best of the new styles in the Madeline gored dress. It is made with the skirts at the waist, the body and skirt in one piece. Theses most stylish are made from buffs, or colors of roses, trimmed with light but bright colored silk. The side-pieces at the hips are trimmed down the skirt, more like coat-tails than sashes, it being the effect that is most successfully produced. These tails or lappets are the same in front, though shorter and narrower. Then there is the "Cyprus" dress, which is looped with the gilded cord tassels, the under dress of the grey or drap popiin, the upper, of the rich silk. The dress dress capes are worn on the shoulders for convenience in putting on, which is a novelty as well as style.

Hoops are not coming in to supersede the gold and silver, which never has been popular in upper-tendom. It consists of ornaments in corset-buckles for the waist and mother-of-pearl earring. Some of these are really beautiful and elegant. As the way of all fashion is to run elegant styles in the above, and at prices that somewhat startle the dealers in them.

The bonnet next: and of these, the styles most approved are "Gipsy," "Azores," "Alsace," and that of "Margaret."

The "Azores" is of white crape, with violet ribbon, and jet or straw ornaments; the crown loose, the curtain at face, and the brim extended a bit about it. The "Margaret" is to supercede the Garland but now worn; it is similar in shape, but larger, and trimmed with velvet and cannons. The "Gipsy" is really a gipsy, with all the old-fashioned attraction of its style and form, just now it seems to rather grate against female sensibility, or whatever it is all supposed to be. It is a bonnet, the very accepted style of the day. They are made of velvet, and the most effective of these are of fancy ribbon, and looking, off the head, very like the scales we see in grocery and other stores for weighing sugar, etc. In fact, they have a reckless appearance; and, consequently, cannot fail to please young female New York.

With cloaks we shall end the fashions: They are to be worn round, this summer, together with talmas and double capes, scalloped on the edges, and bound with material to match the dress. Balmoral skirts are gotten out, and will only be the thing to be worther. In fact, weather, fashion, lace, and other fine affairs will be the theme. We're glad of it.

And that is the end of our lecture upon fashion.

From fashion to those who support them is a natural step, and we intend, therefore, to discuss one of the revelations that are perpetually being made in this great city. Everybody that reads the papers will see advertisements headed, "Divorces obtained Legally and without Exposure."

It seems that this promise of legal pettifoggers has been carried out in numerous cases, and husbands and wives who supposed themselves married, have suddenly found themselves single. It is done in this way: Somebody in New York gets tired of their wife or husband, as the case may be, and wishing a divorce, can call on the agency, and simply arrange the fee. All the rest is left to the agency. The case goes to an Indiana lawyer—and no one in this vicinity can understand what the Western country can turn out in that way—who commences proceedings, urging in the complaint anything that he happens to think of first. The case then goes to a referee—another of the same style of lawyer—who reports, not hearing a word of evidence for the divorcee, who has not been notified, or if they have, it is done in such a way that they cannot understand it. Of course the report is favorable to the application; it goes on the record properly, a copy of the record is forwarded to New York, and the first thing that Mr. or Mrs. Jones or Smith, who have all along been living together quietly, knows, is the information given by their better half that they are divorced. This is a true story, and we mention it, simply to ask our legislators and law-makers if something cannot be done. If there is no balm in Gilead to heal such a domestic dragon, then what does civilization and enlightenment mean?

The theatres this week have been doing something new. The Olympic has given us a new version of "Cinderella; or, the Little Glass Slipper," which is very funny, especially so for the badness—and consequent goodness—of its puns. Mrs. Wood is a charming Cinderella, and the whole thing is more in accordance with the present-day idea of fun than the old edition.

Wallack's has made a great success with "Society," the new comedy, and houses crammed to repletion testify that it suits public taste.

Lucy Rushton has given us "Giralda," a pleasant three-act comedy; well suited to the company, and well suited to public taste, if that is any criterion of excellence.

Miss Lucille Western is making a decided sensation at Wood's Theatre, in "The Child Stealer," and showing all New York that there is something in her besides the mere sensation school.

The National Conservatory of Music, an institution that is doing its perfect share toward educating the musical taste of the people, gave a grand concert on the 3d inst., at Irving Hall, with De Rossi, Massimiliano, Antonucci, the Mollenhauers, and other attractions. A grand overture and sonata of Beethoven's for 64 hands on 16 pianos, by the pupils of the Conservatory, was one of the attractions, and produced an effect indescribable.

JURIES.

MR. EDITOR—In your articles on juries, you seem to favor the decision by majority; but it would not work well. All lawyers of much experience know that, in cases somewhat complex, or difficult of comprehension, the jury, on taking a vote on the case, at first show that only two or three have comprehended it—sometimes only one. This minority explains, over and over, to the majority, until, in the course of 30 or 40 hours, the whole jury get to understand it. This comes from the nature of things. There are more weak than strong minds. For one that is strong and disciplined, there are some scores of mediocres and creatures of mere impulse, prejudice or passion, with whom reason has little or nothing to do. If, in some localities, two or three out of a dozen jurors be capable of understanding a difficult case, it is great luck. But these would be uniformly out-voted in such cases; and if they had no power to check the majority until they could enlighten it, jury trials would soon be intolerable. If the one, two, or three that comprehend, the case fail to convince the majority, it is better the jury should be dismissed for disagreement, than give a wrong verdict. So long as we try by jury, the general safety requires that the brains of that body should be allowed a preponderance, and have a chance, at least, to guide it to a correct conclusion, or prevent a wrong one.

A substitute for a jury has been extensively tried in Chancery Courts, and found very reliable. The Master in Chancery has reduced the testimony to writing, in the presence of the parties or their counsel, and afterward made his report, or rendered his verdict, upon which the court, if no exceptions were filed to the report, proceeded to judge or decree. By this mode, the expense of each witness's deposition, at 10 cents the hundred words, has not averaged over one dollar, probably, in each suit. The witness is not detained, generally, more than one day. In cases appealed, his deposition can be handed up with the rest of the papers, without more expense. If there is error in the report or decree, the testimony stands in writing, by which the error may be corrected. If the court think, on argument of the exceptions to the Master's report, that it is wrong in any respect, they may refer it back to the same or another Master for further examination and report, or to take further testimony and make further report. The Master has full time and opportunity to examine and decide. Counsel may argue the matter to him; and if they have often omitted to do so, it was probably because they thought the Master as capable of understanding it as themselves.

I do not remember of hearing suitors complain of Masters' reports, as finally received and adopted. The cheapness and certainty of this mode of trial ought to have commended it to reformers. It, besides, would prevent much litigation; for how many suits are brought in the hope of a finding of the facts according to the prejudices of the jury? I have heard a lawyer say to his client; "In strictness of law you cannot recover; but there is is no telling what a jury might do." The client is thus induced to bring suit. The lawyer evades responsibility, gets his fee, and wins an opportunity of making a speech, by way of advertising his calling. If the Master, or referee, were bribed, or inclined to be partial, he could not, still, divert the course of justice; for the evidence would be in writing, and taken down under the eyes of the suitors or their counsel. The Judges of the court of last resort would have to be bribed, also, to effect the evil purpose; but who could bribe the public, before whose eyes the recorded testimony could be brought and the Judges themselves arraigned?

The Master, referee, or single juror, whatever his name, would act under a responsibility, which would generally overrule any feeling of malice or friendship for the suitor, were the other checks wanting. It can scarcely be hoped that a majority of the lawyers will favor this plan, for it would diminish their income, as well as their chances for cultivating and displaying their eloquence; though, as a class, they are as patriotic and self-sacrificing as any other. Eloquence is a good thing, but should not cost too much. It, indeed, according to Tacitus, flourishes best where the machinery of Government is disordered, or imperfect, and needs much tinkering. Measures, then, that save wind, must be salutary.

Among the inconveniences to be obviated by the proposed substitute are the many days' attendance of witnesses before they can be examined in open court, the winnowing out of intelligent men, in order to procure the veriest chaff of humanity for jurors, the two to ten hour speeches addressed to jurors to penetrate their supposed stupidity or excite their prejudices, the feeling of but one-twelfth of a proper responsibility by the juror, and the non-existence of a record of the testimony.

G.

FINE ARTS.

WE have delayed noticing one of the finest local paintings which has been exhibited in New York, until the exhibition has closed in which it was offered to public view. We, however, seize this opportunity of putting our opinion upon record. This painting was "A View of New York from Hamilton Ferry, South Brooklyn," and was on exhibition at the Derby Gallery, with the paintings of the Philadelphia Sketch Club. The artist is C. G. Rosenberg, a gentleman well-known both in the literary and musical world; and although he has been for three or four years dealing with the pallet and maulstick, this is the first picture of so ambitious a class which he has painted. It is of very large size, and the drawing, both of the figures and shipping, throughout the canvas, is singularly true and powerful. The rising thunder-storm in the west is painted with marvelous truth, and the expanse of sunset-sky, in the left and centre of the canvas, has a recession which is admirably translated by the brush of the artist. Perhaps the composition of the figures and boats, in the fore-part of the picture, is too much scattered, but if so, the feeling of motion in the picture is benefited by this fault in the composition. Indeed, we have never seen the predominant feeling of action so thoroughly rendered upon any local landscape. If Mr. Rosenberg were to publish this picture as a chromo-lithograph, we feel convinced that he would have a very large sale for it; and we take the liberty of suggesting this, as feeling certain that it will be very valuable, pecuniarily, to him. As the production of one whose contributions to literature must be well-known to the generality of our readers, we feel additional pleasure in pointing out the merits of a work which has earned so large a share of justly eulogistic criticism from the daily and weekly press of this city, and which, in many respects, is a work of decided genius.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—Probably the largest spring in the world is one in the centre of Huntsville, Ala., from which a stream of water flows sufficient to float a 30 ton batteau. It is an object of great interest to the people of the neighborhood and visitors. Another spring in Florence, in that State, throws out a body of water estimated at 17,000 cubic feet per minute.

—— A "Pony Express" has been started in New Orleans for the delivery of small packages with the greatest dispatch, and at low rates, to all parts of the city. Signs, bearing the words "Pony Express Wanted," will be distributed amongst the business houses of the city, and they have only to hang out the sign and up trots a pony driven by a boy in uniform.

—— Thieves have discovered a new use for chloroform. The porkers near Adrian, Mich., disappeared in a most unaccountable manner, and what was regarded as strangest, they were carried off without the sound of a single squeal. A gentleman, however, discovered the depredators operating one night, and going to the pig-pen, he found two fat hogs lying helpless and unconscious, having been drugged with chloroform.

—— About 1665 Hon. Theodore Atchison, of Portsmouth, N. H., had a legacy of £1,000, the income of which was directed to be distributed in loaves of bread to the poor of that town on Sundays. This has been done regularly for about a century; about £5,000 have been thus spent, and the fund has not been impaired.

—— In Louisiana and Texas over 20,000 colored Methodists have broken off their connection with the Southern Methodist Church, and joined the Northern Church. In Georgia, it is said, that the entire colored membership of the Southern Church will connect itself with Northern Methodism.

—— The 28 arsenals and armories in the North contain 4,025,175lb of powder, 401,026lb of shell, 233,818lb of cannon-balls, 84,300lb of grenades, 47,802 boxes of grape-shot, 21,355lb of bombs, 1,000,000 good Springfield muskets, and 500,000 captured and foreign muskets.

—— The Galveston (Texas) News calls attention to the condition of the cemeteries of Houston, in which "the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air make their wallowing-places and nests upon the resting-places of the dearly-loved, but departed friends."

—— In Memphis every hotel is crowded, and so is every boarding-house; and the rent in of a house, or even a suite of rooms, for a small family, is next to impossible. Small, unfurnished rooms, on the third floor, rent readily for $25 to $30 a month.

—— Sambo goes in for the Fenian fight. A colored youth was arrested in Albany, on Friday, for "loafing," when he made an earnest appeal to be sent to New York, that he might go to Ireland with the first regiment that started.

—— An Oregon paper says enough liquor has been sent across the mountains to keep every man in Montana drunk all winter.

—— There is a dried-up Indian women, near the head-waters of the St. Croix, in Wisconsin, who is the oldest person of modern times. Some say she is 300, and none guess less than 150.

—— Brigham Young has purchased two of the Sandwich Islands, to which he proposes to remove, bag and baggage.

—— Of the 9,000 post-offices in the disloyal States, about 2,000 have been reopened. Nearly 300 have received post-mistresses, because no man could be found who could take the oath that he had not borne arms against his country. The ladies, though rebellious enough in spirit, are able to take the prescribed oath.

"Handkerchief Preaching," is the appropriate term applied to a pulpit peculiarity, by the Christian Reflector: "I notice," says the writer, "a handkerchief habit in the pulpit, which has led me to inquire if the use of that very necessary article is a part of theological training. I notice some ministers take it out of their pockets as they do their sermons, and lay it on the pulpit. Some spread it out lengthwise through the middle of the Bible; some roll it up and tuck it under the Bible; some shake it over their heads; some clinch it in their hands, as if they were going to throw it at the audience; and some keep crowding it into their pockets and pulling it out again, with a nervous movement, as if they did not know what use to make of their hands. I went once to hear a popular young preacher, and as much as half his sermon was made up of pocket-handkerchief, and the most of the other half was gold watch and bits of poetry."

—— The negro who committed a diabolical murder of a white girl and boy in Union county, Arkansas, a few weeks since, was followed and arrested in Bradley county by negroes. After being brought back, he confessed his guilt, and went to the place where the murder was committed and got the knife which he had used, and afterward concealed under a log. After the proper examination, he was burned to death, old negroes and Federal soldiers assisting in bringing pine knots to make the fire. The negroes manifested the utmost anxiety to have him brought to justice.

—— The Treasury Department, in settling a balance of two cents, due to Erastus Foote, of Boston, sent a draft to him, worded and numbered as follows: "Draft 2,950 on Treasury warrant, Treasury of the United States. No. 1,954. Washington, Jan. 8, 1866. At sight pay to Erastus Foote, collector and disbursing agent, or order, two cents. F. E. Spinner, Treasurer of the United States. Recorded, Jan. 8, 1866. S. B. Colby, Register of the Treasury. Assistant Treasurer, U. S., Boston, Mass." On this important document there were seven signatures, and all for two cents. The gentleman who owned the draft was offered a dollar for it, but said he would not sell it for five dollars.

—— A couple in Litchfield, Conn., lately tried to get divorced, after ten years of wedded life, but in the course of the trial it appeared that they never had been legally married, and they gave up the idea of a divorce, and were married in due form.

—— Lewis Fisher, a fresco painter, fell a distance of twenty-five feet, in one of the Chelsea, Mass., churches, while at work, a few weeks ago, and received injuries which have disabled him for life. The trustees of the church lately sent him a bill of seven dollars and sixty cents for damage sustained by the pews on which he fell! So says the Springfield Republican.

—— The ancient custom of "crying the hour" by night watchmen has been kept up at Pittsburg, Pa., until recently.

—— A shoemaker in New Orleans was so overcome by the birth of a daughter, that he cut out sixteen pairs of Congress boots all for one foot, broke a temperance pledge, got into a street-fight with a sailor, and fell overboard.

—— A Mr. Dodd, at Warren, Ill., commenced on the 14th of January to starve himself to death, and he died on the 27th, accomplishing his object in 13 days. For nine days he took neither food nor water. After that he took a little rice-water daily, but he was so weak that he did not rally.

—— The sons of Mr. William Johnson, brother of the President, have published a letter confirming the reports that their father, who was accidentally injured by the discharge of his own gun, died for want of surgical treatment, the Confederate surgeons of the vicinity refusing to render any assistance, on the ground that Mr. Johnson was a brother of the President. The accident occurred at Velasco, Texas, and the family were obliged to send to Columbia, 100 miles distant, for a Federal surgeon. When applied to for their professional ministrations the medical faculty of Velasco, replied that there were too many Johnsons.

—— The editor of the Louisville Journal, alluding to a recent interview with the President says: "We expected to find the President weary and worn and haggard. Never were we so much mistaken. He was in the finest and most vigorous health, his face as fresh as in earliest manhood. It would have been evident to any one, seeing as we saw him, that he is a firm, resolute, self-poised man, confident, but not vainly nor arrogantly confident in his own strength. His will is like his frame, and that is of iron."

—— Complaints having been made of the "amusements" in Nashville, Tenn., a committee of the Common Council was appointed to examine them and report whether they were conducted in a "flagrantly lewd" manner, or were "detrimental to morals," and whether they violated any existing laws. The committee reported that they were alarmingly detrimental to morals, and also came within all the other points.

—— Not long since there was a dancing party at the house of Mr. Scott, near Avena, Lawrence County, Ala. The weather was very warm in the early part of the evening, but it had become exceedingly cold when the party broke up, heated and fatigued. The company went home: two of them died the next morning and seven have since died. Others are seriously ill, and none of the participants in the affair are well.

—— The Mobile Register says: "Counterfeit Government postal currency has been thickly scattered over this section, and at the present time there are thousands of dollars of the bogus trash circulating in our city. They are throwing it on the market too fast."

—— The Supreme Court of Massachusetts, some time ago, gave George W. Stone, of Swampscot, a verdict of $800 against parties who had tarred and feathered him for rejoicing over the death of President Lincoln. Emboldened at this, he has brought suit against a minister who looked through a window at the procession that tarred him.

—— Mrs. Stonewall Jackson has published a letter declining further contributions raised throughout the South for her benefit, deeming it inconsistent with her ideas of rectitude and honor to receive them.

—— There is a "sell" going the rounds, which has victimized, among others, two or three distinguished teachers in the public schools. The gist of it is that there is an old man now living in Biddeford, Me. [or in any other place], who will be 143 years old if he lives till the 30th of this month. Do you see it?

—— A literary society of young ladies, at Seneca Falls, N. Y., have styled themselves the "Go Home Alones," and altogether ignore the company of male attendants.

Foreign.—The European papers present terrible pictures of the mortality attending the new disease, called "trachina," in several parts of the Continent. The disease, as is well known, is engendered by eating pork, in which, though unseen, millions of animalculæ abound, that cannot be destroyed except by long and hard boiling. Those pass into the human system, and the person is eaten up alive by them, without being able to help himself. A German physician of Frankfort, who has given the subject much consideration, wrote on the 9th ult., that in a little place near Magdeburg, 100 children had been rendered orphans by the disease, and upward of 300 patients were then awaiting death, which they knew to be inevitable, from the same cause. The disease is reported to have appeared in some of the Western cities of the United States.

—— Prince Achille Murat has fallen under imperial displeasure for his duel with the editor of the Figaro, and has been ordered to join his regiment in Mexico. Jerome Bonaparte (Patterson), who was second to his cousin, is to go to Algeria.

—— The baboons of South Africa are so large and so numerous that they enter sheep-cotes and kill and eat young and old as their appetites need. They have to be trapped and shot to save the herds. They will face and fight women and children, and will barely run from men.

—— A shoemaker in Leeds, England, undertook, lately, for a wager, to eat an uncooked rabbit—fur, skin, and all. He succeeded, but immediately went into convulsions, which continued for an hour, when he died.

—— A widow in England, with two children, has recovered $35,000 from a railroad, for killing her husband.

—— Adalina Patti, the operatic artiste, receives $1,000 a night for her performances in London.

—— The city of Melbourne, in Australia, has a population of 120,000 inhabitants, and is increasing quite as rapidly as San Francisco. It has many of the aspects of an American city—American labor and American capital having added largely to its growth. American coaches, wagons, teamsters, pioneers, merchants, and American ships are so common that, although in a minority as regards population, as an influence in enterprise the Americans are the ruling people.

—— Tinsel is in vogue; in Paris every article of dress glitters. White tulles and tarlatans are gilded with gold spots or stars, or embroidered with birds or flies, in black and gold, blue and gold, red and silver, etc. The bouillonnes and flounces of the skirts are draped up with gold chains.

—— Among the causes of fires in London, last year, the following are reported: Airing linen, 11; children playing with fire, 33; "a dog," 1; fusées, 3; intoxication, 4; lightning, 2; lights thrown down the area, 8; lime-slacking, 9; and lucifers, 24.

—— An ingenious little machine has been put on some of the Parisian hacks. It indicates to the passenger who engages it, at once the time he is riding, the distance he has made, and the price he has to pay, according to the official regulations.

—— Complaint is made by the papers in York, Eng., that, at concerts given there, the ladies take their crochet and tatting-work with them, and the gentlemen read the newspapers throughout the performances.

—— A German surgeon, at Paris, was recently bereaved by the death of his wife. His friends assembled to condole with him, and found him engaged in dissecting her body!

—— In the small island of Iona, on the coast of Scotland, 61 kings lie buried—48 were Scotch, 8 Norwegian, 4 Irish, and 1 French.

A STATUE WEEPING BY STEAM.—A singular discovery has been made in a church in one of the faubourgs of Milan. A statue of St. Magdaleen, which has long been famous for weeping in the presence of unbelievers, was recently removed, in order to facilitate repairs for the church. It was found that the statue contained an arrangement for boiling water. The steam passed up into the head, and was then condensed. The water thus produced made its way by a couple of pipes to the eyes, and trickled down upon the cheeks of the image. So the wonderful miracle was performed.

THE PLEASURES OF ILLNESS.

DICKENS'S All the Year Round, in an article on the pleasures of illness, says:

"Nothing astonishes a weakly person who has been accustomed to illness so much as an unusually long period of good health. It is something he did not expect; it is like a gift to him. Robust persons who have never been accustomed to physical suffering will find it difficult to understand this feeling. Their wonder is that they should ever be ill at all. I have noticed that the moral effect of illness upon the strong man, is the moral effect of health upon the weak man. When a strong man is stricken down, he takes to his prayers. But the time when the weak man's thoughts are most elevated toward spiritual things is when he is well. The latter is too thankful to Heaven for its abundant mercies to begin whining the moment he is laid upon a bed of sickness. To my mind, that which induces a spirit of thankfulness is the best chastener of the heart. It is not a scourge, but a purifier. I have no belief in the rod, either moral or physical. When I am in health, and have the full enjoyment of all my faculties, and when the sun shines, and all nature is beautiful around me, then I am good. I cannot say that my heart is touched in the same way by affliction and gloom. It is not then in a spiritual way that I profit by illness, but simply because it enables me to throw off my cares as I throw off my clothes, and put my mind to rest with my body. To descend to some common-place particulars in illustration of the pleasures of illness, I will mention first of all the delight of being able to think without a purpose. When I am well, all my thinking must take a practical direction. I have no time to indulge in loose fancy. Whatever thoughts may enter my head, I must mold and shape them for use; I must parcel out and pigeon-hole them. And there is the involute process of thinking about thoughts, overhauling the aforesaid mental pigeon-holes to see that everything is ready to hand—a process which is very weary and painful. But sitting here by the fireside, utterly incapacitated, I give free rein to my fancy, and set myself to thinking about nothing. And when you don't try to think, what pleasant thoughts enter your head unbidden? You call upon the divine Nine, or any other source of inspiration, until you are hoarse, without bringing the pleasant fancy which pops upon you like a fairy's gift. You sit by the fire with your feet among the cinders, staring vacantly at the coals, and a vision of beauty reveals itself in the flame. These are the pleasant day-dreams which the mind enjoys when it has an opportunity of playing the idler.

A BLACKSMITH'S FORGE

And Goatskin Bellows in Zambesi.

LIVINGSTONE, in his late travels in Africa, on the Zambesi and its tributaries, gives many curious items, but none more curious than the description of an African blacksmith's shop:

Two workmen seated upon the ground, one as the working blacksmith, the other the bellows-blower. The forge is simply a few stones piled together and the charcoal-fire built up between them; while workman Number two works away upon a bellows of goatskin, constructed something on the plan of an accordeon.

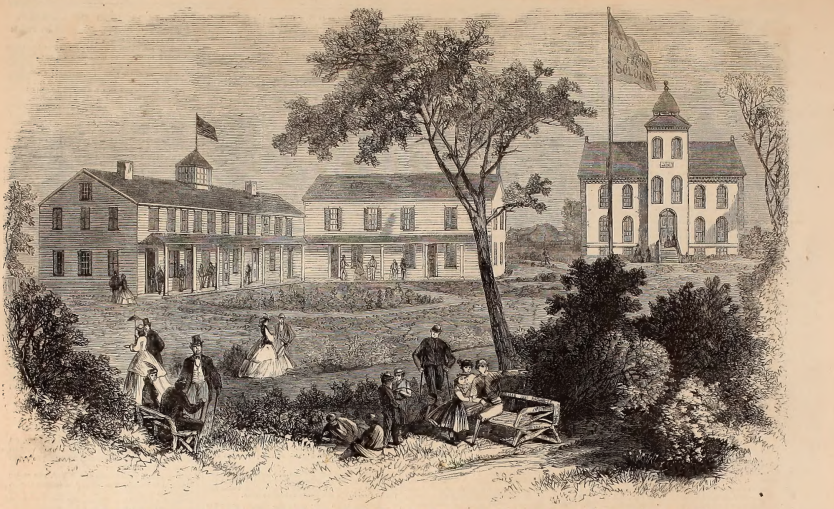
With this primitive arrangement some really curious work is turned out; and knives and swords, with a really fine temper, are forged, and afterward engraved, with a skill that would do no discredit to a Damascus manufacturer.

FITCH'S HOME

For the Soldiers and Orphans of Soldiers who have Lost their Lives in Defense of their Country, Located at Darien, Conn.

THIS institution at Darien, Conn., is called "Fitch's Home for Disabled Soldiers and Orphans of Soldiers who have Lost their Lives in Defense of the Country." It is founded by a gentleman of that place, by the name of Fitch, out of his private fortune; and as in this country a person being his own executor, is rare—we had almost said unexampled; but the case of our own respected citizen, Peter Cooper, the founder of the Cooper Institute, being brought to our recollection, we will only say that this enterprise of Mr. Fitch has but few parallels with us. Thinking, therefore, that a further notice in the way of history and pictorial representations of the buildings occupied by the institution and its surroundings, would be interesting to the readers of this paper, we have had sketches taken by artists on the spot, and the present engravings made from them.

The buldings are situated on a beautiful eminence overlooking Long Island Sound and the surrounding country, and appear to be a refuge, indeed, for those they are intended to benefit.



Mr. Benjamin Fitch, its founder, is a retired merchant, who has spent a large portion of a long life in active business pursuits, being well-known to many of our citizens, and also those of neighboring cities. Since retiring from business, he has passed the greater part of his time at Darien, Conn. (the place of his residence), and from this fact, the citizens of that section of country have been favored with the location of this patriotic asylum in their midst. Some of the citizens of that place have also shown their appreciation of the work, by assisting in its formation, and have aided it by their countenance, advice and means.

From the class of recipients it is intended to benefit (disabled soldiers and orphans of soldiers who have lost their lives in defense of the Nation), the institution must of necessity be of very recent origin.

Mr. Fitch, in the spring of 1864, foreseeing the number of disabled soldiers and orphans that would be made by the war; and also to incite volunteering and the recruiting of our armies, by removing from the soldier the natural anxiety and apprehension that in the event of his losing his life, or becoming disabled, he would thereby entail suffering and want on his family, purchased the property now occupied by the "Home;" and after arranging the buildings, repairing the original, and adding new ones, for school-room, hall, dining-room, &c., properly endowed it, and applied to the Legislature of Connecticut for a charter, which was granted and a board of trustees appointed to take charge of it.

Knowing that a proper recognition of the institution by the General Government would be advantageous to it, Mr. Fitch visited Washington, and laid before the late lamented President Lincoln the nature and intention of his work. Mr. Lincoln, with his usual kindness and warm feeling, addressed Mr. Fitch a letter of thanks, and recommended the institution to the good will of all our citizens.

The following spring Mr. Fitch visited Europe, and while there called upon many of our citizens and sympathizing foreigners, who, upon hearing the work he was engaged in, materially aided the institution by donations of books, money, &c., among whom we would mention the names of W. F. Whittemore, S. B. Guion, Daniel James, B. F. Babcock, Henry Nash, George Warren, James Spence, J. S. Morgan, Cyrus W. Field, Russel Sturgess, C. M. Sampson, James McHenry, Francis A. Hamilton, Rathbone, Bro. & Co., Longman & Co., Hamilton, Adams & Co., Henry G. Bohn, "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge," and others, both in England and on the Continent, to whom the trustees, in the following letter, have expressed the thanks of the institution:

A NOBLE CHARITY—FITCH'S HOME FOR THE SOLDIERS AND THEIR ORPHANS, AT DARIEN, CONN., FOUNDED BY BENJAMIN FITCH, ESQ., INAUGURATED JULY 4, 1864.

THE LETTER.

DARIEN, August 3d, 1865.

DEAR SIR—The trustees of Fitch's Home for Disabled Soldiers and the Orphan Children of such as have died in support and defense of the government of our country, gratefully acknowledge the receipt of a choice, well-selected and expensive library of several thousand volumes for the use of the inmates of the Home. We find that your generous contribution materially aided the founder of the institution, Mr. Benjamin Fitch, in his efforts to furnish this valuable acquisition, so essential to the comfort and instruction of the inmates and the permanent prosperity of the Home.

We are the more grateful for your contribution to this object because we believe it has been prompted chiefly by your interest in the welfare of our country, and your generous sympathy for its brave and suffering defenders.

Please accept our thanks for your kind aid in this work, and the expression of our earnest wish that hereafter, England and America may ever be one in sympathy for the suffering and oppressed, one in design to the maintenance of justice, and the establishing of universal freedom, and one in earnest effort for permanent peace and harmony between the two nations.

(Signed) C. W. BALLARD, President.

TRUSTEES:

William A. Cummings, James B. Hoyt, Philander Button, Stephen Hoyt, E. C. Bissell, Charles Marvin, C. J. Starr, Charles Brown, M. B. Forbes, M. D.

(Attest) P. BUTTON, Secretary.

Italy, also, where Mr. Fitch spent the fall and winter of 1865, for the benefit of his health, among the sculptors and painters of that classic land, was not wanting in sympathies, friends, and offers of assistance. Our celebrated American artist, Powers, gave the institution a beautiful bust of Franklin, executed in marble, and also introduced him to another American sculptor of note, Mr. Larkin G. Mead, jun., who had just completed a group, called the "Returned Soldier," representing a returned cavalry officer, in a sitting posture, with a child on his knee, an orphan, to whom the soldier is lighting the battle-field, and apparently describing the scenes there witnessed—probably the death of her own father; and, it may be, bringing her a dying message from his comrade (her father).

The appropriateness of the group as an adornment for the grounds of the institution he had founded, was so striking to Mr. Fitch, that he at once contracted with Mr. Mesde for a copy, to be executed in white Carrara marble, of a size half larger than life, at a cost of 10,000 francs, Mr. Meade generously foregoing any profit to himself, on account of the object for which it was intended, as he says, the cost of the production of the group will hardly be repaid by the contract price. This group has not yet arrived in this country; when it does, it will prove an ornament to the institution, of which it may well be proud.

In addition to the statuary, Mr. Fitch also procured, by donations from friends of our country in Italy (among whom we would mention the celebrated artists, Messrs. Costa & Conti of Florence, Mrs. Austice, widow of a British officer, residing in Italy, and others), a very valuable painting; which, together with the bust of Franklin, mentioned before, arrived safely in this country, but were, unfortunately, destroyed by fire in a bonded warehouse, in New York, in September, last, a few days after their arrival; and as they were not insured, proves a great loss to the institution, which, it is hoped, will be replaced by our own countrymen.

On his return from Europe, Mr. Fitch, in addition to his other bequests, for the purpose of properly securing the works of art, books, paintings, statuary, etc., set aside $10,000 for the erection of a fireproof reading-room, library, chapel, etc., for the Home. This building is nearly completed, and is the one in our sketch, with a tower and cupola.

We have thus briefly given a sketch of Mr. Fitch and his generous and patriotic undertaking; and to show that he is not without countenance among our most noted countrymen, we copy an appeal that the trustees have made to citizens generally, to assist in this great work, as the amount of good to be performed, in its specialty, is without bound; and as Mr. Fitch, out of his comparatively moderate means (for he does not rank with our millionaires), has contributed from $30,000 to $40,000 in this work, and does not aspire to be the sole benefactor in this matter.

If the appeal should bring forth any contributions for the institution, we will feel that our labor and expense in making our readers acquainted with Mr. Fitch and the Home for Disabled Soldiers and Orphans of Soldiers have been well repaid.

IN GOD WE TRUST.

An Appeal to the Patriotic Citizens of this Republic.

Mr. Benj. Fitch, of Darien, Connecticut, in the beginning of the year 1864, as an inducement to soldiers to enlist in the service of the country, to put down the rebellion then existing for its overthrow and dismemberment, set apart and endowed lands and buildings for the formation of an institution as a home for disabled soldiers and orphans of soldiers who might lose their lives in their country's service.

The institution was dedicated on the 4th of July of that year, for the purposes specified, and Mr. Fitch has since conveyed by deed the same, without fee or reward, to the trustees appointed to take charge of the institution.

The principal object of the institution is to bring up and educate orphans of soldiers who have been killed in defence of the country. We also wish to take care of and provide for all disabled soldiers who are destitute. Also all widows of soldiers killed in putting down the late rebellion—if means can be obtained for that purpose.

We appeal to all patriotic citizens, in the name of the orphans of the nation, as they cannot be left to fill the Alms-House, nor want for shelter, education, and sustenance, while others have plenty and to spare; as the blood in their veins, made sacred by the sacrifice of their fathers' lives in our defence, and the perpetuation of this Government, should be cherished and protected by all who enjoy the blessings they died to procure.

In receiving and applying your charities for this object, we pledge ourselves to use all donations in the most economical manner, for the benefit of those concerned.

We have room for more; all we want is the means to take care of them, which, we hope, will be forthcoming, and for which we appeal to you, and all who take the cause of the orphan, connected with the salvation of our country, to heart.

THE RETURNED SOLDIER.—A GROUP IN MARBLE, BY MEADE, FOR THE SOLDIERS' HOME, DARIEN, CONNECTICUT.

THE SCHOOL AT THE SOLDIERS' HOME, DARIEN, CONN., FOR CHILDREN OF VOLUNTEERS KILLED IN THE WAR.

THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF TRINITY CHURCH, NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—FROM A SKETCH BY H. C. CURTIS.

We would refer you to the accompanying letters from Lieutenant-General Grant, and the endorsement of the same by our much-esteemed President and the gentlemen of his Cabinet.

DR. EDWIN HARWOOD, RECTOR, TRINITY CHURCH, NEW HAVEN.—PHOT. BY BEERS & MANSFIELD.

Metropolitan Hotel, New York, Nov. 17th, 1865.

MR. BENJ. FITCH:

Dear Sir—I heartily sympathize with you in your endeavors to assist those who have been disabled in the great struggle just past, and to give a home to the orphans of the soldiers who have lost their lives in defending the right; and I cheerfully recommend the institution you have founded to the good will and solid support of all our countrymen, as I know the sympathies and beneficence of all good men inust be given to so great and worthy a charity.

Wishing you all success in this laudable undertaking, and that you may find the hearts of all patriotic and benevolent citizens disposed to assist you in this worthy object, I am, yours truly,

U. S. GRANT, Lieut.-Gen. U. S. A.

Washington, Nov. 25th, 1865.

We heartily endorse the opinions of Lieutenant-General U. S. Grant, as expressed in his letter to Mr. B. Fitch, and dated at New York, November 17th, 1865, and would recommend the institution he has founded to the good will and solid support of all Americans who love their country and appreciate the services of those soldiers who spent their blood and sacrificed their lives in its defence.

ANDREW JOHNSON, Pres't.
WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Sec. of State.
EDWIN M. STANTON, Sec. of War.
HUGH McCULLOCH, Sec. Treas.
GIDEON WELLES, Sec. Navy.
JAMES SPEED, Att'y Gen'l.

The institution is at present in charge of the following gentlemen as trustees, from whom any further information can be obtained:

TRUSTEES.

JOSEPH B. HOYT.	C. J. STARR.
WM. A. CUSHING.	CHARLES BROWN.
PHILANDER BUTTON.	M. B. PARDEE, M.D.
STEPHEN HOYT.	E. G. BEERS.
A. HILL.

HON. C. W. BALLARD, President.
JOSEPH B. HOYT, Treasurer.
PHILANDER BUTTON, Secr'ary.

Communications, enclosing donations, may be addressed to Joseph B. Hoyt, Esq., Nos. 28 and 30 Spruce street, New York.

ANCIENT COUNTY HOUSE AND JAIL, AT NEW HAVEN, CONN.—SKETCHED BY H. C. CURTIS.

A "L'AFRICAINE."

LISTEN, Adelé, to the viols,
As they sigh through this nectar of sound,
To the flutes that murmur like sirens,
To angels who hover around,
Where flowers of exquisite perfume,
Bespread a paradise ground.

The clarionets bubble and ripple
Softly as nightingale's song,
Bearing in rapturous languor
Our dream-laden fancies along,
With their rare voluptuous measure,
Where pleasures ecstatic throng.

Bravura! Like screaming of eagles,
The trumpets are flooding the air—
The bugles shrill their fierce clamor,
Like tigers aroused from their lair,
Stinging our dreams with their tumult,
Wild crash, and resonant blare.

Ah, Adelé! my precious—my darling—
How it wakens from slumber again,
That which in sensuous fantasy
Wrapped in its folds my brain—
Stifled me as with perfumes
From the Orient's golden main

Darling! they tell me the story
The ocean used to sing,
As I tossed on its passionate bosom,
And watched the sea bird's wing—
Caressing it like a sunbeam
From the silvery throne of Spring.

Tinklings! They are the castanets,
Which the houries of Islaam
Shook as they danced in the moonlight
Under the feathery palm,
Shading their eyes by the crescent
Of an alabaster arm.

How the choruses glide together,
Like the white sails of a fleet,
Sailing away from an ice-bound coast,
To a land of fervor and heat—
A land of fair enchantment,
Pressed only by seraph's feet.

Ha! they are touched by a tempest,
Whose shadow blackened the moon,
And darkened my visions with phantoms,
Who the flowers of my dream have strewn
Like the blooms of India's jungles
When rages the dread cycloon.

Wind closer your arms my darling,
For I grope as through tangled flowers,
Whose odorous sighs are bearing me down
Into their bliss-laden bowers—
Into the arms of melodious Night,
Caressed by her passion-plumed hours.

* * * * * *

Ah, madam! I beg your pardon—
I admit—'tis hardly right—
To sleep through Meyerbeer's "Africaine,"
While you look so charming and bright—
And conclude I am deuçedly stupid—
Or perchance—up late last night.

RECOLLECTIONS OF SCHOOL DAYS.

THERE is, perhaps, hardly any class of light reading more fascinating to both old and young, than familiar recollections of school days, traits of character learned in all the early freedom of youth. If any who were my companions in my girlish days chance to see this little record of some of their sayings and doings, I am sure it will cause not one thought of mortification, but, perhaps, serve to while away pleasantly some idle minutes.

My own position in our little community was, perhaps, the least enviable one. I was half pupil, half teacher—a girl of sixteen, who, by her services in teaching the younger pupils, mending their clothes, and looking after them generally, paid for the completion of her own education in the points in which it was deficient. It was well for me I had a good resolute mind, and plenty of cheerfulness, for I had enough trials to endure. Not from our principal, Mrs. Howe, who was in heart and mind a true lady, and more, an earnestly good woman, and who did what depended on her to make my position a pleasant one; but among the score of boarders, and sixty odd day-scholars, there were not a few who were disposed to look down on "Susan Payson, who was only a charity scholar, working to pay for her schooling." There were also two resident teachers, who were very ready, by stretching the range of my duties to the uttermost, to save themselves all the trouble they could, and multifarious indeed were the duties considered mine.

It was not about myself, however, I meant to write, but I could hardly make clear all I wished to say without a few words about my own position. The little ones under my care soon learned to look on "Miss Susie" as their best friend, and often most amusing were the confidences reposed in me. I remember one day, Fanny S., a little black-eyed day-scholar, six years old, coming to me with a very affronted air, and asking:

"Miss Susie, are not us, though we are not so rich, just as much raterisky as Miss G. and the fine company she talks about?"

At first I could not quite make out what Fanny meant, but recollecting that Miss G., one of the elder girls, was rather given to boasting of her aristocratic connections and friends, I surmised that something on that point had wounded little Fanny's amour propre; and I assured her, in my opinion, "she was quite as 'raterisky' as any one else. I did not think her able to pronounce the word, so I did not try to correct her; but whether some flitting smile on my face, or an undue emphasis on the word made her suspicious, I cannot tell, but the next day, when she came into school, after kissing me, she burst out eagerly:

"Oh! Miss Susie, I asked papa about that big word, and I am sure I know it quite right now—it is misticrat!"

Far less acute than little Fanny was Sophie M., a girl three or four years older. I summoned her one day to take her place in a fancy dance the children were practicing. "I can't come," she said, "I do not know the beatitudes." "Indeed not, "said I; "get the Bible and I will teach you directly." Supposing it was her Sunday lesson for the following day. "Oh!" was the response, "I do not mean the Bible beatitudes, but my beatitudes in dancing."

Among the score of boarders, there was, for a short time, a Miss Lucinda Euphemia B., as she was duly introduced on her first arrival. She was the only child of a very worthy, but very ignorant and unpolished couple, who, when she was about fifteen, had acquired, by a lucky speculation, a very large fortune, and conscious of their own deficiencies, had brought her to Mrs. Howe to be educated, and above all, taught "how to behave fashionable." They told Mrs. Howe they wanted their daughter to learn everything; they had plenty of money, and did not mind expense. Mrs. Howe ventured to suggest, perhaps the young lady might not have capacity for every branch of study. "Oh," replied the satisfied mamma, "never mind that, just buy her a capacity, and anything else you want her to have; we won't mind what they cost!"

A more unfortunate subject on whom to graft fashionable manners, could hardly have been found. She was a stout, over-grown girl, with flat, homely features, and ungainly hands, and feet always in her way; her taste in dress—or rather that of her mother—led to the selection of glaring colors and flashy patterns, and before she had been at school two days, she had acquired the nickname of Blouselinda, speedily shortened into Blousy. Lucinda, with all her exterior disadvantages, had great good-nature, and took this in good part, even answering to the nickname when used by the more mischievous and less refined of her companions.

She chose for her bosom friend, Eunice P., a girl of very ordinary character, who, in consideration of sharing in the quite too abundant supply of cakes and sweets her fond mamma continually sent to Lucinda, was content to act as her confidant, to help her with her lessons, and share in her scrapes, till one of them led to the removal of both from the school.

One night we had all retired at ten, as usual, and had been asleep about two hours, when I was awakened by a subtle, but not unpleasant odor of something burning. I started up, and after hesitating a little, concluded to go and call Mrs. Howe. I did so; but it unluckily happened she stood in the greatest terror of house-breakers, and so soon as aroused, by some unknown process of mind, connected the unusual odor with the object of her fears, who, she supposed, must be below in the house. Whether it was thieves or not, however, it was essential for some one to go down and see what was the matter; and as our household was wholly of the feminine gender, it would have to be ourselves. Going as softly as we could, we awakened the two teachers, the old colored cook, and two other servants, and being also joined by three or four of the elder pupils, disturbed by our movements, we crept cautiously down the back stairs. Either because I had been the first to call them, or because they were disposed to give the post of honor and danger to me as the stoutest-hearted there, I led the van, holding aloft a tin candlestick with flaring candle. Old Judy followed me, armed with an ancient rusty gun she had caught up from the corner of the attic where she slept; then the other servants, one with a broom, the other a mop; the teachers carried respectively an umbrella and yard-stick; as for the rest, they seemed more prepared to run away at the first symptom of danger than to fight. In this order we advanced toward the kitchen, whence the suspicious smell appeared to proceed. As we neared the door, something fell in the kitchen with a sharp, rattling sound.

"Oh!" said Mrs. Howe, in a quivering whisper, "did you hear that? It must be robbers, and that was a pistol, or one of their tools they dropped. What shall we do? Had we not better go out by the front door, and summon some of the neighbors before we go further?"

"But p'raps," put in old Judy, "dare's some of do thieves in de front part of de house, an' de catch us and kill us fust?"

At this suggestion there was a general disposition shown to retreat up-stairs again, but as for me, thinking there was far more probability of fire than thieves, I urged an advance; and either inspired by my courage, or ashamed to desert me, they again slowly followed me toward the door.

I confess, in spite of my show of superior bravery, it was not without a tremor I softly lifted the latch and pushed the door open, but then!——— Before a good bright fire they had made up, and the kitchen further illuminated with two candles, knelt Blousy, who, as well as her companion, had a few odd articles of clothing huddled on over her night-dress; sitting close by, on Judy's old rush-seated low chair, was Eunice, who, just at the instant of our appearance, was prepared, with outstretched neck and open mouth, to receive a fine fat oyster on the shell, proffered to her by Blousy. It had evidently a moment before been taken from between the bars of the glowing grate, where sundry other bivalves were undergoing their fate; more were lying on the hearth waiting their turn, and a small heap of empty shells showed how the girls had already enjoyed themselves, and how the noise that alarmed us had been caused; and a good supply of crackers and butter was on a chair close by.

I do not know how to describe the ridiculous scene that ensued—the dismay of the detected culprits, the wrath of old Judy to find her kitchen thus profaned and "mussed up," the stately astonishment of Mrs. Howe, to whose dignified presence a night-coif of ample and lofty dimensions greatly added. It appeared that an occasional supper of roast oysters had been one of the special home luxuries Lucinda Euphemia was partial to; and possessed with the longing for it, she had obtained, over the fence of the backyard, the materials for her feast from an oyster-vender, and hid them till night, when she and Eunice had thought it safe to come down and have their frolic.

I think Mrs. Howe's dignity was much hurt, from her having been led to show so much fear from so ridiculous a cause; for, though usually very indulgent to the freaks of the pupils, when there was nothing more than youthful levity in them, she could not forgive this, and the next day the parents of both girls were notified that she requested their removal from her school.

The character that stands out most prominently in my recollection is that of Elenor Ray. Her father was the owner and captain of a fine merchant vessel, and her mother, who had been an early and dear friend of Mrs. Howe, was dead. Elenor was born at sea, in the South Pacific Ocean, during a long voyage to Australia, in which her mother had accompanied her husband. She only lived to lay her infant in the arms of its father, and to beg him, if it were possible, not to bury her in the ocean, but in the next land he came to. This was a lonely, uninhabited island, on a coral reef, that came in their course, about twenty-four hours after the death of the poor mother. Here they laid her, under a few palm trees, that grew in the centre of the isle, and left her alone with God.

It was a marvel how, under such circumstances, the delicate infant was kept alive; but Mrs. Ray had been accompanied by a devoted and experienced female attendant, who contrived, with the poor, unusual resources for such a case to be found on shipboard, to feed little Elenor and bring her safe home. The little girl was the youngest of three children, the other two, boys, some years older. She was the darling and treasure of father and brothers; and though, as they grew older, Captain Ray placed his sons first at school, and then to regular professions in life, he could not make up his mind to part with his little Elenor, and she accompanied him in all his voyages, till she was ten years old. Strange and varied was the experience of the little ocean-born girl in these ten years; many a beautiful land had she seen, and many an awful storm had she passed through. Her father traded to every part of the world, and in the various ports where they staid, Elenor had picked up words from an infinite variety of tongues, that made her language a most curious and amusing medley.

At last the death of her nurse compelled Captain Ray to make some other arrangement, especially as he felt he could not let his child grow up with the desultory education he was himself able to give her. She was accordingly confided to the care of Mrs. Howe, who treated her with the same tenderness she bestowed on her own two little girls, and Elenor remained with her the seven following years, seeing her father as often as his returns from his voyages permitted.

No words could describe the devoted attachment that existed between this father and daughter. I never saw anything like it—it only stopped short of idolatry. Elenor was not a girl of strong and quick mind; she made very little progress in her studies, not for want of application, for she was very docile and industrious, but she evidently had but small mental powers. What she lacked in mind, however, she made up in heart; the tenacity and strength of her affections were wonderful. It almost killed her to part with her father at first, and she lived only in the hopes of his return each time he left her. She remained, as I said, till she was seventeen years old with Mrs. Howe, who was deeply attached to her.

It may be imagined what a terrible task was imposed on Mrs. Howe, when, at last, it became necessary to break to Elenor the dreadful news of the loss of her father's ship, named after her, the Elenor Ray, and that he had perished, with nearly all his crew, only four having been preserved, after long exposure, in a small boat. Sometimes I start from a dream, imagining I hear again the cry of bitter agony that broke from poor Elenor, when, after the tenderest care and preparation, she heard the fearful truth. She was a girl of much religious feeling, full of simple, earnest faith in God, and of a submissive spirit, and I am sure she tried to bear her trial with resignation; but her mind had not strength to endure it. In a few days she sunk into a kind of low delirium. Most gentle, most touchingly sweet was she in her illness; no violence, no loud excitement; she seemed to know us all, to love us more than ever. The only hallucination she had, was, that her father was present, and standing in one particular spot in the room. She would speak of and address him continually, and sometimes, when I sat beside her, she would point over my shoulder to the spot, and speak to him, with such a vivid perception of his presence, I have involuntarily started and looked round to see him. Every care was taken of her, but she grew weaker day by day, and in a few weeks God's mercy took her to Himself.

Mrs. Howe at first thought of having her laid in her own family vault, with those of her own dear ones "gone before;" but—I know not from what feeling, yet one whose fitness we all perceived —it was decided to lay her by herself, in a lovely, secluded spot, in one of the most beautiful of our rural cemeteries.

Years after, I heard of the fate of her two brothers; they were a strangely adventurous family, and all met unusual ends. The elder of the two volunteered for one of the polar expeditions, and died in the frozen north. His bones are bleaching somewhere on a sterile shore, too inhospitable and iron-bound to afford even a grave. The younger brother, equally restless, joined an exploring party to the far South-West, and died and was buried in some wide, lone prairie, far beyond the Mississippi. I never read Mrs. Heman's exquisite "Graves of a Household," without thinking of the widely sundered resting-places of this family.

MISSED.

BY EBEN E. REXFORD.

I MISS a voice whose tender tones
Rang through the house in echoes sweet,
And since its melody has flown,
My heart alone its sounds repeat.

I miss a face, a child's pure face,
Set in a frame of yellow hair,
While all a water-lily's grace
Seemed centred in the picture there.

I miss each day a child's glad kiss,
That used to greet me at the dawn,
And fill my heart with untold bliss;
Now all that blissfulness is gone.

I miss a little childish form,
That used to lie against my breast;
I cannot feel her breathing warm,
Or hush my little one to rest.

She does not kneel beside my knee,
And say her little prayers at night,
Or whisper good-night words to me—
A mist of tears will dim my sight!

I listen when the house is still,
To hear her footsteps in the hall,
And often feel my pulses thrill
At the remembrance of her call.

I see the things she used to love;
Each speaks so plainly to my heart
Of one who walks the fields above,
That, spite of all, the tears will start.

I linger in the silent room
Where long ago she said good-by,
And in the twilight's purple gloom
Her memory thrills me like a sigh.

Ah, me! the house is silent now,
Where long ago glad echoes rang,
And memory often tells me how
As sweet as any bird she sang.

Oh! childish face and tender voice—
Oh! kiss that haunts me like a pain—
Come back, and make my heart rejoice!
Come back, and glad my life again!

Some day I know that I shall meet
My darling in the land of rest,
And walk with her the golden street,
God's peaceful quiet in my breast.

Bagging a Burglar.

FRED WILLIAMS and I were chums, and roomed together. We boarded with a widow lady, in a most respectable neighborhood, where, if we did not have all the comforts of a home, we fared much better than many of our acquaintances who boasted of living in a more fashionable locality, and who certainly paid most extravagant prices for the privilege.

Mrs. Merton was our landlady's name, and a more good-hearted, amiable woman, never presided at a boarding-house table.

A young man, a friend of ours, nick-named "Short," on account of his small stature, but whose real name was William King, occupied a room immediately below that which Fred and I had possession of. He was a wild and noisy fellow, and frequent were the maledictions secretly launched at him for the racket he occasionally made at the most unseasonable hours of the night, by kicking anything that came in his way, from the stool to the cat, and a fondness he had of scraping on a violin, the noise from which he called music, but the other inmates of the house styled it abominable discord. But he was so good-natured and companionable, that all liked him in spite of these little peculiarities.

But enough of him for the present. We merely present him to your notice as one who acted a part in bagging a burglar, wherein he had abundant opportunity to exercise his peculiar abilities.

Our neighborhood had recently been infested with burglars. Scarcely a night passed but some house was visited, and they successfully escaped the man-traps and spring-guns that were constructed and set for their especial benefit.

We three—Fred, Short and I—had some serious and prolonged discussions on the subject, our object being to invent some sort of trap that would be so different from any that had been used or heard of, as to insure the capture of any of these daring fellows, who might pay us a visit.

After we had puzzled our noddles for a considerable time, as to what would be the best means to adopt, Fred seemed to be inspired with an idea.

"How would it do to bag them?" said he.

"Bag them!" Short and I exclaimed, simultaneously. "What on earth do you mean?"

"Oh, I have concocted a very simple plan for the capture of at least one of them."

"Pray, tell us your plan," I exclaimed; "I confess I can't see it."

"Why, you see the fireplace there? it is boarded, you know; take up that board—you can see right into Short's room. My plan is to get a strong canvas bag, and fasten it securely around the edges of the fireplace; then fix the board in such a manner that if any one treads upon it, down he goes into the bag. Short can then guard him below, and we in this room; then give a general alarm for police. What do you think of it?"

"Don't like the plan," said Short, dubiously "You leave me to face the most danger. Suppose he cuts his way out, and then cuts his way in me?"

"Oh, we'll fix that," said Fred, laughing, in which I joined; "you will have to have a revolver, and as soon as the burglar falls, you are to threaten him with instant death if he attempts to escape. It is all easy enough."

"But," said Short, still dissatisfied, "how are you going to make him walk into the bag? and who is to give the alarm after he is caught?"

"We'll try to bribe him on the trap," replied Fred. "I will place my pocket-book and watch on the the mantel over the trap. I think that will answer. As for the alarm, we can all raise a hue and cry. I guess, Short, you can help us some, can't you?"

"You better believe I can," replied Short, breaking into a laugh, the first he omitted since the commencement of our conference.

"Then it is all settled," said Fred; "we have nothing to do now but to set the trap, and wait for the burglars. We had better prepare everything at once."

"All right," said Short and I, entering in the full spirit of the affair at once.

We then, the next morning, went to a sail-makers, and ordered a large bag to be made of strong canvas; when it was sent around to us, we fastened it strongly according to the plan determined; and having fixed the board so that it would act properly, we had nothing else to do then but to await the course of events.

The reader will see that the entire success of our plan rested on the supposition that the burglar would enter the room that Fred and I occupied. To make this more certain, we resolved to leave our door unfastened, and our room being the first one at the head of the stairs, we supposed it would be the first one that would be attempted to enter. As no obstacle would prevent this, it was very probable that we would receive the first visit. A light was to be left burning, so that the pocket-book and watch would be seen at once. And now for the result.

Fred and I went to bed about eleven o'clock, and—we cannot account for it—we fell asleep. We were certain we would keep awake when we retired, but old Somnus thought otherwise, and we soon slept heavily.

About three o'clock we were roused out of our sleep by the wildest yells that we ever heard. At first we were so bewildered that we were half frightened out of our wits, but we soon recognized the voice to be Short's; and then we knew what was the matter.

We saw that the watch and pocket-book were gone, and, of course, concluded that a burglar was in the bag.

We ran to the window, and shouted police as loud as we could bellow—Short meanwhile kicking up the most infernal racket in the room below. We could hear him hollowing thieves and police one minute, and the next threatening to blow out the burglar's brains if he did not stay in the bag.

Presently, a crowd came running to the house, demanding admittance. Fred threw them his night-key, and told them to come in. Short's room and ours were soon filled with men, most of whom were neighbors. Three policemen also came.

As soon as quiet was restored, Fred informed them that a burglar was in the bag, and talked consequentially of the plan we had invented, and which seemed to have been eminently successful.

Meanwhile, the bag swung gracefully backward and forward, but the burglar made no attempt to escape.

We learned this afterward, as we could not see the bag from our room.

One of the policemen then suggested that the bag should be cut down. As we were all curious to see the exit of the burglar from his strange place of confinement, it was resolved that we should all assemble in Short's room for the purpose, having no fear of the burglar's escaping through the trap-door, as any movement in that direction could be checked from below.

A large and sharp knife was procured, and one of the policemen, getting upon a high chair, commenced cutting around the top of the bag. It shortly came down with a crash, and out rolled—our landlady.

She had swooned.

"Good Lord!" exclaimed Short.

The rest were silent for a moment, but all soon burst into a loud roar of laughter, which must have penetrated to the brain of good Mrs. Merton, for she soon recovered; and stood upon her feet confronting the crowd in amazement. She looked around, and her eyes lighted upon the bag. You should have then seen the indignant look she cast upon Fred, Short, and I, as she knew we were the culprits.

She asked us what we meant by setting a trap in our rooms. Fred answered for all, and told her what was our design.

Soon as he concluded, a good-humored smile radiated over her features, and then she told us all how she came to get into the bag.

It appeared that being very restless, she could not sleep, and about three o'clock she thought she smelt something burning. She arose and came to our door, and perceiving a light in our room, she tried the door, and finding it unfastened, she entered. She saw that something was smoking on our mantel, which proved to have been one of Fred's best towels, it having ignited from the lamp near it, and in extinguishing it, she had stepped on the trap, and down she went, bearing Fred's watch and pocket-book with her, she having them in her left hand at the time; as they were near the burning towel, she had attempted to remove them from it, but fell before she had time to do it.

Short was awake, and as soon as she fell, he commenced his part. Mrs Merton screamed, too, but in the noise and confusion which immediately ensued, we did not hear her. She became so frightened she fainted. The rest we all knew.

We three poor unfortunates had to bear much ridicule before the crowd dispersed, and it was a long time before we heard the end of our attempt at bagging a burglar.

THE poet tells of "ships that never come to shore." Perhaps he meant courtships.

THE SEMI-CENTENNIAL OF TRINITY CHURCH NEW HAVEN, CONN.

THE semi-centennial anniversary of Trinity Church, New Haven—Rev. Dr. Harwood's—Wednesday, February 21st, was an affair of great interest to all surviving members of that flourishing branch of the great Episcopalian Gospel-tree. The day was a delightful one, all nature looking peculiarly inviting—a day indicative of the near approach of spring-time, with its bird-warbling and buds and leaflets. A large portion of the members of the church, and of admirers of Trinity, assembled within its walls to enjoy the jubilant occasion. In this assembling, a noteworthy fact was the number of venerable women and patriarchal men whom this half-century celebration and the balminess of the weather called out.

Trinity never looked better. Its beautiful new internal adornings never showed to better advantage than when the warm rays of the morning sun fell upon its ivied walls and streaked in at its diamond-paned windows.

At the hour of opening the services, and while the audience were all in expectation, the door opened, and an imposing body of bishops and clergymen, clad in the robes of the church, moved up the aisles, reading an appropriate selection from the service-book as they proceeded. Arrived at the chancel, these sons of the church took the places which had been assigned them, and the services were begun. These services, including the sermon and the communion, lasted about three hours. During their celebration, the most devout attention was evinced.

The discourse by the rector, Dr. Harwood, was one eminently scholarly. It was at once a history of Trinity Church and a defense of the Episcopal faith. The historical portion came first. We present the most interesting facts embodied in this division of the discourse to our readers. Episcopalians will find that these facts embrace much of the history of the development of their faith in this town within the last half century.

A retrospective view of 50 years made by a man could hardly fail to bring sombre feelings to his bosom. Not so with a prosperous church, however; to such a church such a view could but be inspiring. This was the view the Doctor took in penning his discourse, and this was still his feeling.

Fifty years ago, at the same hour in which the doctor was preaching, and on the same day of the week, Trinity Church was consecrated. Bishop Hobart, of New York, performed that ceremony. Nearly all the clergy of the diocese were present. Among them was the venerable Dr. Mansfield, then in the 93d year of his age. Dr. Croswell, the beloved, was installed rector. He had then been in the rectorship about a year. Among the vestrymen present then, who are to-day represented in Trinity, were Jonathan Ingersoll, senior warden, and vestrymen Denison, Collis, Hughes, Jacocks, Kidston, and Shipman—names of precious memory. That day marked an era in the history of Episcopacy in Connecticut. Trinity Church was then a church at whose size men wondered. It was then the largest Gothic church in New England. Doubters at that time said there never would be Episcopalians enough in New Haven to fill that church. How false were those prophets!

The dedication services occupied three days. Great crowds, for those days, gathered to attend the services. New Haven, at that time, numbered but about 7,000 inhabitants. Dedication being over, Rector Croswell was then left alone with his new parish. He was then in the prime of a vigorous manhood—a man distinguished for untiring labor and great love of the work.

Dr. Harwood here divided the history of Trinity into three parts, viz., the years between 1816 and 1829, when the rector counted no Episcopalians in the city but those in his flock; the years between 1829, when Trinity sent off a colony to found St. Paul's Chapel, now St. Paul's Church, and the year 1845; lastly, those between 1845 and the present time.

At the conclusion of this discourse, which was eminently scholarly and eloquent, the congregation raised among themselves, in a few minutes, the sum of $2,622, to purchase a stained-glass chancel-window for the church.

The celebration has been one of mark with the congregation and citizens of New Haven, and will not be soon forgotten.

NEW HAVEN COUNTY HOUSE AND JAIL.

WE perpetuate in our columns one of the old buildings of New Haven, Connecticut, around which hangs many associations, which, though possibly not pleasant, are part and parcel of the history of the place.

The Old County House and Jail was built in 1800, and was, consequently, at the time of its pulling down, in 1861, just 61 years of age. During these years it has seen its share of misery and crime; poverty and guilt have alike shared its walls—the poor debtor and perhaps the rich criminal. In its classic shades were once imprisoned the Armistead negroes, those blacks who so awakened the sympathies of the New England Abolitionists as to make the question of their confinement or liberty almost a political fact upon which the affairs of the nation hung.

But the old jail has passed away, and with it the memories of all the scenes that have transpired within its walls will die, only such as the historian may rescue from oblivion remaining as a record. We are sure that all the world is willing, save only such as love to gloat over the shame and misery inside of prison-walls.

PAINS, PERILS AND PENALTIES OF BROADWAY.

NEW YORK has a police force of about 2,000 men, and we think we can venture to call them as good a police organization as there is in the world. Night and day, summer and winter, they are omnipresent, and a citizen or stranger cannot cry aloud for the space of 15 seconds anywhere within the limits of this great metropolis, in distress, but he will have one of these guardians of the law with him in an instant. And yet, with all this never-tiring watchfulness, how many hundred things that trench powerfully on comfort, and the sovereignty and health of the individual, transpire daily under the very eyes and noses of the guardians, which they do not see, or are powerless to prevent. How many petty crimes are committed for which there is no law and no redress. How many outrages upon decency, cleanliness, and good-nature, and what an utter repudiation of all the rules that govern the association of mankind!

Broadway, for instance: Let us suppose ourselves out for a walk upon the most brilliant thoroughfare in the world. We start from the lower part, possibly from Wall street. We know all the perils of the carriage, but by not having to cross, and keeping strictly to the side-walk, we are, of course, supposed to be free from all annoyance and danger. The thought is no sooner through our brain-pan, than crash comes something across our path. The first idea is that an omnibus has upset over the pave and a score or two of passengers are smashed. No such thing! It is simply one of our merchant princes—perhaps in the dry-goods line—who is getting in or getting out stock. A score or two of huge boxes litter the pavement, and the small aperture that is left, scarce wide enough for a fearfully thin man to push through, is occupied by a cooper, grim and fierce, with an adze in one hand and a stout hickory pole in the other, and an Irish porter, with a defiant air and a dreadfully dirty suit of duds. In desperation you undertake to push by, and after a mighty struggle, and the reception of a few anathemas from these two gentlemen, you emerge beyond the boxes with one rent in the sleeve of your coat four inches angular, and about as much of mother-earth on your garments as will comfortably provide for half an hour's brushing. Bewailing the fortunes of war, you rush onward, to be caught under the chin by a peripatetic advertising gentleman, whose mission in life is to carry a board upon the end of a stick, which benevolently informs you that Dr. Sniggs will cure your corns for some ridiculously small sum of cash, and to always carry the said board sufficiently low to catch innocent pedestrians on some part of the countenance. No sooner are you released from the embraces of the board, than you are aware of considerable dust being raised, and before investigation can be made, you find your broadcloth suit, or velvet cloak, as the case may be, covered with coal ashes. An enterprising German gentleman, who is extensively engaged in the general chiffonier line, is stirring industriously in a box of ashes that has been set upon the sidewalk. With a delightful disregard of the passers-by, he, with the aid of the wind, very soon manages to cover every one that comes in that neighborhood with the exquisite powder. They may swear and cough and brush, but the old Teuton is impervious, and until he finds that bit of bone, and the rag scraps, value ¾ of one cent, he will scratch in those ashes, even though he scratches thunder out of them.

Then comes the score or two of minor evils, such as boot-blacks, who have such an inordinate passion for shining up your boots, as to throw themselves and their boxes before your progress, as victims fell before the car of Juggernaut, bringing you up all standing, or flooring you practically at once.

Then there is the couple, or the trio and more, who have a way of stopping for a gossip, and striking attitudes in the centre of the pave, stopping in one bold stroke the whole line of travel.

Then there are the one-horse gamblers, and ringers-in for gambling-houses, who stand upon the street-corners or hotel-stoops, and puff the smoke of bad cigars in your face, or make some impudent remark about your lady, if you happen to be walking with one.

Then comes the crash and turmoil at the crossings, the collision of omnibus and street car, the curses and lashings of drivers, the howling of dogs, the insouciance of policemen, and the general upsetting of events.

Ah! Broadway is a wonderful street, and an unwritten history. Broadway is a great poem, but will remain an unversified one, defying pen, ink and paper in its eccentric rhythm. In all the minutes, through all the day, there is an incident happening in Broadway that makes or mars a life, and in all the seconds an annoyance that disturbs a temper and spoils comfort. Oh! for that perfect promenade which we fear will only be found at the Millenum or in Heaven.

THE PAINS AND PERILS OF THE SEA.

THOSE who go down to the sea in ships can only know the perils of the great deep. Poets and painters have tried to make us believe that Jack becomes used to the winds and waves, and in moments of the most intense danger only looks upon it all as a mere matter of course, or that he says, as in the old song—

> "A strong nor'-wester's blowing, Bill—
> Lord! don't ye hear it roar now?
> Why, bless me, how I pities all > Unhappy chaps ashore now!"

But we fail to see the matter in that light, and cannot but believe that the plowers of the mighty deep never do get used to the hardships and perils, any more than eels get used to skinning.

The storms of the summer-time are often fearful—an African norther, for instance, when the ship in the midst of it, if at night time, seems to plunge through one mass of living fire, but the real peril and hardship is in the winter, when ice forms upon rigging and deck, when snow falls in a blinding profusion, or the fearfully bitter north wind howls and shrieks through and about the ship like a legion of fiends. That is the time that tries the mariner and tries the ship, and if, under its terrible influence, the seaman's courage fails, and benumbed and sodden with wet, he gives up and sees the ship founder, no word of condemnation can be used. The struggle is one of life and death, and death has won.

The past winter—we think it can be called past by this time—has been one of especial peril and hardship on the sea. Fine ships have gone down by scores, and a hecatomb of lives have paid the forfeit of daring the great deep. Our along-shore commerce has especially suffered by the intense cold, and fishermen have secured their prizes only with great labor and danger.

The rivers have been choked with ice, and many a fine vessel has been cut through and sunk by the floating masses. The ice-boats, which in average years have found little difficulty in forcing their way to encompass their duty, this year find that it is a perilous and tedious business.

The pilots, who are never daunted by any weather or any danger, have faced the music all through, and in the very bitterest days their little craft may be found far outside of Sandy Hook, seeking—not whom they may devour, but—whom they may succor, a labor that can only be appreciated when it is understood that it is voluntary. The most notable instance that has occurred this winter, in which these noble men acted a noble part, was the rescue of the passengers of the steamer Mary Boardman, wrecked upon the Romer Shoals. This was done at great and imminent peril to the pilots, but was in the highest degree successful, every one of the passengers being rescued through a terrific sea and intense cold.

No description can recall the horrors of the wreck, the hardships and daily danger of those who go with their lives in their hands to navigate the sea. It is not a matter of an hour or a day, and a month's tranquility afterward, as in the life of a soldier, but a constant knowledge that but a single moment lies between the sailor and death. If, when coupled with this comes labor, hardship, deprivation of food, and exposure to the elements, it is hard to realize that any should choose a mariner's life as a profession, and not only choose it, but be sufficiently infatuated with it, to give up comfortable homes and profitable employment to follow it.

HERE IS AN ANECDOTE OF THE COURT OF SPAIN.—A short time before O'Donnell's departure for the scene of war, the queen gave a state dinner, when, with a low bow, she said the following words: "General! My heart is waiting impatiently for the news of the victories which thou wilt gain; thou soon, with fresh laurels, wilt return to us. How happy I should feel if I could command the valiant army that with so much impatience is awaiting thy arrival. Oh! how deeply I regret that I am not a man!" The queen was overcome by emotion. She was silent; and while all the others were waiting until she could recover and go on with her speech, the deep silence was suddenly broken by a soft, trembling voice, which cried: "Oh! I also!" It was the king who had spoken.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

ONE of the most conscientious Dutchmen ever known, was porter in a commission house in Cincinnati, and sometimes sold some of the merchandise when the proprietors were absent. He was a good salesman, and a pretty good judge of money, but in one of his sales he took in a very suspiciously-looking $5 bill, and when the book-keeper took it to the bank, the bank refused it, and pronounced it spurious, but said it was an excellent imitation. The book-keeper returned it to the porter, and told him to return it to the party of whom he received it. About a week afterward, the book-keeper, thinking he had time to see the party and get another note, asked the porter if he had returned the spurious "V."

"Well," he said, "dat man vot gave me dat bill, he didn't comed around already, and some days I tink de bill vas goot, and some days I tink de bill vas bad; so one of dem days vot I tink it vas good, I passed him out!"

A TRAVELER relates an incident which he witnessed recently while waiting in the cars near this city. In front of him was a gentleman who indulged in rhyming. He asked a young lady sitting near him, if she would like to read his last production. Replying in the affirmative, he pulled a paper from his pocket, and placed it in her hand. But the lady had scarcely commenced reading, when the poet exclaimed:

"Zounds, madam, I have given you the wrong manuscript. Here is the right one. That is a recipe for the cure of diarrhœa!"

The lady's embarrassment, and the mirth of the spectators may be more readily imagined than described.

ON one of the occasions when Lord Palmerston was returned as a member for Tiverton, a radical butcher, of the name of Rowcliffe, attracted the attention of the crowd at hustings, by calling out in stentorian tones:

"My Lord, I want to ask you a plain, straightforward question."

"My good friend Rowcliffe," was the reply, "I will give you a plain, straightforward answer."

Immense cheering.

"My Lord, will you, or will you not, vote for the £6 franchise?"

"Friend Rowcliffe, I—will—not—tell—you!"

Roars of laughter, and immediate collapse of the butcher.

LITTLE Ella is about four years old. One day she committed an act of disobedience, and her mother, in correcting her, spoke in no gentle tone of voice; the child threw her arms around her mother's neck and exclaimed:

"Dear mamma, pray forgive me! If I had known how spunky it would have made you, I wouldn't have done so."

"MAMMA, if I am good I shall go to heaven, shan't I?"

"Yes, love."

"And who will be there besides?"

"Angels—dear, beautiful, good angels."

"Ah," hesitated the boy, "all angels—all good, beautiful boys! Mamma dear, do you think if I am very good they will let me have just one little devil to play with?"

IF you make a perforation through a volume of Shakspeare, why is that a mathematical absurdity? Because the part is greater than the whole.

"How is your husband, dear?" asked one lady of another.

"Oh! he is in a very bad state," was the reply.

"And pray what kind of a state is he in?" persisted the other.

"In State Prison."

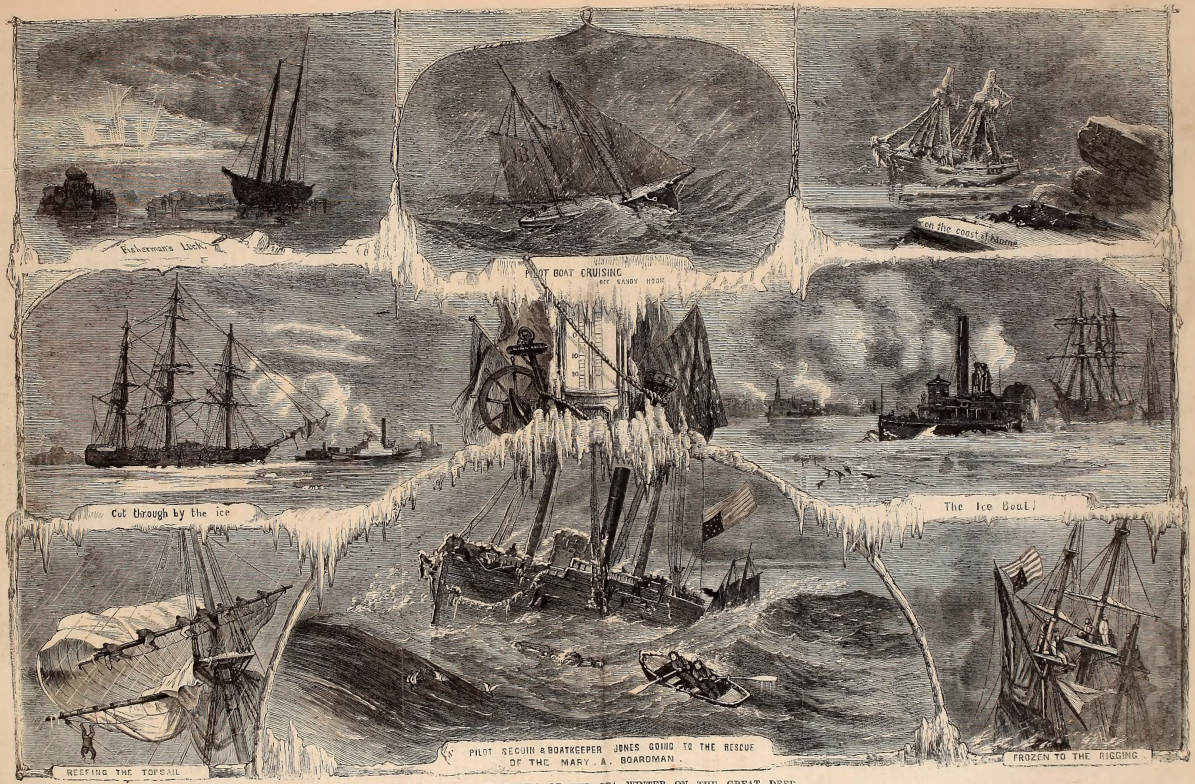
A SPIRITED young lady who was about to marry a man whose purse was longer than his head, said she preferred his dollars to his sense.

A BOY'S idea of having a tooth drawn may be summed up as follows: "The doctor hitched fast on to me, pulled his best, and just before it killed me, the tooth came out."

WHY does a chicken three weeks, three days and three hours old walk across the road? To get to the other side.

MRS. PARTINGTON says that the coal-porters may say what they like about religious tracks, but she thinks, in her opinion, that there's no tracks so suggestive of solemn thoughts as the railroad tracks.

A WESTERN soldier who had been through all the campaigns and shared in many of the fiercest battles of the war, writes from his home that "he never realized the horrors of war till he got home to Indiana, and found his gal married to a stay-at-home dry-goods clerk."



WONDERS OF THE OIL REGIONS.—A remarkable phenomena has appeared in the oil regions, at Pithole City, Pennsylvania. A fire broke out there on the 6th inst., in one of the wells, which has since been constantly burning. To quench it all the wells in the neighborhood were laid under contribution. These were quickly pumped out, and about 8 o'clock next morning, a man went to his pump for water, but imagine his surprise when he pumped up pure petroleum. The news quickly spread, and crowds collected, and all day long the process was kept up, the pump lifting out pure oil of a specific gravity of 42 degrees. An engineer who visited the spot, thought the oil came from a leak in the Miller Farm pipes, which pass but a few hundred feet from it, but this theory has been disproved by later developments. All the wells in the neighborhood were immediately pumped dry, when the precious liquid began to flow in each, which was carried away in bottles, buckets, and all sorts of articles, by the people. The first well "struck" belongs to a Mrs. Rickets, a widow woman, who has heretofore earned a living by washing. It is at the depth of 16 feet, and was only pumped at intervals, but the oil came freely in answer to the pumping, and would fill a barrel in ten minutes. It was not worked more on account of a difficulty in getting barrels to put the oil in. Mrs. Rickets was offered, at first, $1,000 for it, and then $2,000, until at last a gentleman secured the refusal at $5,000. Meanwhile, the well which is on fire can be seen at a great distance, the flame rising 60 feet high, and the crackling of it can be distinctly heard a mile off. At times it burns fiercer than usual, breaking, and roaring, and threatening to burst the earth and engulf all within its reach, and forming a scene beautifully grand and sublime. The ground around the well for nearly 500 feet, in every direction, has been thoroughly baked by the heat, and at a little distance the trees are budding, and some have actually put forth leaves. In some places, the grass has grown two inches high, forcibly reminding one of summer on a small scale. The well is owned by parties in Rochester, N. Y., and was struck some four weeks ago. It commenced flowing oil and water, with a very strong force of gas, and so continued until the fire.

A FRUITFUL VINE.—A remarkable instance of fecundity, which deserves to be recorded elsewhere than in the official journal of St. Petersburg has been published within the last few months. Twenty-two years ago a woman was married to a man named Moltchanow, and from this marriage there sprang six infants one after the other, six times twins, once there were three, and on the last occasion four, which entered the world in the following order: on the 8th of April, a boy (living), at midnight of the 9th and some time after, a boy (since dead), and a girl (living), and on the night of the 14th, a girl, also living. The strength of the poor woman was, however, exhausted, and she died, at the somewhat early age of 40. It will be seen, therefore, that she had bestowed on her husband in all 26 children, 16 boys and 10 girls. Of this number 19 have died. The place where this remarkable event, or rather series of events, occurred, was at a village named Tzvetow, in the government of Koursk.

1. Street Corner Gamblers, who will insult ladies. 2. Baggage Smashers, who will tear your clothes. 3. Loungers and Loafers, who will stare you out of countenance. 4. Dog Sellers, Toy Vendors and Bootblacks, who will get in your road. 5. Ash Emptyers, who will cover you with dust. 6. Placard men, who will smash your hat or bonnet. 7. Ill-bred men, who will smoke bad pipes. 8. Porters and Cartmen, who will put boxes on sidewalk. 9. Omnibus Drivers, who will crush people and street cars. 10. Everything on wheels or not on wheels, that will make a crash, a crush and confusion.

THE PAINS, PERILS, AND PENALTIES OF BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THE PAINS AND PERILS OF THE SEA—WINTER ON THE GREAT DEEP.

PARTED.

BY J. B. SWETT.

I loved him well, but a lying tongue
 Hardened against him my heart;
And yet, worlds of suffering to me hung
 On the moment we came to part.

I sent him his letters, and asked for mine—
 (We were many miles apart),
And he sent them all, saying, "Dearest, thy shrine
 I leave with a broken heart."

Oh! could I have known then how guiltless his breast
 Was of charges of wrong he bore,
I soon would have placed his crushed heart at rest,
 And told him the whole thing o'er.

But no; he was proud, and he scorned to speak
 Of his innocence, even to me;
He thought 'twas enough, if my love was so weak
 As to doubt, he would let me go free.

And now I'm alone, and my heart's bereft;
 And I breathe with deep drawn sighs;
But the fiat's pass'd—my lover has left,
 And hot tears are filling my eyes.

Bound to the Wheel.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GUY WATERMAN'S MAZE," "REUBEN'S WAR," ETC.

CHAPTER LXXI.—LIFE IN ANOTHER'S HANDS.

It is an awful thing to feel one's life is in the hands of another. To Clarissa it was scarcely less awful to feel that another's life was probably in her hands. The thinking of it, while trying to shape out some practicable course for the talk that must presently begin, gave a sadder sweetness to her smile, a yearning, spiritual look to her eyes, a strange and delicious tenderness to her tones.

Sleuth reveled in all. He snatched a fearful joy out of his own danger. At times he seemed to start in his thought, as though an earthquake had caused the ground to yawn at his feet—but it was for a moment only: the gulf seemed somehow to disappear, the solid ground to re-appear, and to glow with flowers like a meadow in early June.

Never before had anything approaching to such intimate personal relations occurred between them. On the contrary, it was the sense of the contrast with the past that gave the present its most subtle charm. Clarissa had intentionally kept him at arm's length, not really treating him as a friend of her own, but only as a man whom her father received to his intimacy, and who was, therefore, entitled to her careful respect.

But it was not in Sleuth's nature to enjoy this position secretly, and make no outward sign. It stimulated his besetting vices—envy of Anthony, and conceit in himself to new and absurd ventures. And thus, before he had said a word, there appeared a something in his manner and countenance that gave Clarissa a most abrupt shock, and warned her that he evidently was not in the least understanding his own danger or the source of her interest.

The formal gravity of her demeanor from that moment drew Sleuth down from the air and from the castle-building in which he had indulged. Her words were equally menacing:

"I—I have something to say to you, which I hoped you would have anticipated. I wish now to show the friendship we spoke of—the gratitude for that which you have done. It is you who are in danger!" She put her hand on his and leaned a little forward as she said this, looking intently in his face.

Sleuth stared, smiled, and changed color.

"Miss Pompess! I? You jest!"

"Heed me! heed me! heed me! before it is too late. It is for this I have staid—for this only."

"But not for this you came?" demanded Sleuth, with a look Clarissa found it impossible to understand.

"Yes, for this, too, in part, I came!"

"Miss Pompess, you are truth itself, and cannot be untrue. Thank you. Since you acknowledge another reason, may I guess what it is?"

"Is it not obvious,?" asked Clarissa, fearlessly challenging his gaze.

"It is! You are right. So Phillis's release means not only Mr. Maude's safety, but my danger, does it?"

"I cannot answer questions except with my heart."

"Forgive me if I seem disturbed by your previous words, and unable for the instant (ungrateful man that I am) to respond to kind feelings. If your words mean anything—and I have ever found only too much meaning for my peace in all Miss Pompess says—you now mean that I am an object of suspicion in connection with—with the death of my uncle. I can smile even at that—ay, even while my heart bleeds to know who it is suggests the terrible thought. But I shall so act that the whole world may see and fear nothing but the concealment of the truth."

"Then we can have no quarrel."

"Quarrel! Oh, withdraw the word, Clarissa—may I not call you so?"

"If you please," said Clarissa, after a troubled pause.

Then he went on:

"Quarrel! Do you forgot so soon what I have so lately told you, that you already wonder that I desire to acquit myself in your eyes?"

Then there was a little pause, full, for both, of dreadful suspense—each waiting for the other to begin, and each shrinking from doing what each had to do, in the hope of some yet unknown solution being suddenly discovered.

"You must think me very inconsistent," Clarissa said, at last, pity for Sleuth once more nerving her to speak, "that I, who said just now what I did, should also say, 'Oh, that this trial might never, never take place!'"

"Perhaps I can echo that wish, in your own sense," said Sleuth, speaking very deliberately. "Mr. Maude will be examined for the last time to-morrow, and then be committed for trial, unless——"

Sleuth waited for the rest of the sentence, but as it did not come, he ventured to look at her.

"Unless," said she, in low, penetrating tones, her eye fixed on Sleuth's eye, and her hand firmly grasping his where it lay on the table, "unless you say that which you alone can say for him."

Sleuth started to his feet, half in emotion, half in anger, which he managed, however, to repress so strongly, that it only gave a peculiar ring to his voice.

"Miss Pompess, I would give every shilling I possess to be able to say one effectual word for my cousin, but I cannot. Am I too harsh if I say you must know I cannot?"

"I know you can," said Clarissa, also rising, and with a heightened color in her cheeks.

Sleuth gazed on her boldly and incredulously for an instant, then with a cry as of wonder or of outrage, shook his hand in the air, and began to pace excitedly to and fro.

Seeing this, Clarissa seated herself, and waited.

Recovering from his agitation, and aware Clarissa, though silent, was waiting and watching, Sleuth said suddenly to her, from the further end of the room:

"And may I ask how it is supposed I could aid my cousin Anthony?"

"Ah, yes! There is but one thing now." (Sleuth noticed the now, and thought to himself he understood its meaning: Phillis had cleared up all the rest.) "And that you alone can solve."

Sleuth would question no further. He dared not. He felt he was about to save or ruin all. And conscious he had to grope in the dark, knowing not where or in what shape his deadly enemy waited for him, he determined to be silent and to watch.

"The codicil!" said Clarissa. "How did that get into Anthony's desk? How did the writing get to the back of it?"

"You wish me to answer?"

"I do."

"Truly?"

"Truly as you must answer some day, if not now."

"Is this a threat?"

"Threat?" Clarissa could not control the tears that now rushed forth, to find him so persistently refuse to understand and respond to her secret hope.

"Oh, Miss Pompess, what am I to do—what say? If I speak as an innocent man must speak—even to the woman he adores, when she asks him such questions, he seems, even to his own eyes, brutish. If he forgets what she says, to think of her, of course he is at once proved guilty. Is this just?"

"I cannot reason with you; but I can feel. Oh, if you will but let me! This codicil! Anthony knew nothing of it till that day of its discovery. I know he did not. You know it, too. I know that you know it! I entreat you to believe me, and to shun questions and contests that both alike ought to desire should never be risked."

She knew! What could she mean? She was incapable of trickery. What did she know? Was Bob treacherous? Or had Sleuth's busy night in London—or at home, after his return—had that busy night of preparation for the concealment of the codicil been discovered? Or, again, was it Polly Garton who had told of the anonymous letter? Or was it the man who had made the drawer? No, no. It must be merely Anthony's own suspicion, arising out of his coming upon him at the close of that night's work, when he had solaced himself by a perusal of the codicil? Stay! there was yet another clue to her words: the burglars had told the governor of Hengsten Jail of the paper they had given to Bob, who said he had made light of it, but, nothwithstanding, the fact might have gone to Mr. Stamp. Oh, the whole thing was clear, and sufficiently dangerous! even though he was prepared, and could yet deal with the difficulty.

Yet mistakes would be perilous. If they had possession of some fact, which he supposed them to be ignorant of, it might be fatal to him not to own and explain it, before they could use it to his injury.

Besides, he saw, beyond all question, in Clarissa's attitude and words, a desire to avoid pain for him. It was as if she were putting herself mentally into his position; and, while unable to say so in plain words, yearning for him to understand it, and to help her to come to conclusions without seeming to recognize the intervening gulf.

Anyhow, he must break up this position of imbecility in which he found himself, by trying to make her shift the ground with him. So he said, abruptly, and yet with a tone that seemed to imply he was only responding to her appeal:

"Remember—and it is a thing I never for a moment forget—that if Anthony be found guilty, such a verdict not only does not make him guilty, but it does not prevent his friends from doing something effectual still to save him."

Clarissa looked at him with eyes so full of horror and suspicion, as she realized the entire force of his words, that he, with some tremulousness of voice, hastened to add:

"He will not be found guilty—he cannot. His assurances to me in the prison compel me to believe him innocent."

"Man, man, dare you tell me now you do not know he is innocent? Stay! Beware! There is a point you may go to, at which I cannot and will not follow you. Beware of that. Oh, I charge you, have pity on yourself ere it be too late!"

Sleuth tried to speak—tried to look, with earnest calmness, in her face, but the effort was beyond him. The something in those brilliant, sparkling, indignant, yet pleading eyes, seemed to act upon his faltering purposes, as the sudden, blinding lightning-flashes act upon a man, who, in a perilous pass, is at the very same moment made aware that there is scarcely a sound yard of ground to stand still upon or to advance over.

She saw her advantage, and pursued it. She went to the window, whither he had gone in a kind of affectation of curiosity that did not impose upon himself by the idea of its success, and she said to him:

"Once, again, I ask you to listen to me as to a friend. Oh, it may be—I fear it must be—for the last time. I think you still misunderstand, if not your danger, then me. You cannot believe in me, in my devotion, in my courage to go through with that which I might undertake. But you wrong me, I declare to you; and if my words do not convince you, let these foolish, foolish tears, which I would conceal from you, if I could, be my pledge. You are unhappy. Why refuse, then, a voice that offers comfort? You think I speak only for Anthony. Sleuth, if there be any form of language in which the true heart of a woman can speak to your heart, oh, find it for me, while I say I have now no fear for Anthony, my fear and my hope relate to you."

Sleuth leaned his arm upon the table, dropped his head, and felt he was dropping into ruin, but that, somehow, it was Clarissa who led him, and who would yet say sweet things to soothe the anguish of ruin; and, anyhow—ruin or salvation, contest or surrender—he must have one moment of abandonment to his miseries, with the conviction that Clarissa was by, and interested in his fate.

And then, again, the mad fancy possessed him that, after all, it was unlucky circumstance, not Anthony's merits or behavior, that had given him a kind of right to Clarissa's love. He seemed to understand that Clarissa's loyalty of character would then keep her, in her own belief, true to him; and yet, that if Sleuth dared all, and used his very danger, and Anthony's danger, as an instrument over her, there might be hope of a wonderful solution.

He lifted his head, and said:

"You wonder at me, perhaps, and even misconceive all this. It is because I cannot convince you. Let me try, then, whether you can convince me. I invite you to speak more freely. Think what you will of me, and, for the moment, at least, I will patiently bear, while I wait to hear your reply to my question. How will you prove this feeling for me. What will you do?"

"Do! I scarcely know the things I will not do, if I may save alike you and Anthony."

"It is easily said," observed Sleuth, with a melancholy gesture of his head.

"Try me. I do not fear to promise you, beforehand, I will do with all my heart, and soul, and strength, whatever you can now ask me!"

Sleuth gazed on her wonderingly, but dared not speak.

"Shall I speak to you, since you will not speak to me?" Clarissa asked, sinking her voice to a whisper.

Sleuth's lips moved, as if he said "Yes;" but she heard nothing, she only saw the movement of his thin, straight lips.

"Convert into money whatever you can of your present possessions. Write me a few words—I will not show them to one living person till the day and the hour you fix—then fly! There are other lands. There is a future yet in which to undo the past."

"You mean——"

"No; I do not mean all or half that my words imply. I cannot—will not try to estimate accurately the amount or character of your doings in that past. I only know that for you, of all the world, it is desirable that the past should sink into oblivion."

"Anthony thus repays me, I suppose, for my proposal to him?"

"I declare to you I never, till this moment, knew or suspected you had given him any such advice."

"Do you know what I should do had any other living person said this to me?"

"No; nor do I want to know. You have done one thing to-day—I own it to you—which will make me ever grateful. You have, I think, decided Anthony's safety. But now I plead to you for one whom misfortune makes dear to me: Sleuth, my dear friend, I plead to you for yourself."

"You advise me to go—to seek a foreign clime. I have not now one friend in the world—unless it be you. Will you go with me? Will you save Anthony at that price? Will you save me by promising to make me your life-long slave?"

It was out at last. Sleuth had rid himself of the perilous shaft he had secreted in his bosom, and that was always getting in his way, and pricking him with its point.

How did Clarissa receive it? He was compelled to face her face—to know the value, once for all, of the thought, and to deal with it as he might, if it failed. He there saw not only the dead, fixed look she gave him—the pallor, that swept, like a white morning mist over her countenance—the intense scorn, gradually again changing to an intense anguish in her eyes; then she rose, and without again speaking to him, walked slowly out of the room.

Not till he had lost sight of her could Sleuth recover himself sufficiently to make any attempt to arrest her departure. Then he hurried after her.

"Miss Pompess!" he called, in a tone not loud, for he dreaded listeners, but penetrating, from its very restraint and earnestness; "I beg you, not to forgive me, but to listen to me for one moment."

She moved on, taking not the slightest notice of him, till he succeeded in passing her, while she hesitated in doubt as to the way, when she got to the end of the beautiful corridor. Then he faced her, with both hands held up, barring her passage, but with an attitude and look of the deepest humility in other respects.

"Miss Pompess," said he, almost breathless with agitation, and the necessity for speaking low, as they were now so much nearer to the domestics, "I will order your carriage for you—do whatever you wish—delay you not one moment that can be possibly avoided! Let me, then, not have to say, after you have left me, that you have most strangely misunderstood me."

"Sir!" said Clarissa, looking sternly in his face, "have I, do you think, lost the right use of my senses!"

"Speak low, I entreat you! Not for the world would I have it known that you came here, and left thus. Oh, spare me—spare me that anguish! Will you return to the room you have just left for a single moment?"

"I will not."

"Will you hear me, then, where we are?"

Clarissa was silent. Sleuth then said, after a pause:

"Oh, Miss Pompess! is it possible that you did not understand that it was the cruel bitterness of your own proposal to me of flight that tempted me to the worse than cruel bitterness of my retort? Can you not see and understand that at the moment I thought only of making you feel the monstrous character of your own suggestion, by adding to it a suggestion of mine that you would think equally monstrous.

"Forgive me! forgive me! it was a mad, brutal thought, but you know—you must know, in your inmost heart—that not even Anthony Maude himself reverences you more highly than I do, or would have been more ready to avenge upon anybody else the faintest approach to that disrespect of which, in my anguish and despair, I was guilty."

They were interrupted. The doctor's footman stood there to say the carriage was waiting.

Clarissa motioned to him to precede her; then herself, still saying nothing to Sleuth, followed.

"You will honor me with your arm in token of forgiveness, will you not?"

Clarissa was silent, and still walked on. She knew he walked by her side, though so gently, his footsteps were scarcely heard, as though he tried to keep down the sound of their movement, that no attention might be attracted on the part of the household.

As they reached the vestibule, Sleuth made yet another attempt.

"Miss Pompess, if what you told me was true—I mean as regards yourself—and if you really still believe that misfortune threatens me, can you, for an unhappy error made by a most unhappy man, thus leave his house, and thus leave him a prey to a greater sorrow, even, than that with which you threatened him?"

"I can say no more to-day. Will you take me to the carriage?"

She then gave him her hand, and he placed it in his arm, and was trying to hold it with his fingers as it lay there; but she stopped so haughtily, that he needed no other reproof before the men-servants, but handed her into the carriage, which instantly drove off.

He kept bowing as she disappeared, and she seemed once—just once—to look at him, and answer him—then was gone.

"Idiot! thrice-accursed idiot that I am! I have lost my only friend—the only one who might, perhaps, help me in the worst extremity!"

CHAPTER LXXII.—WHAT A SINGLE DAY MAY BRING FORTH.

A carriage alights at the doctor's house, and two ladies, closely veiled, emerge from it. One stands on the gravel a moment, and glances timidly and anxiously round; but the other takes her arm, and leads her with an air of half command, but with marked gentleness, into the house.

They pass along the entrance hall, they ascend the stairs, and only stop when Clarissa pushes open the door of her bedroom, and says to her companion, as she imprints a kiss on her pale cheek:

"We are home at last. Let me welcome you. This is my bedroom; and there is yours."

She pointed to an inner room—Clarissa's own dressing-room—but which was large enough to hold a spare bed, and was so pretty a place that Phillis could not help expressing her pleasure and grateful feeling.

"Now, Phillis, I am a very candid sort of person, and I hope you won't like me any the worse for that. I have fulfilled my compact—have I not?—in releasing you. You will now, I am sure, honorably fulfill yours. Mr. Stamp advises that you shall be so situated that no person whatever can get to speak to you—to worry you at so anxious a time—except through me. Now when I say to you that, if you ask me to let you see any one—no matter whom—you shall, provided only you will let me first communicate with Mr. Stamp, or, if you prefer it, if you won't mind my being present at the interview—I say, if you won't mind considering yourself for a time an honorable prisoner, I will put you, as military men say, on your parole. That is, if you will give me your honest and frank promise not to leave this place under any circumstances unknown to me, not to communicate to any one, directly or indirectly, and not to allow yourself to be communicated with, without telling me promptly. If you will do all this—and you see that I tell you everything at once, and in the roughest way—then I will trust you entirely, treat you as if you were my own sister while you are with me, and be permanently your friend when all these sad things shall have come to their natural conclusion. What say you?"

"I agree, with all my heart; and you may trust me. Oh, heaven knows no one ever trusted me and was deceived? It is when——"

The voice changed, the sentence became inaudible, and soon ceased.

* * * * *

Sleuth sits in his easy chair in his study, and the butler has just reported to him how Phillis had been removed to the doctor's, and how he had watched till he had discovered the very room where she was, up-stairs, and which was either the same as Miss Pompeo's bedroom, or one adjoining it—probably opening out of it.

"Very well. That must do for the present. Now for another matter. While I wish to save myself from the unpleasantness of a discussion about my private quarrel with this young lady, I am scarcely less anxious about the fate of my cousin. I am going to confide to you a secret. I advised him to fly, and offered my assistance, and said I would, if driven to do it, boldly avow my action. But he and I are not very good friends. He refuses to listen to me."

"A thousand pities, sir, ain't it?"

"I think so. I mention it to you in order that, if you saw a chance, you might offer your help. I will meddle no further than this. I have provided him like key at some risk and difficulty—a thing quite impracticable but for my position as a visiting justice of the prison. It is a recent pattern of the governor's own master-key, and opens every important door in the place. Now, if you were to consult with that fellow Bob, I think, perhaps, he'd manage somehow or other—in spite of his noisy chatter about the alderman's memory—to get the key into Mr. Anthony Maude's possession; and then I should wipe my hands of his fate, and say it all rested with himself. I know I ought not to do this; but humanity's love overpowers my material duty. I know he is in awful danger; I don't know he is guilty. And, as I said to him, were he to try to screen me for fresh discoveries to be made, the whole truth might yet be discovered, and he be completely exonerated. You see how I confide in you."

"You may, sir. I esteem myself very fortunate that you are inclined to do so. I will see Bob—"

"Ay, but you're to consult me!"

"Sir, I'll take care I won't even, to begin with, commit myself. And yet he shall have the key, with a hint or two."

"He'll need no more."

* * *

The discreet butler has left him, and Sleuth is reading his newspaper for the day, and trying to shut out for a few minutes the terrible mob of thoughts that oppress his brain, by a thundering criticism of Miss O'Neil's Juliet, when a word catches his eye in an adjoining column, and his brain starts into lively flame with the rolling beat, and to light up the page. This is what he reads:

"OUR HUSBAND FOUNDS REWARD is offered for the discovery of the murder (who is believed known to be innocent of any evil intention) of an anonymous letter, sent in 1856 to Dr. Pompeo, of Pendington Hall. Any person aiding and assisting to clear up this matter, will be well rewarded. Communications to be addressed to Messrs. Stamp & Co., Solicitors, Hengston."

Sleuth's first impulse on reading this was to run to a sideboard, where lay a bundle of other recent newspapers, to glance over them, and then to exclaim:

"Of course! of course! There it is a week ago, and I never saw it! Too late now, no doubt!"

Two things on the discovery of this document, Sleuth appears at Polly Garton's door, and asks the landlady if she is up-stairs.

"No, sir," she said, the old woman.

"Will she be long? Have you any idea where she is?"

She did say something—I didn't mind her much—something about a holiday—and she asked me the best way of going to Hengston."

"Ever been?"

"Oh, that was early this morning?"

"Then, perhaps, it is almost time for her to return?"

"Well, I don't know. Poor thing! She don't often take a holiday. So, perhaps, she may be late. Would you like to wait?"

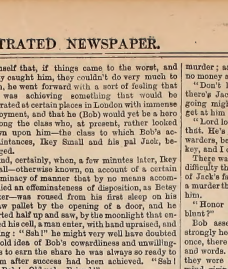
"Yes, yes. I must see her to-night."

Sleuth looked at his watch. Five o'clock. He sat down, and quietly contemplated this new danger. Six o'clock came. He grew anxious, but comforted himself with the reflection that he could and would obtain greater influence over her than it was possible for Anthony's advisers to exercise. Seven o'clock! Would they——— He hardly dared to complete his fearful sentence. Twenty more minutes, each of fearful length and significance, passed, and then there was a knock that brought all the blood to Sleuth's cheeks and hope to his soul.

The door opened, and not Polly Garton, but a man entered. Sleuth started back incredulous, divining what was about to happen, and striving not to add new danger through his own visible presence of a moment.

"I come, if you please mem, from Hengston. A lady at Lawyer Stamp's sent me to say, as how she's a poor lone woman friendless, and she pray her lordship, and I'm to pay the rent: one shilling left on last week, and two shillings and sixpence for this week; and two shillings and sixpence for another week, as she sin't a given you proper notice."

"And will you take her things?"



"Yes, if you please—that's what she said."

Sleuth waited to see the man off, in order to make sure that no questions were asked about himself, and then went out into the London streets —calm enough, as far as the exterior went, but enduring within tortures that no legal punishment could really enhance.

* * *

The moonlight was falling in soft splendor on the nigh walls and the iron chevaux-de-frise of Hengston Prison, thus making the latter give a kind of luminous and ornamental finish to the long, blank, and monotonous range of brickwork below, when a creaking and bulky-looking human figure slunk along the base, where there was a deep strip of shadow, caused by the position of a long brick-kiln opposite, which partly intercepted the moon's light.

He often paused and leaned his back, as if it ached with the stooping posture, against the wall, and thus rested and listened. Then, after a time, he bent again to his task, and advanced, till he reached the furthest point at which the shadow cast by the brick-kiln extended. Then he made a longer pause, as if he did not wish to emerge into the full light, and even began to retrace his steps. Not far, however. He stopped, listened as before, but for a still longer time; then, as if satisfied, he drew from his pocket a tin can of wax, and wound it with great care, in a short circular heap, letting the twine drop as lightly as possible, so that it might not prepared to throw.

But he was too near. There was no help for it. He moved a yard or two out into the light, and then discharged the shot. It fell short, and dropped to the ground. Again he tried, and he heard the dull sound of the twine-covered stone against the face of the wall, and then the rattle of the cord. He pulled—the iron-work revolved, and the stone came back right upon his very head, and produced an exclamation that it was unnecessary for us to omit particularizing.

Made sure it was too rusty to serve a fellow like that? he muttered.

Winding up his string, to prevent its getting entangled, he moved a few yards further and repeated the experiment, and with entire success. The iron-work did not revolve when the string was pulled. Gently, then, he drew it away, till he felt the stone dangling close to the bar across which the string lay, then he let it suddenly down a foot or two, and the slackening of the string told him the stone was just where he did not want it—resting on the wall. Several attempts produced only the same result, till at last the string remained tight, the stone was sinking. Within or without? For a little time Bob could not discover. At last he found a way, till he felt the stone dangling close to the bar across which the string lay, then he let it suddenly down a foot or two, and the slackening of the string told him the stone was just where he did not want it—resting on the wall. Several attempts produced only the same result, till at last the string remained tight, the stone was sinking. Within or without? For a little time Bob could not discover. At last he found a way, but he now was aware that the stone was where he desired it, outside the wall, and presently came to his eager hand.

Putting it on the ground, after feeling carefully to be sure that the other end of the string was safe (and the buttoning of his jacket over it), he drew off a loose overcoat, and began to unwind from his body a seemingly tangled coil of knotted string, but which eventually proved to be a rope-ladder.

When he had arranged this to his mind, he drew forth another coil of string, much smaller than the former, and it was but the work of a minute to tie this to the end of the thin twine that he originally used, and presently began to gently to draw up across the chevaux-de-frise and down again a piece of cord capable of bearing the weight of the ladder, and of no use in the exposure, for there he was in the broad, full moonlight, a mark for every eye that might happen to look in his direction.

But Bob had not been paying a daily visit to his friend the porter, to chat over the progress of the great trial, for nothing. He had managed, during the gossip to learn, among other useful facts, that at the point where he was breaking into prison, there was no watch-tower, or any such kind, for the spot formed a little enclosed yard, with straggling grass, where the governor's pony was put to graze, and that two or two in alarm of Bob's proceedings, seemed to think better of it, and began to feed once more.

Bob took care to fix the ladder-cord to the ladder on the other side, to insure its safety on the iron-work, revolve or not revolve, and then slid lightly on to ground, and began to look around.

"Door on left out of this to gunner's back premises; door right of this door to wash-house; then 'wee' and 'wee' to right and left. Wishes I deciphere the way to the werry first corridor he walks into when he wisits his flock. Then second door on the left, and then you are! This is the lesson as Mr. Sleuth has made me learn so well, and so far I ain't no fault to find with his knowledge. Then you ain't, you ain't. I 'spose, looks on a prison as a sort of private game-preserve for his edification and amoosement. All right. Here goes for it!"

Thus ran the thoughts through Bob's mind, as he slowly searched for the door of this enclosure, which he found to be the left. He then found that the shift or knowledge that had been at work to supply him with the keys had not failed him. The bolt was instantly shot, and the door opened, and—

Instantly drawn back again—for Bob heard a laugh, and caught the gleam of a candle, and the opening or closing of a shutter. He hesitated, and felt strongly tempted to run back to his ladder while there might yet be time; but, while he hesitated, the sounds died away, the light disappeared, and Bob knew his movement of the door had not been noticed.

The scullery or wash-house was soon found; but the door was bolted inside, as well as locked, and the window—a narrow one—was the only available entrance. Bob climbed up and in, and then marveled a little at his own "check," as he called it—to stand there in the guvnor's own premises, "unknown" to anybody.

Bob was but a coward when really tested; but, like many cowards, was fond of persuading himself he had a good deal of pluck. So, reminding himself that, if things came to the worst, and they sought him, they couldn't do very much to him, he went forward with a sort of feeling that he was achieving something that would be narrated at certain places in London with immense enjoyment, and that he (Bob) would yet be a hero among the chaps at present, rather looked down upon him—the class to which Bob's acquaintances, Hey Small and his pal Jack, belonged.

And, certainly, when, a few minutes later, Hey Small—otherwise known, on account of a certain effeminacy of manner, as Sweet Hey, or means accompanied an effeminateness of disposition, as Bester Baker—was roused from his first sleep on his hard pallet by the opening of a door, and he started half up and saw, by the moonlight that entered his cell, a man enter, with hand upraised, and crying: "Sh!" he might very well have doubted his old idea of Bob's cowardliness and unwillingness to earn the share he was always so ready to claim after successes had been achieved. "Sh! It's Bob! Old pal. Friend!"

"Bob? Bob the Ostler?" whispered Hey, in fear and wonderment-stricken tones.

"All right. Which on you is it? Jack?"

"No." The convict got up and advanced.

"Ah! Sweet. Gives us your bunch o' fives, old fellow."

"What for?"

"For venturing in where so many 'od like to venture out, to tell you summut for your good."

"Ain't made much on you afore this," said Hey sullenly.

"More room for goodness now, as the parson says. Hey, listen. They're stirring in that ere business of the murder. And I wanted you to be up to what I was arter when I came to the guv'nor."

"How's that?"

"Why, o' course, my boy, I wouldn't have pesched on you about the robbery, and then axed you to own it, if I hadn't known you as we was. I meant. Take care, my bully boys, about the murder."

"Well, I guessed that, and answered the guvnor when he charged it upon me, just as I say."

"I know I know! But they're raking up every bit of stuff they can get hold of, and will have it you and Jack settled the halderman's death for 'em."

"It's a lie!"

"O' course it is. But you'll be axed about it, it's likely enough, in the court; and I say, Hey, I know noises—I must cut it short, or I'll get caught. This is what it comes to. Everybody knows it is Father Mr. Anthony Maude, who is now in this werry jail, or you. So if he's found hinnocent, I'm blessed if you and Jack won't have to look out."

Hey was evidently alarmed. His silence there, in the half light, half darkness of the midnight cell, was awful and threatening.

"Bob," he said, hoarsely, "is this on the square? May a fellow trust you?"

Bob's answer was a series of imprecations that seemed to blast him—sometime Hog, ——

"Bob, can't you put me on the right lay?"

"That's it. That's what I'm here for. You shouldn't be alarmed at what 've paper you for me. A paper has been diskivered in this Mr. Maude's own private hiding-place, which makes it look more as he was the only agent that werry night of the murder; but somehow he's got to know what you said to the guv'nor about the paper you gev me, and he's got it into his head that you was disinkered, and as you gut it to me, and I sold it to another gent,—Mr. Sleuth—and that he slyly dropped it in Mr. Anthony's desk."

"Then it's this Sleuth," said Hey, "as did the trick, was it?"

"He's hinnocent as a new-born baby! There couldn't be a thing agin him, but for your unfortunit remark about that 'ere paper."

"And is that all you've got to say to me?"

"Enough to hang a dozen men. But that isn't your biziness nor mine. But what is yours and mine is just what I've said. Don't chance Maude get a verdict of 'Not Guilty,' he won't be many days arter afore he's a tryin it on agin you to get a verdict of 'Guilty,' and can't help hisself. Every body says it's one of you."

"But I told the guvnor about the paper."

"Did you say it was signed?"

"No."

"Sure of Jack, too?"

"Yes. Jack and I got a word at chapel about it, and he hadn't said as much as me."

"All right. Let them get it out on ye quite unsuspected like, my boy, mind,—that's the time are quite sartin there were a name in the middle, but none at the bottom."

"I say I don't see in such a ——— fool," was Hey's response. "I know a trick worth two of that. I'll swear three was only the alderman's names in the middle. But then they must get it out of me; for I ain't lawyer enough to know—or, leastwise, to think about it—as wil-ness never ought to be asked such a question as to set the governor off a-looking after a unsigned cockil."

"All right! Mr. Sleuth's counsell'l manage to ax you the question. But Jack?"

"I'll prime him. You'd better be off."

"Hey, I shall get a lot o' blunt if this chap is convicted; not, mind you, that it's me or you as'll convict him. Now, don't you go for to run your head right down, Hey. I'll do it. I does get it, what can I do for you and Jack?"

"Send out to Botany Bay, fifty pounds apiece for us. That limb of the law who acted for us'll tell you how. He ain't a bad fellow. He'll send a ten-pound note out on each share; but he'll send the rest all on the square."

"I'll do it the werry instant I gets the chance. I'm off. Lot's of luck, if I never see you agin!"

"I 'spose you ain't game," suggested Hey, "to stay here and let me go."

"And then you'd be hunted like a rat for the murder; and if catched, there ain't no skill nor no money as 'ud get you off."

"Don't know about that," said Hey. "But there's risk, it might go hard with him. My going might fix the murder on him. Can't you get as him as you got us me?"

"Lord love you, no. The guv'nor took care o' that. He's got no end o' doors, and passages, and warders, between you and Jack. I ain't got the key, and I don't know the way."

There was a deep sigh, as if Hey resigned with difficulty the new chance opened. But his thought of Jack's fate, to be hung through the escape, for a murder they never committed, was too much for him.

"Honor bright! You'll send us out the blunt?"

"As asseverated, in his usual fashion, how strongly he felt on the subject, and no doubt, for once, there was a ring of truthfulness in his voice and words. He pitied his old pals, and he owned they were behaving very well, and so he didn't mind giving the promised slice out of his own abundance, when the reward should be obtained.

They shook hands in silence and parted—Bob, however, coming back on tip-toe to whisper, "if they catch you, don't you mind; stick to it you know nothing, heard nothing—didn't see me."

The prisoner had been dimly lighted as Bob entered the prison; but now were an utter darkness, except at certain points, which were intended to be kept in full display.

He passed all these, however, in safety, in spite of some alarming noises; then, when he had reached the last door—the one opening into the governor's private quarters—he found the key in the lock, turned as before, but the door would not open.

Bob's knees shook, and his fingers became suddenly unfit even to try the lock again. He stopped and wiped the cold sweat from his face with a rag that he carried in his pocket, and seemed to do it slowly, in order to keep or trying the key, from himself that he was thinking.

Then he tried it, and got open! That was the one and only thing that suppressed Bob's imagination when he planned at future contingencies. That was just the one thing he didn't feel he could do. Any yet expostulations might prove useless. He must try again.

While doing so, he hears footsteps behind him. They were slow and measured, and were not at all some distance. What should he do? To return would be useless. He had not noticed a single spot for concealment—not one, that even under the most favorable circumstances, could shelter him from the eye of the warder—of whom it was who came—like Bob's fate, nearer and nearer, with utter indifference alike of Bob's prayers and curses, which strangely alternated.

Then, in a paroxysm of desperate last attempt to open the door, he had an unexpected success, one that startled Bob more than he had been too easy; some one the other side of the door had been silently withdrawn the bolt and be wasting for him.

Never, we suppose, did anybody in Bob's position feel a more completely low-spirited coward at heart—felt this. He was evidently in a trap.

What should he say?

The door opened. The governor in person stood there, a candle in one hand, a sword in the other.

Bob dropped on his knees, and literally blubbered for pardon, while protesting he had meant no harm.

"What brought you here, you rascal? Tell me the truth, or I'll have you flogged this very minute."

"I—I——" and then, as Bob hesitated, a wonderful inspiration of lying came into him, and he gasped——

"Sir—sir—my poor dead father-in-law's never! I can't abide to have his blood on my shoulders. Aren't he the late Mr. Hensman's——sir?"

"Does he know of this desire of yours to help?"

"Does I as I do speak guv'nor, don't ax me now. It takes it on all myself."

"How did you get that key?"

"Sir, I found it. I tell you, I will, upon my soul, the blessed truth. I sneaked inside the gates merely to look at the lodging in an easy manner, and then I—I picked up the key among some rubbish in a corner."

The governor looked at the key; it was so like one he had lost a few months back, and been very uncomfortable about, that he could not suddenly say Bob was lying.

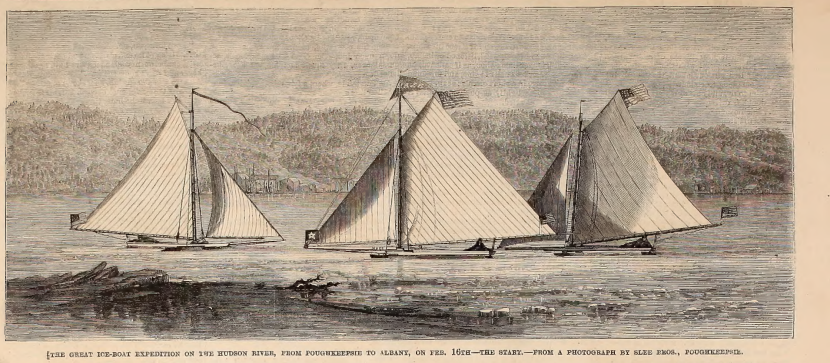
"And what could you came here to give the key to Mr. Maude?"

"No—no, at your pardon, guv'nor, I only thought o' that when I used the key, and thought as how he was always high, and mighty and respectable, a beggin, and a prayin, for somebody to come to be his savior. That's the whole truth, so help me——"

"Hush!"

Bob, who had been placed under the charge of a warder, the governor went to the convicts, both of whom denied, of course, anything but that they had seen anybody or anything, and went home. Bob was locked up in his own cell, examined against, and duly punished. And, then, that night he used against Anthony, in writing a desire to silence the chief prosecutor. Besides, he didn't like the question of the key as regards himself.

When he returned to the room where he had left it, he said to the butler:



"So far as I can learn, you have done no actual harm."

"Lord bless you, sir, not a bit."

"You have been kept prisoner? You'll have me for it presently." Bob trembled at that. "I have now to choose whether I shall treat you as a mere idle vagabond, putting your nose into places where you have no business—here into my private apartments—or to have you up before the magistrates to-morrow, and let them decide on your case."

"Guv'nor, take pity on me, do, and settle it all yourself. I'll never come again. Never, never!"

"I believe that Jackson, like him, can give him a dozen lashes, as vigorously as you can, and then let him go."

[THE GREAT ICE-BOAT EXPEDITION ON THE HUDSON RIVER, FROM POUGHKEEPSIE TO ALBANY, ON FEB. 16TH.—THE START.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY SLEE BROS., POUGHKEEPSIE.

ICE-BOAT EXPEDITION FROM POUGHKEEPSIE TO ALBANY.

THE long-talked-of and much-thought-of Ice-Boat Expedition from Albany to Poughkeepsie has been accomplished, and it was in every way a satisfactory one, if we may perhaps except speed. Ice-boats have of late years become numerous, there being over 100 of them on the Hudson River at the present time. The most of these are rough-ly-built, uncouth-looking crafts. At Poughkeepsie, however, can be seen ice-boats par excellence. Here over $10,000 have already been expended on these vessels in endeavoring to bring them to perfection, which feat has been nearly accomplished by Mr. Aaron Innis, in the construction of his new and beautiful ice-boat, the Haze.

The weather was all that could be desired, and the ice was in first-rate condition, inducing the Commodore of the Poughkeepsie Ice-Boat Squadron to signal to the vessels of the fleet to get up sail. Three vessels responded—the Minnehaha, Snow-Flake, and Haze—the owners of the other vessels being absent.

As soon as all sails were set the vessels were put head to the wind, their sails flapping vigorously, while the commanders went ashore for orders from the Commodore, which orders were to the effect that all should start immediately for Albany, stopping at Rhinebeck, Tivoli, Athens, and Hudson. At 10 A. M., the Minnehaha, owned and sailed by Mr. T. V. Johnson, carrying a few invited guests, bore away before the wind and took the advance. She was followed some time after by the Snow-Flake, owned and sailed by Mr. Thomas Parish. This vessel also carried a few invited guests, including the Commodore of the fleet, Mr. O. H. Booth, his vessel, the Resolute, being left behind. The Haze, owned and sailed by Mr. Aaron Innis, sailed last, also carrying invited guests.

The condition of the ice was all that could be desired, and had the wind been "on the beam" instead of "aft," the time made would have been glorious. All the way from Poughkeepsie to Hudson the river was covered with one continuous sheet of smooth, glassy ice, and as the trim little vessels ran before the wind, the crinkling sound of their runners and the whistling of Old Boreas through the cordage, mingled joyously with the shouts of the occupants. There was no need of a "look-out" man to shout, "bumps to the la'board" or "bumps to the starboard," the whole course, for 40 miles or more, was unobstructed.

THE HAZE, THE SWIFTEST CRAFT IN THE GREAT ICE-BOAT EXPEDITION FROM POUGHKEEPSIE, HUDSON RIVER, FEB. 16.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY SLEE BROS.

The running time to Rhinebeck was not extraordinary, it occupying over half an hour, in consequence of the wind not being "on the beam," as stated above. At that place the excursionists went ashore and regaled themselves with refreshments, while the crowd about the depot and hotel talked "ice-boat" and lightning. Leaving Rhinebeck, not much time was consumed in getting to Tivoli, where another stop was made. From there it was resolved to go direct to Athens, opposite Hudson, all getting into that point in good season, the Minnehaha in advance.

They soon reached the head-quarters of the Athens Ice-Boat Association, and as the Poughkeepsie boats "hove to" the members of that organization came out and greeted the Poughkeepsians warmly, taking them ashore and refreshing them with all sorts of refreshments.

After the "ice-boat talk" was finished, the entire party crossed the river to Hudson, when the excursionists were provided with quarters at the Worth House, their vessels, in the meantime, lying on the ice, with sails down, there to remain until morning.

The next morning, Saturday, the fleet again got under way, and entered into a grand scrub-race for Albany, the Minnehaha leading off, followed closely by the Haze and Snow-Flake. The excitement on the three vessels was intense, each striving to reach the Sturgeon City first.

When within eight miles of Albany, the Snow-Flake ran on to some loose ice on the "Flats" and broke through, the concussion bringing her suddenly to a stand-still. A little further on the steering apparatus of the Haze became disarranged, and she, too, was compelled to stop.

The helmsman of the Minnehaha seeing the true state of affairs "put down stick," and running back, came up alongside of the disabled crafts, giving them all the assistance possible, after which they all got away again, the Minnehaha reaching Albany first, followed closely by the other two boats.

The speed obtained was not extraordinary, on account of the unfavorableness of the wind. The running time to Albany from Poughkeepsie was a little short of two and a half hours. The run from Athens to Coxsackie, nine miles, was made in seven minutes. The expedition was a novel one, and those who participated in it have something to talk about for a month.

The reception at Albany was all that could be desired. The members of the Beaverwyck Club took the Poughkeepsians in hand, and never were boys better received before. The President and Secretary of the Club, Messrs. Humphrey and Weed, did all in their power to render the brief stay of the voyagers a pleasant one.

The excursionists set out to return at 3 P. M. They were escorted to their boats by a large number of prominent Albanians, and after being towed about one mile over rough ice by horses, parting words were spoken, and, with a lively breeze, the vessels got away with lightning speed, and in a few moments Albany was invisible.

While the Haze was dashing along at the rate of more than a mile a minute, and when opposite Castleton, coming down, the gale was so heavy that her spar was carried away, completely disabling her, but not injuring any of the excursionists.

The Snow-Flake being about half a mile astern, sailed up alongside of the wreck, and taking the Haze in tow, proceeded to Stuyvesant, where the adventurers took the cars on the Hudson River Railroad for home, leaving the vessels to be brought down. The Minnehaha also met with an accident by the breaking of her runner-plank.

DRIVING BEARS TO MARKET.

A RECENT traveler in Russia gives us some strange sketches of places, character, and incidents on his route. He reaches the town of Berezov. The time is spring, and he looks upon it as an unlocking of a people from a prison-house of ice and snow. The whole town seemed to break out in one song of gladness, and the change within a week was so great as almost to make one doubt their senses. The sight of the first crow at Berezov is hailed with signs of the most extravagant demonstration; it tells of the coming warm weather, and is not doubted as are the swallows with us, when we feel that one does not make a summer.

The neighborhood of Berezov is famous for bears, and of them our traveler tells some queer stories. Of these brutes there are two kinds; the first a black bear, of which the people seem very much afraid, so much so that when one night the alarm was given that a black bear was in the neighborhood of the town, the population turned out en masse to hunt down the animal. With the white or polar bear it is different, and our author asserts that it is no uncommon sight to see a flock of these animals driven through the streets of Berezov, the same as a flock of sheep. Several men were necessary to drive them, not from any fear or safe-guard, but simply because of their pic-like stupidity. They are fat and lazy, and, like sheep, are driven to the slaughter that their skins may make furs, their flesh go to the pot, and their fat to cultivate the hirsute beauties of the people of all nations.

DRIVING BEARS TO MARKET, AT BEREZOV, RUSSIA.

MONTCALM'S MONUMENT, ON THE PLAINS OF ABRAHAM, QUEBEC, CANADA.

PREPARING A BRIDEGROOM FOR THE WEDDING IN FERNANDO PO, AFRICAN COAST.

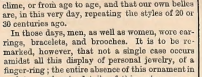
Under this relation it is plain to be seen that Mr. Bear does not understand his own power, or he would not tamely submit to be hustled and driven to his undoing.

THE JEWELRY OF ANCIENT ASSYRIA.



THE wonderful discoveries of Botta and Layard, in Nineveh, have brought the manners and customs of this extinct nation into such familiarity, that we can trace every step of their daily life, and by the same means bring Scriptural history to positive elucidation.

ASSYRIAN BROOCH.

We give some illustrations of the jewelry found in these excavations, that we may show how fashion simply travels from clime to clime, or from age to age, and that our own belles are, in this very day, repeating the styles of 20 or 30 centuries ago.

In those days, men, as well as women, wore earrings, bracelets, and brooches. It is to be remarked, however, that not a single case occurs amidst all this display of personal jewelry, of a finger-ring: the entire absence of this ornament in sculpture, wherein details of this nature are so elaborately and carefully attended to, leads to the conclusion that the finger-ring was unknown among them. Not so with the brooch or breast-pin, many specimens having been found exquisitely and elaborately carved in ivory and mother-of-pearl, and mounted in gold. Gems are more rare, the diamond seldom found, but sapphire, amethyst, and beryl, often. The wire-work in gold is oftentimes fully equal to the best work of the present day, and notwithstanding the entombment of a few thousand years, is undecayed and brilliant.

ASSYRIAN EAR-RINGS.

MONTCALM'S MONUMENT.

ON the plains of Abraham stands the monument of Montcalm, a brave and distinguished French general, who fell fighting under the walls of Quebec in 1759.

This monument, the first stone of which was laid on November 15th, 1827, was built chiefly through the liberality of the Earl of Dalhousie, who was then Governor-General of Canada. The design was made by Capt. Young, of the 79th regiment, English. The inscription on its front, is:

Mortem Virtus Communem
Famam Historia
Monumentum Posteritas
Dedit.

On the North side it reads only the word:
"Montcalm."

ASSYRIAN BRACELETS.

THE MAUVAISES TERRES, OR BAD LANDS.

THE northern route from Minnesota to Idaho leads through the ruggedest and most picturesque country ever viewed by human eyes.

Our illustration is one of the narrow passes through which the emigrant and army trains wend their way.

The bluffs and bates are formed of clay, coal, rock, and sand, so grotesquely shaped, that the traveler sometimes imagines himself in a large city, with mansions, hotels, palaces, &c., on every side, in some instances forming regular streets and squares.

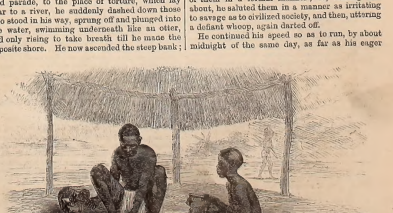
One of the most curious features of the scene is, that nearly all the stumps, logs and trees are petrified, making as good a whetstone as can be wished for, and would also furnish Barnum with some beautiful specimens of petrifaction.

Minerals, such as coal and iron ore, are found in great quantities, and the clay furnishes the Missouri river with mud enough to color even the Mississippi to its terminus.

DIVING FOR LIFE.

MR. JAMES ADAIR, a traveler among the Indians on this continent, has, in a recent journal, given us many most interesting incidents of his adventures, among the best of which is the story of a gallant young savage of the Katahba tribe. A party of Seneca Indians came to war against the Katahbs, bitter enemies to each other. In the woods, the Senecas discovered a sprightly warrior belonging to the Katahbas, busily hunting game; on his perceiving them, he sprung off for a hollow rock, four or five miles distant, as they intercepted him from running homeward. He was so extremely swift and skilful with the gun as to kill seven of them in the running fight before they were able to overtake him. They carried him to their country in sad triumph; for though he had filled them with uncommon grief and shame for the loss of so many of their kindred, yet the love of martial virtue induced them to treat him, during the long journey, with a great deal more civility than if he had acted the part of a coward. The women and children, when they met him at their several towns, beat and whipped him in as severe a manner as the occasion required, according to their law of justice, and at last he was condemned to die by the fiery tortures.

DIVING FOR LIFE, AN INCIDENT OF INDIAN WARFARE IN THE CHOCTAW WAR.



MAUVAISES TERRES (THE BAD LANDS), MINNESOTA—ARMY TRAIN ON THE MARCH.

It might be reasonably imagined that what he had for some time gone through, by being fed with a scanty hand, a tedious march, lying at night on the bare ground, exposed to the changes of the weather, with his arms extended in a pair of rough stocks, and suffering such punishments on his entering their hostile towns, as a prelude to those sharp torments for which he was destined, would have so impaired his health and affected his imagination as to have sent him to his long sleep, out of the way of any more sufferings. For probably this would have been the case with the major part of white people under similar circumstances, but I never knew this with any of the Indians; and this cool-headed, brave warrior, did not deviate from their rough lessons of martial virtue, but acted his part so well as to surprise and sorely vex his numerous enemies.

When they were taking him, unpinioned, in their wild parade, to the place of torture, which lay near to a river, he suddenly dashed down those who stood in his way, sprung off and plunged into the water, swimming underneath like an otter, and only rising to take breath till he made the opposite shore. He now ascended the steep bank; but though he had reason to be in a hurry, as many of the enemy were in the water, and others running every way, like bloodhounds, in pursuit, and the bullets flying around him from the time he took to the river, yet his heart did not allow him to leave them abruptly, without taking leave of them in a formal manner; so, turning him about, he saluted them in a manner as irritating to savage as to civilized society, and then, uttering a defiant whoop, again darted off.

He continued his speed so as to run, by about midnight of the same day, as far as his eager pursuers were about two days in reaching. There he rested, till he happily discovered five of those Indians who had pursued him, and lay a little way off their camp, hidden in the tall grass, till they were sound asleep. Every circumstance of his situation occurred to him, and inspired him with heroism. He was naked, torn and hungry, and his enraged enemies had come up with him. But there was now everything to relieve his wants, and a fair opportunity to save his life, and get great honor and reward, by cutting them off. Resolution, a convenient spot, and sudden surprise, would effect the main object of all his wishes and hopes. He accordingly crept toward them, took one of their tomahawks, and killed them all on the spot. He then took their scalps, clothed himself, took a double gun and a fine ammunition and provision as he could well carry on a running march.

BLACKSMITH'S FORGE AND BELLOWS OF GOATSKIN IN MANGANJA, AFRICA.

He set off with a light heart, and did not sleep for several successive nights, except when he reclined, as usual, a little before day with his back to a tree. As it were by instinct, when he found that he was free of the pursuing enemy, he took directly up to the place where lay his seven slain of the preceding day, dug them up, scalped them, burned their bodies to ashes, and then turned his face to the camp of his tribe, which he reached in safety. Other surprising enterprises fell on the second day to the camp of their dead pooqua, and thus did Indore distinguish himself on a sudden chill. A council was held, and the decision was unanimous that, as he had done such surprising things in his defense before he was captured, and while he was without arms, and almost naked, it was only wise to conclude that he was a wizard, who, now that he had arms, would likely perform greater work of an opposite kind. After so they returned home, and related the doleful story to their friends.

PREPARING A BRIDECROOM FOR THE WEDDING.

From Abyssinia we are invited by Mr. Hutchinson, through his book lately published in England, "Ten Years in Ethiopia," to make ourselves acquainted with the ceremony of matrimony, as observed in Tigre Do.

Having had an intimation from Boobkas (the many-headed), who is Head King of Inampoo, that one of his daughters was about to be married, I took it for granted, and walked up to his town a few days before Christmas, to be present at the ceremonial. The first thing of which one is sensible, when approaching a Pernambuco village, is the odor of Tola pomatum, wafted by whatever little breeze may be able to find its way through the dense bushes. The next is the crowing of cocks. Domestic poultry tribes seem to be the only bipeds endowed with any activity in this island.

At St. Isabel, the capital, some of these, who may be considered the watchful sentinels, crow at 10 o'clock P. M., to retain a person at a window again at two o'clock in the morning, and at daybreak the whole host of cock-a-doodle-doodlers join in a universal chorus—perhaps to announce the coming on of the morning train.

On getting inside of the town, our first object of attraction was the cooking going on in his majesty's kitchen. Here a number of dirty, ragged pipe and gazelles were in readiness to be mingled up with jujubes, and several grubs without end, skewers, probably to add piquancy to the dishes. These are called Irchakes, being obtained from palm-trees, and look, at first sight, like Brobdingnagian maggots. Instead of waiting to describe the art of the Fernandian Soyer on this material, I congratulated myself on my ham sandwiches and brandy-and-water bottle, safely stowed in the portmanteau, which one of the Kroomen carried on his back, and sat on my camp-stool, awaiting the grateful abode of a palm-tree, to rest awhile.

Outside a small hut, belonging to the mother of the bride-expectant, I soon recognized the happy bridegroom, undergoing his toilet from the hands of his future wife's sister. A profusion of Tshabbu strings being fastened round his body, as well as his legs and arms, the anointing lady, having a short black pipe in her mouth, proceeded to puff him over with Tola paste. He seemed to enjoy together joyous at the anticipation of his approaching happiness; but turned a sulky eye now and then to a kidney-shaped piece of yam, which he held in his hand, and which had a parrot's red feather stuck on its convex side. This, I was informed, was called Ntshobu, and is regarded as a protection against evil influence during the important day. Two skewer-looking hair-pins with heads of red and white glass beads fastened his hat (which was nothing more than a dish of bamboo plaiting) to the hair of his head. When his toilet being complete, he and one of his grooms men, he elaborately dressed as himself, attacked a mess of cold flesh and pimento placed before each of them, as capacity as if they had not tasted food for a fortnight. In discussing this meal, they followed the primitive usage of "fingers before forks," and ate away now and then to a little bit of palm-wine out of a calabash, which was hard by, or to wipe their hands on napkins of plantain leaf, a process which, to say the least of it, added nothing to their washerwoman's bills at the end of the week.

But the bride; here she comes! led forth by her own and bridegroom-expectant's sister, each holding her by the hand, followed by two Nepoos (professional singers) and half-a-dozen bridesmaids. Nothing short of a correct photograph could convey an idea of her appearance. Borne down by the weight of rings and wreaths, and girdles of Tshabbu, the Tola pomatum gave her the appearance of an enhanced mummy. Her face, which was all white, not from excess of modesty (and how I may add, the latter quality is rarely allowed to blush here), but from being smeared over with a white paste, applied very liberally.

As soon as she was outside the paling, her bridal attire was proceeded with, and the whole body was plastered over with white stuff, a veil of strings of Tshabbu was then completely covering her face, and extending from the crown of her head to the ecia, as low as which each side from ear to ear was then thrown over her; over this was placed an enormous crown, made of cowrie shells, and studded with a spark of compassion in him, could not help pitying that poor creature, standing for more than an hour under the broiling sun, with much load on her, whilst the Nepoos were celebrating her praises in an extempore epithalamium, and the bridegroom was completing his fiery elsewhere. One of the Nepoos, who, for what I know, may have been the Grisi of Fernando Po, and who had walked eight miles that morning to assist professionally at the ceremony, commenced a solo celebration of the bride's virtues and perfections. Whether any person of musical taste who had listened to it would have entitled the chant to combination of original, grand and heroic harmony; but that it produced satisfaction amongst the native audience was evident from the fact of the energetic chorusing of several assistant minstrels, who yelled out—"Hee, hee, jee ah!" at the termination of any passage containing a sentiment that met with their approbation, the exclamation being synonymous with our brava.

The song, as translated to me, set forth the universality of nature as the festival which was approaching, amongst other matters recording the existence of a race of wicked amphibious people, who lived on the Akra Mountains, and who would doubtless attempt to come over to disturb the nuptial harmonies; but they knew if they went into the water on that day, would be all removed by the Ashantee Jack. The song concluded with a recapitulation of the bride's attractive qualities, and by the virtues, and, what was of more temper; the latter a quality which I had no reason to doubt, as I did not enjoy the pleasure of the lady's acquaintance. When the Nepoos were wound up her praises, by enumerating amongst her other accomplishments a circumstance which had proceeded from her, which was the cause of inducing a little more than a groan and a slight convulsion. I turned away with a shudder, of what kind you may form a correct opinion from my groaning, and said to myself: "If Nepoo only knew the truth!"

The candidates for marriage having taken their positions, side by side, in the centre of the ring, the little house from which the bride-elect had just come out, by the singers, and which, I was informed, she had been closely immured for 15 months previously, was simultaneously entered by mothers were the officiating priests, an institution of the country, the properties of two bunches of grass, which they presented to the bridegroom and one will dare to impugn. On these occasions the mother, bishops are popularistically entitled Boonbas, and are generally old women. After the bridesmaids marshaled themselves alongside the bride, each in rotation, more indeed than the other, the outside one being a mere infant in arms, and all vieing with bunches of parrot's feathers on their heads, as well as holding a wand in their right hands. These latter they presented to the happy pair, and folded an arm of each round the body of the other.—Nepoos my priest to catch the words by which they were addressed.

A string, of Tshibus, was fastened round both their necks, and the bridegroom's left leg and at the same time whispering to him advice to take care of his tender charge. The string was then loosed. It was again fastened on by the bride's mother, who whispered into her daughter's ear her duty to mind her husband's farm, tilling his rice and cassada, and the necessity of her being faithful to him.

The ratification of their promise to fulfill these duties was performed by both parties eating a palm-wine from mother to son (the bridegroom), from him to his bride, from her to her mother, and finishing a sip as it went round. Then an indiscriminate dance and chant commenced, and the whole scene—the bride, mute, and hiding faces to thickly, that one might imagine it was some sort of a funeral, with the Nepoos as mutes, it, the dangling monkey-tails, the dish-hats, and parrot's feathers, the Tshabbu belts, and the strings of Tshabbu shells, fastened, perhaps, as mosquyes to the ladies' persons—the white and red and yellow spots over the face and body, and on the shoulders, and in any place where they could be stuck on, altogether formed a picture of confusion contrasted with the lofty bombax, beautiful palm, and graceful cocoa-nut trees, which were waving around, presented a picture rarely witnessed by the European, and calculated to excite varied reflections. When fatigued with dancing, and when all the company, from the cracking of the fowls' throats, looked as if they required food, the into man's original element of clay, the Nepoos and the wives, holding each by the hand, led the bride and the bridesmaids after him, all marching in single file, and singing to the bridegroom's house.

Knowing the ceremonials were not yet finished, I declined the company for half a mile. As they went along, the former wives of the newly married man sang and jumped, and frequently stopped, beckoning to the bride to come on; who, poor creature, had enough to do—first with her mother's suelli—if nerves had been in fashion in Fernando Po, would have been trembling under a bumper of cold water, half-a-dozen times on her journey.

The outside paleading, in which was a faint attempt at a gate, was reached. Here I witnessed an act of natural politeness, which no disciples of Chesterfield could excel. The bride preceded the new bride on her way in through the outer enclosure, as a mark of her new home. Then, when they reached the inner paleading, they all sat down on their hams, to precede further. Within this the ceremony was proceed with, the bride standing with her back to the door, her husband's arm again round her, and his face resting his body likewise. One of his children presented his own brown parent with a calabash of water with a renewal of advice from her mother, to attend to her daughter's instructions. Each of his children fixed paulettes of Tshibus in their proper places; the bridegroom put four rings of the same round his wife's fingers, one of her paternal; another piece of advice, or lecture, was given to her son by the bride-groom's mother, and the ceremony was completed; the young couple were then congratulated by their relatives, and the feasting commenced.

All the friends from distant parts, who had come to be present, brought dishes with them; some poor women, who had nothing better to give, brought bundles of wood. Every one, in the present which might appear ridiculous to any one who did not remember the country's state, and its gracious acceptance; and so ended an Abyssinian wedding.

THE PRINCESS ALEXANDRA'S CHRISTMAS GIFT.

An English paper tells a little story of the Princess Alexandra, which illustrates her love for domestic habits, her amiable disposition, and kindness of heart. Crossing the hall of Marlborough House the afternoon of the day before Christmas, Her Royal Highness observed a young girl of singularly delicate and interesting appearance, sitting on a bench, apparently though evidently fatigued and faint.

The Princess kindly told her to sit down, asked her errand, and discovered that she had brought home some little garment which had been to assist for the children, and which the Princess, who is much interested in Sewing Machines, and understands their merits, had deemed should be made upon the Grover & Baker Machine. Interested in the modest, intelligent appearance, and gentle manner of the girl, Her Royal Highness desired her to follow her to a room where she did, without the remotest idea who the beautiful considerate lady was.

After an examination of the articles, the Princess expressed her delight at the beauty of the work. The girl modestly confessed that she herself had done the most of it. The Princess said it was done very nicely, and finally drew from her protégé the simple facts of her condition: how she had an invalid mother, whom she was obliged to leave all alone while she went to the shop to work; how the fashionable rage for the Grover & Baker Sewing had suggested to her to purchase a second-hand operator on the Grover & Baker Machine, with the hope, oh! very, very far distant, that some time she might own a machine of her own, and be able to work at home, and earn something more than enough for her poor mother.

The Princess rang the bell, ordered a bottle of wine, some biscuits, and oranges to be served and placed to her. Meantime she had asked the wondering, bewildered child, for she was little more, where she lived, and took down the address upon her tablets with a gold pencil. Not long after the refreshments, which had been put into a neat little basket, and told her to take it to her mother.

On Christmas morning, into the clean apartment of the invalid widow came and her seamstress and delighted daughter, was borne a handsome Sewing Machine, with a sack of sugar, on which were the words: "A Christmas Gift from Alexandra."

COMPLIMENTARY TO A ROCHESTER LADY ARTIST.—Walter's New York Art Journal for last week has the following:

"A NEW ROCHESTER LADY ARTIST.—We take great pleasure and some pride on being the first to call public attention to the merits of a new lady artist of this city, who is now creating quite a sensation by her extraordinary skill in the art of painting. Some studies of hers we first noticed such decided talent that Mr. Charles Peirce was induced to visit her studio, and expressed himself not only surprised and delighted, but remarked that the delicate perfection of two bunches of grapes was, he considered, in conception, design, and coloring, worthy of Page. Miss Ellen Hall, for that is the lady's name, is only 23 years of age, is a native of Burlington, Vermont, and has devoted some time past in Boston to study, and we feel certain the brightest future and the highest honors await her."

To speak of Messrs. Hurd & Houghton's books would be unnecessary, as they have long since a reputation for beauty of typography and taste in selection and binding. Of late we must speak of their "American Edition of Modern Letters." It is in two handsome volumes, and presents an interest not less as a musical record, than as a literary one. Every lover of poetry can read with profit and pleasure, for the end knowing more of the author than all the books put together that have been published can teach.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral surpasses all other remedies in the rapid and radical cure of Coughs, Colds and Consumption.

Barnum's New American Museum, Broadway, between Spring and Prince streets. This establishment does not advertise in the New York papers, but in those of the Afternoon Performers, hereafter will invariably Commence at 2 o'clock. Every afternoon at 2 and evening at 7½ o'clock. The Scriptural Historical Drama endorsed by the Religious Community and highly witnessed by over 60,000 persons, MOSES; OR, ISRAEL IN EGYPT. Magnificent Scenery, Dissolving Views and Appropriate Music. GRAND PANORAMA OF THE NILE. Scriptural Tableaux! Performances for the Children every Saturday at 2 o'clock. Hosts, Triumphs of Israel. W. B. Barnum, Extemporaneous Lecturer. Miss Clara Fisher, Manager. The Immense Giants, Three Dwarfs, Two Circassian Girls, Living Skeleton, Fat Boy, Commodore, Learned Bear, Happy Family, Grand Aquaria. 100,000 curiosities. Admission, 50 cents; children under ten, 15 cents.

NEW MUSIC.

Arrah-na-Pogue, Grand March.....30c.
Arrah-na-Pogue, Waltz.....30c.
I Have Heard Sweet Music Stealing.....30c.
The Haunting Thought, by Reichhardt.....40c.
I Can Not Sing the Old Songs, by Claribel.....30c.
Wearing of the Green. Violin, Ilo. Song.....30c.
Have You Seen Her Lately? (comic).....30c.
Hallelujah, by Handel, Oratorio, illustrating Catastrophe on Starting Pond.....60c.
Mailed, post-paid. FREDERICK BLUME, 200 Bowery.

THOSE CURIOUS FASTENERS

50 CENTS.

Good Books 15 cents each. Courtship Made Easy—Bridal Etiquette—How to Win and Woo—How to Become an Orator—Art of Dancing—Book of Verses—How to Write Letters Correctly—How to Become an Actor.

The Library of Love,

Three Amusing Volumes for 75 cents.

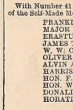
Post's Companion, 25 cents. Parlor Theatricals, 50 cents. Dialogues, 25 cents. Shakspeare's Proverbs, 40 cents. Love Oracle, 30 cents. 300 Curious Questions, 25 cents. Parlor Pantomimes, 25 cents. Book-Reciter, 25 cents. How to Converse Correctly, 25 cents. Ventriloquism, 25 cents. Fortune-Telling with Cards, Pictures, Plays, Home Amusements, &c., &c., sent with any of the above. W. C. WEATES, 376 Broadway, N. Y. 544-567

THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL FOR MARCH.—Contains Cornelius Vanderbilt, Hon. Erastus Brooks, Horace Mann, Frederika Bremer, Moses Case, Sir John Franklin, Capt. Cook, Revs. John Wesley and Adam Clarke—Portraits—Odd and Genius—Extraordinary Prediction;—Ghosts;—Origin of Coal;—Varieties of Sleep;—Iron, its uses;—Putting on a Bad Face;—Principles of Love, and Its Objects;—Parental Love;—Love and Lovers, the Philosophy of Engagement and Marriage;—Sunday, only 10 cents, or $2 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York. 546-7

Dr. Boyce' Cough Powder warranted to relieve the worst Cough in one day, or refund the money. Enclose 50 cents to DR. BOYCE, Box 5,866 Post Office, New York.

LOUIS SPOHR'S LAST WORK

We have recently published



L. SPOHR'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY,

Translated from the German. Two volumes bound in one. $4 50 nett.

J. SCHUBERTH & CO., 870 Broadway.

YOUNG FOLKS, WHY

LIVE IN MISERY?

Your destiny, future prospects in life, and a good fortune, depend unveiled by DR. CHARLES. He wins the affections of the opposite sex and guides you to a happy courtship and marriage. The last of all, he guides you to wealth, health and happiness; also many ways how to find lucky numbers. This great work will be sent by mail, post-paid, for 25 c. Address

DR. L. CHARLES, P. O. Drawer 6,166, Chicago, Ill. 545-9

$2CO a Month made with STENCIL TOOLS. Don't fail to send for a free catalogue containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vt. 546-9

OUR PUBLICATIONS

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE 10 CENTS, OR $4 a YEAR.

Frank Leslie's Illustracion Americano,
OR SPANISH-AMERICAN NEWSPAPER,
Published Weekly.
Within the United States, $12 yearly, in currency.
Ready to be sent by mails for Cuba, Mexico, Central America, Brazils, Peru, Chile, and all the South-American Republics—$12 yearly, in gold.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,
Or German Illustrated Newspaper,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or $4 a year.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or yearly, $4.

The Great Magazine of Fashion-
Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine,
Published Monthly—price $3 50, yearly.

Frank Leslie's New Monthly,
Price 15 cents, or $1 50 a year.

Frank Leslie's Children's Friend,
Published Monthly—price 10 cents, yearly $1.

Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun.
Published Monthly—$1 50 a year.

JUST PUBLISHED—No. 97 of FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN, being the great Humorous Paper of America. This admirable paper is a Pictorial Comic History of the Month. In addition to its numerous illustrations, by the best Artists of the age, it contains 16 pages of first-rate reading matter, consisting of Romances, Burlesques, Western Tales, Anecdotes, Comic Sketches, Humorous Poetry, etc.

FRANK LESLIE, Publisher,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

Curl your Hair.
One application will curl your hair into beautiful curls that last six months. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

Look Here, Boys.
Full instructions by which any person can master the Art of Ventriloquism and make a world of fun and a fortune by a few hours practice. Price, by mail, 50 cts. Address M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

PHOTOGRAPHS

Of Washington Crossing Delaware; The Kiss of Love; Love as Told Spirit; Courtship; Married; My Sweetheart; Sweet Eighteen; Diana; Child's Play; Out of Danger; Mother's Darlings; Contrasts; Morning Light; The Fatal Ride; Long Looked for; Come at Last. Five cents each; $3 per 100. TOMLINSON & CO., Publishers, Boston, Mass.

FRANK LESLIE'S

With Number 41 commences the Lives and Portraits of the Soldiers of the War, beginning with

FRANKLIN HAVEN, ESQ.,
MAJOR G. O. HOWARD,
ERASTUS B. BRIGHAM, ESQ.,
GENERAL J. C. ROBINSON,
W. W. CLAPP, ESQ.,
OLIVER LYMAN, ESQ.,
ALVIN ADAMS, ESQ.,
REBERDY BENHAM, ESQ.,
HON. F. W. LINCOLN,
HON. WILLIAM CLAFLIN,
DONALD McKAY, ESQ.,
HORACIO HARRIS, ESQ.

Contents of No.

THE WHITE LADY OF HOHEN-ZOLLERN. A Story. Illustrated.
THE PEARL-HANDLED ERASING KNIFE. A Sketch. Illustrated.
TRAVELLING IN THE STEPPES OF ASIA. Illustrated.
THE CONVENTING IN JAPAN. Illustrated.
HAUNTED. A Poem.
THE GREAT HARPOONING A NARWHAL. Illustrated.
ASCENT OF THE NORTH DOME, TO-SEMITE VALLEY. Illustrated.
A SURIMAGE WITH A TIGER.
A BRIEF FOOD, AND SHORT NESTS. Illustrated.
THE MAMMOTH FOUND IN AN ICE-BERG. Illustrated.
THE BATTLE-FIELDS OF EUROPE AND AMERICA.
GRATITUDE. A Poem.
THE ELEGANCE AND ELEGANCE OF THREE WOMEN—continued.
IN THE DARK. A Story—continued.
SELF-MADE MEN. Illustrated. CHARLES O. POCEERS, Esq., of the New Boston Journal. With Portrait.
COD-FISHING ON THE BANKS OF NEW FOUNDLAND. Illustrated.
THE TRANSACTION OF BUSINESS. An Essay.
ILLUSTRATIONS.
WOMEN'S RIGHTS.
TRANSFORMATIONS IN WOMEN.
TRANSFORMATIONS IN MANILLA.
THE LONG STRAW. A Story.
ECONOMICAL SUPPER-DISHES.
THE BOAT-BUILDING ESTABLISHMENT.
NASQUAPEES BUILDING A CANOE. Illustrated.
THE WIFE'S TRIBE OF THE ANDES. Illustrated.
INHABITED TREES. Illustrated.
A HAUNTED HOUSE. Illustrated.
UNBURDENED. A Story. Illustrated.
THE ELEGANT AND ELEGANT BY HIS FRIEND. Illustrated.
GRANDFATHER WHITEHEAD'S LECTURES—Somebody Else—and the Sea and Its Inhabitants.
And a variety of other interesting, instructive, and humorous matter.

For sale by all News Agents throughout the country. Single copies, 10 cents—annual subscription, $4.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, PENS, BRACELETS, CASTORS, GOBLETS, SPOONS, FORKS, NAPKIN RINGS, ETC., ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send $3 and a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
268 Broadway, New York.

Agents Wanted.—$150 per Month, to sell the Common Sense Family Sewing-Machine. It will hem, stitch, fell, tuck, quilt, bind, braid and embroider beautifully. Price, only $20. Every Machine is warranted for three years. For terms and circulars, address C. ROWERS & CO., 258 South Fifth street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Sample, 25 cents. Photograph Ornamental Cards (Cabinet size), $10 per pack; $10 per dozen; also Marked Back Playing Cards, $1 50 per pack. All by mail on receipt of Price. Address

FORWARDING AGENCY, 88 Liberty street, N. Y.
tf

Views Brower; or, Life in the Concert Saloon.—By Matt Morgan. A rich book. Fast going. Fundamentally illustrated. Only 25 cents. Mailed free. Address Fost Office Box 78. HOLLAND, N. Y. 543-51

Sensealogy, Psychologic Fascination, Marriage Hygiene Revealed, How to Become Rich, Wed the Opposite Sex, Marriage, &c. This queer, useful, and startling book by mail for 25 cents. Address PUBLISHER EVANS & CO., Box 1,211, Philadelphia.
tf

Employment at your own Homes—either sex—wanted, $3 to $5 per evening, or business hours in your city and town. Large profits realized. Address, with red stamp, the Union Plate, DR. WARNER, 84 East 10th street, New York City. 544-7

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND

Contains the Lady's Guide to Beauty: Useful Recipes for the Household; Home Yamaap—completed; Parlor Theatricals; the Parlor Magician; How to Make all kinds of Liquors; how to Cure the Inebriate; poisonous Articles to Detect Counterfeit Bills and Spurious Coin; the Tricks of Gamblers Exposed; Book-keeping and Letter Writing Made Easy; Cooking Made Easy; Bills of Fare, &c. How to make Whiskers and Moustache grow; all kinds of Salutation; Forensic Debates; Golden Maxims; Interest Tables; Arithmetical Facts, Proverbs of all Nations, Poetical Quotations, Amusements, Conundrums, etc., etc. Price 25 cents. Send orders to Box 5410, Post Office, N. Y. 535-5

Over Fifty Secrets numerous Jokes, Witty Sayings, &c., can be found in "THE DODGER." Sent free for FIVE CENTS.
Address P. O. Box, 3,057, New York.
tf

JOE MILLER, JR.

A Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Poetry, etc. Price 10 cents. Send order to P. O. Box 3,410, New York.
tf

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Matrimonial and Marriage Advisor, by WM. EARL, M.D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelopes on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 Wall Street, New York.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

$1,000 $1,000
REWARD!
O'DOR! O'DOR!

I warrant my Golden O'Dor to force a beautiful set of Whiskers or Mustache to grow on the smoothest face in from five to eight weeks. Also, Hair restored on Bald Heads, in eight weeks—proven by the testimonials of thousands of cases, to any address, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address DR. C. BRIGGS,
P. O. Drawer 1,998, Chicago, Ill.

DON'T BE FOOLISH

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine, an invention urgently needed by everybody. Or a sample sent by mail for 50 cents that will sell easily for $6, by R. I. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 529ly

GROVER & BAKER'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM
Elastic Stitch and Lock Stitch
SEWING MACHINES,
495 BROADWAY, N. Y. off

Book of Receipts, 40 pages, with catalogue, &c. Address H. Hance & Co., 713 Broadway, N. Y.
tf

A Sure Method of Winning at All the various games of Cards, Dice, &c., sent free. Marked Cards $1 per pack, or $9 per dozen. Address W. L. CRAWFORD, Manufacturer of Playing Cards, No. 6 and 67 Nassau street, New York.
tf.

50 cent SAMPLE, sent free, with terms, for any one, to clear 125 a day in their spare hours. Address LA MONTE, RAYMOND & CO., No. 29 Broadway, New York. 544-7

Guide to Beauty. 100 pages. Mailed for 25c. Address C. JENNISON, Box 5,764, P. O., New York. tf

Love! Love!—How to win anything love of the fair sex. Sent by mail for five cents. Address J. F. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

$200 Per Cent. Profit for Agents—Three useful articles, everywhere needed, and sell at sight. An assn, with particulars, free, by mail. 10 cts. Address E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

BETTER TO BE BORN LUCKY, THAN RICH.

Great Premiums to be Given Away.

To make sale, and introduce our Golden Pens (60,000 with gold pens, pointed by the Iridium process), and boxes, to resemble gold, for sale at $1 per box), we offer, with each person buying a box of Golden Pens, a premium ticket, which will entitle a chance to draw some of the valuable premiums named below. The premiums are printed all on separate tickets. The tickets are placed in separate envelopes, and sealed up. They are then thrown in a wheel and thoroughly mixed. The envelopes will be drawn out, without regard to choice, and sent with each box of pens. This will give all a fair chance. All premiums ordered by mail will be dealt with on the square. A beautiful list of Premiums is given away:

1	Premium in Greenbacks	$1,000
1	" 7-20 Bonds	500
1	" Cash, $3 each	300
5	" Grand Pianos, $500 each	2,500
50	" 50 S. & C. Sewing-Machines, $20 each	2,500
10	" 18 American Gold Lever Watches, $100 each	1,000
100	" 100 Gold Double Clasp Albums, $10 each	1,000
200	" 200 Clasp Albums, $2 50 each	500
20,000	" 20,000 Steel Engravings, full of portraits of Generals, $1 each	20,000
20,000	" 20,000 Pocket Picture Galleries, 10 cards each	10,000
2,500	" Cash, 25 cents each	500
2,500	" Cash, $1 each	2,500
6,873	" 6,873 Boxes of Golden Pens $1 each	6,873
10,000	" Single Gold Pens	800

In all, 60,000 Premiums.

These Pens are warranted not to corrode, with proper usage. They are plated with a beautiful golden finish. Including Gold Pens, Premiums will be given away with them. Our Golden Pen will answer a dozen common pens. We will send a sample dozen, by mail, handsomely put up in a beautiful metal box, pocket style, with a premium ticket, for $1. Address, with post-office cents; or, 11 boxes, with 11 tickets, free, for $10. Single Pens, with Box and Ticket, 25 cents each. All orders answered by return of mail. Address

GOLDEN PEN COMPANY,
306 State street, Chicago, Ill.

P. S.—Good Agents wanted.
545-8

FIRST PREMIUM.
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5
THE EMBODIMENT OF
PRACTICAL UTILITY AND ELEGANT SIMPLICITY.

Originally Patented May 13, 1862; improvement patented June 9, 1863. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with Hemmer, Feller, Braider, Gatherer, Cording and Elegantly Constructed Novelty; is noiseless in operation, has the STRAIGHT NEEDLE and VERTICAL MOTION, sews with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD OF ALL KINDS. Makes the Shuttle and Lock-Stitch, sews on, rips or takes up stitches with equal facility. Will run by foot or by hand. It is taken the PREMIUMS at this and other Fairs. Each Machine has the FULL APPROVAL OF ALL the principal Journals, and of those who have seen and tested it. Every "Low Priced" Machine Patented, and that has received a PREMIUM, is inferior in value and practical utility to this.

"This beautiful Machine makes the Running Stitch at the rate of several hundred stitches a minute."—Tribune.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly sews a common needle, using the running stitch exactly like hand sewing."—N. Y. Tribune.

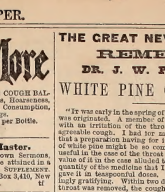
Single Machines, all complete, sent to any part of the country per Express, packed in box with printed instructions and directions, for $5 50. Circulars transmitted. Agents wanted everywhere. Circular containing liberal inducements to Agents sent free.
Address all orders to
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
tf Office, 102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and power of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, free, together with a guide to the unerring art of becoming Rich, Married, &c., &c. Sent by mail for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unfailing art of Dreaming. Address as above. Don't be disappointed. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold.
tf T. WILLIAM & Co., Publishers, Philadelphia.

EVANS' TOILET GEMS,

Consisting of Diamond, Emerald, Ruby, Royal Azure, and Pearl Powders. They beautify the complexion, dye the hair, and present a glittering and brilliant appearance. Price, $1 per box, sent by mail, postage free, in pasteboard and fashionable. Sold only at HUNT & CO.'S, Perfumers, 110 South Seventh street, Philadelphia. Sample box of either kind sent by mail for $1 10; enclosed in circular for hair dyes, $1 25.
tf

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cents; 50 photographs of Rebel Officers for 25 cents; 50 photographs of Actresses for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Actors for 25 cents. Address C. SEYMOUR, Box 46, Holland, N. Y.



Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face, without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address of the world on receipt of money.
R. G. GRAHAM, 199 Nassau St., N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also contains the Farmer's Secret, how to cook Fish and 99 kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Counterfeits and Tricks in Trading Exposed; Vendiloquism Made Easy; Information of Importance to Ladies; how to win the Love of any one, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents. Address BOOK CO., New York.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning to young men and others who suffer from Nervous Debility, etc., supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid, addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bx 08dyn, King's County, N. Y.

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.
524-576

Short-Hand Without a Master.

By which the method of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, Trials, etc., may be attained in a few hours. Fifty-first edition, with SUPPLEMENT. Price 25 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York.
tf

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY, ST. NICHOLAS BLOCK,
Photographic Materials,
AND
STEREOSCOPIC GOODS.

War Views, Scenery, Groups, etc., etc.

Photo Albums, great assortment. Cartes de Visite of Prominent Persons, etc., etc. French, English and American novelties.
tf

An Album for Thirty Cents! NEW! BEAUTIFUL! INSTRUCTIVE! CHEAP! A beautiful Gilt Metallic Album, containing four (4) Photographs in Gilt Frames, and HOLLY PATTERN, complete with Spring Clasp, neat, post-paid, for 30 cents. Address CALVIN, WHITE & CO., 21 Broadway, N. Y.
tf

"FANDANGLE."

Gentlemen, send for a "Fandangle," which will make more fun with your friends than anything you have ever heard. Address, with stamp, ALLEN & CO., Box 501, Boston. 543-6

"FANDANGLE."

Ladies, send for a "Fandangle," and gratify your propensity for fun. Price 25 cents. Address, with stamp, ALLEN & CO., Box 501, Boston. 543-6

WONDERFULLY STRANGE!

MADAME M. H. PERREGAULT,

Who has astonished the scientific classes of Paris and London, has arrived in this country, and resides at 4 Jones, N. Y. Madame Perregault, by the aid of her wonderful Clairvoyant power, and her discovering, guaranteed to produce a life-like picture of the future husband or wife of the inquirer, describes the trade, calling, marriage, leading traits of character, occupation, &c. This is no humbug, as thousands of testimonials can attest. She will send, when desired, a written guarantee that the picture of the future husband or wife will bear the height, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and inclosing 50 cents, with age, sex, and autograph, and stamp to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail. Address
Madame M. H. PERREGAULT,
542-5lo P. O. Drawer 203, Albany, N. Y.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Scrofula and Scrofulous Humors. No one need despair of Holloway's Pills and Ointment flashed upon the world. Diseases which baffle the skill of the Medical Schools readily yield to these peerless remedies. Scurvy, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Itch, and all cutaneous eruptions are curable by them.

A CURIOSITY!!
Free to All. A Rare Treat.

Gentlemen, do not fail to send a two cent stamp, and receive a Catalogue of Books, Pictures, and choicest literature and rare Illustrations. Sent Gratis.
CHARLES E. MACKEY,
267 Broadway, New York.

COLORED CARTES DE VISITE
SIXTY CENTS PER DOZEN.

I will send upon receipt of 60 cents 12 Cartes de Visite of Ladies, in full dress, in different positions, or the whole set of 50 different pictures, $2.
542-5 S. WOLF, 308 Broadway, New York.

Royal Havana Lottery

Official Drawing of February 14th, 1866.

No. 52628	drew	$100,000
No. 13765	"	50,000
No. 13936	"	20,000
No. 12217	"	10,000
No. 30200	"	5,000
No. 30020	"	5,000

Being the Capital prizes.
Prizes paid in gold. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for doubloons and all kinds of gold and silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers, 16 Wall st., N. Y.
tf

Something New.

For Agents and Dealers to sell, 20 Novel and Useful Articles; profits large. Send for Circular.
S. W. RICE & CO.,
tf 313 South Seventh street, N. Y.

Beauty—Hunt's Bloom of Roses.

A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; contains no poisons; remains unchanged in any climate. Price $1 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., Perfumers, tf 133 South Seventh street, Philadelphia.

$1,500 PER YEAR! We want Agents everywhere. Where he will not procure any $20 Sewing Machines. Three new kinds. Under and upper feed. Warranted five years. Liberal salary and commissions paid. The only machines sold in United States for less than $40, which are fully licensed by Howe, Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. All other cheap machines are infringements. Circulars free. Address, or call upon SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

Matrimony Made Easy!

Or Mysteries of Making Love fully explained, with specimen Love Letters. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 5410 P. O., N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circulars.
PELHAM HOUSE, 27 Ann St., N. Y.

Cartes de Visite for Gentlemen.

Sample and Catalogue sent for 25 cents. New Books and Sporting Goods Catalogue free. Address tf JAS. F. MANCHEE, 608 Broadway, N. Y.

To Agents—$100 per Month. Address C. L. VAN ALLEN, 36 Beaver St., New York.

$28 00 per Day.—Agents wanted, male and female, in a Business, Permanent, and honorable business. For further particulars, address A. D. DOWMAN & CO., Biddeford, Maine.
(Clip out and return this notice.)

THE GREAT NEW ENGLAND REMEDY!
DR. J. W. POLAND'S
WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

"It was early in the spring of 1855 that the compound was originated. A member of my family was afflicted with an irritation of the throat, attended with a distressing cough. I had for many years used the hemlock tinct a preparation having for its basis the inside bark of white pine which might be so compounded as to be very useful in the case of the throat and lungs. To test the value of it in the case alluded to, I compounded a small quantity of the medicine that I had been planning, and had used in conjunction with others. The result was exceedingly gratifying. Within two days the irritation of the throat was allayed, the cough eased, and a speedy cure was effected. Soon after this I sent some to a lady in Londonderry, N. H., who had been suffering for some weeks from a bad cough, occasioned by a sudden cold, and had raised mucus streaked with blood. She soon found relief, and sent for more. She took about a gallon of it and got well. J. S. Carr, Esq., editor of the Manchester Daily Mirror, made a trial of the same preparation in the case of a severe cold, and was cured immediately. He was so highly pleased with the result, and at the number of cases attending the sales if placed before the public, that he finally persuaded me to manufacture and send it abroad to the public. Accordingly, in November, 1855, I first advertised it under the name of White Pine Compound. In two years' time the sales had so much been wholesaled in Manchester alone one hundred gross. Since then it took the lead of all the cough remedies in the market, and it still maintains that position. There is good reason for all this; it is very soothing and healing in its nature, is warning to the stomach, and a reliable relief to the lungs. Yours, truly,
J. W. POLAND.

"As a remedy for Kidney complaints, the White Pine Compound stands unrivalled. It is highly recommended for that purpose; but a person in using it for a cough, cold, or any affection of the lungs, should also exercise a kidney difficulty of ten years' standing. I have heard testimonials to this every many thousands have used it for the same complaints, and have been cured, and found it so."

The above was written by Dr. Poland in 1860. Since then the Compound has become the White Pine Compound has taken the lead of all Cough remedies, as well as proprietary medicines, for cure of Kidney difficulties in every city, town, village and hamlet throughout the New England States.

The past year has given great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has become an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the medicine when all the people whose it is prescribed are high in its praises.

The White Pine Compound is generally sufficient to remove a bad cough, and frequently I have known persons to be cured of a severe cough by taking a day by using less than half a bottle. From one to two teaspoonfuls, or a wine glass full, according to the severity of the cough, is the dose, and it is to be taken as often as necessary.

The White Pine Compound is a preparation in this circular will not allow of that expression which I would like to give of its virtues in the Kidney Complaint. It is universally admired by all who use it; it has already cured many thousands of people whose opinion is valuable indeed, that VANITY may possibly, in part, prompt me to say that I do not see why the whole people will have petitions to read; so I will stop, by merely remarking that I have only to send a Circular to the curiously to test the virtues of the WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

Testimonials.

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, Merchants, and persons in every society, speaking in the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Poland, of Northfield, Vt., says:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very efficacious in curing Coughs and other Pulmonary Complaints, but also in affections of the Kidneys, debility of the stomach, and other diseases of the system."

Rev. J. K. Chase, of Rumney, N. H., writes;

"I have for years regarded your White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I am truly sorry that I regret it as even more efficacious and valuable than ever. I shall continue the Compound as for a cold, and it works charmingly."

Rev. H. D. Donor, of West Randolph, Vt., who is a practicing physician, as well as preacher, in a letter to Dr. P., dated May 31, 1865, says: "I find it the best remedy I have for a kidney disease."

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is not only so to its name inviting, but is a highly approved medicine. Dr. J. W. Poland, the inventor, has the confidence of the many who know him, a confidence which is enjoyed while laboring nearly many years as a Baptist minister. His experience as a minister and as a medicine experimenter has made him a his medical discovery.—Boston Watchman and Reflector.

The proprietor of the Manchester Daily Mirror, Mr. Carr, in a leader of the daily, thus speaks of the Compound:

"The White Pine Compound is advertised at much length in our columns, and we are glad to learn that the demand for it is increasing beyond all previous expectation. It is the very best remedy for coughs and colds we know of, and no family that has once used it will ever be without it. We speak from our own knowledge; it is sure to kill a cold, and pleasant as sure. The genuine article is manufactured only by Dr. Poland, and is the only medicine known. Besides the character of Dr. Poland is such that we know the compound will be as he says it will be.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

Is manufactured at the

NEW ENGLAND MEDICAL DEPOT,

106 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON,

GEO. W. SWETT, M.D., Proprietor,

Under the supervision of

REV. J. W. POLAND, M. D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by wholesale and retail dealers in Medicines everywhere.

BURNHAM & VAN SCHAACK, Chicago, Ill.,
JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio.
COLLINS & BROTHER, St. Louis, Mo.,
WARD, KENNEDY & CO., Philadelphia, Pa.,
General Agents for the West.

Newsdealers & Booksellers

Are informed that

THE AMERICAN

NEWS COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK,

Are ready to supply, at the earliest moment, and on the very lowest terms :

Newspapers, Daily and Weekly, Magazines, Dime Novels, Books, Cheap Publications, School Books, Envelopes, Pens, Writing Papers,

And everything wanted by a NEWSDEALER OR BOOKSELLER.

Printed Trade Lists,

Describing the nature of the News Business, how to do it, names of Papers and Magazines with their prices, &c., will be sent FREE to all who ask for them. Address

The American News Company,

119 & 121 NASSAU ST., NEW YORK.

o

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent as hall rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 45 Broadway. Shippers charged low rates.

0000

TO CURE

Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL and Disorders arising from excesses, use

SMOLANDER'S

Extract Buchu.

PRICE ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, H. HARNDEN & CO., New York; and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents. 535-470

WHISKERS and MOUSTACHES forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using DR. SEYMORE'S RESTAURATEUR CATALLAGE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the élite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, P. O. Drawer 21, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 542-540

THE DOWNER MICROSCOPE.

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Three of different powers for $1. Address

6000 J. D. DOWNER, Box 230, Boston, Mass.

ROGERS' FRAGRANT

ODONTOLINE

FOR THE TEETH.

For Sale by Druggists, Fancy Goods Dealers and Perfumers.

o

ITCH! SALT ITCH! ITCH! RHEUM!

Cured by RIDER'S CHIMAX OINTMENT. Price 25 cents. Sent 40 cents to BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., and get a box by mail. 536-470

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

A new, practical and original work, illustrated with 123 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost, including stables and out-buildings, with a chapter on the construction of BALLOON FRAMES.

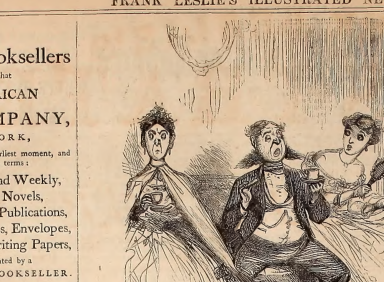
Price, $1 50, mailed free, to any address.

GEO. E. & F. W. WOODWARD, publishers, 545-80 No. 37 Park Row, New York.

FLORENCE

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES.



Highest Premium Gold Medal

FAIR AMERICAN INSTITUTE, 1865.

The best in the World. They have the Reversible Feed Motion. They have a perfect Self-Adjusting Shuttle Tension. They make four separate and distinct Stitches on one and the same machine. They have many advantages over all others.

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO.,

537-490 862 Broadway, New York.

PAR-TIKULER UNPLEASANT.

Awful position of little Symphony who, with a cup of coffee in one hand and a piece of cake in the other, feels that he is g-g-g-going to sneeze.

o

MILLER & CO.,

No. 9 Maiden Lane, New York,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in all the latest improved REVOLVERS and PISTOLS now made.

REVOLVERS—Reid's "My Friend," Smith & Wesson's, New Model, Allen & Co's. Remington's, Colt's, Whitney's and Elliott's.

PISTOLS—National Derringer, Remington's complete Case and Pistol combined, and Dickenson's Single Shot, for which we are sole agents.

Send for a circular and price-list. o

To Nervous Sufferers!

NERVOUS SUFFERERS, of both sexes, will receive a valuable PRESCRIPTION for the cure of Nervous Debility, PREMATURE DECAY, and all kindred diseases (free of charge), by sending their address to the undersigned. Respectfully,

JOHN B. OGDEN,

545-50 13 Chambers street, New York.

EUROPEAN POCKET TIME-KEEPER,

One Dollar Each.

(Patent applied for June 29th 1865.)

An EXACT and RELIABLE POCKET TIME-KEEPER for Ladies or Gentlemen. A decidedly unique and wonderful Novelty. Correctly constructed on the most approved SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES, and warranted to remain ACCURATE TIME, WELL, certainly and the utmost precision. More truthful than the most costly and elaborate Time-keeper of modern manufacture. It never can be wrong. "It requires no key," or winding up. Never runs down; and can never be too fast or too slow. It is a most remarkable article. Approved by the Press and all who have seen them. Introduced into this country from Europe, where it is also legally protected by "Royal Letters Patent." Price for a single one, with plain or fancy White Dials, in Gold or Silver-Gilt Case, only $1. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DELAMERE & CO., Sole Proprietors, o 261 and 263 Broadway, N. Y.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH.

If you want the best fitting, strongest, and most serviceable paper collar ever offered to the public, don't fail to purchase the

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR

The most Economical Collar ever Invented.

Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides.

The following styles are now made :

Patent REVERSIBLE Enameled PAPER COLLAR.	Patent REVERSIBLE Bank Note Paper COLLAR.	Patent REVERSIBLE Printed Stitch PAPER COLLAR.

To be obtained all Furnishing Goods Dealers throughout the country.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & Co., Agents,

541-530 Winthrop Square, Boston.

Perry Davis's Vegetable

PAIN KILLER, after a thorough trial of 20 years, has proved itself to be THE RELIEVER OF PAIN AND, and has continued to steadily advance in the estimation of the world as the best Family Medicine ever introduced. o

"Will Power!"—To acquire Self-Control; to conquer Habit; to attain health and strength, to all mental vigor—a better life! Young men interested, are invited to address E. C. W., in care No. 5,945, General Post, New York. 546-70

MANTEL ORNAMENTS.

Bronze and Marble Clocks, Fine Vases, Parian, Bisque and Bronze Statuettes, Groups, &c., &c.

We are now offering a fine assortment of the above goods at a reduction of 25 per cent. to make room for new goods now being bought by Mr. Ovington, who is in Europe. OVINGTON BROTHERS, o Fulton St., near Clinton St., Brooklyn.

Vineland Lands. To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $10 to $30 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Horace Greeley, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune

"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, on an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

$7 FINE WATCHES $7

AT OLD PRICES.

English Silver Watches -	$ 6, $8, $10
Pure Silver Hunting Lepines -	$15 Each.
Fine 18 Karat Gold-Plated Watches	$12, $15, $20.
Fancy Compass and Thermometer Watches - - - -	$15, $20.
Silver Hunting Levers - - -	$20, $25.
Ladies' Gold Enameled Watches	$20, $25 to $75.
Coin Silver American Levers -	$30.

All kinds of Good Watches, low.

o CASTLEY BROTHERS, Importers, 107 Nassau street, N. Y.

ITCH. ITCH. ITCH.

Salt Rheum. | OINTMENT. | Salt Rheum.

Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cure Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 Cents; by sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, Mass., will be forwarded free by mail. For sale by all Druggists. 541-560

MICROSCOPES @ 60 CTS.

THE FRENCH TUBULAR MICROSCOPE, a very powerful instrument, mailed for 60 cents; two for $1. Address

GEO. D. WASHBURN & CO., Box 5,093, Boston, Mass. 541-550

Wanted.—Energetic persons, of good address, to travel; the business is very desirable, and highly remunerative. Full particulars given, if a directed envelope, with stamp, for return postage, is sent to S. E. J. & Co., Box No. 4,057, P. O., New York. o

BEAUTY.—Auburn Hair, Golden, Flaxen, and Silken CURLS produced by the use of Professor De Rance's FRISER LE CHEVEUX. One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy, massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price, 50 mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ, & CO., Chemists, P. O. Drawer, 21, Troy, N. Y., sole agents for the United States. 542-540

POLLAK & SON Manufacturers, 603 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $60 each.

o539-45

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S AGRAFFE PIANOS.

101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. 0

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S LABOR-SAVING SOAP.

This Soap is made of pure and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the most delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for washing, which will not shrink after being washed with this Soap. It may be used in hard or salt water. It will remove paint, grease, tar, and stains of all kinds. One pound, warranted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons handsome soft soap from one pound of this Soap. Each bar is wrapped in a circular containing full directions for use, printed in English and German. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.

B. T. BABBITT,

Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP. Fifty per cent. saved by using B. T. BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH or READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 4 pounds, and 13 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in the market.

B. T. BABBITT,

Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS, &c., "made from common salt." Brend made with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt, water and flour. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington street, New York.

50 PER CENT SAVED BY USING B. T. BABBITT'S BEST STAR YEAST POWDER. Light Biscuit or any kind of Pastry made with this "Star Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No shortening is required when this powder is used. Nos. 64 to 74 Washington street, New York. o

CEDAR CAMPHOR

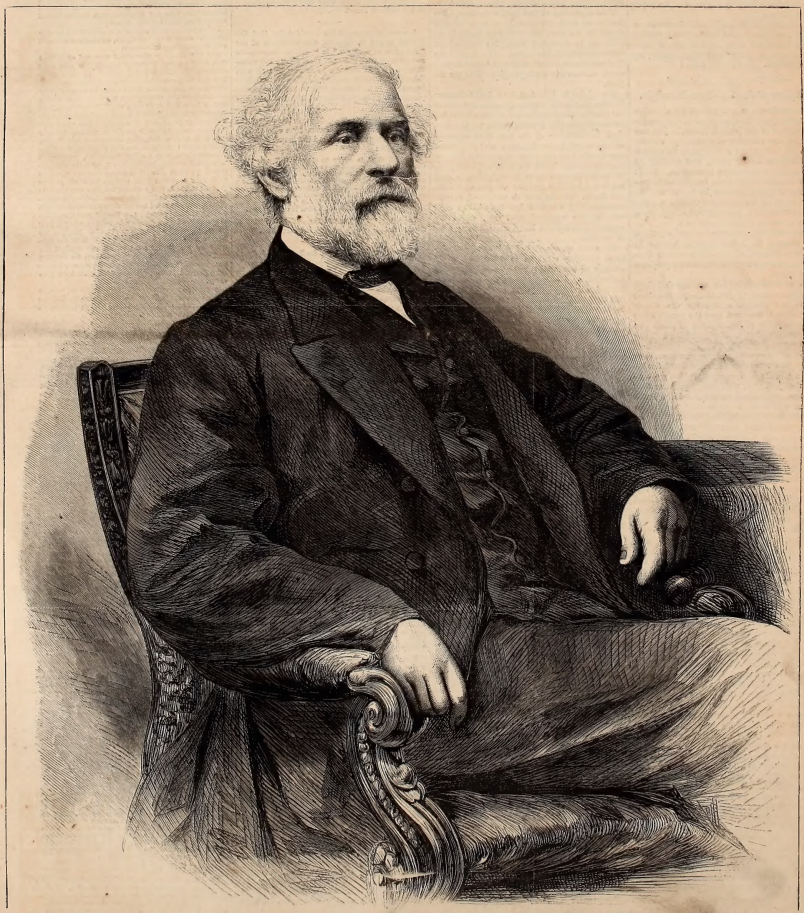
For Moths, Reliable, Cheap, Procured. Sold by Druggists everywhere. HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Factors, Boston. o

Employment for Both Sexes.—Energetic persons of either sex in want of safe, respectable and profitable employment, should address with stamp, their address to J. M. D., Box 183, Brooklyn, N. Y. 16

The Little Joker and A FINELY COLORED PHOTOGRAPH sent in a sealed envelope for 25 cents. Address, Box 5,667, P. O., New York. tf

LADIES PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS. WHOLESALE & RETAIL.

WARD, 387 B'WAY, N.Y.



One Lady's Collar neat free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles. o

BROADWAY, New York.

605

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

No. 547—Vol. XXII.] NEW YORK, MARCH 24, 1866. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly. 12 Weeks $1 00

ROBERT E. LEE GENERAL-IN-CHIEF OF THE LATE CONFEDERATE ARMY.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN, DURING HIS RECENT VISIT TO WASHINGTON, BY BRADY & CO. WASHINGTON, D. C.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, MARCH 24, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE.—We have no travelling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are impostors.

Our New Volume.

THE number commences our new volume, and we look for a renewal our readers and subscribers to call attention to the fact, and try to them, in as few words as possible, it will better their own interests to subscribe now. In the continued improvement we are making, every volume is so marked an advance upon the past, that it should be esteemed higher, in a money point of view: but, with a true regard for the fact that it is better to have a quarter of a million of subscribers than a hundred thousand, we intend going on in cutting and improvement, but keeping the price of the paper always the same.

In a volume of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER there is over 600 pages of reading matter, about 700 cuts, and a variety of other inducements, and all for $2 for six months; or, $4 per annum. Can we say more?

Agitation of the One-Term Principle.

AN amendment to that part of the Constitution which prescribes the terms of the election of President of the United States, is just now receiving the attention of Congress. Senator Wade has introduced a resolution for extending the term to six years, and making the President not eligible to re-election. In the House a measure has been introduced to provide for a direct election by ballot and the abolishment of the Electoral College, making the candidate who has received a majority of the popular vote the successful one.

Again, Mr. Sumner has introduced a petition from citizens of Massachusetts, headed by Governor Andrew, of that State, asking Congress to pass an amendment like that proposed in the House.

It is unfortunate for the country that these propositions come up just at the present time, and in the present shape, for the simple reason that they do not give the people a fair chance to judge of the motives of those who made them, and it is simply making a strong party question of what should be divested of all party bias, if the theory of the new party be good. The one-term principle has been for years a favorite with our people, but we contend that just now it has been introduced as has been engendered toward President Johnson, it would be a harsh and unpopular measure, and if submitted to the people, direct, would assuredly fail. The Radical publican party just now stands before the country as the accusers of Mr. Johnson. They contend that in his present course he is sheltering the party that elected him, and in doing that which is against the will of the majority of the people. In making this accusation they may be right, it is not that issue that we argue, but putting it entirely out of the case, ask the simple question whether it is justice to the people themselves to pronounce for them on so important a point, to take out of their hands the verdict upon the conduct of their first public servant, by depriving them of the privilege of going to the ballot-box with their verdict?

In this vein we are ignoring the question of its justness to Mr. Johnson; but looking upon it in that light, we would ask whether it is republican or democratic in its tone or tendencies to disqualify any man for the office of President of the United States, for any other cause than those distinctly set down—willful neglect and crime for crime? Mr. Johnson has never been elected President, has had no chance to submit his claims to the people, and it would be quite a question of simple justice to him and to the people, who wish directly to have a voice in the matter, to adjourn the decision of so weighty a question, until after this opportunity has been granted.

If such a measure were proposed to take effect upon some specified time in the future, when the claims of the present incumbent have been exhausted, providing they ever will be—for who can tell the future?—then it would be earnestly endorsed, all believe, by all parties, as good and decisive: but at present it simply shows a political move against Andrew Johnson, which is much more likely to end in the discomfiture of those who propose it than against the one at whom it is leveled.

The part proposing a direct vote from the people, we feel sure the present Congress will never adopt. It is too wise to commit so gross a blunder. Under its action, were the election to come off at this time, or as we predict, for many years to come, the result would be the almost unanimous vote of the Southern States for the Democratic candidate, which, coupled with the Northern vote, would surely elect him, even were the opposition stronger than it is now. We have only to turn to the vote of 1860, to know that fact.

The ultimate good working of the one-term principle is without doubt, but it would be a most injudicious, un-republican, and un-American principle to make it effective in less than ten years from this date, or until it has been submitted directly to the people.

Slaves of the Needle.

IT must be a gratifying fact to those who have observed that, within the past five years, female labor has advanced, in this city, to a more remunerative position than it held previous to the war.

In stores, manufactories, and workshops, many branches of labor that once were monopolized by men are now filled by females, and while it elevates female labor by giving it better remuneration, it pleases the manufacturer and storekeeper, by giving him a more tractable laborer, and one to whom he feels more instinct satisfaction in paying wages.

This extension of the field of woman labor has arisen from the scarcity of men brought about by the war; but now that there is no difficulty in obtaining men, the demand for women is steadily increasing, for the reason that employers are satisfied with their experiment, and are not willing to go back to the old plan.

We rejoice in this fact for a double reason: Firstly, that it will release an army of slaves of the needle, who have been for years following an occupation that has done more for the physical debility of our girls than any other employ ever invented by or for men, and filled more graveyards than any other of the grim Ring of Terrors' agents. There has been no exception to the rule, and a woman in indigence to earn her bread but that terrible weapon of disease and death. Be she ever so well-bred, ever so accomplished, ever so fitted to be wife and rule out with the wretched steel that, with every passage of its smooth body, carried away a bit of her life.

Secondly, we are glad of it because the ultimate tendency must be to drive back a percentage of our strong muscles and sinews to agriculture. For many years the country has flooded the city with trade labor, while plow and the spade have been deserted for the counting-house desk and the work-bench, while agriculture has suffered for the strength of the cultivator. Competition has gradually over laughed the power of the city laborer to pay. Farmers suffer for labor, skilled labor, and get as a consequence poor work done. The strapping mechanic or clerk in the city is obliged to pay so great a price that his life is a continual story of deprivation or semi-starvation.

The remedy is there in 99 per cent. of the male labor of our principal cities unoccupied, or simply getting a precarious living from day to day. Mechanics are struggling to prevent employers bringing down the wages of labor, the necessities of life are going up, and unskilled labor is offering at a price that will not find it in food and shelter. The whole of this question is a question of doubt, but that it must finally succumb and take to its legitimate sphere, agriculture, is certain. When the cause of labor is made plain to all, it will be still farther emancipated, and in thousands of workshops, where womanly labor is now wanted in place of thews and sinews, they will reign triumphant and free, with men at the plow and planting, who will send them cheap food to eat, and cheap dress to wear.

THE prosperity, the business, the very existence of England depends upon coal. It makes its cotton, builds its ships, lights and warms its houses, drives its manufactories and steamers. Without coal England would lose trade, manufactures, and three-fourths her population. It will not pay to carry coal from the great fields of America. It would be better to go to the coal-Veil, at the actual rate of using coal in England and the annual increase, the entire stock within 4,000 feet of the surface will last 70 years—he said it born whom will see it exhausted. Of course, as the stock diminishes, and the difficulty of getting it increases, the price rises, and the consumption gradually diminish, so that there will be a gradual decline, instead of a sudden annihilation. But of no other article can be found by coal, this decline of British industry, wealth and power will begin in about 50 years, and in 50 more will commence the work of ruin. The ruins of St. Paul's, a broken arch of London bridge, or any convenient place for such an inscription. England, with her stock of coal exhausted, will be a pleasant sort of watering-place, or summer resort for the rest of the world, covered with the ruins of iron foundries and cotton mills, a shabby-looking Fulmyra, or a grimy Thebes. Antiquarians will explore it, and a future Gibbon will write the decline and fall of the British Empire, and possibly quote this prediction in a foot-note.

MR. HENRY YATES THOMPSON, a graduate of Trinity College, Cambridge, England, has offered to endow a lectureship at Cambridge, for the purpose of having a course of lectures one term biennially on the history, literature, and institutions of the United States. The lecturer must be an American, and must be appointed biennially by the President and Fellows of Harvard College. The English journals say that some men object to the scheme, because they fear they should be treated by the lecturers to mere republican declamations. We would remind Mr. Yates that it might be well to have a preliminary course on the rudiments of the geography of this country, and that the editors of the London Times might well be invited to attend it.

How we are supplied with brandy, "pure French cognine," has come out in the evidence in a case recently tried in the U. S. District Court in Albany. Some casks were found to be smuggled, and, therefore, liable to be confiscated. But it appeared that they were not smuggled, but filled with an imitation article, simply manufactured from neutral spirits, flavored with oil of cognine, and colored with burnt sugar—in fact, miserable stuff. The casks were made in Cognac, by hands, and, in imitation of French casks, the hoops being rusted and the staves discolored with a solution of copperas, so as to give them the appearance of having suffered a sea voyage. A merchant testified that he sold thousands of gallons of this "brandy" yearly, and that there were many manufactories of the same in New York.

THE Senate of the United States has passed the following concurrent resolution by a vote of 29 to 8. It had previously passed the House by a vote of 119 to 40:

Resolved, That in order to close agitation upon a question which seems to threaten the action of the Government, as well as to quiet the uncertainty which exists in the minds of the people as to the States which have been declared in insurrection, no Senator or Representative shall be admitted into either branch of Congress from any of said States till Congress shall have declared such State entitled to representation.

This is meant to assert the exclusive power of Congress over questions of Reconstruction.

It would certainly be a droll thing if Great Britain, which has for so many years made music for Americans to dance by, should now, in her own turn, take to dancing. It looks wonderfully like it, in the fact that a late General of the United States army should be offering a new system of military tactics to the English Government, and has reached so far as to have a Board of Examination appointed to look into it.

The fortunate individual in this case is General Wm. H. Morris, a graduate of West Point, and an officer of ability, who served both in the field, and on the staff during the war, and is in an excellent position for the experiment.

The system has been introduced to the Horse Guards as tactics, and the military public and the hotels about the west side of the water are now earnestly discussing the subject. The Army and Navy Journal, which is the best authority there, says, in the issue of January 13th:

"It is, as the author states in the preface, an expedition of three movements—a numerical and tactical expedition. It is meant it advisable to substitute for the movements at present in use in the British army the system formerly prescribed for the United States army, and to substitute for our effective manœuvres, and unperceivable in the country. The study has been made in the forests of America, and in an excessive hole of infantry of the United States, but the system does not grow up and complicated by its nature from the results of the campaigns of the war. It unites a study of the systems of the English and French systems, proper to the one and to the other, the improvement of the military tactics employed in the Federal army was derived from the necessity of the circumstances. The differences to be observed between the tactics made use of here in the field and those in use in Europe are of no service, would tend to establish a slight increase of rapidity in movement, a higher regard for manœuvers, and a greater rapidity of manœuvres by the employment of a smaller or a small front. He also uses the same means for the facilities of passage of obstacles.

"On the whole, the system of tactics to which we allude, would be found more instructed suited to it by the great struggle, which was at the labor of it birth, but a deep interest in the welfare of every nation. It is the result of practical experience of a system generated in actual warfare, and of the most extensive and complicated character, and the highest theoretical authorities. The system is the result of experience, and is carefully compiled. It is evident to the reader that it is the labor of a studious and experienced officer."

We are glad to recommending to the Horse Guards, which is the governing power in England in all military matters, the same as in our War Department, that they may appreciate the system, and the adoption of it, if found suitable, without prejudice.

It would indeed be a droll thing, and a great triumph, if English armies, in the future, were moved by American tactics.

A BOOK of great interest, as well as accurate and appreciative, has recently been published in Paris, viz: "History of the Rise and Progress of the United States, since the Establishment of the First Colonies to the Election of President Lincoln, 1629-1861," by J. F. Astié, Professor of Philosophy at the Free Academy of Lausanne."

Professor Astié was for many years a resident of New York, and officiating clergyman of the Swiss Protestant Church. The energy, perseverance and talent with which, during the last four years he has defended the cause of the American Union, entitle him, though less known, to take rank with the DeSaussures, Laboulayes, Stuart Mills, Professor Cairnes, and others, composing that noble band of fearless defenders of constitution, order and liberty, who have endeared themselves to Americans.

TOWN GOSSIP.

CAN country people, or city people either, outside of New York, imagine what the March weather of this metropolis is? We either think not, for nothing short of actual experience can realize the dust and wind of March in New York. Of all dusty cities, except Gotham, of which we have any record, Washington is the worst, but Washington dust is clean dust, or rather the pure earth, as pure as anything can be in Washington. New York dust is dirt, and every man who passes the March month in the city will do more than exhibit pick animals in his back coat that soils the suits of the long-years clothes more than all the other 11 months of the year, for the dust "gets" into the skin, makes our faces look as with a vigorous application of the duster, to live in, and in one week, renders life unendurable. It, in addition to all this, the wind that raises it is cold and biting, then, indeed, is the scene reached, and in no way left to make properties of his bearable, and that is, to lay in a large stock of soap and towels, turn on the Croton, build great fires, call up all washerwomen, and cracks generally, and give way to not venturing out of the house and spending the time in abstinence.

Such weather as this last have we had every week, and the result has been a perfect desertion of the streets, for all souls of them are too weak for promenades and the use of the finer portion of creation. Ladies can bear the wind, rain, ice, snow and sleet; in fact, some of them weathers they rather prefer, if their understandings be of unobjectionable form; but dust they cannot stand. It does not acclimate with spring bonnets; it creates an unwholesome impression on dresses, especially if they be dark, and with chiffonier fringes, it is not safe to be kept from eyes and ears, even with the daintiest of veils and the most enticing of laces.

Let us put ourselves upon that Constitutional Amendment he made to abolish March, and make winter end with the beginning of summer.

The ball season is near about over, and as soon as this happens, supper-tendom immediately sets itself about thinking what it shall do in the summer. Why is it that in the summer we do not have the concerted entertainment that we have in winter? Why are not clubs and societies got up to make picnics as well as balls, and to do them well? Is not this a good suggestion for the Arions? The Germans are eminently a picnicing people, and if this association would give their whole energy and mind to it, fêtes in summer they gave to their great ball, what an immense success they could make it! Think of the fêtes of Saratoga or the summer months by the Rhine and preparing it for a grand pic-nic—making it in fact, by the expenditure of the same amount of money as on parts of one ball, a perfect little elysium for June, July or August; and to do this properly, the place would have to be laid out early in the season. Then a few steamboats would be wanted to start at various hours through the day, to bring passengers to the spot, and bring them to the city any time before midnight, or making it, if we please, an all night fête, so as to ball. Think of the bowers and arbors; the tents and rocky dells; the swaying trees and banners; the music and revelry; the opening of carriages and the quadrilles on the dancing floor of beer and sweet words and sounds; the moon upon the water, the 10,000 people, and the great time generally.

In the superabundance of our kindly nature, we only throw out the idea for the Arions, and say that for more ideas to make the matter a perfect success, we are ready to supply them.

Let the people have it.

We see that it is proposed to establish a "Morgue," or dead-house, in this city, similar to that in Paris, where the bodies of all persons found drowned, or otherwise deceased, can lie for identification; but the all propositions and arrangements upon record, and the question there must be a job about it somewhere. They have been talking and proposing the idea, or rather having it thrust upon them by the necessity of the occasion, taken it in hand, and the "Morgue" is to be built at Believue Hospital, on the river front. By the time it will soon be as utterly forgotten as though it did not exist.

An institution of this kind is intended not for the benefit of the living, but the dead. Not for the living, unless at a small amount of labor, but for the public, that the bodies of those found dead in the waters may be through it—perhaps as a matter of curiosity—and it is the misfortune of the unknown dead, that it is only when the body lies exposed to the examination of the public that any one can identify it. Then all will recognize the deceased? To accomplish this, a large building is to be erected on the central portion of Park, Union Square, or some point as easily accessible as these, and to it all bodies found in the waters, or under other accidental recognition, where, perhaps, a score of people will call to look at it.

While speaking about it our city government may their attention to the idea to mention that the Board of Councilmen have just appropriated $8,000 for the Central Park next year, and that it foots up to the sum of $8,666.13⅓, which is a round sum for the use to which the citizens require for county expenses. The entire amount of taxes to be paid by the people of this city, on the average of $30 for every man, woman and child on this island of a laboring man with a wife, and two children, will be $150 per annum to support him, and we will say, if exactly $150 per annum to support he can get, that exactly $150 per annum to pay into the city government, and that $8,666.13⅓ goes to make up the sum total of political thieves—men we elect to office from the worst of the old and new world, and who govern the country.

Among the items there is little that is doing new and little promise, for why should they go? always anything new, when the old ones will leave us anything?

Mr. Grau promises a new spectacular and musical piece that will astonish New York, and shows a line of effects quite new to the stage of this country. Manager Davis says that, in upholstery, young ladies (tips), and gentlemen (tops), he will surpass anything ever known out of England.

Mr. Wood promises Planche's play of the "Knights of the Round Table," a fine play, which we make no doubt will be well done.

The Olympic will soon produce "Doing for the Dead," a burlesque dramatic drama.

We see it announced in the London papers that Mr. J. Wood, the comedian, has made so great a sensation in August of last year at Drury Lane Theatre, in Rouen, that a new piece has been written for him, which is a Virginian by birth, but has resided in the city for many years, during which he served with a New York regiment, the 42d, and served faithfully in this rebellion. One year and a half he went to England, and made his debut at Drury Lane. We fear much his chance of success in this aggressive piece a new audience, in consequence of all our theatres being engaged to the end of the season, but we do not by any means be well pleased, as we judge of the critiques of the London press.

We will be gratified to the legion of friends who admire the talent of Mr. Charles Fredd, to know that he gives a concert at Irving Hall on the 30th inst., at which will appear all the leading musical talent of the day. It comes be other but a success.

HISTORY of the Plots and Crimes of the Great Conspiracy to Overthrow Liberty in America. 1 Vol. By John Smith Dye. Published by the Author, No. 110 Broadway. This book is a history, in a small compass of the political efforts to uproot slavery in this country.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The Unitarian denomination of Christians, emanated by their success last year in raising $100,000 for missionary and other benevolent objects, have undertaken to endow Antioch College, Ohio, to the amount of $100,000. Ann Green consecrated by a long labors and death, with a grand equal to a quartet of a century. They have collected $50,000 of the amount and several considerable sums on subscription papers are not yet paid in, and hope to procure the remainder to complete the amount.

—Within a few years the restrictions on religious worship have been removed in Chile. In Santiago, the capital, Roger Williams, an American, has now been three years for several years held religious services in a private house. They have now fitted up a chapel at an expense of $600. It was opened with appropriate exercises the first Sabbath in January, by the Rev. D. T. Carmichael, of Valparaiso, who has been for 30 years in the country.

—The Boston Journal of Chemistry reports that 1,200,000 bushels of the mystic tie in the world, and 6,000 bushels, about all over the world—of Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America, Oceanica and the Indian Archipelago.

—Gen. Fisk recently declared that in Tennessee he was not issuing a single license to preachers, there to about 100 organs children at Memphis, and about 60 orphan children and 25 old people at Nashville, which last year he was feeding about 17,000 white, and 7,000 colored persons—the relief is limited to the most needy such in excess of those supplied to the latter.

—The log-house of Lyman B. Lyon, at Lovely Falls, New York, has not been used for 30 years, and has a pound of ice been put into it. The building is constructed of unhewn logs, and was built in the style designed to fill it, a rose jet is placed upon the stove pipe, and in the course of some hours it is all melted and drops into the ice-house, where it forms in one solid mass.

—The New Jersey peach buds were killed by the severe cold of January. An examination of several hundred brought from a dozen counties, did not result in finding a single live bud.

—Chi Pak, late President of the Soo Yup Company of Soo Francisco, died a few days since. He was 70 years of age and very wealthy. His funeral was a splendid affair. Thirty-four ladies were present in one street, which were loaded with fruits, cooked food, a great deal of money and lots of wearing apparel. He moved; bees and sheep roasted whole, and decorated with flowers, feathers, and a hundred hundred other describable comments, while incense was burned, gongs sounded, and the Chinese band played. He was scattered on a verandah overhead, and dirges sung by the mourners.

—A son of Mr. Duncan, of Meadville, Pa., was presented with a pocket as lulled in the bank of that river. The body was brought home and buried. Afterward he returned to life, not dying on a farm in Georgia. This body was also brought home and buried. About a month since, the youth came home.

—It is said to have been the request of the late Bishop Pritchard, that he might be dead, that when he was buried he might be put around him. "Devote no flowers," he said, "to the sanctuary and to the altar; but let all their fragrance carry with the earth's corruption."

—C. W. Howard and Judge Shaffer, of California, have the largest dairy farm in the world. Their herd is on the ocean, 30 miles west of San Francisco, and covers 71,000 acres.

—A young German girl going to California to be married to her lover, had her nervous system so deranged by the rolling motion of that, that when she left San Francisco she was a raving maniac.

—The new steamer (N. H.) Mercury left of two men, who found a wallet with $600 in it, and papers showing who was the owner. The finders started after the owner and hunted him half over the city until they found and restored his property. His most generous gift to the men 26 cents in currency.

—The Niagara (Canada) Mail announces that "The American Government has taken the necessary precautions to put a stop to Fenian or other raids, should they be attempted, on the part of the Canadian line. It is stationed at Fort Niagara to be on the alert, and has received orders to make any attempt at a raid on that side of the river." The order came from Washington, and was carried by efficient guards, and the Mail says, should a raid be attempted from that quarter, the Americans would have a warm reception both back and front.

—A girl, named Mary Madeline Scout, has confessed that she produced the extraordinary manifestations in a house in Hydesville, which the newspapers and society attributed to "spirits." Mary Madeline was sent to the House of Refuge, where the following strange record was made by the officer in charge: "On the 14th of February, 1866, sent to the House of Refuge, Rose Scout, under 15 years of age, charged by her mother, Mary Ann Scout, with incorrigibly wicked conduct, pretending to be possessed of the devil, and assuming the voice and appearance of the ghost of Mr. Michael Weekstreet, above Carpenter street, thereby causing a great excitement in the neighborhood. She changed and giving rise to rumors of ghosts, etc., much to the annoyance of respectable persons."

—A proposition has been made to the Secretary of the Treasury for the loan, issued at par, of ten cents, in Europe, of land bonds or scrip of the United States, secured upon the unsurveyed land of the public land here, to be taken up by the holder of the bond upon his arrival in any part of the country. He states that the desire to possess land in this country is universal among the lower classes of Germany, and that these land scrip bonds would be largely bought up throughout the German States.

—A bottle filled with explosive fluid was thrown through the window of a house in Lafayette, near Rochester, N. Y., occupied by Capt. Jolleyn, constable of the 12th Ward. The Captain was sleeping in the room, which was suddenly enveloped in flames. He escaped with a rough somewhat hurt, but the house was quickly destroyed. The author of the outrage is unknown, though he is supposed to be some enemy of the constable.

—In the year 1858, a $1,000 bank note was found in a street, in Albany, by a colored woman named Mary Dolgely, and after considerable dispute concerning its ownership, the matter was brought before the Court of Appeals, which directed the note to be deposited in the city treasury, Mary Dolgely assigning her right and title to it in pendency of the annual payment to her of $50 by the city. The old colored woman died several years ago in the almshouse.

—The corner-stone for the establishment of an American college in China, now before Congress, proposes that the school shall be educated in Chinese the literature, mercial customs, and then be enabled to assume a business position to be requisite knowledge of the Chinese, thoroughly commercial matters with the merchants of that country, and the funds proposed to be established for the college are to be derived from the accumulation of commercial fees of the business belonging to the Government and now amounting to some $200,000.

—A member of the bar in Maine recently moved for a new trial on the ground "that the verdict was against the law and the evidence, and that the jury was unduly influenced by the great beauty of the female plaintiff." The motion would about lose her case after such a legal compliment.

Foreign.—The new kingdom of Italy has been hitherto very unequally towards its subjects. Much has been done and still more remains to be done. Taxation is now falling with an income of a few hundred francs, and Naples, the late minister of the Bourbon household, left so small a legacy that the latter are in doubt whether it is worth the trouble and expense of recovering it.

—The cattle disease has been fully expelled from the Danish Archipelago and Jutland by the Royal Danish Parks. Thirty-five animals have died of the disease. It appears from the observations and experiments made by medical men while the disease was in progress that the following are the symptoms of the disease: Zebra, the bullock, the gazelle, the goat, the stag, and the wild boar.

—In Ireland during the past year there has occurred a decrease in the number of inhabited houses to the extent of 16,377, and in the population of 91,846. There is every reason to believe that the decrease will proceed still more rapidly in the future.

—The Sultan of Turkey has conferred on Fowler, the Baritone of the Paradise Opera, the title of the Ulu Hundred Hell Moore—the first time, says the Gentleman, such a title has met with a favorable reception.

—Adelina Patti, when she sings in Paris, gets £125, or 12,000 francs, or $600 a night.

—The Academy of Fine Arts founded for the exhibition of "a Central Hall of Science and Art." The Pall Mall Gazette says that the Academy has a sound foundation and that it will receive the nominal annual support of the Government. The Academy already has comprises a long array of influential names, at the head of which are the Prince of Wales, Lord Derby, and Lord Granville. Most of those who have taken any prominent part either in the foundation or in the patronage of the arts and sciences will add their names to the list.

—Two Americans were on the steamer on Lake Lucerne, then which there is no more beautiful and interesting water in the world. "Yon is the line, sir," said the one. "Yes, I suppose so, but did you ever see Lake George?" said the other. "Lake George!" at first. "Like George is good, but Lake George is very far away. Are you from Saratoga, by the by?"

—A Frenchman on coming to America and finding himself utterly unacquainted with the English language, set to work to learn it. He got a book, and began to study it, and soon came to the word "bull." Not knowing what it was taken "no more notice of them if he was a bull dog?"

—A Paris paper states that a bevy of ladies, closely veiled, recently made their appearance at one of the principal pawnbrokers at the most modest dress and in a rather embarrassed manner. The pawnbroker having the articles carefully ascertained that the party included the Empress Eugenie, who was desirous of raising a few thousand of giving an impetus to the retail trade.

—A few days since some persons threw a lighted firework's squib into the cage of the lions in Regent's Gardens, in the Jardin des Plantes, Paris. The lion reached the squib with his paw, and, finding it explode in an affrighting tank extinguished the flames, and with the assistance of his companions devoured the fire.

—Lord Edward Seymour, second son of the Duke of Somerset, while hunting in India, last November, encountered a tiger in the wood. "Fire at him," said following it up, the bear sprang upon him, and, seizing him by the left knee, bit through the bone, and amputation became necessary. This did not save his life, however, for he died the following day from the effects of the wound. The animal will remember that to visit this country with Lord Hardinge in 1846, when they spent several months in hunting on the plains of the Sutlej.

—The French Empress has announced her intention of building for the Paris Exhibition of 1867 a model lace-people. In one of the remote quarters of Paris, there are to be three classes of lodgers for eight persons, at £90 per annum; for two or three persons, at £70; and for families of four persons, at £50. They are to be abundantly supplied, and the autocratic institution of the establishment is the strictest. Precautions have lately been directing his attention to this class of dwellings, and at the last meeting of the Council there has been reserved for a number of models, to be constructed from the designs sent in by the competitors, ing all the requisites for health and comfort.

—An English judge, in summing up in a case of libel, recently, spoken of a defendant who had rendered a spiteful piece, said: "One of these defendants, Mr. Bridge, in it seems, a minister of religion. That religion does not appear; but, to judge by his conduct, it must be a religion of the Devil."

—A new and remarkable expensive fashion has been introduced in Paris. It is the custom to have Her Majesty attaches a diamond, to represent a decoration to a bouquet.

—Prince Esterhazy has realized a loan of £50,000, 000, to pay off his debts. His jewels are valued at $1,000,000.

GEN. ROBERT EDMUND LEE,

Late Commander-in-Chief of the Confederate army in Virginia, son of Gen. Henry Lee, the friend of Washington, and of Ann Hill Carter, was born, during a liberal education, he was admitted into West Point as a cadet, in 1825. He graduated in 1829, and was made a lieutenant of Second Lieutenant; in September, 1838, he was made First Lieutenant; and in July, 1838, Captain.

In 1855 he was appointed a member of the Board of Engineers, and in the following year Superintendent of the Military Academy, which he held till March, 1855, when he resigned his commission in the army. On the 16th of March, 1861, he was appointed Colonel of Cavalry, and on the 25th of April, in the same year, he was appointed Commander of the forces of Virginia, and offered his sword to Virginia, which State had just then seceded from the Union.

Gen. Lee's first appointment in his new sphere of action was that of Commander-in-Chief of the forces of his native State. In command of the force assembled by Jeff. Davis to conduct the military operations in Western Virginia, he was defeated, and Mr. Lee's service was accomplished by him, as he was thwarted at every step by a defective organization and the impracticable character of the men with whom he had to deal. He was then appointed to the command of the Department, and was occupied till June, 1862, with the general direction of the military operations in that campaign. But Joseph E. Johnston having been disabled, by a wound received at the battle of Seven Pines, in May, 1862, for the command of the army which was then in the vicinity of Richmond—at that time threatened by the approach of the Union forces under the command of McClellan—and found himself opposed to McClellan, his old companion in arms, and whose character and skill as a commander he well knew. The issue of these contests is to the withdrawal of McClellan from in front of Richmond, and the transfer of the army from Harrison's Landing to the neighborhood of Washington.

In August following occurred the disastrous campaign of Pope, and the entry of the Confederate army into Maryland and Pennsylvania, its defeat at Antietam, and consequent retreat into Virginia.

In December, 1862, Gen. Lee fought Burnside at Fredericksburg, and in May, 1863, Hooker at Chancellorsville; and in many memorable engagements in the course of the ensuing campaign his old wonderful skill in strategy and indomitable resolution were conspicuously displayed.

In person Gen. Lee is tall, his frame is well knit, his countenance pleasing, his manners gentle, and his habits singularly abstemious. In victory as in defeat he maintains the same equable, quiet demeanor; and his perfect self-command, humanity, devotion and courage have won for him the love of all among his troops and enemies as in the army that he commanded, and among the people who came him as their own.

A VISIT TO THE BONIN ISLANDS.

Our in the Eastern Seas, about 10 degrees due south of Japan, lie some from the great high-roads of commerce, and the waters of the Bonin Islands never broken into foam by the restless paddles of a steamer; where no sail, and newspapers a thing unthought of, there lies a group of islands, known by but few outside that hardly bend of mariners who, in charge of whaling ships, have set the Southern to the world's end, and brave alike the fiery calms of the equator, and the icy gales of the polar regions.

And yet there are reasons why one, at least, of this group, should be better known, for it is United States property, and, I believe, the only one outside of our continent, held by our Government.

I would not have the Government know that it owns it! The group consists of 6 or 10 mountains, that, upheaved by volcanic action, have broken their backs on the upper world, and around whose bases the coral insects, undisturbed, have built their wondrous structures.

"Once upon a time" a line of steamers was projected to ply the ports of Japan and Oregon, and was chosen these great marts of the West and East—San Francisco and Shanghai.

Coaling depots, en route, were necessary, and from their position, these islands were suitable.

It remained for the Government, in safe and good harbors, and other regulates, they were as well adopted. To this end Commodore Perry detailed the ship-of-war Supply, coal, crockery, and stores to the depot. Arriving one fine morning at the largest of the group, a cove was found, and there, on shore, and a cool-one pleasant fellow, dressed in a sailor's suit of duegree, claimed up the offered man-rope, and in fair English introduced himself as master of the Government Coal Second pilot, and through his good skill the ship soon lay over the coal-beds, and was soon snugly anchored in Port Loyd Harbor.

Here was found, shut in from the hundred seas, a little, land-locked bay, perhaps a hundred yards across, the males, mostly run-away sailors from whale ships; the females, from the neighboring inhabited islands, Kanakas predominating.

They had an elected Governor, formed a constitution, laws and Supreme Court, Secretary, an old New Englander, was Governor, and maintained the dignity of the office by wearing a white wiver; but, being at least one more than were owned by any of his people. The islanders seemed perfectly contented. They were in possession of a fine harbor, and some luxuries, in the lightful climate, neither hot nor cold; fertile land, that produced all the tropical fruits and grains—sweet potatoes, yams, corn, onions, bananas, oranges, shaddocks—in short, the fruits of the temperate zone beyond—and, in large quantities, to supply not only their own wants, but to enable them to carry on their trade with vessels touching with them, including wild hogs and goats, the progeny of some pairs of each let loose upon the island and sharps, which, increased, and are so eager to be caught that there is hardly any excitement in their capture. The Kanakas, too, were fine specimens of manhood, and would, in a few years, be a valuable people for the Empire.

The coloring were desirous that the United States depot should be located on their island, but the harbor was not well protected from the waves, particularly by a heavy typoon (from Chinese Ty-fung, great wind), that sprung up, I believe, annually, with some few days and tornado bound, was driven nearly an eighth of a light; the Supply was moved to Deep-Bay (which was found and borne by the waves well up ashore, and then, the Supply being hove down, was soon ready for sea.

This gale cost us heavily! Lieut. John Mathews, one of the officers, had gone ashore to spend the Sabbath, and the morning on a hunting excursion to a neighboring island. The gale came on, and prevented his boat from they left the ship, and, in high spirits, laughingly bid adieu to their companions. They did not know that they parted with the world for ever. The tempest came down on them with terrific force, and, with every means of search known, but no trace or sign of the boat but remains of the wreck, which floated through the bay, and her bones, with an hundred more eyes scanning the waters in a field, but not a trace of them could be found. Poor fellow, he was born and raised in Washington, and his father, a clerk in the Navy Department, received the dreadful intelligence of the loss of his son. The letter of the notice of breaches, while here and there a hide-bound trunk, with the name of the owner painted upon it, told of the dreadful fate of the loved ones.

On landing, we were surprised to find traces of Indian occupation. Here and there, beneath the trees, lowered in cross groves, and nestling sung in a little hollow, was a rude stone altar, moss-grown and ruined, and soon after their owners greeted us, and made us free of their homes. We encountered of "Tommy Ecoun," a rough, unlettered English sailor, whose hard features had been softened by the gentle influences of a dusky-clad that crossed his truculent face; and Robinson, a half-breed Kanaka, equally well-educated and polished in manner.

Tommy possessed one wife, and no children. Robinson, two wives (all Hyven Island Indians) and three children, Tommy's wife, according to Indian custom, for they had lived some 12 years on the island. Of their children, one was a boy of about 10 years of age, and a quaintance led us to presume that each had in some form or other undergone the ceremony of initiation into second-class privates. They made us very welcome, and, after a hearty meal of fish, fruit, and vegetables, the coco-nut cups, fried in turtle-oil, fish, sweet potatoes, and bread-fruit, and other good things, to a native fire, which our "salt horse" and pork were gladly bestowed and received.

After pitching our tents, exploration was the order of the first day, and while some took to the guns—on the highest of which "Jimmy Ecoun" planted our boundary—others resorted to the woods in search of game; others to the bay for fish; and some, yes, most of the Miss Jackets, by "George's" claim, where they found rum enough to give all hands a "jolly-tuck-in," and to remove the night-blooms. Fortunately for our future comfort, one night's drinking exhausted the stock on hand.

Vast piles of splendid fish of all sorts, size and shape, a pack of eager and decoy, a few ducks, and a kind

Boston of the well-known writer, who has already a reputation as a writer of a most enviable stamp. Lucy Aiken is a descendant, from Dr. Aiken, the literary, pleasantly told in natural language, and one of the books that is everywhere will read with satisfaction.

Or the 20th of January a trial of endurance, as well as of speed, with regard to the relative merits of the English and Hungarian horses in hot climates, took place in the desert between Cairo and Suez. The horses belonging to Prince Hohenlohe, and an English horse, the property of Mr. Sunet, started together from Cairo, and the distance, 134 miles, thirty seconds a. m., and at three hours eight minutes and 30 seconds p. m. the Hungarian horse had actually traversed the distance of 96 miles in seven hours, fifty-two minutes, and thirty seconds, while the English competitor broke down nearly 18 miles from the winning post.

POTATOES IN FRANCE.—It is related that one day, in the time of Louis XVI., a gentleman was put into Parmentier's hand for a chemical purpose. He examined it with care, and, suspecting its excellence, ordered it was employed as food. "For cattle, sir?" asked the servant. "No, for men," was the reply. He had judges—they discovered truffles; why not follow the hint which had been accepted by the cattle alone?" The professor assured him that the root was quite unfit for human food. The gentleman was not to be persuaded from making the investigation. Inviting two or three friends to dine with him, he served up potatoes, he boiled a pot of potatoes, and enjoyed them much, and they, too, and the next day had a dish of potatoes at table, and found them, as Parmentier had declared, a most delicious and wholesome food. He thoroughly upon him some angry criticisms from the "friends of the people," who considered that the proposed experiments —thanks to Parmentier—to be fed on food for swine. But the Parmentier's practical view of the question satisfied, and the potato became an "institution" of the house-hold of France, and of the world.

POSITION IS EVERYTHING.—We wish to call the attention of our readers to the curious picture on page 5 of this week's paper, entitled "Position is Everything." It is a wonderful instance of what position does. The picture is a most amusing one, and presents a completely unintelligible appearance; but, by lowering the eye of the picture, and looking at it from a certain point, you were seeing whether the lines were straight, words and letters. The principle of the picture is to have been discovered by the late Professor of England, Lord Stanhope, and is called anamorphosis. It is a very curious—and, indeed, quite clever—he had no doubt about it, which has appeared from time to time, and other ages had to be signalized. It will be observed that in forming the figure one portion is carried towards the left hand, and forming in the same manner, other words appear. This could be carried to almost an indefinite extent, and might form a valuable method of carrying on communications during a siege. It is not now principles—or, rather, an old principle newly applied—but it makes a peculiar and new application of some of the most difficult ideas with which artists have to engage. The removal of a picture from its proper point of view is the principle of anamorphosis. It is something different to what we have been in the habit of seeing.

SPRING FASHIONS FOR 1866.—DRAWN AND ENGRAVED FROM MODELS EXPRESSLY FOR THIS PAPER.

DESCRIPTION OF FASHIONS.

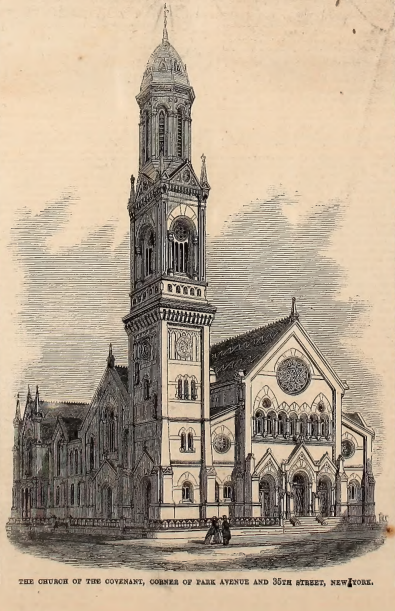
FIG. 1.—Walking Costume—Empire Bonnet of shirred violet satin, trimmed with a scarf of tulle and white feathers. Gabrielle dress of violet silk, trimmed with bands of velvet, which simulate a tunic, cut in points. Coat-sleeves ornamented to match the skirt.

FIG. 2.—Indoor Costume—Venetian head-dress, composed of cluny guipure and blue velvet ribbon. Jacket of blue silk or thin blue cloth, with a basque, cut in points. The trimming consists of jet drop buttons.

FIG. 3.—Afternoon Dress of silver gray silk, looped up with tabs, trimmed with cherry velvet ribbon and mother-of-pearl buttons, depending from a belt similarly ornamented. Petticoat trimmed with a narrow ruffle, and two rows of cherry velvet, with a lattice-work between of narrow black velvet. High round waist. Coat-sleeves, trimmed the same as the skirt.

FIG. 4.—Dinner Dress of the Spring shade of green silk. High corsage, with a round basque and coat-sleeves, trimmed with cluny guipure, and ornamented with fancy buttons. The fall of cluny guipure, which ornaments the skirt, is put on high in front, but gradually, toward the back, reaches within a few inches from the bottom of the skirt.

CHURCH OF THE COVENANT,
Corner Park Avenue and 35th Street.
Rev. Dr. Prentiss.



THE Church of the Covenant, just finished by the Presbyterian congregation, under the pastoral of the Rev. Dr. Prentiss, is second to none of the many churches erected during the last ten years in the metropolis, either in architectural design or substantial workmanship. It is modled from the round-arch churches of Italy, though the design itself is original.

The illustration is taken from a photograph, furnished by the architects, which, in its turn, was taken from a very artistically-executed water-color drawing, and represents the church as it was originally conceived, and is proposed to be completed, namely, with the campanile at the angle and almost detached from the church.

The church is situated on the corner of Park Avenue and 35th street, and is 92 feet long by 67 wide, inside measurement; and, with the assistance of galleries, provides sittings for 1,100 persons. The lecture-room and Sunday school-rooms—rooms for pastor and trustees, are in a building 26 by 85, occupying the lot in the rear of the church, and with its front on 35th street, and forming part of the church itself in its architectural treatment. The frescoes, of which the building is faced, is from the Belleville quarries of New Jersey, and arranged by the use of the two tints from the same quarries so as to enhance the general design, and throw into prominence the architectural details of the structure.

The interior of the building is simple and harmonious in the treatment, both of color and other details. Iron columns are employed to sustain both roof and galleries; and though columns of any kind are considered objectionable by the modern school of church-goers and church-builders, still there is no church yet built in New York, where the roof rests upon the side walls, which can be pronounced an architectural success, and indeed where it does not produce a positive baldness of effect, and which the prospective of a colonade does so far to obviate. Even enrichment and carefully studied details will not supply the loss. In the case of the Church of the Covenant the lightness of the columns are very little impediment to seeing and none at all to hearing the preacher distinctly.

They are treated honestly as iron should be, and no one can mistake the material, by graining in black walnut or veining like Siena marble. Color, decided but harmonious, is used, and designs in relief are cast solid upon the shafts. The joining is principally of black walnut, and where the white pine shows, it is simply stained and varnished. The mason is Mr. John J. Tucker. The carpenters, Messrs. J. and G. Van Nostrand. The stone-cutter and owner of the quarries, Mr. William Joyce. The color decorations were by Messrs. Lamb. The architects are Messrs. Renwick & Sands.

THE CHURCH OF THE COVENANT, CORNER OF PARK AVENUE AND 35TH STREET, NEW YORK.

A SINGULAR LUNATIC.

TRAVELERS on the East River and Sound steamboats, as they enter Hurl Gate on their passage from the metropolis, invariably have their attention drawn to a strange structure on the extremity of Blackwell's Island.

A fort there stands, such as the pupils of a military school might be imagined to have erected for amusement. Toy-like as it seems, it is rendered imposing by the mouths of several terrific-looking cannon which project from its sides. A nearer approach, and alarm departs; they are discovered to be merely wooden dummies; while an oddly-built shanty, submerged in foliage, attracts the gaze, and assures one of the peaceful nature of the proprietor.

Robinson Crusoe is forcibly presented to the mind by a close examination; the drawbridges, the moat, the ponderous mass of masonry supporting the back of the cottage, bring to the memory the old story of Crusoe's fear of the savages and preparations for defense. One expects each moment to see a goat dart out from the bushes, and when the odd figure of the owner of the habitation appears, swells also the arrival of "his man Friday."

But Mr. Thomas Maxey is his own man Friday. All the extensive work indicated in the engraving, is of his own doing. Unaided he has drained the marsh, dug turf for the embankment of his fort and the long avenue leading to it. Alone he has conveyed large blocks of stone to the interior of his edifice, and built of them a magazine or cellar. The masonry of the grand entrance is, as well as its design, solely of Tom's construction; so, too, are the queer architectural adornments in wood-work with which the establishment is filled. Continuous, persistent endeavor explains the accomplishment of so much in the space of three years, and the "improvements" are still progressing. Mr. Maxey's inventive skill is not yet exhausted.

A brother eccentric occupies the building seen on the left of the fort. It is merely a fisherman's hut, containing an oven—for Rudson's existence is devoted to depriving the piscatory tribe of theirs. Mr. Maxey considers him his tenant, and smiles benignly upon his ignoble, idle life.

One great reason of Thomas's activity in building and "improving," is the idea he entertains of the certainty of a vast fortune finally resulting from his efforts. The city authorities will, in due time, he considers, appreciate the nature of his achievement, its great value to the city, and purchase the whole at his valuation. All visitors, of course, humor him in this notion, which he inevitably broaches, for it is the idea uppermost in his mind. Tom will not, however, be the first victim of a senseless ambition.

Although he is always busily engaged either in digging, planting, plastering, brick-laying, building and designing, or taking an account of stock, he is of an extremely hospitable disposition, and delights in visitors.

Hospitable did I say? Hospitality in him is a virtue of value, and must be paid for. He will, indeed, stop working upon the entrance of a stranger into his territory, and point out to him all the points of greatest interest, but payment, he judges, is his due for his trouble. Not a few 10 cent stamps thus find their way into his purse, and occasionally some wall-to-do great presents him dollars. Tom may, perhaps, be worth, in ready money, full $30, though in real estate, as he himself says, his possessions are incalculable.

Unless the visitor be gifted with a fine fancy and is able to represent himself as being what he is not, it is always best to comply with Tom's demands for his fee for "showing the improvements." He will, otherwise, become abusive in the extreme, and his eloquence is of a most aggravating and persistent nature. The writer invariably declares himself an officer of state, a civil engineer, sent out by authorities at Washington to examine the colonel's fort and report thereupon. He thus receives double the amount of attention usually shown by the proprietor, and no charge is made.

If the non-paying visitor's dress be fashionable and elegant, Tom will content himself with expostulation, entreaty and threats; but should the apparel denote that his gues does not belong to the higher orders of society, Tom's indignation is duly shown by a shower of stones and earth. He not unfrequently in his rage drives his frightened debtors into the marsh, stands on the embanked road, and pelts them to his satisfaction, or until the officers of the asylum are obliged to go to the rescue. No trespassing is allowed on his grounds.

Illegi[illegible] at times appear. The oddity of the structure causes small boats to stop at the fort during the summer; but did the owners know of the penalty to be exacted should they be discovered, they would be less eager to satisfy their curiosity respecting Fort Maxey. A fine of $50 hangs over their heads. To a more complete understanding of Tom's character and mental attributes, we must refer into conversation with him.

"Mr. Maxey, glad to see you again. The work goes bravely on, eh?"

"Yes; I'm finishing this addition to the house. Strong stone-work, you see. If I'm attacked, you know, I can retreat into my wooden house there; and if then the enemy follow, I can retire into this fortification and keep them all at bay. They'd have to come one by one, and I'm almost each one as he appeared."

"Oh! that's your ride, is it?"

"Yes; that's a first-rate gun; only wants a little cleaning."

He exhibits a rusty fire-lock of antediluvian date, of which the trigger is gone, and the stock is splintered.

"Pish—! that's not worth a cent for defense, Mr. Maxey."

"Oh, yes, it is—good gun. You see here is the barrel; put the powder in here, ram it down, then balls; but stones are good, too; then touch it off with a match!"

"And burst it and yourself?"

"You don't think it would, do you? Mr. —— gave it to me; said it belonged to his great grandfather, and was all through the Revolutionary war. Well, perhaps I shan't have to use it, but it's a nice thing to have in the magazine."

"Well, yes, it looks well there; fine relic of antiquity."

Tom deposits the ridiculous rubbish carefully in its corner. Since it has been in his possession, he not infrequently takes it out for an airing. Rip Van Winkle, on his return to his village after his sleep of years, is forcibly presented to the mind of one who sees him. A modern Don Quixote, he is well equipped for the wild-goose chases in which he continually participates.

Thus far Tom seems only a grown-up child. Like a boy, he delights in all the semblances of the appurtenances of manhood. He builds a toy fort, and, in imagination, bids defiance to all rebel rams and privateers; he constructs mimic drawbridges and triumphal arches, and in fancy is a distinguished engineer and architect; he attends about with an old musket (of which the condition would silence all alarm in the weak-minded of old Indies), and thinks himself the terror of all observers.

But there is another phase of Tom's character yet to be developed in our talk—it is his extraordinary conceit.

Tom seems to consider his intellectual faculties to be of the highest order. Nothing has been done that he cannot equal—nothing exists upon which he is not well-informed. His style of discourse, indeed, when a puzzling question is propounded to him, seems to imply his belief that his questioner must necessarily be much more ignorant than himself; and that, although he knows nothing of the point broached, he can still maintain this intellectual supremacy before others by talking in a learned manner, which they cannot comprehend. He will, on such occasions, deliver, with the utmost volubility, the most execrable nonsense. All his reminiscences of scientific words and mythological names, are jumbled together in hideous confusion, while he assumes the manner of an oracle. His eyes are fixed on vacancy, as though the words he utters were thoughts of the deepest and most valuable description. He emulates the Priestess of Delphi in his rapt and inspired air; foam gathers on his lips as he proceeds. If words could overwhelm an opponent, he would be annihilated; but Tom Maxey.

Declare to him that you have heard, on good authority, that the moon is made of green cheese, and ask his opinion concerning it, and he will address you with a flood of the most rare oratory.

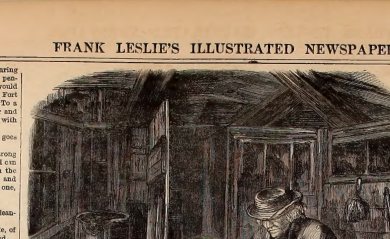
But the subject on which his ideas are most valuable and entertaining is this:

"Where there is simple being, without state or existence, is it not better not to be than not?"

"I didn't quite catch your meaning. What did you say?"

The formula is repeated for his benefit with extreme rapidity, and apparent indignation.

"I'm sure it's plain enough, Mr. Maxey. Do you wish to shirk an answer?"



"Shirk! No! of course not. Where there is simple being—state—existence—not—not be. To be where you are, sir, is of just as much importance as the government will allow. Spaminondas was the author of a great nation; geology, too, is a good thing in its way; still, why will any government do so duty. My claims are to the amount of sixty thousand. I believe you are a government man, and I with——"

"Will you stick to the question? I asked you if——"

"Stick—existence—yes, yes. Caledonia and the Marquis of Westminster have a very—the Marquis of, West minster is the richest man in the world. I tell you, sir Apollo and Juno, in the mysterious doxology or cosmogony of the Eastern Hemisphere, ought not to have allowed the Siamese twins to lead a separate exist ence——"

"Mr. Maxey, again I ask you, 'Is it not better not to be than not?' Why will you not try to delude me?"

"Is it not to be—not—not—not?"

INTERIOR OF MAXEY'S QUARTERS, FORT MAXEY, BLACKWELL'S ISLAND, NEW YORK.

Tom looks wearied, but plunges again, in medias res, like a man combating with an invisible spirit.

But the reader, not having Tom's expressive countenance before him, will grow weary of the verbiage sooner than did the writer.

Being desirous of taking his portrait, I showed Mr. Maxey the sketches I had made about his grounds, and asked him if he would be so kind as to allow me to add his likeness to the collection; and I expatiated at length upon the benefits that would accrue to him from an extension of his fame.

He examined the drawings with a curious eye, and finally consented, with a most condescending air.

As I proceeded, his vanity showed itself in new eagernesses and attitudes each moment; and when I was half through my task he suddenly turned away, rushed to a shelf in his habitation, donned an old straw hat instead of the cap he were when I commenced, and asked to be taken in that. It gave him a more industrious look, he said. It made him look like the originator of the great work on which we were—his fort, etc. He wore the gay cap he had on when I entered merely to please visitors; distinguished people came to see him, and should be received with honors.

This idea, however, did not continue long in his brain, for, as I brought my sketch to the finishing stroke, he asked, abruptly, if I could draw a horse?

I told him I thought I had that ability.

He then suggested that if I placed him on a fine prancing steed, and decorated his cap on his head, with a feather in it, and if I put epaulets on his shoulders and a sword in his hand, I would make a finer picture than the one I had completed.

It wouldn't, of course, be he, as he then was; but as he would look when he obtained his claims from Government, and traveled through Europe, living on his fortune.

I told him of Cincinnatus at his plow, and General Washington leading the retired life of a private gentleman, and left him delighted with the comparison, and perfectly willing I should submit to the public the likeness I had obtained.

WHAT is it we all say we frequently will do, and no one has ever yet do? Stop a minute.

MR. THOMAS MAXEY, PROPRIETOR OF FORT MAXEY, BLACKWELL'S ISLAND, NEW YORK.

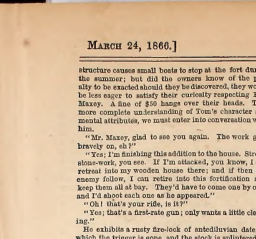
GREAT FANCY DRESS AND MASQUERADE BALL

At Minot Hall, Boston, Mass.

THE hub of the universe has been showing what it could do in the way of a little gathering, just to illustrate that it did not wish to be very far beyond New York, and one cannot help thinking that she has succeeded in showing that fact.

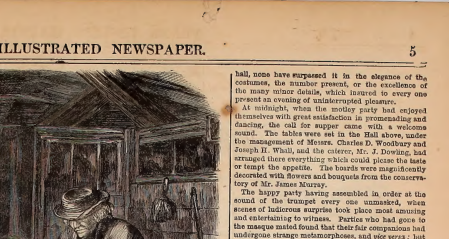
The ball came off on the evening of February 27th, and without being a crowd, was comfortably full.

The company began to assemble at about quarter-past eight o'clock, and there were constant acquisitions to the number until nearly midnight. Nearly all were masked before reaching the hall, to which they were conveyed in carriages. There was, of course, a curious crowd gathered upon the sidewalk in front of the entrance to get a glimpse of the parties as they alighted. After entering the hall the parties were conducted into a reception-room where conveniences for arranging the toilets were provided, and from thence they were taken separately before the Committee of Arrangements and unmasked, and their names and the character of their costumes recorded. After passing through this ceremony they proceeded to the ball-room, where the festivities of the evening commenced about half-past nine. The music was most excellent, consisting of the most fashionable waltzes, quadrilles, &c., for which the party are indebted to the superior talent and skill of the Germania Band, which was led by Mr. James White. After the opening march, as the multitude filed into the hall, the stated programme of the evening was commenced.



The party was the closing one of a series of four, which have been most admirably managed by Messrs. Charles D. Woodbury and Joseph S. Wall. These gentlemen, at the request of the subscribers, undertook to make the closing sociable attractive by giving to it the character of a fancy masquerade party. They discharged their duty most acceptably, for, of the many similar balls held in the same hall, none have surpassed it in the elegance of the costumes, the number present, or the excellence of the many minor details, which inured to every one present an evening of uninterrupted pleasure.

At midnight, when the motley party had enjoyed themselves with great satisfaction in promenading and dancing, the call for supper came with a welcome sound. The tables were set in the Hall above, under the management of Messrs. Charles D. Woodbury and Joseph S. Wall, and the caterer, Mr. J. Dowling, had arranged there everything which could please the taste or tempt the appetite. The boards were magnificently decorated with flowers and bouquets from the conservatory of Mr. James Murray.



The happy party having assembled in order at the sound of the trumpet every one unmasked, when scenes of ludicrous surprise took place most amusing and entertaining to witness. Parties who had gone to the masque mated found that their fair companions had undergone strange metamorphoses, and vice versa; but all tended to pleasure and fun, which held high court with unquestioned regnant power.

After supper the ball been appeased, the dance was resumed with renewed vigor and enthusiasm, and continued until three o'clock in the morning, when the party dispersed to their homes, with many thoughts of the South End Sociable Masquerade, which certainly will bear many repetitions, and which was carefully and jealously divested of everything which could mar the chastest social pleasure.

As usual on such occasions, there were several amusing cases of mistaken identity, and at the unmasking hour great surprise was manifested by more than one gentleman, that his chosen partner for several dances was not the lady which he had flattered himself he knew. One singular instance took place which mystified all the participants. A gentleman and his lady had made arrangements to leave the couple at the door at the ball, and give them a description of the dominoes which they should wear. On entering the dressing-room the gentleman discovered an old friend, a perfect stranger to his promise, proposed to change their dominoes, and it was done, and the lady entered the hall under the escort of her supposed lord and master. After the usual promenade, the jersey left the lady, mumbling some excuses, and seeking the dressing-room, prevailed upon a third gentleman to exchange dominoes with him, and thus equipped, again entered the hall. The third gentleman was at once seized upon by the wife, who ruled him for leaving her alone. This surprise was great, but continuing it was part of the play, he said nothing, and danced several times with the lady, whom he fathered himself about have become peculiarly struck with his appearance. The real husband would occasion ally appear, and urge No. 3 "to keep it up," which No. 3 did till the masks were removed, when he discovered that the lady was one who years ago had given him the mitten. The bona-fide husband was thunderstruck to see his wife arm-in-arm with her former gallant, while the mischief-maker of the quartet was looking in at the door to see the denouement of the affair. As the party came together and enjoyed a hearty laugh, it was only another illustration that "all's well that ends well."

GRAND ENTRANCE TO FORT MAXEY.

FORT MAXEY—UNWELCOME VISITORS.

The couple whom they had sought to mest had selected two others as their supposed friends, and they, too, enjoyed assistance when they discovered their mistake.

The renowned three-legged man, from the Morris Brothers' Opera House, was present, and created much merriment during the early part of the evening. He participated in a quadrille, collision and a waltz, and these probably fatigued him so much that he was obliged to withdraw. He was succeeded soon, however, by the dancing giraffe, who, with his head towering a dozen feet or less above the rest, danced in a lively manner all around the spacious hall. A great many tried in vain to establish the identity of those who operated these mysterious creatures.

Who are they? was a question often heard concerning four young gentlemen, all of about the same physical stature, and all arrayed in a uniform domino costume of a gray red, with a large red cross upon the capes. One would make an engagement with a lady to dance, another of these would find it out, and immediately pass himself as the party to whom the engagement was made, and in nine cases out of ten he succeeded in obtaining her as his partner for the next set—of course, much to the disappointment of the party whose first made the engagement. There were four or five ladies also, arrayed exclusively in beautiful pink dominoes, who were frequently taken one for the other, and constantly puzzling the gentlemen to whom they might be engaged for a dance. Much amusement flowed from these sources.

POWER OF THE MOON AT NIGHT.—The sun shall not smite thee by day nor the moon by night." Mr. Crane, in his lectures on the latter, observes that the effect of the moonlight upon the eyes, by night, is singularly injurious. The natives tell you, as I afterward found they did in Arabia, to always cover your eyes when you sleep in the open air. It is rather strange that the passage in the Psalms, "The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night," should have been thus illustrated, as the allusion seems direct. The moon here really strikes and affects the sight when you sleep exposed to it, much more than the sun—a fact of which I had very unpleasant proofs one night, and took good care to guard against it afterward. Indeed, the sight of the person who should sleep with his face exposed at night would be impaired, or utterly destroyed.

THE ICE-KING'S MESSENGERS.

BY C. D. GARDETTE.

I.

THE Ice-King sits on his crystal throne,
In the Polar night of the frozen zone,
Sombre, and silent, and all alone.

The North-wind sweeps with a ghostly train,
Through wailing forest and shuddering plain
Into the Ice-King's dark domain.

To the Monarch's snow-wreathed feet it flies;
Bitter cold gleam the despot's eyes:
"How hath thy mission sped?" he cries.

"Full well!" saith the Blast, in a tempest tone;
"I have smitten the land from zone to zone,
And the streams in their frosty fetters groan.

"I have laughed me hoarse with a deadly mirth,
As I sat thy brand on the pauper's hearth;
And the dead lie stark on the frozen earth.

"The ghastly shrond that thou bad'st me fling,
Lies cold white on the soul, O King!
This is the carnival news I bring!"

The Blast dies out in a bitter moan:
The Ice-King sits on his crystal throne,
Sombre, and silent, and all alone.

II.

From swaying forest, and slumbering plain,
The South-wind sweeps with a merry train
Into the Ice-King's bleak domain.

To the Monarch's feet it hastens now:
The ice-crown shakes on the despot's brow:
"Malapert whistler, whence com'st thou?"

The South-wind sings, with a fearless glee:
"I have journeyed the land from sea to sea,
And spite of the fetters, the streams flow free.

"I laughed me wild with a jocund peal,
As I marked the skaters' glittering reel,
And the clear, blithe ring of the glancing steel.

"The earth hath a bridal robe of snow,
And the air is satin with a silver flow
Of sound, as the sleigh-chimes come and go.

"I heard, as I sped, a mother sing
Her babe to sleep with a song of spring!
This is the carnival news I bring!"

The South-wind's song in a whisper dies,
And up from the verge of the Polar skies
To the Ice-King's throne, the sunbeams rise!

Bernardo.

BY ALICE LOVELL.

IT was the close of an October day, cool and hazy, like many other autumn days. The frost had not colored his warpings to the forest, where he had undisputed sway, but had ventured in among the brick walls of the city. And now, when the autumn sun was setting, he saw a scene which almost rivaled his own splendor, the changed foliage of the trees. Still the shadows crept on apace, and silently the gold and crimson leaves drifted down, covering the sidewalk and the stone steps of the merchant's mansion, and they nestled around the form of a child who sat there, as if they would cover his rags. Now a gayly-dressed maple-leaf lit upon the little torn cap, and sat there mockingly, forming a beautiful contrast to the petty curls that clustered underneath. He looked a not. They might have covered him with their gorgeous colors, and he would not have known it; he was so busy thinking—strange occupation, for a child.

But he has made up his mind to something, for he gets up slowly and ascends the steps. At the last one he pauses. The closed door rises up forbiddingly before him, and the silver door-plate and bell-pull seem to gaze at him scornfully. He thinks he will turn around and go back; but just then the door opens, and the rooster of the mansion makes his appearance. Perhaps he came to the door to look for some one he was expecting, and perhaps he came, like we do sometimes, because he had nothing else to do; at any rate, he came, and there lay the boy, his eyes met, and the trembling form of the boy, with his dark, eloquent eyes raised imploringly, and the small, red lips trying to say something.

In the meantime, the gentleman, whom one would call about forty years of age, with gray eyes and brown hair, had been looking at the child with an amused expression, and at length said:

"Well, little boy, what'll you have?"

"Please, sir," he began, "could I—may I come and work?" I would do anything."

"You! You are not old enough to work."

"I am nine, sir," said the child, with a conscious pride, as if that were an age of maturity.

"Where is your mother and father?"

"Haven't got any, sir," this time with a quivering lip. "My mother died on the ship, coming over the ocean from Italy. Mamma never told much about papa, except that he went away off somewhere, when I was only a baby, and never came back. She said something about finding him when we left home, and went on the big boat."

The child was reassured by the gentleman's look of interest, and continued:

"When she ship stopped here, I was all alone; and every one said I was in the way, so I came off with the rest of the folks."

"But what did you do after you landed?"

"Oh, I had a little money that a kind gentleman, on the boat gave me, so I tried to sell papers; but the big boys knew how so much better than I, and sometimes, when they had sold all theirs, they used to snatch mine and run around the corner. But sometimes they were real good, and used to give me something to eat when I was hungry, and that is not to be a 'spooney.' I didn't know what they meant, though, when they said that."

The gentleman's gravity broke down toward the latter part of the story. The boy told it all with such childish earnestness.

"But why did you come here?" he said, kindly.

"I was hungry, sir, and I knew that you must be rich, you lived in such a nice house."

"Come in," he said, leading the way to a nicely furnished sitting-room, and ringing the bell at seeing. A bright-eyed little girl dropped the kitten which she was playing with, and sprang to the interior. She was the only child of Mr. Harrison, four years old, and the probable heiress to his property.

"Here, Nellie," he said, addressing his wife, "what do you think I found out at the door? A young chap trying to find a lucrative situation; or, in other words, asking me for work."

Here Mr. H. indulged in a good, hearty laugh, much to the discomfort of the boy, who stood in the middle of the floor, twisting his cap in the little thin fingers, too much embarrassed to look up. In a few words the gentleman had told the child's story to his wife; but he added, "He may be an impostor."

"He does not look like one—I am sure he is not," she said, softly. "Are you mamma, little boy?" she said, stooping down, and taking one of the little hands in her own.

"Bernardo Travetti."

"Oh, do let him stay?" broke in little Grace, who had crept up, shyly, by her mother. "He would play with me so nice. And hasn't he got pretty curls?"

Mrs. Harrison smiled at the child's eagerness, and, after considering a moment, she said:

"He is a little, homeless, ragged child; let us take him in, and save him from starvation or a fate's end? We have a home, and can afford it."

"Well, well," said the gentleman, "you and Grace are too much for me; you have my consent. Well, Pussy," and he took the child on his knee, what would you do if he should stay?"

"I would have him for my brother, oh! Well, we'll see about that, if he behaves himself."

"Oh, I know he will!" interposed, gravely.

From that day Bernardo became domiciled in Mr. Harrison's house. He soon won the good graces of the cook and housemaid by his ready obedience to all orders. He became Grace's fast friend, and many were the chats they had on the stairways and in the corners of the kitchen, while she listened, in open-mouthed wonder, to his stories of the "big ship," and adventures with the newsboys.

By-and-by they began to talk of adopting little Benny, as Grace had nicknamed him. They both loved the child already, and he had returned that by his love for Grace, and the fact of his being a little, homeless stranger, whose only friend slept at the bottom of the ocean, made their hearts bind to him, and they grew to consider as their own son the child, with his slight foreign accent and very Italian name.

Years glide on at the brown-stone house, and twelve autumns have scattered to the winds their gorgeous leaves, and have come to have crowns with their soft drifting snows, and covered the dead foliage with a pure white mantle. There is still a bright-eyed child at the brown-stone house, although Grace has "got big," as little Minnie says, and gone away to school. Bernardo has been through college, and graduated, too, with many honors. He is coming home to-morrow, and there is much bustle in the house. Some servants are busily at work fixing up those two little rooms upstairs. They were theirs before they were married, and Grace wished to have them as nice as fresh as if they had left them only yesterday. Mrs. Harrison oversees the work, happy in the thought that to-morrow her family will be reunited.

They came the next day. Grace, a sweet little maiden of sixteen, with golden curls, dark and gray eyes, like her father's, a guileless little school-girl, all dimples and blushes, but very pretty, withal. Bernardo, a tall, handsome young man, all and well formed. His dark curls and mellowing black eyes become him even better than when a child, and as Mr. Harrison declares, he looks every inch a man.

Grace's short vacation soon sped by, and she would go back to the seclusion more of school, only interspersed by short vacations.

Mr. Trevor was installed book-keeper in his kind benefactor's counting-room, and Grace wondered with that he should one day take his place. So, the young man came and went, day after day, and the brightness seemed to be often, merely varying his course from those two points; while Mr. H. was wont to declare that he was "terribly settled down, and getting old." Bernardo was waiting for the time when the "little school-girl," as he called her, should come home, and bring sunlight into the old brown house. Sometimes, in the quiet of the office, there would float out a little sigh, and before the columns of the ledger there would come a face with beautiful, soft gray eyes, and lips of melting tenderness, in spite of everything. He would go back and add the column over again, scolding himself for being so foolish.

Father Time is very kind to us sometimes, for he brings back to us those we love. And this is was that the June roses and buttercups brought back to the old homestead of Bernardo's boyish dreams. She had grown more womanly now, but time had only ripened her beauty.

Bernardo was passionately fond of music, as he was of everything beautiful; he had inherited it with his mother's impulsive nature. He would sit for hours listening to Grace's playing, for she knew how to bring out with expression those grand old Masses of Mozart and Handel. Once, particularly, when she had played one commonly used in the Catholic church, as she stopped, he beckoned for her to go on. When, at last, she stopped from sheer exhaustion, he spoke:

"I had very strange thoughts. They seemed more like a dream than a reverie; for there rose up distinctly before me the little chapel in Italy where I have been so many times with my mother. There was the grand entrance over the door, and clinging lovingly around the little marble image of the Virgin; and through the gothic windows came the sweet sounds of the organ. Of course it was all fancy, but it seemed very real, and never, since I left that dear little village on the Arno, had I had some back to me so distinctly as now. I suppose it was because you were playing that Mass, that I had been thinking of my mother, as I was a child. Oh, Grace, if I live I shall go back there some day, to see if it looks as it did when I left. When you go with me, little one" holding the tiny white hand in his own, and looking up in the downcast eyes. There was no answer. "Wouldn't you go to Italy with me, and come back with me, and always stay with me, and be mine for ever?" He drew the little hand up closer, and waited for an answer. Then softly there floated out on the stillness of the room the answer to his question:

"Yes, stay with you always." The dawn of their new life had come. The red-breast of love sang carolling on the flowers. And Grace had lain her head on Bernardo's shoulder, and wept happy tears, the baptismal dew of the opening bud.

* * * * * * *

Christmas Day; how, like a benediction, the snow lies on the earth, covering everything pure and white, and covering all dark and unsightly places. But the most beautiful feature of all was the holiday of the season, as the child knows. Now they rang-ont, clear, loud, and triumphant, filling the whole air with their volumes of sound, and so sing-ing as they have done since the days of the praises of the great Saviour of mankind. Now, the sounds became lower and more musical, as the angels sang to the shepherds, in days of old.

"Peace and good will toward men." Still it grew lower and sweeter, till we almost imagine we hear the lullaby of the mother, as she hushed to sleep the child Jesus. Such days purify us, for they raise our thoughts to higher and better things—things which we forget if it were not for such the calm and quiet of Christmas mornings and Sabbaths.

On that Christmas morning Bernardo and Grace stood by the window, listening to the chimes. They were very happy in each other. Bernardo had returned to bear their happiness since their engagement. And Mrs. Harrison were only too happy to see united the two beings whom they loved most on earth. Thus everything had glided on quietly and smoothly; they had both lived, like all true lovers, in delicious reveries, and as now we find them on their wedding morn.

"Benny," said Grace, looking steadfastly into the handsome face, "what was that little bead ornament you wear on your neck? I just discovered it yesterday, and I have thought I would ask you several times, and then something has prevented."

"It is a miniature of my mother," he said, reverently, drawing forth a small golden case attached to a silk cord. "She put it on my neck when she was dying, and I have kept it hidden, looking it to me. I had promised sir I would be sacrilege to have less fond eyes than mine look upon it. Perhaps it was foolish, but it was to me as the relics of the saints." Grace, I intended to have shown it to you before, but something has prevented," he said, echoing her words.

The face in the miniature was a perfect model of Italian beauty—dark, lustrous eyes, wavy masses of raven hair, and such a mouth as Titian drew, and which he immortalized in his canvas. Grace went into ecstasies over her beauty, and then said, as she looked up in the manly face:

"You are very much like her. You have her eyes and hair, but, it seems to me, your forehead is like your's."

"Little flatterer!" he said, drawing her near him.

She strolled his hair with her little plump hand, as if she would deny the accusation.

"But you have not told me about your father."

Crossing over to the other side of the room, where he sat reading, she put it in his hands, at the same time answering:

"I suppose you are very curious to see this beautiful woman, and Benny's mother, too?"

"Yes," he said, "I do not suppose to see a female beauty as I was twenty years ago and above all the one, in question."

As he looked, his face suddenly changed. He grasped the picture, as if he would crush it.

"Is this your mother?" he said, almost fiercely. The young man, who stood regarding him with some surprise.

"Of course it is," and he would have added to any one but Grace's father-in-law, "do you mean to insult me?"

He gave back the picture to Bernardo, and then strode across the room.

They both noticed his strange actions and were at a loss how to account for them; but their minds soon wandered to more pleasant thoughts. That night they were to be married, and, of course, they had enough to talk about.

About five hours had passed when Mr. H. returned to the library. He was very much excited, his eyes were sunken, and his face deadly pale. Bernardo was the only one in the apartment; and, glancing hastily round, he went to the table and poured out a glass of boil.

"Tell Mrs Harrison I wish to see her," he said to the servant, who answered his summons.

Grace soon appeared. She looked from one gentleman to the other, as if she would ask an explanation.

"Sit down, child," her father said; "I have something to say to both of you."

Grace sat down by Bernardo, like a child flies to its mother when any danger threatens.

At length he spoke, but every word was full of agony.

"My children, I have sinned, but God knows I have repented a thousand times; and if your hearts are filled with abhorrence of what I shall tell you, think of what I have suffered these last few hours. The memory of a whole life-time seems crowded into them. I cannot ask you to forgive me. I have struggled hard to force myself to make this confession, and I have still a duty to do. It will let it go. Then the second thought would be—that would be wicked. It would transgress one of the Creator's laws; and, though the cup be bitter, I must drink it, for truly, 'The wages of sin is death.'

"Do not say anything. You know not what I shall tell you," he said, as he saw that his daughter was about to speak. Then, pressing his hands to his forehead, as if he would still its throbbings, he began his story:

"I was a rich man's son, and was humored to everything I might fancy. Being very fond of literature and the fine arts, I conceived an unconquerable desire to go to Italy—that land of such glowing accounts of its beautiful scenery, and sunny skies, also those great master-pieces of art with which it is stored. Accordingly, when I was about twenty-three years of age, I sailed. My voyage was prosperous, and I arrived in Italy in the early part of summer, just when the flowers are thickest, and the air sweetest. I visited Venice, and glided through its streets in a gondola, and rested beneath its noble old palaces, where the waves plashed lazily all day long, and the sun-send clung to the walls. But I must hurry on. I next visited Florence, Naples, and Leghorn. I finally stopped at a little village on the Arno. I needed rest and time to think over what I had seen, so I resolved to stay there awhile. I took a great amount of reading matter, for that was my favorite pastime, and settled down in a little cottage near the river.

"The days glided by very quietly, till one night—it had been a fete day—and in the evening the villagers were out dancing on the green, about a little apart watching them. As I looked, I noticed on the other side of the group of dancers, leaning against a tree, a figure in ecstasies. She was the most beautiful woman that I ever saw. Once her eyes met mine, and she dropped her long fringed lashes, till it almost rested on her cheek. She probably noticed my prolonged gaze, for she moved away, and mingled with the dancers. I waited with anxiety until the music stopped, and then I begged an introduction from my housekeeper, who stood near.

"Oh! she said, laughingly, leading the way. "Think she's pretty, do you? She's all alone with her mother on the other side of the green."

"The evening all women evidently spent my impatience. However, I obtained the desired introduction. And it was not until the dances were dispersed, and I had her at her mother's gate, with the permission of seeing her again. And well did I avail myself of that permission, for scarcely a day passed that we were not together.

"I worshiped at the shrine of her beauty. I became perfectly infatuated with her, and at last asked her hand in marriage, regardless of all consequences. I know well what the answer would be, for I saw that she loved me with all the vehemence of her nature.

"We were married; and that little church had never seen a lovelier bride. She had dressed to please me, and wore a pure white muslin robe, with a single waxen lily in the dark rich masses of her hair.

"The old man paused here, as if there was something sweet in the remembrance of that wedding, something too sacred to be dragged to light.

"The village girls envied my fair young bride, for she had married, as they said, 'the handsome foreigner.' Alas! they did not know me, they did not know how base I was. I busied myself teaching her the English language, which she soon spoke very well. But after a time I began to see that she was very unlike me in everything, and that our thoughts and tastes were widely different. She had read none of the best English books, and when I offered to read to her, she would shrug her pretty shoulders, and say, 'Yes, if you wish, but I like Dante better.' Anything surprised and grieved at my short answer, and sat down and sang him softly to sleep. I longed for some one to whom I could talk of much which I had buried myself for the last year. I was conscious that I never had loved her. I was only infatuated with her beauty, and her fascinations; the blind passion that had led me into such an unhappy alliance.

"When a person is about to do wrong, he unusually makes some excuse in his own mind for so doing. So I said to myself, I will leave her, for I really think she loves that simple peasant-boy, Giovani, who comes and talks with her over the garden wall, and when she does that she does not heart told me better, for she had not changed to me.

"One day I made some pretense of leaving on business, and left the little cottage never to return. I left enough money to keep her the rest of her life, for in that quiet village one did not need much if they had a garden.

"I reached home safely, and was received with great joy by my friends. I went to parties, and plunged into every scene of gayety. But sometimes, in my quiet hours, there would rise up in my mind the remembrance of a little cottage

At length he spoke, but every word was full of agony.

"My children, I have sinned, but God knows I have repented a thousand times; and if your hearts are filled with abhorrence of what I shall tell you, think of what I have suffered these last few hours. The memory of a whole life-time seems crowded into them. I cannot ask you to forgive me. I have struggled hard to force myself to make this confession, and I have still a duty to do. It will let it go. Then the second thought would be—that would be wicked. It would transgress one of the Creator's laws; and, though the cup be bitter, I must drink it, for truly, 'The wages of sin is death.'

"Do not say anything. You know not what I shall tell you," he said, as he saw that his daughter was about to speak. Then, pressing his hands to his forehead, as if he would still its throbbings, he began his story:

"I was a rich man's son, and was humored to everything I might fancy. Being very fond of literature and the fine arts, I conceived an unconquerable desire to go to Italy—that land of such glowing accounts of its beautiful scenery, and sunny skies, also those great master-pieces of art with which it is stored. Accordingly, when I was about twenty-three years of age, I sailed. My voyage was prosperous, and I arrived in Italy in the early part of summer, just when the flowers are thickest, and the air sweetest. I visited Venice, and glided through its streets in a gondola, and rested beneath its noble old palaces, where the waves plashed lazily all day long, and the sun-send clung to the walls. But I must hurry on. I next visited Florence, Naples, and Leghorn. I finally stopped at a little village on the Arno. I needed rest and time to think over what I had seen, so I resolved to stay there awhile. I took a great amount of reading matter, for that was my favorite pastime, and settled down in a little cottage near the river.

"The days glided by very quietly, till one night—it had been a fete day—and in the evening the villagers were out dancing on the green, about a little apart watching them. As I looked, I noticed on the other side of the group of dancers, leaning against a tree, a figure in ecstasies. She was the most beautiful woman that I ever saw. Once her eyes met mine, and she dropped her long fringed lashes, till it almost rested on her cheek. She probably noticed my prolonged gaze, for she moved away, and mingled with the dancers. I waited with anxiety until the music stopped, and then I begged an introduction from my housekeeper, who stood near.

"Oh! she said, laughingly, leading the way. "Think she's pretty, do you? She's all alone with her mother on the other side of the green."

"The evening all women evidently spent my impatience. However, I obtained the desired introduction. And it was not until the dances were dispersed, and I had her at her mother's gate, with the permission of seeing her again. And well did I avail myself of that permission, for scarcely a day passed that we were not together.

"I worshiped at the shrine of her beauty. I became perfectly infatuated with her, and at last asked her hand in marriage, regardless of all consequences. I know well what the answer would be, for I saw that she loved me with all the vehemence of her nature.

"We were married; and that little church had never seen a lovelier bride. She had dressed to please me, and wore a pure white muslin robe, with a single waxen lily in the dark rich masses of her hair.

"The old man paused here, as if there was something sweet in the remembrance of that wedding, something too sacred to be dragged to light.

"The village girls envied my fair young bride, for she had married, as they said, 'the handsome foreigner.' Alas! they did not know me, they did not know how base I was. I busied myself teaching her the English language, which she soon spoke very well. But after a time I began to see that she was very unlike me in everything, and that our thoughts and tastes were widely different. She had read none of the best English books, and when I offered to read to her, she would shrug her pretty shoulders, and say, 'Yes, if you wish, but I like Dante better.' Anything surprised and grieved at my short answer, and sat down and sang him softly to sleep. I longed for some one to whom I could talk of much which I had buried myself for the last year. I was conscious that I never had loved her. I was only infatuated with her beauty, and her fascinations; the blind passion that had led me into such an unhappy alliance.

"When a person is about to do wrong, he unusually makes some excuse in his own mind for so doing. So I said to myself, I will leave her, for I really think she loves that simple peasant-boy, Giovani, who comes and talks with her over the garden wall, and when she does that she does not heart told me better, for she had not changed to me.

"One day I made some pretense of leaving on business, and left the little cottage never to return. I left enough money to keep her the rest of her life, for in that quiet village one did not need much if they had a garden.

"I reached home safely, and was received with great joy by my friends. I went to parties, and plunged into every scene of gayety. But sometimes, in my quiet hours, there would rise up in my mind the remembrance of a little cottage under the sunny skies of Italy, and within, a lonely, solitary woman and infant boy. I had brought nothing with me to remind me of Beatrice. I had left the miniature which I always wore, one that I had painted before we were married. Thus the recollection gradually were off and ceased to haunt the entirely. I married a woman not so beautiful, but more suited for my companion through life, one who could sympathize with my thoughts."

He hesitated, as if he would fain stop there. At length he spoke:

"Bernard, dost Italian woman was your mother? The miniature which you showed me was the one I left. You two are brother and sister. Now, forgive me, if you can," he almost shrieked. "But," he continued, in a milder tone, "think God, this is my own son, whom I have loved and nurtured through these years."

The young man had risen at the latter part of the recital. Every trace of color had fled from his face, and his eyes shone like a meteor. He took a hand back into his chair again, without speaking.

"Benny," said Grace, softly, lifting her heaming eyes to his, "I will be your sister, and love you just the same."

Those gentle, loving words, touched him, and burying his face in his hands, he wept like a child.

"I have saved him," she said gently. "I was afraid he was insane, Father," she said, "but not fool. We have all sinned—some greater than others, because their temptation has been greater. Let the dead past bury its dead, and know that I, at least, forgive you."

Grace sat down on a little ottoman by the side of Bernard. He took the tiny white hand that lay in his own, and pressing it to his lips, murmured, "Little sister, tell him that I forgive him."

"My children," said the father, placing his hands on their bowed heads, "God bless you; you have made the old man's life very bright." And turning, he left the apartment.

And there they sat in the gathering shadows of that Christmas Day, two young souls who, early in life had suddenly gone out, and left only the dim dawn of a stern reality. The suns last rays stole in gently, and lipped the dark and glossy brown hair with red, and at the same time shone on the snowy satin bridal-robe lying all untouched on the bed.

Years have passed on, and people wonder why the gentleman at the brown house never got married. Every one that the world calls an old bachelor perfectly wrapped up in brother Benny. But those who know her better, see that there has been a great sacrifice, and the one whom she called brother, should have been something nearer and dearer. And in those calm gray eyes there is a look of "Passions long extinguished, and hopes Long dead and abandoned."

WHAT WE RECEIVE FROM ENGLAND.—The European Times gives the following statistics of the trade between England and the United States: The trade and navigation accounts for the month of January her show what extraordinary activity has recently prevailed in the trade of this country with the United States. The value of the total imports from, and exports to the United States of cotton piece goods, the manufacture of the United Kingdom, has been as follows: November, 1865, 3,787,695 yards; November, 1864, 1,381,404 yards; November, 1865, 2,271,552 yards. Of our linen piece goods we sent to the United States 6,995,509 yards in November, 1865; 2,900,683 yards in November, 1864; and 15,427,623 yards in November, 1865. Of our woolen cloths, 480,653 yards in November, 1865; 99,648 yards in November, 1864; 650,451 yards in November, 1865. Carpets, 220,000 yards in November, 1865; 29,726 yards in November, 1864; 491,651 yards in November, 1865. Woolen yarns, 6,136,541 yards in November, 1865; 465,679 yards in November, 1864; 8,365,784 yards in November, 1865. Of our linen, pig, and pudding, we sent to the United States, in November of the last three years, 3,621 tons, 1,119 tons, and 2,170 tons, respectively. Of our railroad iron 8,716 tons, 97 tons, and 7,111 tons, respectively. Of cutlery the value only was given—$9,417, $6,195, $21,463, in November of the three years. Printed goods of Britannia metal and papier mache, $45,290, $24,965, $59,952. The export of steel manufactures does not show so remarkable an increase. Of haberdashery our November export to the States in 1865 was $11,349, and $114,068 in 1864. Of hats and caps, $7,313, respectively. Up to the end of January the value of our produce and manufactures to the United States in bond resided only to the value of $18,846, which was a considerable increase in the corresponding month of 1865. The November exports have made the difference for the better. Happily we have no fears. Of raw cotton we imported from the United States, 46,370 cwt. in the month of January, 119,295 cwt. in the corresponding period of 1864, 483,773 cwt. in that of 1865; the last an amount fully quantity compared with any year before the war. The great decrease in our import of grain from America this year has been recently mentioned.

ANCIENT LUXURY.—The excavations at Pompeii are going on with an activity stimulated by the important discoveries made at almost every step, and the quantities of gold and silver found, which more than exhibit the cost of the works. Not far from the Street of Fate, of which an account was recently given, has just been brought to light a house, no doubt belonging to some minister of the time, as the furniture of bronze, bronze, and marble. The couches of the triclinium, or dining-room, are especially remarkable for beauty. The flooring consists of an immense mosaic, well preserved in parts, and of which the design represents a table, laid out for a grand dinner. In the middle, on a large dish, may be seen a splendid peacock, with its tail spread out, and placed back to back with another bird, also of elegant plumage. Around them are arranged various dishes, one of which holds a lobster; a crawfish, a second an oyster, which appears to be fricasseed, and is quite real; and several other dishes, pâtés, and a fourth, a small vase filled with fried grenadins, or sweet cakes; a circle of plates, also, interspersed with others of partridges, hares, and quarters, which all have their heads placed between their fore-feet. This causes a row of oranges of all forms, supported by one of eggs, lemons, figs, and lots of all kinds, the whole interspersed with drawings, which lend a charm to the whole, and give to describe. On a table of rare wood, carved and inlaid with gold, marble, agate, and lapis lazuli, were found unbroken, still containing wine, and some goblets of onyx.

The Power of Music.

OLE Bull has been laying for many months in front of Peterburg. The mine had been fully and thoroughly completed, and every one of our boys were most anxious for the grand honor of exploding it, and of rushing through its terrible breaches upon the bewildered enemy. In front of the mine little commander, General Warren (God bless him), had most earnestly implored the privilege of touching the fatal match himself, saying: "If he did not accomplish the feat of getting into the stronghold we had been so long keeping at and holding, he was willing to be cashiered, and dismissed the service." But his superior officers had different plans, and that egregious blunder was made, of sending a young officer, who quailed under the first fire, created a panic, and ran back to the trenches, like a flock of wounded crows—hundreds of them—and the opportunity was missed. However, it was a sad fiasco, and obliged us to linger out many more months of hardship, until the final coil of the "anaconda" had been made complete.

The boys were very much dejected for some time afterward, but after awhile they recovered, and pursued the even tenor of camp life in the usual way. The explosion of this immense mine, and the awful scene which it must present of a crater, and had the effect of pretty nearly stopping the reprehensible practice of "picket firing," and we may now hold our entire line unmolested. The weather had been oppressively hot during the day, but the nights (as every soldier knows) are delightful, and the air has a touch of winter in the Southern climate. It was on one of these dreamy, beautiful nights, when everything was hushed and still, and not a movable figure could be seen except a scudding cloud that now and again moodily and languidly passed across the face of the shining moon. General Grandin had passed over an hour, and while here and there a picket kept vigil, and ever and anon cast an anxious, inquiring look through the darkness, the boys had given themselves upon the earth to while away the tedious hours.

The young fellow belonging to the 25th was a great favorite with his regiment; he was thefiddler, full of wit and humor, generous to a fault, and a most melodious voice. He was shown many favors by the officers; and in the midst of his double-like stillness, not a few were startled to find "Charlie" on picket that night. But he was there, and as he poured the rich fullness of his pathetic cords he drew forth sighs and sighs of "Do they miss me at home?" many a heavy sigh was disenthralled from brave and manly breasts. Many a tear-drop touched the bronzed cheeks, and the fireside thoughts it engendered. It set us all to thinking of home and friends, of caresses and comforts. The watchful eye of the picket was dead halt in his tracks—those nearer lay motionless. Charlie himself lay on his back, looking at the floating clouds, and not a sound was heard but his welcome voice.

As he was finishing the last verse, the quick report of a musket was heard, and the boy Charlie jumped to his feet in an instant, and was confronted by a stalwart rebel. The only words he uttered were:

"By heaven! I can't kill you," and with pistol leveled, he backed away from the dumbfounded rebel until within a safe distance of his lines.

The rebels had evidently been attracted to where our pickets were, from Charlie's voice, and had crept up, by degrees, to our lines, when lucidly Charlie's voice saved him, and probably us; for as he had been discovered from his hiding-place, he seized his carbine and quickly discharged it, which brought that line of pickets to their feet in an instant. Charlie was not hurt, and escaped to seem the manœuvre, and were trying to get up in "distance," but the savage breast had been disarmed, and he let him pass.

As Charlie never went on picket after that, the boys used to call the circumstance the "Last Lay of the Minstrel."

OPENING OF THE GREAT BRIDGE OVER THE HUDSON RIVER,
At Albany, N. Y.

THE Bridge was commenced in April, 1864, and has been constructed by the "Albany Bridge Company," the officers of which are well-known in the New York Central, Hudson River, and Western (or Albany and Boston) Railroad Companies.

The expense has been borne—one-half by the New York Central, and one-quarter each by the Hudson River and Albany and Boston Railroads.

At first the intention was to build the Bridge just south of where the railroad ferry-boats cross the river, but the approaches to a bridge at that point would have involved the purchase and destruction of so much property, that the location was fixed at the foot of Lumber street, nearly half a mile north of the ferries.

The Bridge was located and the plans for it matured by George E. Sage, Chief Engineer of the New York Central Railroad, and the work progressed under his personal supervision.

Col. Julius W. Adams was then appointed Engineer, and Mr. A. Bell, Assistant Engineer and General superintendent of the Bridge Company. The Bridge proper consists of the approaches, which in themselves are quite formidable, consisting of 3 abutments and 12 piers, the total length being 2,920 feet.

The deep portion of the river, nearest the Albany side, is crossed by 4 spans of 170 feet each between the centres of the piers, on the plan known as "Howe's," and by 2 spans of 150 feet each, on "Pratt's."

The remaining 14 spans are shorter, ranging from 73 to 96 feet each. The piers are 30 feet high above low water, and are all built of heavy cut limestone masonry, laid in cement.

They have a width at the bottom of 9 feet and at the top of 6½ feet, with a coping which projects 6 inches on all sides.

The width of the masonry is ample for a double-track bridge, though the present bridge has only a single track. It is destined in a nearly day to erect a double-track iron draw and iron bridge throughout.

The draw-bridge, including the iron turntable upon which it rests, is entirely novel, planned specially for the circumstances under which it has been built and will be operated.

The present draw is of timber, giving two clear openings of 112 feet 8 inches each.

The iron turntable was built at the Boston Machine Works, and by Messrs. Hogg & Co., Albany.

It will weigh 190 tons, and in point of workmanship is entirely unprecedented in this country.

The weight on this table will be some 320 tons; yet the draw can be opened in two minutes by four men, and closed in the same time, and close the draw for steam-power.

When the double iron draw is erected, the weight on the iron turntable will be over 700 tons.

The stone was brought from the quarries at Tribes Hill, Montgomery county, N. Y. Nearly 2,000,000 feet of timber have been used in constructing the bridge, and the character of the workmanship is, beyond question, of the first order of merit.

The first locomotive, the "Augustus Schell," of the Hudson River Railroad, crossed the bridge at 3.30 P. M. on Thursday, February 15, 1866, and the first train of passenger cars, with invited guests and several guests, on the afternoon of Thursday, the 22d of February.

AN ENGLISH GENERAL OF THE OLDEN STYLE.

HAVING left my cards at the mess of the regiment to which my friend belonged, I was elected the mess-house of the Dragoons, where another expenditure of cards was incurred; then, to the mess-house of the 44th, where I was introduced to the mess-house of the native cavalry regiment. I was then admitted at the house of Brigade Surgeon Sir Dodd, C.B., who commanded the division. The General was very old, close on 80; but he was "made up" to look younger, and was about 45. His chestnut wig fitted him to perfection, and his whiskers were dyed so naturally that they retained a medium tint of color and not color. The white teeth were all false—likewise the pink color in the cheeks and the ivory hue of the face. The figure was admirably padded; it fitted him like a glove, and his patent leather boots and his gold spurs took the eye immediately to the right point.

In early life, Sir Doodle had been a rival and an acquaintance of Beau Brummell. When a colonel in the Guards, and before he had succeeded to the command of a regiment of cavalry, he had been a "swell" of the first water, and had been the friend of Brummell, and had enjoyed his intimacy. He had been a constant guest at the table-at-dinner which had swept over the district, to which he had been successively applied.

"Yes, my good sir. I knew her in the zenith of her beauty, and I assure you she was a lady paramount. Alencia's and the chief favorite of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent. Oh, yes! she is dead, I see by the last overland paper; but I don't think she was so old as they say she was—84. Only fancy, 84!"

Then shutting off the lamp, he continued:

"I see they give it out that I am to have the command of the Bombay Division. Well, I don't want Bombay, and am sorry for my friends at the Horse Guards at that a dozen times. I want the governorship of Gibraltar, or nothing else. Cape; but, by Jove, I'm not thinking upon me, I suppose I must take it. One can't always have good choice, and I fancy it is only right to oblige now and then.

"We shall be very sorry to lose you, General," said my friend, who appeared very indeed.

"So I have told his Excellency," exclaimed the General, who seemed to think my friend was now talking on an entirely different subject. "So I have told him. But he will not listen to me. He says that if he could accept such an offer as that, he would think she was not up to the duties of the command, and order the men to return to their quarters. I can't tell anybody the original reading for the court says, and I say, that a rival who has received a blow from a friend, and is relieved fire at and wounds a sergeant, cannot properly be considered to have committed a breach of discipline, I helped, I suppose. The fact is, the commander-in-chief is a civilian, and he has no idea, and he is always very obstinate and self-willed." And the General continued, "Now, I am very anxious to go to Bombay, for India, we want men who are not above listening to the opinions of others, and who are not by whims always surrounded!"

Before we were leaving the General, he mistook me for my friend, and my friend for me, and respectively addressed me as Captain Jones, and my friend as Captain Smith, and he was too vain to ever glasses. He was very kind to Jones, and very civil to me. I liked him, and assured my friend that it would afford him the greatest pleasure in the world if the acquaintance, that day made, should ripen into friendship.

"If he is appointed to Bombay, when we were driving away from the General's door,

"I shall not be there before the last or seven years," was the reply.

"You must be laboring under some delusion with respect to being appointed to the command-in-chief of the Bombay Division."

"Nothing of the kind. He is certain of it. He will go to Bombay, and I shall not see him for over, I should say, seven years."

The General went to Bombay, where he played such fantastic tricks before high heaven, that the angels could not have "wept" at them, and they would have done so, only they be instilled on the officers of the regiments buttoning their coats, and jackets up to the throat, to prevent the tears of the fiend! He would have nothing unmilitary in his dress. Always in full uniform, under the hot sun, and always indulged with the sheets, you bottle the rebel! The General's almost daily joke was to ask something from me.

I also heard the General say that Bleacher, having seen every thing in the country, was about to write his memoirs; "Give me Lodgate Hill!" and on being asked to explain, he said that he would write a book for young fowlers' and sirwormins' shops which, in that day would be the best seller.

"Mem Golly! What pillage!"

MR. JEFFERSON'S great height and slender figure excused him to such extents from the ungainly. His contretemps with them was "Long Tom;" and when his famous project of the substitution of quahoggs in place of a navy, was adopted by Congress, and the cheapness of the quahoggs was discovered, the disproportionately large, with such ill-constructed craft was pardoned, ridiculed, in contempt, the name of a "Long Jean."

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

PADDY was asked: "Which is the most successful railway?"

He replied: "Sure, the real way to success."

"IF he never took too late to mend," as the old lady said, when she sat up until 2 P.M. to darn her husband's stockings.

A PERSON, who was told that bone-dust was used to cause unscrupulous bakers, remarked: "That's bred in the bone can't be helped; but bone in the baker's dust is quite another."

A GOODNATURED fellow, who was nearly eaten out of house and home by the visits of his numerous relations, said, one day complainingly of his numerous visitors.

"Never, and I'll tell you how to get rid of 'em," said an Irishman.

"How?" cried he.

"Find money to the poor ones, and borrow money of the rich ones, and neither sort will ever trouble ye again."

JOHNNY is just beginning to learn geography. He went home from his first quarterly report in high glee and parley at the other. He knows it is so, because they told him so at the time.

He has found out something else, too. Somebody told him that geography set him right every day. He knows a little bird, not so big as a pigeon, that takes a drink at every mouthful.

A HAND-UP portrait-painter complains that there is no chance for his craft, now that the sun is made to paint pictures. He says, however, that others may praise the invention of sun-pictures, he considers it as decidedly knocking the bottom falling. It is, in fact, he declares, the fac-tographic art!

IF your mother's sister were to run away and get married against the wish of your mother, what is suggested by such an act? Adjut-slopes, we suppose.

THE Petersburg (Va.) Index says a young person was found by the police in the streets. Miss Lincum had done kept his freedom. It's jes like Confederate money—more you got on it, the less 'count it is."

A LOCOMOTIVE on a Western railroad has been painted with the title, "Limited," to distinguish it from many of the passengers can say at the end of their journey.

ONE images of modern slang words turn up in unexpected quarters sometimes. Most of us think that the word fun, in the sense of very, extremely, is of recent date; but in a serious theological work of 200 years ago—"Calamy's Continuation of the Old and New Testament," (London, 1676-77)—we read: "At which they spent at least seventy pounds in fun." Indeed!

We have heard the same phrase, from a schoolboy's pocket-money, applied to pounds and sixpences.

A MAN, who was carried home from a Burns's supper, the other night, on a shutter, was said to be "knocked up by Burns," in response to an anxious enquiry from his wife.

THE Child question—"How is your cold?"

THE song of the billiard ball—"Oh, carom me back, pa!"

AN illiterate old lady residing in the vicinity of Cape Cod, desiring to dispose of her cottage, posted down a placard which attracted the notice of a land shark, who came to the house and on the door knocked. The lady put a bright face on. "Is he quite ready saleable?"

"Yes, marm, when will this house sell?"

"As soon as somebody comes along that can raise the cash," was the prompt reply.

AN old Methodist, very great at responses, which were not always appropriate, but always well meant, went one day to hear a popular preacher. The preacher, warmly heated, was rather perplexed, and felt at a loss, when he came to the words "Let us pray," when "Brethren, I have reached the conclusion of my first head."

"Thank God!" ejaculated the old man, who sat behind him, and was so much relieved that he never once heard in every part of the old church. The last part of that sermon was thought to preach than the rest.

A GENTLEMAN, observing the boy in the Empire land, recently, blurted out:

"My lad, I never cared for anything but women and horses."

Mr. Jenkins quietly replied: "Then I advise you to get one and keep your wife, and you have made it, put a collar to it, and resort your exercise, and you will have no need, by-and-by, to consult a doctor for your health, whenever happens, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you have done your duty to your wife and constantly in contact with what, in life, were the dearest objects of your affections."

A STRANGER, of a newspaper out West, in the first issue of his journal, returns thanks to those who helped him find a printing office, and concludes by hoping that there is no law in that State enforcing imprisonment for debt.

THERE is no end to the stories about Dean Swift. One of the best things of his was, when a leg of mutton was brought to table, he would take the dish, ringing the bell, and directing the cook to take it away "and bring it back." The mingled fun and absurdity was admirable.

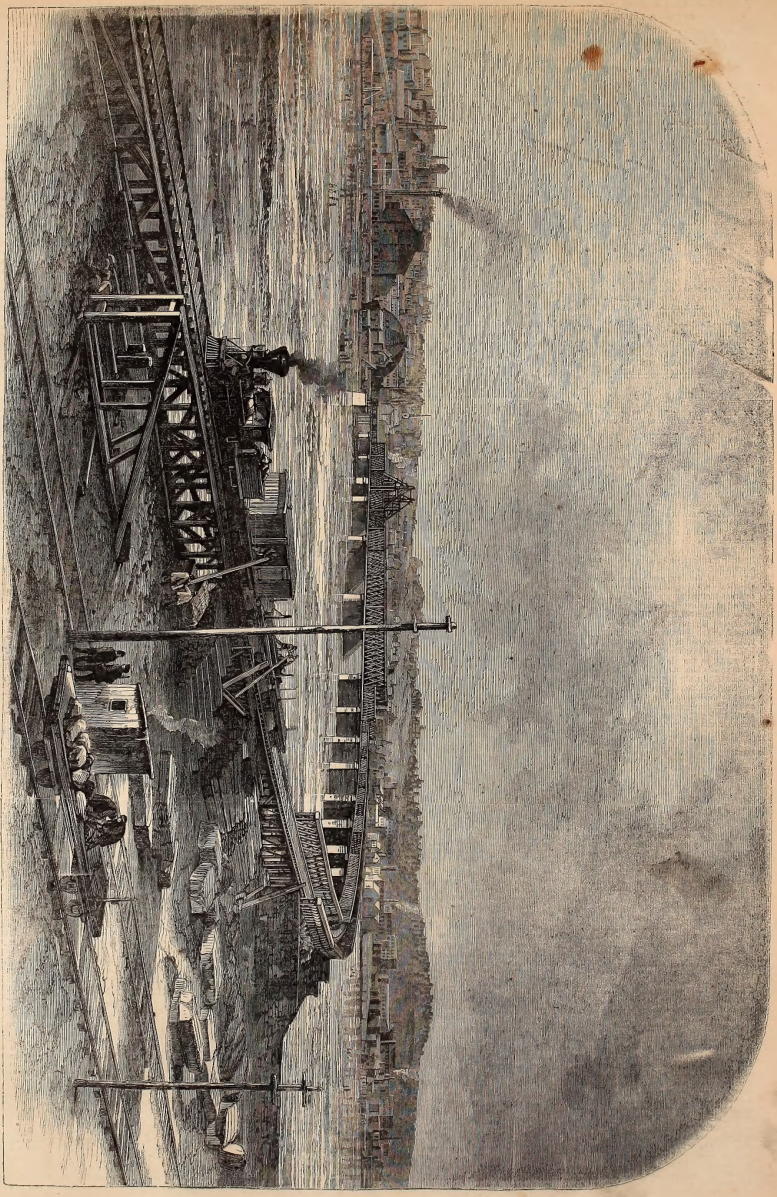
A STORY is told of a Federal soldier and a rebel chaplain. The latter was expressing his

"Can you inform me what is the state of your soul?"

Said the soldier, promptly:

"Oh, so many with the conundrums," groaned the chaplain. "I'll not waste my time on you."

WHY are young ladies like arrows? Because they never go out without a bow (beau), and they are very apt to be kept to the mark.



IT is said that a Yankee baker has invented a new kind of yeast, which makes bread so light that a piece of it blew off the other night.

A WRITER in a Medical Gazette gives the following neat explanation of the phenomenon of a boy's nose bleeding: "Immediately after the fall, excited ganglion; the latter, by undue action through the brain and nerves, causes the blood to flow from the nose, with which its branches communicate." The explanation is very satisfactory, but we should like a few reasons, "anything reticulated or dissimulated or equal diseases, with interlacings between the intersections."

TROPICAL NOTIONS.—Sir John Bowring was once asked to explain the cause of the cold in the first time in Java. "The people," he said, "looked at it as the heat of the sun at first time they would see it, but they soon similar masses of crystal. They touched it; the people knew it was ice. Then the ice was experienced, and the novel sensation filled them with awe and apprehension. But when it dissolved in their hands they fancied they had unknowingly worked a miracle, and that some demon must have been at the bottom of the mystery. Descriptions of snow, frost, ice and water scenery have a singular attraction to the inhabitants of the hot regions. These are to them the very romance of nature. In my travels in the interior of Java I met with a most accomplished lady, who was burning with a desire, since to be gratified, of visiting Europe. 'And now tell me, of all you hope to see, from what do you expect to receive the greatest pleasure?' 'Oh,' she answered, 'a forest without leaves!'"

GRAND FANCY DRESS BALL AT MINOT'S HALL, BOSTON, MASS., ON THE EVENING OF FEB. 27TH, 1866.—FROM A SKETCH BY ROBERT D. WELCH.

OPENING OF THE NEW RAILROAD BRIDGE OVER THE HUDSON RIVER, AT ALBANY, N. Y., FEB. 22ND, 1866.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY A. S. HOUGHTY.

THE SOLDIER'S DREAM OF HOME.

BY HENRY E. EARLE.

Sprawling on the ground by the bright camp-fire,
The weary soldiers' sleeping;
While with watchful eye and steady tramp,
On his beat, in the midnight cold and damp,
The sentry, guard is keeping.

The night-dew falls on his manly cheek,
As seen by the ember's glow;
And the stars from their home of light on high,
Look down with loving, pitying eye,
On the sleeper who lies below.

As he sleeps, he dreams of his cottage home,
In the valley by the stream,
And a vision of beauty, wondrous fair,
With azure eyes and golden hair,
Floats through the soldier's dream.

Will it ever return to that home again?—
Shall he ever see her more,
Who with womanly pride in the soldier brave,
Her love to God and his Country gave
"Till the cruel war is o'er?

* * * * * * *

The soldier woke to a day of toil,
Of fierce, inhuman strife.
But with eye of fire, and arm of steel,
Like a hero he fought for his country's weal,
And gave to her his life.

Once more he sleeps—'tis the sleep of death—
In the twilight cold and grey;
No more will he heed the bugle's sound,
For his body lies in the "cold, cold ground,"
And his spirit has passed away.

Bound to the Wheel.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GUY VATERMAN'S MAZE," "REUDEN'S WAD," ETC.

CHAPTER LXXIII.—TACTICS.

THE confidence Clarissa felt as to the acquittal of Anthony, after she had secured the aid of Phillis, was only partially shared by the acute Mr. Stamp. At the first glance of a narrative Clarissa laid before him, and which was founded word for word on Phillis's own statements, or on her answers to questions put to her, he was inclined to think and to say: "Our client is safe!"

But when she heard that by no art or entreaty could Phillis be persuaded to sign this document, and that she also resolutely declined to see him, Anthony's adviser, or to do anything more to marshal facts in Clarissa's favor, no one else was present, he began to have misgivings that there was far more striking in Phillis's manner than or desire that might yet wreck them all, if they did not exert themselves in every possible way to guard her from being interfered with, and to bring other and corroborative testimony that would compel her to speak the whole truth when she got into the witness-box.

Mr. Stamp saw that Sleuth, if inclined to use his power to the utmost, had advantages that would enable him to press with fearful power on Anthony. As the lawyer moved about in the neighborhood, not a day passed that did not bring home to him the evidence of Sleuth's popularity and of the wide-spread prejudice against his own client, arising from the discovery of the codicil. In fact, it was Anthony's evil character and conduct that were attributed generally to Sleuth; and Sleuth's character and doings that were, in popular notions, fastened with horrible odium on Anthony.

Part of this was no doubt owing to the general ignorance and misapprehension of the face, but part, also, to Sleuth's own personal behavior during the five eventful weeks that passed before the trial. Not one conceivable thing did the gentleman leave undone that could add, or promise to add, in the faintest degree to his popularity. His dinner parties were more frequent, more select, and more costly than ever before; and yet each of them was so managed that it seemed to be with no choice but to give it—that he was but obeying the exigencies of his social position, and, therefore, that he in fact did not entertain his friends or expressed reluctance to be thus engaged while his cousin was in such danger.

Local and metropolitan charities about this period saw in their list of benefactions quite brilliant-looking contributions from Richard Sleuth, Esq.; and, only seemingly, he answered all applications made to him as usual, but as if with a spirit more attuned to sympathy with misfortune, through his own domestic troubles, than he had previously experienced.

Large schemes for the erection of cottages on his estates, that had been slumbering, were given a sudden wakefulness and activity at this most fruitful period, and helped to diffuse among the working and laboring classes an enthusiastic belief that he, their benefactor, and, as they chose to think him, by birth almost one of themselves, would come out of the trial unimpeached.

And then, lastly, it was remarkable how often Sleuth had, of late, found occasion to make purchases, and these to no inconsiderable amount, in the shops of the publishers of the two chief county newspapers. Never once did he attempt to negotiate talk about the trial, but these visits always ended in his getting just that precise thing and in the forthcoming issue of the paper which it was most pleasant for him to have said, not because of any conscious bias on the part of the said gentlemen, but simply because they were interested in catering for the public on so interesting a topic, and they did not know, no he knew, how much was involved frequently in the most seemingly artless statement of an apparently insignificant fact. Or if he did bias them, it was only by making them believe honestly what it was so desirable for him they should believe, while leaving them unconscious that he had had anything to do with the matter.

It was while these things were pressing somewhat unpleasantly on Mr. Stamp's mind one morning, after reading a most annoying paragraph in the Hengston Gazette, that he had a brief interview with his chief clerk—the only one he had had at Clarissa's service; and as it reflects what was doing up to the very eve of the trial, we here reflect—

"Well?" said the lawyer, as he closely scanned his subordinate's face.

"Narrow escape, sir.

"We have escaped? Good. Push along."

"That butler of Mr. Sleuth's must have got a commission something like my own, sir.

"No doubt of that. Take it for granted."

"He's always hovering about outside the house, or in the adjoining lane, and once I caught him in the garden."

"What did you do?"

"Shouted at him to stop, as if he were an intruder or a thief."

"And did he stop?"

"He very fair indeed, sir, as if he were fancying I did not know him."

A grim smile passed over the lawyer's face.

"Well—but now?"

Mr. Gooden took a minute piece of paper from his pocket-book, and laid it before Mr. Stamp, doing his best to hold it open and stretch out the folds and wrinkles, so that it might be read. The lawyer saw written there in pencil—

"DEAREST PHILLIS—This is cruel of you not to seek me, to let me share the joy of your recovery, and to tell you how I propose to repair the past. Give me, I conjure you, an opportunity to see you—to speak to you—to feel your dear hand to look in your face, and to say, what I have said before, but never with so much feeling and truth as now. Your hand, by its cruel kindness, taught me what I needed to know—the knowledge of my own heart; and that heart is a better knowledge of yours. I cannot tell how this will reach you. My cruel position puts as regards Mr. Sleuth, forbids my making any public attempt to see or communicate with you. But you will be mine yet. Will and mention—tell you so—to have a word with me—one that may seriously affect our happiness in the future."

"Has she seen this?" asked the lawyer, with the nearest approach to excitement he had yet exhibited.

"She has. It was thrown from the garden into the window, during the two minutes I was off my guard, making a hasty communication to my family at home. Miss Pompess, fortunately, was deaf,—in fact, she and I have an understanding on that point,—and therefore she let both writ from the business of watching at the same time. She and Phillis came to unpleasantness about the paper; but the latter succeeded in getting both when reading it, and then by forwarding it to you before any answer was given."

"Good, Mr. Gooden. You had better not leave again, night or day, for any contingency whatever that does not, as this does, threaten life. Gooden, I have great reliance on you. I am sure you won't fail me; but if you did——"

"I will not, sir. I feel too much interested myself in the whole affair, sir, not to. This seems so important, I thought you would like to see me."

When he had gone, the lawyer recovered his measured gravity, and he was deeply engaged thoroughly he felt the force of the blow Sleuth had here struck at their strongest and most indispensable point.

He began to write;

"RICHARD SLEUTH, ESQ., J. P.:

"Sir—Your butler (whose name I have forgotten) has been forwarded to me by Miss Coyngham, and, although I have not yet received instructions to write from her, I beg to assure you, in my own name, that, apart from Mr. Maude's affairs, we shall be most happy to facilitate the interview you desire. We are aware—and I venture to include your niece in that word—that an interview of importance between yourself and Miss Coyngham would be liable to grave misconstruction were it to take place in the presence of some one in whom you would both have confidence, as regards secrecy, and willing to hear and say talk about your private affairs; and in whom we should have confidence that the interview would be kept secret, and that no false and unjust or injurious imputations against either you or Mr. Maude——

"Have I the good fortune to express views that meet your own approbation? If so, I shall be glad to mention the names of any lady or gentleman who might be present."

"Would Miss Pompess, in your view, be a suitable person?"

The lawyer could not help a certain rich smile passing over his features as he wrote and read a second time the concluding question; for he had heard enough from Miss Pompess of her womanly reticences, to know how Sleuth must receive the proposition to make love to Phillis in Clarissa's presence.

CHAPTER LXXIV.—OPPOSING CAMPS.

IT is the morning of the day of trial, but at the first glance of the court-house, and of the busy scene around it, one would not suppose the fate of Anthony Maude engaged anybody's attention. It is market-day, and the bustle is, as usual, very great, and it is not easy to tread one's way between the crowds outside and the broad display of earthenware upon the ground, or the hen-coops filled with cackling poultry, or the masses of potted meat and cheese, or the stalls of Mr. Sleuth Jack, who is amusing the youthful rustics from the country with his not-over-delicate jokes.

But when you do mingle among the people, and stop near any group that you see engaged in close discussion, you find that the trial and the question of Anthony's guilt or innocence, and his cousin's (Mr. Sleuth) character and behavior, are there breaking in every instant on the routine of business; and showing that though the minds of men are to some extent beat on their own affairs, their hearts are with the people concerned in the great trial.

There are two large hotels in Hengston, and these, of course, on market-days and assize-days, are great centres of attraction. But now there is no getting in or out of the crowded gateways without a push; for Dr. Hennessy has taken possession of a couple of the principal up-stair rooms in the one, as a waiting-place for himself, Mr. Stamp, and Anthony's friends; while Sleuth has, at the other, done the same thing for himself, Mr. Rollings, and persons engaged in the prosecution.

Although done on both sides merely for the convenience of being close to the court-house, the effect was considered by the contending two camps as when election committees hang out their flags in times of parliamentary contest. The one friendly or adverse to Anthony, gathered round the temporary headquarters of his friends, as the Sleuth adherents hung about his place; though there was a cordial interchange between the two—the men who had got well up on all that was to be said on the one side going to the enemy's camp to repeat what they had heard, and note what could be said in answer. These philosophical persons, however, continually got into hot water, and caused little bubbles of street-fight to be seen coming to the surface as the crowd opened to make a circle round the combatants.

Suddenly there is heard the first faint, distant notes of a trumpet, and all business stops, and all eyes and ears become alive to the Long Fitton rush, to prepare for the entrance of the judge.

The clear, thrilling trumpet-notes gradually merge into the loud roll of the drum, and the swelling, rich sounds of a military band; and then come the advance guard—some scores of ragged rascals, with circles and cartwheels of hoops, and an affectation of being a legitimate part of the procession by marching abreast, and beating time to the sounds of instruments, including the huge, popular marrow-bones and cleavers.

Then come the javelin men in their showy liveries, and some scores of regular accompaniment of a judge's entry into an assize town; queer, broken-down old men most of them are, whose antecedents and loveless morrows form a strange commentary on their semi-martial bearing and gaudy dress.

These are followed by a great number of gentlemen on horseback, and then by the high sheriff's magnificent equipage, in which, with the sheriff himself, sits the judge's chaplain, the judge. He seems inclined to repay the attention he excites, for his sharply-cut, intelligent features every now and then appear at the window just for a moment, and then there is probably a smile as he turns to his two companions, and a word or two is exchanged. Then the sheriff has been allowed for this once to accompany the judge; the idea of the interest of the trial having extended to the judge's breast.

During the excitement of the judge's progress to the court-house, but occasionally there are observations were taking place—the chant the "Fox and Grapes," the other at the "Rising Sun."

The "Fox and Grapes" and Gregory, now crowded with people, looks out into a dirty little back-yard, opening from the great stable-yard, and is approached through a gig factory into it during the present pressure upon space. It so happens that there is behind that gig just room to the judge's horses to stand, and he free the while from any observation.

His advantages have not been overlooked. Bob has been there for hours, and there he will be. He calls a "promising sort of way," that is, one went before the other; and while one went round the stable, which was the side next the yard, the other went direct from the "tap" and round by the tail of the gig. Once met, they lost no time.

"Here's a go!" he exclaimed the butler.

"In the middle on 'em all—up-stairs—great big room with gilt pillars."

"Bob," said the other, in a queer for you getting the thousand pounds reward."

"Common about that," said Bob; but his face showed that he fully realized the situation of butler's alarm.

"If he gets to her," continued the butler, "but for two minutes, unobserved, all's right; if not, all's wrong. That's my notion of things."

"And I'm not responsible to do it unbeknown?" demanded Bob, sullenly.

"Then it must be done, if necessary, in the very presence of the judge—or even when they are bringing her to the court," replied the butler.

"Will that do?" queried Bob.

"It's risky work, I can't tell. Don't humbug yourself, Bob. Mark my words, it'll all turn on a certain gentleman seeing a certain lady; and I'm certain in my own conscience that they must me—how me personally so well that I can do no good myself by hanging about her. Besides, if I was to be seen with him, or near him as his servant, going in and out so as to seem merely waiting upon him occasionally, he may be unable to have that chance for days or eight we'ks, when minutes and yards may be matters of life and death—meaning to you, Bob, you know, a thousand pounds reward."

"I see all that plain enough."

"Well, if you can find a chance, run to me. I'll never be off the watch for you, and I'll put him out of the court somehow. If you can't do this, then take care that, at the very instant you see them moving to take her to the court, get to me, and—"

"All right. Let me cut out of this first

* * * * * * *

"A little longer, a few hours more only, and your great trial, Phillis, will be over, and you will have your life through the heartfelt satisfaction of innocent blood, and made me your grateful, your true friend!"

So speaks Clarissa to Phillis, in the bed-room to which they have withdrawn from the magnificent apartment with the gilt pillars of which Bob spoke, and where Clarissa saw that the sight of the people in the market-place, and of the judge's procession, was either again unsettling her brain or stirring thoughts that did not, she feared, point to Anthony's welfare.

Phillis murmured in a vacant sort of way, "Yes—yes—yes!" each repetition growing fainter. Then Clarissa saw that the awful terror of the observation of that most watchful lady-jailer, and as she did so there ran over it, in strange and vivid succession, aspects of terror, suspicion, and sullen anger, that showed how little so harmony was to be expected from Clarissa's words.

While thus moving away in order to conceal the sense of relief she felt she must obtain by even a momentary expression of her true feelings, she saw at the end of the room and high wall opposite, a hand draw aside the low muslin blind to the right and above the latter only visible and make a movement so quick and peculiar before it was withdrawn, that Phillis said, instinctively:

"That is meant for me!"

Instantly she turned to Clarissa, who was then reading a letter that had arrived by the morning's post at Eddington, and been sent on here. Fortunate! She had not then noticed Phillis's intent look out.

"It is very close here," she said, after a pause.

"Yes," said Clarissa, raising her head from the letter—for she was keenly alive to the question of Phillis's health, and the danger of a relapse before her testimony might be given. She got up, walked to the window, saw it looked into a little garden, and immediately closed it. In this, that the window opposite was quite out of reach; so she said:

"I think we might as well have the window open."

So saying, she raised the sash, and a breeze came in, fresh and odorous from the field which they could see, covered with flowers and sunshine the left, in the distance.

"How refreshing! how sweet!" exclaimed Clarissa, with a sigh of relief. She seemed to feel the sweetness was for her, and of sympathetic expression, and she kindred with her and Anthony, in this fearful time.

"It is very refreshing," responded Phillis, but in a tone curiously unlike Clarissa's.

She then began to walk about, rather avoiding the side of the window, and expended a look to her easy chair by the bed-corner, and to the perusal of her long letter from a female friend, containing four pages of closely-written news, crossed and re-crossed. Even rich people in those days did not care to pay for double letters when a single sheet, as this did, covered them. The letter was about herself and Anthony, and full of comforting and wise things.

Phillis's walk was the hand again, and was made certain it was signaling, though with extreme caution, to her. Presently she saw there was something in the hand. She dared not see more till she had another walk.

Again returning, she found the window opposite had been opened, and a newly-printed book was in admirable pantomime—nature's own—

"Quick! quick!"

A little heart struck against her breast, was caught without falling, and then Phillis walked away to meet Clarissa, feeling her heart bound with a new and strange joy and violence. Clarissa came back, not having been away more than half a minute, she saw how ill and agitated the "prisoner on parole" looked.

"Are you ill?"

"I can't rest; everything agitates me so."

Clarissa put her arms round her, drew her head to her loving breast, and said:

"It is all for you, I am sure, dear. I think we won't go back to the great room, there's so many people in it. Would you like a little refreshment?"

"Yes; but it seems so strange to have it here."

Clarissa saw, she thought, a certain resentment in Phillis's tone, and the poor prisoner's pale face looked a little too strongly. Sympathizing with that feeling, and trying, at least, to save Phillis's position from any appearance of offense, she said:

"I'll go into the other room and get something, as if for myself, then bring it here, and we'll make out the wine. Should you like that?"

"Yes."

Again Phillis got a moment of solitude to unroll her little hand-written paper. It was a piece of paper wrapped round a penny-piece. With her back turned toward the door, but jealously guarding against Clarissa's sudden return, Phillis read, in a hand that she felt still so dear to her, that the poor, foolish woman actually kissed it, and even wept over it, shook as she was with her personal—but then she had seen a part of it, and divined all!

Why, my own dear, ever-to-be-cherished wife—cannot intend to make scandal of the pure scrpes of him whom she loves—he is sure of it—and whom she loves dearly, and now only. The special license is ready. Take any friend with you give notice, when we meet, to summon us to church; but do not let my wrong-doing as regards you be made the subject of gossip at all the fire-sides of the country—gossip which we cannot evade if you appear in the court.

With my wife, I care not where I go, or what I do! But she will not ask me before marriage, to let her be the instrument of injury to my character and position.

I will take care you shall get this. I will take care you shall not come into court without first seeing me, to take my fate from your hands—for what is the future to me if I lose you? But if, dearest, you could contrive to meet me before then, not to wait till the time could be so tediously filled up, and in any way, the man who gives you this.

Phillis was about to read the paper a second time, but heard Clarissa approaching, so thrust it into her bosom, and waited eagerly for the refreshments, while she felt now she could take, while she pondered over the contents of this all-important paper.

Why had Stouth delayed so long to force his way, even publicly, to Phillis? We can only answer by one word—Clarissa. It was she who was in his path. Stouth had thought it vital to have to compromise with her, to avoid showing her him to compromise with her, to avoid showing her him to whom could be placed on his receipt per testation of love; but though he had no longer hope of winning her, he still held to a sense of belief that he would be more interesting in her eyes as a rejected but devoted lover than he could be if he had to speak to Phillis in Clarissa's presence. And in addition to all this, he had the quite hope of getting her secretly of Phillis before the day of trial, and it was only on the failure of that hope that he had entrusted to the butler the dangerous piece of paper that Phillis thus received.

* * * * *

Phillis has yet another opportunity afforded to her. There is a stir in the adjoining room—numerous feet begin to descend the staircase. Mrs. Clarissa's voice in the moment had come for the departure to the court.

She and Phillis are to be left behind—so it has been decided by Mr. Stamp. But suddenly there comes over Clarissa a rush of tumultuous emotion, that compels her, before she knows what she is doing, to hurry out, arrest the departing lawyer, and say to him:

"I cannot go, it is impossible—I cannot stay here, and lie there and not seeing me, and I ignorant of all that is befalling him. Quick! Some other plan. I shall, even, in my anxiety, forget her."

"Ah, that, indeed!" eagerly assented the lawyer, seeing in such the full force of her compassion when she touched on that theme. "Very well. Perhaps you are right. Gadden, then, shall stay, and bring her at the last moment, when I send him a message."

"And yet," faltered Clarissa, beginning then vaguely to fear the arrangement dangerous, as Mr. Gadden could not exercise the peculiar control over Phillis that she had found so necessary.

"I think you are right," said Mr. Stamp. "He will prevent her being tampered with secretly, and stick to her like a leech, and that is all we need try for now. We cannot not delay."

Clarissa ran back, kissed Phillis, told her what had been settled, and said a few words, of which the chief were:

"You make it your pride never to deceive those who trusted you. Have I not trusted you?"

"Yes—yes," hoarsely answered Phillis, and with a wild air of distraction as her gestures.

"Then trust me. I trust you. Stanton me, and these dear to me, after that, if you can. Good-by, for a little while. Phillis, dearest, I trust you!"

"Stop!" Phillis cried; but even as the word was uttered, repented of it, and added: "No—it must be so. I will—"

"What?"

"Nothing."

Then Clarissa left her in Gadden's care, and the whole party from the great room were presently heard descending.

Mr. Gadden's first operation was to go to the window, shut it down, as it happened to be open, and take a suspicious look at that other window opposite. Good heavens! He did not even suspect that during Clarissa's last absence Phillis had sent back the penny-piece with a scrap of paper bearing her brief farewell:

"As you say. If not before—HERE."

CHAPTER LXXV.—THE TRIAL.

THE court-house of Hengston is filled with two things that do not quite harmoniously agree—a vast crowd of people, sweltering in the midsummer heat, and a flood of the most brilliant sunshine, that glorifies every bit of architectural projection in the place, but makes sad havoc of the color and expression of the human face. This is remarkable, indeed, that this is almost the only thing in creation which does not seem beautified by the sun. Every young, under the blandest rays, show signs of approaching age—age becomes ugly—the beauty of woman seems to vanish in an instant, without a preliminary enjoyment of it by its owner which even the cruelest satirists cannot deny.

The Judge is on the bench, his boy not far from him, preserving a most judicious aspect of manly seriousness. On his left sits a magistrate next this boy, beyond him, on the Judge's right; while Mr. Macguire occupies a corresponding position on the left, having on his right Solicitor Norman and the Judge. Other magistrates fill up the bench.

Exactly opposite the bench, at the far end of the court, is a gallery for the general public; and it promises to be a noisy public, for the usher is continually calling to it, "Silence! silence!"

On the Judge's left hand, but advanced into the court, is the jury-box; and not far from the jury-box, near the centre, in the dock, yet vacant, though hundreds of eyes seem as it were eagerly ready to demand, "Where is he coming?" Close by is the witness-box, also, as yet, vacant.

On the Judge's extreme right, opposite the jury-box, is a corresponding box, where sits the majestic-looking, but melancholy and troubled Dr. Pompion, with a veiled lady by his side, about whom constant whisperscurrsicate in the court. That is Clarissa. She has with her two friends or relations, who have come from a distance, at the doctor's request, to be with her. Mr. Harris and Esau sit behind these—the former shrinking into a corner, the latter eying, with a bold look, every face in the court that at all strikes him, but never meeting the eye of the Judge's, as if there were concentrated all Esau's hopes and fears.

Lastly, low down in the body of the court, very huge enclosure holds the members of the bar, including the senior and junior counsel for the prisoner and for the prosecution, the latter counsel listening, with evening interest, to the occasional remarks of the two attorneys, Mr. Stamp and Mr. Hollins, while the former speak fully to the Judge, the jury—not noticing, apparently, Sloath's unobtrusive inclination of his head. Just does not answer that. He bows, also, with a smile on his face, to the doctor and that lady in black, who has, with an indecent curiosity, turned round to look at him, and is gazing at him, with her whole heart and soul and fully revealed on her noble features, that she has no mind of the words she utters to speak, for Anthony knows all, and feels master of fate. Just one terrible moment of chose after that very, perhaps, he guessing how he stood—a little, as if blinking, or uttering an inward prayer, but then he rises erect, his tall form standing out commandingly and charming almost, by the mere expression of manly dignity, the prejudices of many of the spectators. Again Sloath, when he opens his eyes, has his head at slightly that it might mean little or nothing to all but the prisoner. Anthony answered it this time, for an obedient nod, and then all was quiet.

The challenging of one of the jurymen by Anthony's counsel, Sir Norman Luke, brought out the first indication of being very excited in the neighborhood. The juryman answered unwillingly; but ultimately confessed he had once said, before he had any idea of being called upon, that he thought hanging was not good enough for that fellow Stoudo. Of course, he was at once set aside, and the Judge, addressing the jury, pointed out, in a few forcible words, the impropriety of any man sitting there who had any strong preconceived ideas of guilt or innocence. If he entertained more such persons, they would best satisfy their own conscience and the solemn interests of justice by not sitting to do that duty. Then the pleading out at once, like honest men. Two of the jury rose at once, and confessed they, too, had expressed opinions, but not in a positive manner, as the gentleman who had gone out—but—

"Gentlemen," interrupted the Judge, "we expect no impossibilities. It is for you, listen to the evidence you are about to hear, and judge only from that? If you can, his Majesty desires no more of you. Please, and I beg you to sit down again; if you cannot—"

The two jurymen sat down. A third was added in place of the one excluded, and the proceedings began.

We shall not tell the story twice over—first, because, however, we have followed them through the witnesses. The counsel, Mr. Martin, did his work skillfully. He sketched out the broad features of the case, dwelt with touching unkindly against the prisoner, and ended with a personal disclaimer of hostile feeling—evidently with the object of winning the opinion of Sloath's feelings and views—and with the hope that, though in the interests of justice this trial had been commenced, it would be the last heard of, of whatever of mystery hung about the affair, and in the reinstatement of Mr. Maude in the good opinion of his friends and neighbors.

"Not of his friends!" exclaimed some bursting and enthusiastic spirit in the gallery. "They know he is innocent!"

"Silence! silence in the court!"

"Have that person removed," said the Judge.

The person, however, was hushed by those around him, and, after some commotion, the business went on. It was noticeable, when men were opposite the witness-box, Mr. Martin's opening address, that though he had been so reticent and respectful, he had managed to suggest, by the cautious-worded but strong statement of his facts, a more serious view than had ever before been presented of Anthony's position. Anthony himself watched Mr. Martin during every word, as if curious to see how an innocent man's case might present itself to the acute and practiced mind of the prosecutor; but if this was his thought at the beginning, it was not so at the end, when he found drops of cold sweat on his face, and a sort of surge growing over him, while he, in an instinct of self-preservation, seemed half ready to rise.

Up, man, and confront your enemies. This is not the case that even your worst fears presented to you. You would not seriously believe it, but the fact is almost as bad.

His attention was drawn away from himself by a demand from Sir Norman Luke that all the witnesses should be ordered out of court. This being done, so far as regards the particular people of whom the counsel on either side were afraid, there was a call for

"Gilbert Dean!"

This was the doctor who, in company with Mr. Stamp, had seen the old man, and given him up, not long before his death, and then had been sent for, to make an examination after—and who had deposed that, beyond all question, the already dying man had not died in the course of nature, but been killed by a bullet, which he produced in court, as taken from his head.

"Esau Stonor!"

In his impatience to answer the demand, Esau seemed inclined at first to jump or to climb over all intervening obstacles, and make by the shortest route to the witness-box, and there was a laugh. But Esau himself stood a few seconds later in the witness-box, facing the Judge, and as imperturbably cool as even the great man himself.

He narrated his discovery of the burglars in the garden, his giving warning to the housekeeper and Phillis, and his subsequent discovery of the empty pistol and of the smoke from it. Mr. Martin managed to bring out into strong prominence the discovery of the smoke from, but happening to turn round to the gentlemen around him, while he waited for the one effect of a hit, he saw Mr. Stamp handling significantly a bulky bag, and thought it did not match his opponent. It a good deal unsettled the effect of his artifice on Sloath's mind, whose soul shrunk within him as he contemplated the danger of the probable contents of that bag—the light coat—being produced in the court while Phillis should be by to explain.

Esau himself had—though a witness for the prosecution—been carefully warned by Mr. Stamp not to volunteer explanations in his anxiety for the prisoner. He had, therefore, hoped his examination was over; and so unwilling were such rules to complicate matters unnecessarily, that probably nothing more would have been said, but for a seemingly accidental question by the Judge.

"What time was it by the garden that night?"

Esau's bright eyes glanced a moment at the Judge's, then turned down, and there was a pause.

"Why do you not answer?"

"Please sir—my lord, I mean—I'd rather not."

"You must answer, my Judge, severely.

"Esau," broke in Anthony, "whatever it be, speak it like a man. I have no hope now but in speaking the truth."

"Prisoner!" said the Judge, reprovingly.

"Pardon me, my lord: he is my relative! I will not speak further."

While an eager buzz ran through the court, and then was silenced, Esau said, in a whisper, but Robert Brande he used to say was his name; but his real name, I have found, is Robert Stonor."

"Stonor!" said Mr. Martin; "a word of explanation. Stonor or Brande may be said to be the real prosecutor in this case—"

A pretty sensation followed the Judge.

"Your lordship speaks very justly; but I am sure your lordship will see that the facts placed before Mr. Gilbert Dean by other magistrates compelled movement, and, once begun, it was, of course, the duty of the heir to guide the proceedings."

"No doubt. But who is this Stonor?"

"I beg your lordship's pardon, I thought I had mentioned his name in address, he was the aldermun's son-in-law; he had been his groom, and married his daughter—eloped with her, I believe. But he is dead, and my worthy friends on the other side will doubtless deal with him and his antecedents at their pleasure."

In truth, Mr. Martin intentionally so softened Bob's position that it had not struck any one as of particular importance. Esau's unexpected recollection scared Bob into a most flattering prominence, which he had himself the full benefit of. Sir Norman Luke was the victim of the witness-box, and, with not very cordial glances, passed each other.

Bob had watched him assiduously at everything and everybody, the Judge only excepted, before whose every glance he cringed apologetically, especially when he took a red pocket-handkerchief, which he had scarcely put by in his pocket before it was out again and in use as before.

Anthony looked at him with an expression of contempt and loathing that Bob saw and tried to laugh off; but he ceased to turn to the gallery and explode his laugh there in answer to some friendly solicitation—but in sound, he was in too much awe for the Judge to hear it.

It was not easy to decide on the precise object of the introduction of putting Bob into the witnessbox at all, except that they knew his absence would throw doubt on all the proceedings; so they put him forward to show, first, that the robbery had confessed to Mr. Stonor as soon after it occurred, and had then convinced him they were utterly guiltless of the murder. But Mr. Martin did not put Mr. Stonor to manage the witness. He managed, with admirable tact, to get out Bob's antecedents just as he had intended them to be, and was followed by a look at the Judge, and a look at the jury, managed to say without words:

"Don't suppose we have anything to conceal about so disreputable a witness. I wash my hands of him, I assure you."

By jumped Sir Norman Luke—a worthy, able, but rather impetuous man, no more honest than Mr. Martin, but far more skilful in playing with the passions of men. Mr. Stamp had been greatly chagrined when he found Sloath had been too much for him, and had sent for Gadden—Mr. Morton—thus leaving only Sir Norman Luke as the suitable man. When, however, Mr. Stamp had decided on the course to pursue, Anthony, the latter said at once: "I hope it is Sir Norman you have chosen."

And Sir Norman, for the present, seemed able to justify Anthony's faith.

"So," he began, "you go by different names at different times—quite a variety—Bob the Cadger, Robert Brande, Robert Stonor. Any more?"

"No," said Bob, a little sullenly, not liking the laugh against him.

"May I ask which of them, on the whole, you think you have the best claim to?" Again there was a laugh.

"Stonor's my name, and I ain't ashamed on it."

"So it appears!" said the counsel, quietly; and there ran a roar through the court.

"How happened it that the burglars—perhaps I ought to say, those gentlemen friends of yours under a cloud—how happened it that they consented to go on great a secret?"

"I spose 'cause they war friends!" said Bob, with great triumph; and the laugh, this time, was not altogether at Bob's expense.

"Very true. They war friends of yours, as you forcibly express it—perhaps partners?"

Bob said he was "raytlier deaf," and begged that the question might be repeated. Then he said, thoughtfully:

"No; partners goes snacks—I didn't."

Bob Stoner, remember your oath. Attend to me, will you? Did you not yourself suggest this very robbery to these very men?"

Bob burned very white in the face, and saw Anthony, who had risen once more from the dock box, and not feeling sure that Esau hadn't blabbed, made a clean breast of it, and did it with characteristic impudence.

"I didn't come here to tell lies. I ain't a goin' to deny as I 'ave done things as I'm sorry for; and—"

"You did suggest the robbery of the aldermun?"

"I did!"

There was a pause, and Bob found it hard to meet everywhere the faces upturned or downturned according as he stood or sat—everywhere but the real prosecutor of Anthony Maude forwarder, had himself suggested the robbery out of which the greater crime had arisen.

But if the feeling of the spectators was intense at this discovery, they were not allowed long to dwell on it, for Sir Norman Luke's next questions opened out new fields for speculation.

"You have been on a foreign tour like other gentlemen of fortune, I think, and once these events, have you not?" asked Sir Norman, in the blandest and most genial of accents, and with a marked emphasis on the word fortune.

"Call it so, if you like," said Bob.

"And the fortune, what might it amount to? Ten thousand pounds?"

Bob glared, and his face—never very lovely—became just now cadaverous, livid, demoniac, but he gave himself a savage pinch of the thigh with his nervous fingers, to help himself to self-possession and answered, with a forced, forlorn, sneer, of the probability that all was known about the money, and that he must seem most scrupulously truthful and accurate.

"That wasn't my fortin'."

"Not yours? Whose, then? Whose?"

"That blessed limb of the devil yonder there, in the gentleman's box; that's my son—nice son, too—it were his fortin', gur to me by Mr. Sloath."

"Stop, stop! You get so very interesting that I am sure I must not interrupt. Mr. Sloath, dear Sloath, is in full force! Esau first signification! introduction of his name; he then went on:"

"What was that very large sum paid for?"

"Didn't I tell yer? For him yender—the halderman's own grandchild, who ought to have been in his arms, and not here on the fate of his head, left me to look arter his interest, instead of Mister Sloath a gettin' on it all. Not that I mean to find fault with him. He behaved handsome, and I meant to go abroad with my son and give him a good education; but he gave me the slip just as I was planned, he, I were, and in my vexation, got wrong, and spent all the money."

Sloath revived again. Ugly as the case was as regards himself, he had managed to make the best of it, and Sloath, instead of being damaged, stood safer than before.

"Now you may go back to try your hand at a new game. Will you explain how it was that you had no suspicion against the prisoner, even when you found him out, you proceed against him the instant you return?"

"Of course I did will."

Here Bob turned pleadingly to the Judge, as if remonstrance on the treatment he was going to say.

"I wasn't agoin' to poach on my friends while they were safe; but when I comes back and hears o' their mischief, then I acts accordin'. I knows as Mr. Sloath knew as they didn't do the murder, I shan't hurt them by trying to find out them as did."

Bob stopped, for he saw Sloath's hand across his face, and he understood a certain motion that was to be thus administered at critical times.

Sir Norman Luke made a few more several of a thousand pounds, which Mr. Sloath offers, and which, if earned by the conviction of the prisoner, he will have to pay it?"

"I'm a poor man, and can't afford to do as a rich gentleman can," said Bob; "I'll do it as anybody to offer a reward. But the haldorman was my benefactor, and I'll do my best, and I can't to prosecute his murderer, because Mr. Sloath has given me, and given a thousand pounds to the man who discloses the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help me—"

He stopped, forgetting he was not now required to repeat the oath.

Mr. Sloath sat down, and Mr. Martin got up again.

"I ask you ask Mr. Sloath for money before this reward was offered?"

"No," said Bob, as if with conscious effort to own the truth.

"You will confess absolutely to pay anything whatever, except through a most responsible gentleman and acquaintance, Dr. Pompion?"

"He did."

Mr. Martin sat down.

Bob went down triumphant, but heard, as he moved away from the witness-box, the clank of irons. He turned, and there was Hey Stoud, the convict, resting his handcuffed wrist on the edge of the dock, and working rapidly (while he tried to see) on account of the blinding sunshine, and the contrast it presented to the gloom of the jail, from which he had been just removed.

Bob and Sloath exchanged glances—one thought in both minds—would the real facts about the cudiel now come forth and ruin all?

ORDEAL OF THE VENOMOUS GLOVES, THE WARRIOR TEST OF THE AMAZONIAN INDIANS, SOUTH AMERICA.

MR. HENRY BERGH,

Founder of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

By an invitation of the American Geographical and Statistical Society, a lecture was delivered before them on the 8th of February last, by Mr. Henry Bergh, late Secretary of Legation to Russia. This lecture and the subject having attracted great attention from the public and the press, we give, in this issue of our paper, an excellent portrait of the man who has already done excellent service, and seems determined not to falter in his exertions.

Mr. Bergh is a gentleman of property and high educational qualifications, being master of several languages, an author, and a traveler. His appointment to Russia was made under our present Minister, Mr. Cassius M. Clay, and during the time of his residence in St. Petersburg Mr. Bergh succeeded in winning a popularity and favor, from the very highest to the lowest, that few of our appointees abroad have ever enjoyed. So far was this favor carried by the Emperor, that he granted Mr. Bergh many attentions never before granted a foreigner; among which we may notice permission to visit the fortress of Cronstadt, and to place at his disposal the royal yacht and carriages.

Of Mr. Bergh's efforts in the present cause, the entire press of New York, on the morning after his fine lecture on cruelty to animals, testifies. The result of it has been the formation of a society, and the awakening of public sentiment, which, we trust, will be successfully carried out. Our columns have shown some of these atrocities by illustration, of which we will mention the carrying of cattle through the streets, and the cruelties to the horse. The field is wide, and we commend Mr. Bergh's efforts to till it to the aid of the general public. There are none so weak but can help in so good a work.

THE ORDEAL OF THE VENOMOUS GLOVES.

THE "warrior test" among our own Indians is of general usance in every tribe. It is simply a torture for the purpose of testing whether the would-be warrior is sufficiently brave to withstand pain.

The Amazonian Indians reckon among its numerous tribes the Mandrucus. Here we find the "warrior test" assuming an altogether different shape; but though a simple business, and devoid of the horrible parade that distinguishes the North American and other "tests," if these and the Mandrucu ordeal were offered for selection, one would hardly know how to decide. To look at, the Mandrucu instruments of torture are wonderfully innocent, being nothing more formidable than two cylindrical cases of palm-tree bark about a foot in length, and stopped at one end. Into these cases the candidate for manhood has to thrust both his hands, and accompanied by half the village, makes the circuit of the encampment, pausing at the door of every wigwam to dance and sing.

A very easy way to win one's laurels this seems, and so it would be but for one little circumstance: the bark gauntlets are filled with all sorts of biting and venomous ants and other terrible insects, with fangs like adders, and nippers like miniature lobsters. However, there is no help for the poor young Mandrucu; he must either wear the terrible gloves or for ever resign all thoughts not only of wearing the war-club and lance, but likewise of matrimonial bliss, for not a maiden in Mandrucu land will accept a suitor's hand that is not branded by the tiny demons of the bark gloves.

Bravely, therefore, the young fellow submits to the woeful mittens, and bravely he sets out. For a time, perhaps, the creeping things, busy devouring each other, take little or no heed of the intrusive hands, and their owner, thinking doubtless it is not so very dreadful after all, skips along, accompanied by his relations, and sings his funny songs, and trips it gingerly to the music of tom-tom and reed. Presently, however, the imprisoned hands, grown hot with the salutary exercise, invite the attention of the blood-suckers, and they begin to nibble; to clash their nippers and exercise their jaws. He dares not cry out; he dares not bite or compress his lips, or indulge in any other of the facial antics that generally attend helpless pain; the eyes of his father and his many uncles and cousins—of his affianced herself, maybe—are narrowly watching his countenance, and will note every spasm and twitch of it. If he could only clench his hand and crush a few dozen of his tormentors, it would be a relief, but this is impossible; he can't move so much as a single joint of a single finger encased in the unyielding wooden gloves. In no way can he ease his anguish but by stamping and grinding his heels at certain parts of the pleasant dance, or by introducing a woeful note among the high-pitched keys of his laughter.

The further he goes the worse he fares. The tribe is large and the village a mile or more in length, and at the end of it is the tent of the chief, at the door of which the last song must be sung and the last jig performed. What with the heat engendered within and the blazing sun playing without the bark gloves, the wretched hands seem literally in a furnace. Nor is the heat the worst part of it. Many of the dreadful ants have venomous fangs, and by the poor fellow's pallid face and staring eyes it is evident that the subtle poison is careering through his veins. Still on without a murmur, surrounded by the gay troop yelling, clapping their hands, and rending the sultry air with the screeching music of the reed flute and the banging of the tom-toms: on from tent to tent, till the song of the sufferer becomes a mere loud unintelligible noise and his dance the staggering of a drunken man. So the chief's tent is reached, and the chief, coming to the door, signs to the musicians to strike up briskly, the while regarding the dancer narrowly.

"Enough," says the chief, and reeling into the arms of his friends, the deadly gloves are torn off the young man's hands, and his mother and sisters cast their arms about him and weep.

MR. HENRY BERGH, FOUNDER OF THE SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

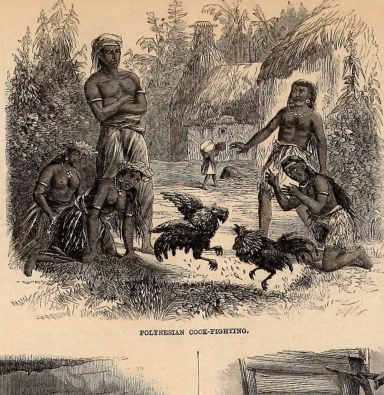
POLYNESIAN COCK-FIGHTING.

THERE are two things that every people, be they ever so enlightened or savage, will do. The first is the making and using of artificial stimulus, and thereby creating intoxication; and secondly, the excitement of gambling and betting. An instance of the latter we illustrate in the cock fighting of natives of Polynesia.

It is consolatory to know that our forefathers were not the only savages who were versed in the above-mentioned art. Throughout the entire Polynesian group the sport has been known and practiced from a very remote period. Whether the South Sea Islanders trained the birds as mediums of gambling, or whether, as some travelers—Ellis among the number—assert, they were content with the pleasure of seeing the birds murder each other, is not with certainty known. It is certain, however, that they were fed with the greatest care, and that finely-carved perches were prepared for them. Their food was chiefly bread-fruit rolled up in the hand like paste, and given in little bits. The bird was taught to open its mouth, and receive water from the hollow of its master's hand.

Frequently there would be a gathering of entire districts to test the superiority of two rival cocks. The birds were no artificial spurs, and were allowed to retain the whole of their natural plumage. These international cock-fights took place as soon after day-dawn as possible, that the pugilists might not be incommoded by the heat. As with their boxers, so with their chickens—as soon as one avoided the other there was a shout of «i (beaten) from the spectators, and the combatants were separated.

HORRIBLE AFFAIR AT ST. LOUIS.



Battle between a Woman and a Raccoon.

THE lock-up, or night-prison, at St. Louis, has just been the scene of one of the most horrible affairs that has ever been our lot to record. The locality and appearance of the scene is vividly given by our artist, and for the description of the horror we shall take the tale told by the St. Louis Republican. It says:

"The Stygian cave on Chesnut street was the scene of a most horrible affair on Thursday night. The night tyrannyof these infernal regions is a bluff Englishman named Tom Hanby, who appears to delight in horrible performances. When Dr. Eliot periled his life by descending, like Dantes into the bowels of this foul pit, he found a small rivulet coursing through the centre of the chamber. Hanby is the Charon who ferries lost souls across the diminutive Styx, and like the infernal ferryman, he has a bull-dog to assist him. This dog is of the feminine gender, and is blessed with a sprightly pup, that amuses the keeper by its gambols and pranks.

"On Thursday night Mr. Hanby received an addition to his 'happy family' of dogs and rats, in the shape of a savage raccoon, which had been kept by Charley at his dog arena in fighting bull-terriers. The calaboose dog and pup were delighted to make the acquaintance of the coon, the pup showing a decided fondness for the ring-tailed gentleman, and after taking a good smell, endeavored to get up a juvenile romp with his coonship. The coon's reminiscences of the canine fraternity were not of the most agreeable nature, and he resented the familiarity of the pup, and at once got his back up and showed fight. Seeing her offspring in danger, and being always ready for a muss, the mother of the pup bristled up and made a dive for the throat of the coon; but that wily animal had learned how to interpret the motions and language of dogs, and was not to be caught napping. He

POLYNESIAN COCK-FIGHTING.

He thought to give the men an agreeable surprise, and so kept the matter a secret until the arrival of his instruments. The surprise was on his side, however, when he found that the carpenters would not use one of the English tools, asserting most positively that they could not work with them.

The reverence with which a Hindu professes to regard the instruments he works with, very naturally assumes the color of his idolatrous religion, and, consequently, not only does he make offerings of rice, fruit and flowers to them, but actually prays to them, which seems almost too absurd for belief, and would be very laughable, if it were not for the pity we ought to feel for this blind superstition and ignorance of the true object of worship.

THE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS OF THE ANCIENT ASSYRIANS.

EVERYTHING appertaining to this strange people of the olden time, who were so intimately connected with Biblical history, must be interesting. The recent excavations and discoveries of Layard have made us intimate with the domestic life of the people of Nineveh, and their customs are unfolded to us with as much certainty as are those of our own day. We give illustrations of their musical instruments, and the composition of a Ninevite band, to which no doubt many a fair belle of the wondrous old city tripped it on the light fantastic toe.

The instruments of Assyria, all of which are mentioned in sacred writ, were the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery and dulcimer.

Calmet says, "The musical instruments of the WOMAN MUTILATED BY A RACCOON AT ST. LOUIS.

EAST INDIAN CARPENTERS AT WORK.

executed a masterly retreat, and concealed himself in the coil known as 'the dungeon,' a dark, filthy apartment into which consumptive rats retire to give up the ghost.

"In this dark dungeon lay a wretched woman named Mary Dugan, who had been placed there in a state of beastly intoxication. The coon, which was afraid of a sober bull-dog, had no hesitation in attacking a drunken woman. Springing upon her face, he fastened his teeth on her nose and tore away a large portion of that organ. The woman, thinking the leading spirit of the infernal regions had assailed her, screamed murder and called for help at the top of her voice, but no help came. The coon, after biting off the woman's nose, seized hold of her arm and mangled it in a shocking manner. Finding that no one came to her assistance, the woman became desperate, and seizing the 'devil' by the throat, held on with a determined grip. Under the pressure the coon was strangled, and the woman threw his dead body at her feet, and it was seized upon and half devoured by the rats.

"We saw the woman in the calaboose yesterday morning, lying upon a couch groaning and moaning with the pain of her frightful wounds. Instead of being sent immediately to the hospital, she was kept for several hours in the calaboose, the most pitiable object that human eye could look upon.

TIMBREL, PSALTERY, CYMBALS—PSALTERY WITH DANCING.

"Our Government hung Capt. Wirz for cruelty to prisoners at Andersonville and for confining them in loathsome and unhealthy cells, but our city authorities, unmindful of the fate of the rebel captain, throw into a cave more horrible than the blackest spot of Andersonville, the poor unfortunate creatures who have merely violated an ordinance against drunkenness, or for a slight disturbance of the peace. If inhumanity is a crime, somebody is responsible for their daily repetition of an offense against a large class of our fellow beings."

DR. ABERNETHY used to tells his pupils that all human diseases sprung from two causes —stuffing and fretting.

INDIAN CARPENTERS.

AN American carpenter would smile if he saw the tools used by one of his own craft, a native of India, and still more so if he saw the native carpenter at work, performing the operations of planing, sawing, drilling, hammering, etc., seated on his haunches, as shown in the illustration.

His tools, which are always few in number, are of the rudest description, and appear quite past work, through age; indeed, they have probably descended from father to son for many generations, and are regarded with superstitious reverence. Their work is, however, performed with wonderful neatness, and, though not so durable as that done by an American carpenter or upholsterer, is quite equal in the matter of finish.

A person, who had a large number of Hindu carpenters at work, was desirous of having it done in the best possible way, and with this view, wrote to England for several complete sets of carpenter's tools of the first quality, naturally thinking that his work, already done well, would be so much better done with better instruments.

ANCIENT ASSYRIAN MUSIC—HARP, PSALTERY, SACKBUT AND FLUTE.

ASSYRIAN DRUM.

Hebrews are, perhaps, what has been hitherto least understood of anything in Scripture. The Rabbins themselves know no more of this matter than other commentators who are least acquainted with Jewish affairs."

Calmet had no means of assisting his speculations by examining any representations of the actual instruments, and, indeed, never till now have we had so good an opportunity of arriving at some definite knowledge of the form, and, consequently, of the structure and quality of sound emitted by the above-mentioned instruments.

In the engraving with six figures there are four performers, two men and two women; the two centre figures being two officers of the Assyrian court, designated as superintendents of the tribute of the provinces.

The first instrument mentioned in the list is the cornet (karna), from karn, the horn of an animal, of which this instrument was probably first made. The second instrument in the list, is the flute (masbrukita), from sbarak, to whistle, to shriek, is very suggestive of the kind of sound that such short and thin tubes would make as those in the hands of the woman at the right hand. The next in order is the harp (kitras), from kush, to be curved or bent like a bow, from which, probably, the idea was taken, and of which structure, in fact, all ancient harps were, and some modern Indian harps still are, the strings being kept tight by the resistance of the back of the instrument, not by the support afforded by the column as in European harps. This instrument has 20 or 21 strings, and is played with a plectrum.

CHIEF OF THE MUSICIANS, WITH DULCIMER.

The next in order is the sackbut (shabkah), from shabak, to weave, applied to the lattice of a window, being the Arabic word shebbak, window; and hence, also, the name of the instrument, there being a window or some ornamented perforations in the sounding-board, as in the European guitar. This instrument is still in existence in the East. The ornamental perforations in this instance are at the sides. The instrument has double strings, and is played with a short plectrum.

The next in order is the psaltery (phsanneterin), from phsal, to carve, because the two columns which support the cross-bar of this instrument are carved into various devices; the shorter of the two columns in the ancient Egyptian examples is commonly carved in the shape of a horse's head. It has usually five or seven strings, but it may have ten; it is then called ashur, or the ten-stringed. Another variety of this instrument is seen in the hand of a man in the engraving of four figures.

The next in order is the dulcimer (sumphonia), from samak, to lean or lay, to impose, as the hand upon anything; which exactly corresponds to this idea, both because the instrument is supported by a belt over the the left shoulder, and because the left elbow and hand are imposed upon it to twang, or stop, or modify the sound of the strings, which are struck with a short stick held in the right hand.

It is to be remarked that this instrument is played by a person wearing a high cap, probably a chief musician.

We have now gone through the list of all those instruments which were employed to give notice to the different people, nations, and languages at what time they were to fall down and worship the golden image which Nebuchadnezzar had set up; and we have shown the true figures of them, taken from these most authentic coeval commentations on the Bible, as the sculptures from Nineveh may fairly be considered.

In the last Psalm (cl.), which was probably composed after the return of the Jews to Palestine, there is also mention of several musical instruments.

The trumpet in this text, as in that from Daniel, is placed first; but here it is called suphar, from saphar, to be bright, as the instrument would be if made of silver or brass.

The next in this series is the psaltery, here called nebel, from a bottle, a vessel, or jar, for the strings were fastened over a kind of box or bowl, like the instrument still in use in Nubia.

The next that occurs is translated harp (kinnor), imitating a tremulous and stridulous sound.

The next, timbrel (tuph), to strike, to beat the tabret. This word may be taken to signify any kind of drum or tympanum, and we have two specimens, one in the shape of a tambourine, the other like our drums, but played with the fingers, as the Indians do the small horizontal drum, or tom-tom, at this day.

The next, translated organ (huggab), is supposed to have been a wind instrument, perhaps a set of pipes of unequal length; but we have not seen anything of the kind represented in these sculptures.

The last instrument mentioned among those in Psalm cl., is translated cymbals (zalzelim), from zal, to tingle; or from zalzil, roundness. We have a representation of it in the hands of a man with a beard. They appear to be flat, circular pieces of brass, fastened one in each hand, and struck together, as are our instruments of the same name. All four of these musicians are at the same time dancing, as also it was the custom with the Jews, Psalm cl. 4. Religious dances are still practiced by the Mohammedans.

A MISSING MAN.

MR. WILLIAM PARDEE DAVIS left his home in Rice City, R. I., on the 14th of February, 1866. The following is his description: His height is five feet seven inches, about 35 years of age, 175 pounds weight, large black whiskers, top of his head bald, high forehead; was laboring under aberration of mind; had on four coats, two pair of pantaloons and black soft hat; was traced to Providence, R. I.; he was engaged for several years with Messrs. R. & C. Poillon, ship-builders, 224 South street. Any information where he may be found, given to his father, Mr. William Davis, Rice City, or to Mr. James M. Ford, 49 Concord street, Brooklyn, will be liberally rewarded, and receive the heartfelt thanks of his grieved parents and many friends.

THE DIFFERENT KINDS OF MODERN DRAMA.—There are, these days, three sorts of drama extant, to wit: The leg drama, the fire-proof safe drama, and the supernumerary drama. The former may be defined by the absence of essentials in it, such as skirts, arm and bosom draperies, and decent conversation. Its chief popularity is the plumpness of the actor who essays it. In this rôle our Westerns, Rushtons, and Reignoldses are "queens." Their "starry" splendors renews the sexagenarian heart, and makes opera-glasses rise to the highest premiums. The patent-safe drama was Tom Taylor's fee simple, but the cheaper dramatists have appropriated it with wonderful unanimity. Its personages revolve about a forged will or missing bond, and after a couple of hours badinage, the funny man of the play relieves the dramatist and marries all the virtuous couples in the cast—often not a numerous number either! The third and last species of ye modern drama is Boucicault's supernumerary; whose sole recommendation is in pleasant arrangements in stage furniture, fine dresses, dances, funerals, fun and frolic, forced upon the delighted audience as "drama!"

ENGLISH LADIES' BOARDING-SCHOOLS.

THE Queen, a London "lady's newspaper," has lately contained a number of letters from various correspondents, relative to corporal punishment in schools, the contents of which have completely disgusted the community at large, and made parents particularly anxious respecting their children at school. It appears from these letters that in most of the fashionable ladies' boarding-schools the system of corporal punishment is in vogue, and that marriageable young ladies are stripped, laid across a "horse" and then receive a castigation which is usually awarded to only the naughtiest of children. Besides the stripes of a birch, there are several other formalities to be gone through, very humbling to the pupil, and which one correspondent describes as follows: "For the first offense the delinquent is prepared for punishment, but generally pardoned; for the second, she is whipped privately; for all subsequent delinquencies the punishment takes place in the school-room, on the 'horse,' and in addition to the pain it inflicts it costs in money about 1s. in fees. This is the system: First, she proceeds to the housekeeper, to procure the rod—she pays 2d. for the use of it; secondly, she has to be partly undressed by the maid, and this costs 2d.; thirdly, she has then to walk barefooted to another part of the house, to be robed for punishment—a peculiar dressing to add to the disgrace. It is a long linen blouse, short cotton socks and slippers. The young lady thus dressed, now proceeds to the drawing-room to be exhibited to the lady superintendent. Having been approved, she is then conducted to the second room, when she has to pay 6d. to the governess who inflicts the punishment. A wooden horse, covered with soft leather, is the medium of castigation. The delinquent then thanks the governess, kisses the rod, and retires to her own room to appear no more until the next morning." One of the writers, an Irishman, says he has under his care a niece, 18 years old. Last summer, the young lady having finished her education, they went to live in a "pleasant village near the Thames." In the "village" was a very large ladies' school, and the young lady in question being particularly fond of study, made arrangements to attend twice a week, in order to add to her store of knowledge, if possible. One afternoon it appears she contradicted, or rather corrected a a teacher who had mis-quoted a line of poetry. To her surprise, when about to leave, after her lessons, she was ordered into the school-room. To her amazement and indignation, she was told that she was to be birched "for impudence to a teacher." She protested and implored, but in vain. Her resistance was useless against force; she was held across a desk, the clothing was completely removed from the lower part of her person, and the lady principal gave her 12 sharp cuts with a birch. The young lady went home, distracted in mind, and related the circumstances to her uncle. He was, of course, highly indignant, but he concluded to say nothing about it until the young lady had completed the term of her tuition. That time having arrived, he sent an invitation to the lady principal, asking her to lunch at his home and receive the amount of money due her. This the principal accepted, and on her arrival she was rather surprised at the warmth of the reception, which was as follows: Three lady acquaintances had been invited to act as a committee of reception, with a "birch," "horse," &c., along with them. On the appearance of the principal the gentleman lectured her as to her conduct to his neice, and told her to avoid exposure by legal proceedings he had concluded, with the aid of the ladies present, to punish her as she had done his niece. There being no other alternative, she consented, and was accordingly stripped by the ladies, drawn across the "horse," and the gentleman himself laid on the birch. He gave her 20 strokes, the severity of which the principal's flushed countenance attested to. She then departed. There are a number of other letters, all of which contain accounts similar to the above.

WITCHCRAFT.—We still see horse-shoes, owls, hawks, etc., nailed on the doors of old barns. These supposed charms against sorcery were used even in pagan times, and date back to the Romans. Persons accused of witchcraft have been subjected to the most barbarous and unrelenting punishments. In thousands of cases, the victims, often quite innocent, were burnt alive, while others were drowned by the test applied. If, on being thrown into a pond, they did not sink, they were pronounced witches, and either stoned on the spot, or reserved for the stake. Five hundred witches were burnt at Genoa, in three months, in 1515. One thousand in the diocese of Como, in a year. An incredible number in France, about 1520, when one sorcerer confessed to having 1,200 associates. More than 100,000 perished, mostly by the flames, in Germany. Grandeis, the parish priest of Loudan, in France, was burnt on a charge of having bewitched a whole convent of nuns, A. D. 1634. In Bretagne, 20 poor women were put to death as witches in 1654. Maria Renata was burnt at Wurtzburg, in 1749. At Kalisch, in Poland, nine old women were burnt in January, 1775. And so recently as 1802, five were condemned by the Bramins, in Patna, for sorcery, and executed. In England, under the reign of Henry the VIII., A. D. 1541, a statute was enacted declaring all witchcraft and sorcery to be felony, without benefit of clergy. Again, in the 5th of Elizabeth, and 1st of James. Barrington estimates the judicial murders for witchcraft in England, in 200 years, at 30,000. Sir Matthew Hale burnt two persons for witchcraft in 1664. Three thousand suffered for this imputed crime under the Long Parliament. Northamptonshire and Huntingdon preserved the superstition longer than any other counties. Two pretended witches were executed at Northampton, in 1705, and five others some years afterward. In 1716, Mrs. Hicks and her daughter, a child of nine years of age, were hanged as witches at Huntingdon. In Scotland thousands suffered. The last was at Dornoch, in 1722. The laws against witchcraft had lain dormant for many years, when an ignorant or malicious person attempting to revive them by finding a bill against a poor old woman in Surrey, they were formally repealed, A. D. 1736.

IMPERIAL TOKAY.—Tokay wine is much esteemed by wine drinkers, but as its high price excludes it from general use, the following notice from the Moniteur Vinicole may not be uninteresting: "The village of Tokay, which gives its name to the wine, is situated in Hungary, on the top of a hill near the meeting of the Rodrog with the Theiss. The vineyards are to the west of Rodrog, and they occupy a space of 10 square miles. The earth is of yellow chalk, mixed with large pebbles. The wine is white, and the vintage is commenced as late in the year as possible, but generally at the end of October. There are four different kinds of Tokay. The first is made by placing the grapes, when cleared of all rotten fruit, in a wooden vat, with a double bottom, of which the one on which the grapes rest is pierced with small holes. The vat is filled with grapes and covered with boards. After a few hours the grapes become heated to 80° Fah., and fermentation sets in. The fermentation destroys the tartaric acid, and the weight of the grapes forces the juice through the holes in the bottom. The grapes are then trodden under foot, and the wine is poured into small casks, where it remains exposed to the air a month after having fermented for two days. This is the wine which is generally exported. When of a good quality, it has a silvery, oily color, the taste sweet and mellow, with a peculiar earthy flavor, slightly astringent and aromatic, with good body. This wine may be preserved for an almost indefinite period, but is not drinkable until it is three years old. The ordinary price of Tokay wine of first quality purchased at the vineyard is from five shillings to six shillings the bottle. The Emperor of Russia keeps a commission agent at Tokay who purchases 40 or 50 casks of the best wine every year. Some wine-growers in the Ariège cultivate vineyards on the tops of the highest mountains in calcareous earth covered with stones similar to those found in the vineyards near Tokay, but they have not, as yet, succeeded in producing anything as good as the Hungarian wine."

HOME OF BARON JAMES DE ROTHSCHILD.—The estate of La Ferriere was purchased 30 years ago, by Rothschild, from the heirs of Fouche, Duke of Otranto, for the sum of 2,600,000 francs. It has since been considerably increased, and it now consists of 37,000 English acres. Like the great Frederick, who vainly tried to purchase the mill at Sans Souci, which came twixt the wind and his nobility, the Baron has vainly endeavored to buy a farm of 15 acres, which happens to be in the centre of his vast domain. The gold of the Rothschilds will not tempt the obdurate payson to part with his beloved heritage. Curious to say, the adjoining estates belong to the mighty Pereires, the only name in France, which, in point of financial power, can rival that of Rothschild. The Emperor's visit, in 1865, to La Ferriere, will be remembered. Every hour which his Majesty breathed in this superb mansion cost the host a million. Till that time no artist had been allowed to sketch the chateau, it being a hideous amalgamation of incorrect style, such as would give Mr. Ruskin a shiver even to contemplate in a photograph. The building is surrounded by exquisite grounds, in the designs of which Paxton had no inconsiderable part; there are, also, immense tanks, well stocked with fish, and an indescribable air of artificial ornament pervades the whole, which conveys to one the idea that one of the sumptuous palaces in the Champs Elysees has been transported to the flat plains of La Brie. The interior arrangements, however, are faultless; a double staircase leads to the hall, which is 85 feet in height, and lit from the roof by a dome of glass, illuminated at night by 1,150 gas-burners. The most comfortable chair in the salon de famille was once the throne of a Chinese Emperor, presented by that Celestial to a Rothschild. A sofa in this said room is covered by Oriental embroidery bearing the Imperial Dragon. The baron's private study is furnished with Gobelin tapestry worked from designs by Boucher. The walls of the smoking-room are entirely covered by Russia leather, exactly the tint of a cigar, and on this costly material Eugene Laury has painted exquisite frescoes. The family dining-room is decorated by sporting subjects, executed by Philippe Rousseau. It opens on a small and very plain synagogue. It was in the large dining-room that the Emperor and his suite partook of the celebrated luncheon in 1862, served on Bernard de Palissy china and plate chiseled by Goattieres.

RAILWAY SPEED ABROAD.—We are eternally told how much faster the English and French run their railroad trains than we do. Were it even so, they would not deserve much credit, as their roads are thoroughly constructed, and have a system that cannot be brought into use here, under which great speed is not incompatible with safety. We have been curious enough to compile from continental time-tables, the through speed of their travel, and our readers can compare it with the 8 A.M. and 7 P.M. trains from Jersey City to Philadelphia, which only stop thrice between the termini: Jersey City to Philadelphia, 8 A.M., 89 miles, in 3h. 09m., giving 28·25 miles per hour; 7 P.M. train, in 3h. 13m. or 27·66 miles per hour. Paris to Marseilles, 536 miles; evening express No. 3, in 16h. 15m., giving 35·05 miles per hour; express No. 5, in 19h. 40m., or 27·27 per hour; express No. 11, in 19h. 15m., or 27·86 per hour. Paris to Calais (mail to England), 203 miles, in 5h. 50m., or 34·08 miles per hour. Paris to Strasburg, 312 miles; express No. 1, in 10h. 10m., or 30·07 miles per hour; mail train, 10h. 45m., or 29·00 miles per hour. Paris to Cherburg, 230½ miles; express, in 10h. 5m., or 22·86 miles per hour. Paris to Brest, 387 miles; express, in 16h. 10m., or 23·94 miles per hour. Paris to Rennes [part of Brest line], 231½ miles; express, in 8h. 15m., or 28·06 per hour. Paris to Bordeaux, 361½ miles; express, in 11h. 30m., or 31·06 per hour; mail, in 10h. 50m., or 33·55 per hour. Paris to Frankfort, 438 miles; express, in 18h. 20m., or 24·88 per hour. "Through speeds" from London [including sea passage]: To Paris, 304 miles, in 10h. 35m., or 28·72 miles per hour. London to Bale, 635 miles, in 25h. 15m. [including two hours' rest in Paris], or 25·14 miles per hour. London to Frankfort [from 7·25 A.M. till 6.50 P.M. the "next" day], 765 miles, in 35h. 25m., or 21·05 miles per hour, including two hours' rest in Paris [from 6 to 8 P.M.]

WHERE RELICS GO.—The Richmond Whig says: "When the Federal army was advancing up the Peninsula, Dr. John Mayo, of this city, secured an old bell at Yorktown and delivered it for safe keeping to the officer in charge of the State Armory, corner of Seventh and Cary streets. The bell had engraved on it the words: 'York County, in Virginia, 1725.' This precious old relic, which had been cast in England, and whose peals had been heard at Yorktown long before the surrender of Cornwallis, was left in the armory on the night of the evacuation, and was seen there several weeks afterward by the officer above mentioned. In an interview which that officer had with Col. Kress, ordnance officer United States army, in this city, for the purpose of claiming some private property, the State officer drew the attention of the United States officer to the relic, and also to a copper vane which had hung for many years over the dome of the old armory on the basin bank, and the latter requested the former to say to the United States officer then in charge of the armory that he desired these relics to be sent his (Col. Kress's) office. They were never sent to that office. The attention of the present State authorities was also drawn to these relics by the State officer referred to. It turns out that the old bell is in possession of H. W. Hook, metal molder, in Philadelphia; for Vincent Bargamin, of this city, informs us that he recently saw it there broken into fragments."

THE Virginia spinsters complain that the few unmarried men left are all captured by the widows.

WE would call the attention to the advertisement of Haskins & Co., in another column. They want Agents to sell fine Steel Engravings, and offer great inducements; they are an old established house, and have the reputation of dealing promptly and honestly with their customers. Many of our young men may find it very profitable to employ their spare time in selling for them.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral surpasses all other remedies in the rapid and radical cure of Coughs, Colds and Consumption.

Barnum's New American Museum, Broadway, between Spring and Prince streets. This establishment does not advertise in the New York Herald. The Afternoon Performance will invariably Commence at 2 o'clock. Every Afternoon at 2; Evening at 7½. Unparalleled Success! Crowded and Delighted Audiences! The Scriptural Historical Drama, MOSES; OR, ISRAEL IN EGYPT. Magnificent Scenery, Costumes and Appointments. MOVING PANORAMA OF THE NILE. Scriptural Tableaux: Crossing the Red Sea, Destruction of Pharaoh and his Hosts, Triumph of Israel. W. B. Harrison, Extemporaneous Singer. Great Living Curiosities: Giant and Giantess, Three Dwarfs, Two Circassian Girls, Glass Blowers, Albino Boy, Cosmoramas, Learned Seal, Happy Family, Grand Aquaria. 100,000 curiosities. Admission, 30 cents; children under ten, 15 cents.

NEW MUSIC.

Arrah-na-Pogue, Grand March....................30c.
Silver Trumpets " " ....35c.
I Have Heard Sweet Music Stealing..............30c.
The Haunting Thought, by Reichardt.............40c.
I Can Not Sing the Old Songs, by Claribel.........30c.
Wearing of the Green: Violin, 15c. Song..........30c.
Have You Seen Her Lately? (comic)...............35c.
Matilda Toots, with Colored Lithograph, illustrating Catastrophe on Skating Pond...............50c.
Mailed, post-paid. FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery.

$2,000 A Year.—An Agent wanted in every Town to manufacture an article of daily consumption. Can be manufactured in the Agent's dwelling. No competition. Enclose stamp to
J. P. GARTON, New York P. O.

JUST PUBLISHED—No. 97 of FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN, being the great Humorous Paper of America. This admirable paper is a Pictorial Comic History of the Month. In addition to its numerous illustrations, by the best Artists of the age, it contains 16 pages of first-rate reading matter, consisting of Romances, Burlesques, Western Tales, Anecdotes, Comic Sketches, Humorous Poetry, etc.
FRANK LESLIE, Publisher,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL FOR MARCH,—Contains Cornelius Vanderbilt, Hon. Ezra Cornell, Prof. Mapes, Frederika Bremer, Lavater, Las Casas, Sir John Franklin, Capt. Cook, Revs. John Wesley and Jonathan Edwards;—Talent and Genius;—Extraordinary Prediction;—Ghosts;—Origin of Coal;—Varieties of Sheep;—Iron, its uses;—Putting on a Bad Face;—Tribulation Trepid, and Mr. Hopeful;—The Jew;—Love and Lovers, the Philosophy of Engagements; an Excellent Number, only 20 cents, or $2 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York. 546-7

YOUNG FOLKS,
WHY
LIVE IN MISERY?

Your destiny, future prospects in life, and a good fortune, clearly revealed by DR. CHARLES. He wins the affections of the opposite sex and guides you to a happy courtship and marriage. The best of all, he guides you to wealth, health and happiness; also many ways how to find lucky numbers. This great work will be sent by mail, post-paid, for $1. Address
DR. L. CHARLES, P. O. Drawer 6,160, Chicago, Ill.
546-9

$200 a Month made with STENCIL TOOLS. Don't fail to send for a free catalogue containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vt.
546-9

WHEELER & WILSON'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM
LOCK STITCH
SEWING MACHINES,
625 Broadway, New York.

Gems of Sacred Song.

A NEW VOLUME of the CHOICEST PIECES of the BEST COMPOSERS, with Piano Accompaniments; a beautiful collection of popular music, uniform with the previous volumes of the "Home Circle Series," now consisting of seven volumes, the whole forming the most complete and valuable library of Piano Music published. Price of each, Plain, $2 50; Cloth, $3; Cloth, full gilt, $4. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

Fresh Garden and Flower Seeds, prepaid by mail, of the choicest sorts. Also, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, 150,000 Fruit Stocks, Grape Vines, Strawberries, &c., of the best kinds. Priced Descriptive Catalogues, gratis, to any address. Wholesale Lists for the Trade. Agents wanted.
B. M. WATSON,
Old Colony Nurseries and Seed Establishment,
547-52 Plymouth, Mass.

300 Per Cent. Profit for Agents.—Three genteel articles, everywhere needed, and sell at sight. All sent, with particulars, free, by mail, for 35 cents.
Address E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

On the 15th of every Month
Will be issued, a new Comic Paper, called
THE JOLLY JOKER,
Containing over 40 capital illustrations by the best artists of the new and old world, and
16 PAGES READING MATTER,
Consisting of Stories, Jokes and Anecdotes.
Sold at all News Stands, and by
THE AMERICAN NEWS COMPANY.
Wholesale Agents, 119, 121 Nassau St., New York.
PRICE 10 CENTS.

AGENTS WANTED!
$10 A DAY EASY MADE $10
By selling Engravings, Card Photographs and Stationery. Our Stationery Packets excel all others; each Package contains Paper, Envelopes, Pencil, Pens, &c., worth a dollar at retail. We will send Agents 100 STATIONERY PACKAGES and a SILVER WATCH for $17. We also publish splendid Steel Engravings and Portraits, Lithograph Prints, &c., very popular and saleable. Will send a fine assortment of 100 FOR $20 THAT WILL REALIZE $60, or a $10 lot that will sell for $30 or over. Will send a sample lot for $5 that will sell for $15. Send Stamp for Catalogue, Terms, &c.
HASKINS & CO., 36 Beekman street, N. Y.

Amateur Cultivator's Guide to the FLOWER & KITCHEN GARDEN,
Now Ready.
This is a work of 130 pages of closely printed matter, containing a beautiful colored plate and over 50 engravings. It will be forwarded, post-paid, upon receipt of 25 cents, to all applicants. Address
WASHBURN & CO., Seed Merchants,
Horticultural Hall, Boston, Mass.

MAGIC INK.
This Ink has the appearance of pure water. The writing can be made visible by those only possessing the secret to do so. A bottle, with secret, sent by mail on receipt of $1. R. SHRODER, Rochester, N. Y.
547-8

Holloway's Pills and Ointment—The Elixir of Life. Ponce de Leon and his companions sought in vain for the fabled waters of rejuvenescence, amid the orange groves and flowery meeds of Florida. It was left for Holloway to discover the true antidote to Coughs, Colds, Asthmas, Scrofula, Sore Leg Ulcers, Burns, Scalds, &c., in his admirable remedies of Pills and Ointment, which have been astonishing the world for upwards of fifty years, by their marvelous cures in every type of disease. Sold by all Druggists.

OUR PUBLICATIONS!

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE 10 CENTS, OR $4 A YEAR.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper Americana,
OR STEREOSCOPIC MONTHLY NEWSPAPER,
Published Weekly.
Within the United States, $12 yearly, in currency.
Ready to be sent by mails for Cuba, Mexico, Central America, Brazils, Peru, Chile, and all the South-American Republics—$12 yearly, in gold.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,
Or German Illustrated Newspaper,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or $4 a year.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or yearly, $4.

The Great Magazine of Fashion.
Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine,
Published Monthly—price 25 cts, yearly,

Frank Leslie's New Monthly.
Price 15 cents, or $1 50 a year.

Frank Leslie's Children's Friend,
Published Monthly—price 10 cents, yearly $1.

Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun.
Published Monthly—$1 50 a year.

FRANK LESLIES'

With Number 41 commenced the Lives and Portraits of the Six Made Men of New England, beginning with FRANKLIN PIERCE, ESQ.
MAJOR G. O. ROGERS,
HENRY D. BLANCHARD, ESQ.,
JAMES T. FIELD, ESQ.,
W. W. CLAPP, ESQ.,
OLIVER DITSON, ESQ.,
ALVAN G. ADAMS, ESQ.,
HARRISON LORING, ESQ.,
HON. F. W. LINCOLN,
HON. WILLIAM CLAFLIN,
DONALD MCKAY, ESQ.,
HORATIO HARRIS, ESQ.

Contents of No. 43.

THE LAPIDARY. A Story. Illustrated.
MEAVE. A Story. Illustrated.
THE FATE OF HENRIETTE. An Incident. Illustrated.
CAUGHT IN AN EARTHQUAKE.
HEADACHE DAUGHTER. Illustrated.
BEETLES AND THEIR KIND. Illustrated.
THE FIRST PRESIDENT.
ABBREVIATED: A ROMANCE OF THREE-WOMEN. Continued.
THE CONFEDERATE OFFICER'S STORY. Illustrated.
SELF-MADE MEN—ERASTUS B. BIGELOW, Boston Inventor of Carpet and other Machinery. With Portrait.
A MUSSEL FARM IN FRANCE. Illustrated.
CHASED BY WILD STALLIONS. Illustrated.
THE CHOICE AND MANAGEMENT OF AGENTS. An Essay.
THE WORKS OF THE SYSTEM AND THE GREAT RESTORERS.
A ROMANCE OF THE PARIS EXHIBITION.
ELOQUENCE OF LADIES.
SLEEPING. A Poem.
AN UNSENTIMENTAL JOURNEY.
EXERCISE.
BLUE BEARD.
CURIOUS MODES.
A TALE OF THE POST-OFFICE.
THE WASP'S NEST.
SICILIAN TYPES AND COSTUMES. Illustrated.
HUNTING SEALS AND WALRUS. Illustrated.
CATCHING WILD DUCKS IN ENGLAND. Illustrated.
THE HAUNT OF THE HIPPOPOTAMUS. Illustrated.
THE TAFFY CHANT. Illustrated.
THE SECOND MARRIAGE. A Story. Illustrated.
WHERE FLY AND FLESH COME FROM.
GRANDFATHER WHITEHEAD'S LECTURES—
ABOUT METALS AND ALLOYS.
THE THREE AUNTS. A Story.
PAST AND PRESENT. A Poem.
SOMETHING FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.
RIDDLES AND THE ELVES.
FAMILY PASTIMES—ENIGMAS, CHARADES, ETC.
OUR CENTENNIAL MADAMES. Six Comic Illustrations.

And a great variety of Humorous and Miscellaneous Paragraphs. For sale by all News Agents. Price 10 cents. Annual subscription $4.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

I warrant my Golden O'Dor to force a beautiful set of Whiskers or Moustache to grow on the smoothest face or head, five to eight weeks. Also, their restorer to Bald Heads, to which withal—proven by the testimonials of thousands. Price, $1 00—sent to any address, post paid, on receipt of price. Address ED. C. BRIGGS, 541-3 P. O. Drawer, 6,986, Chicago, Ill.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine, an invention urgently needed by everybody. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50 cents, that retails readily for $6, by R. B. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 0

The Way to Make from One Dollar to One Dollar and Fifty Cents in an evening, with other information, will be sent by any one enclosing two stamps. Address A. WOLCOTT, Cleveland, O.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, PENS, BRACELETS, CASTORS, GOBLETS, SPOONS, FORKS, NAPKIN RINGS, ETC., ETC.

WORTH $250,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full and particulars. Address as above to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.
308 Broadway, New York.

One Lady's Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles. 0

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Fort Royal, and all other places, should be sent at their rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 65 Broadway. Moderate charged low rates. 0000

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Sample, 25 cents; French Semi-parent Cards (2 views), $1 per pack; $10 per 100. Gentlemen's Bald Pate Cards, $1 50 per pack. All by mail on receipt of price. Address
FORWARDING AGENCY, 86 Liberty street, N. Y. 0

Views Brewer) or, Life in the Concert Saloons of New York. A rich book. Just published. Handsomely illustrated. Only 25 cents. Mailed. Address Box 2,018, P. O., BOSTON, Mass. 542-51

Gonseology, Psychologic Fascination, Marriage Happily Attained, How to Become Rich, Win the Opposite Sex, Marriage, &c. This queer, useful, and spicy book, sent by mail for 25 cents. Address EVANS & CO., Box 1,315, Philadelphia. 0

Employment at your own Homes—either sex—suitable for all times, or leisure hours. Send stamp for our terms. Large profits realized. Address, with red stamp, for circulars, DR. BRAINARD, 84 Third street, New York City. 544-7

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND
Contains the Lucky's Guide to Beauty; Useful Recipes for the Household; Home Treasure—Pamphlet; Secrets of Theatricals; the Parlor Magician; How to Make all Kinds of Liquors and Beverages; Hair Dyes; Hair Restorers; How to Detect Counterfeit Bills and Spurious Coin; the Tricks of Gamblers, Detected; Lovers' Keepers and Fatal Poisons exposed; How to make all Kinds of Powders, Rouges, Pomades, Soaps, Cosmetics, Hair Dyes, and Restorers; Whiskers and Moustaches grow; all kinds of Sensational Secrets, Tricks, Curiosities, Wonders, and Useful Practical Facts, Proverbs of all Nations, Perfect Gentleman and Lady, Etiquette, Letter Writer, &c. &c. For cents; Send order to Box 3415, Post Office, N. Y. 532-5

Gyer Fifty Secrets; numerous Jokes, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Sent free for FIFTY CENTS.
U Address, P. O. Box, 5,037, New York.

JOB MILLER, JR.
A Book containing full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Poetry, &c. Price 25 cents. Send order to P. O. Box 2,419, New York. 0

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry. Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Interesting Pamphlet containing valuable advice. Address, by WM. EARL, M.D., 499 pages. Mailed in sealed envelopes on receipt of 25 cts. Address 24 Ninth Street, New York.

DR. STRICKLAND'S FILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It does not contain Opium, Lead, or any poisonous agent. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure. For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

THOSE CURIOUS FASTENERS

25 CENTS.

Good Hooks 15 cents each. Courtship Made Easy—Bridal Etiquette—How to Win and Woo—How to Behave—Visiting Cards—Mailed for 25 cents. Price list to Write Letters Correctly—How to Become an Actor.

The Library of Love,

Three Amusing Volumes for 75 cents.

Poet's Companion, 25 cents. Parlor Theatricals, 50 cents. Parable Grimace, 30 cents. Shakspeare's Proverbs, 40 cents. Love Oracle, 30 cents; 100 Curious Puzzles, 30 cents. Parlor Pantomimes, 30 cents. Comic Recitter, 25 cents. How to Converse Correctly, 25 cents. Shakspeare Parlor Games, containing Shakspeare's Fine Pictures, Plays, Home Amusements, &c., &c., sent with any of the above W. O. WEMYSS, 376 Broadway, N. Y. 544-57

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cents; 50 Photographs of Rebel Officers for 25 cents; 100 Photographs of Actresses for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Actors for 25 cents. Address 547-51 C. SEYMOUR, Box 42, Holland, N. Y.

500 Photographs of the most Promi-nent Officers of the UNION ARMY, embracing Actresses, Opera Singers, Officers of the Army and Navy, Statesmen, Authors, Art ists, Clergymen, Rings, Quakers, &c. &c. Sent postpaid, for 25 cents. Address Box 2,418, Rochester, New York.

Ventriloquism Made Easy; and the Second Sight Mystery, as practised by Robert Heller and others, fully explained. Price 10 cents. Send orders to Box 2,418, P. O., New York. 0

BETTER TO BE BORN LUCKY, THAN RICH.

Great Premiums to be Given Away.

To make sale, and introduce our Golden Pens (60,000 boxes of golden pens, pencils, &c.), in beautiful metal boxes, to resemble gold, for sale at $1 per box, we will give, to each purchaser, a box of such pens, with a premium ticket, which will entitle a choice to draw some of the valuable premiums name below. The premiums are printed, all on separate tickets, and sealed up. Tickets are mixed, and sold promiscuously and naturally. They are then thrown in a wheel and thoroughly mixed. The envelopes will be opened, and delivered regard to choice, and sent with each box of pens. This will give all a fair chance. All persons holding any orders will be dealt with on the square. A beautiful list of Premiums to be given away!

1	Premium in Greenbacks	$1,000
1	" 7-30 Bonds	500
250	" Cash, $5 each	1,250
5	" 5 Grand Pianos, $500 each	2,500
50	" 50 S. & C. Sewing-Machines, $50 each	2,500
10	" 10 American Gold Lever Watches, $100 each	1,000
10	" 10 American Silver Lever Watches, $100 each	1,000
100	" 100 Gold Double Clasp Albums, $5 each	500
200	" 200 Chevy Albums, $2 50 each	500
20,000	" 20,000 Photograph Albums, full of portraits of Generals, $1 each	20,000
20,000	" 25,000 Pocket Picture Gallories, Photographs	10,000
2,000	" Cash, 25 cents each	500
500	" Cash, $1 each	500
6,673	" 6,673 Rose of Golden Pens	6,673
10,000	" Single Gold Pens	500

To all, 60,000 Premiums.

These Pens are warranted not to corrode, with proper usage. They are plated with a beautiful golden finish that will wear for years, and are not to compare with them. Our Golden Pen will outwear a dozen common gold pens. We will send a sample dozen, by mail, neatly put up in a small box, for pocket use, upon receipt of a package of pens, $1. (Postage, extra on one cent; on 11 boxes, one cent.) Agents, free, for 10 cents, a list of Rose of Golden Pens.

Send in your orders early. All orders answered by return of mail. Address
UNION GOLDEN PEN COMPANY,
No. 26 State street, Chicago, Ill.

P. S.—Good Agents wanted. 515-8

FIRST PREMIUM.

IMPROVED

$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5

THE EMBODIMENT OF
PRACTICAL UTILITY AND
EXTREME SIMPLICITY.

Originally Patented May 13, 1862; Improvement patented June 23, 1863. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with CRIMPING attachment, a most Wonderful and Elegant Family Machine, is now ready; is SIMPLE in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and works both sides alike, sews with Beautiful Even Thread of ALL KINDS. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making 16 stitches to each evolution of the wheel. Will Gather, Hem, Ruffle, Quilt, Bind, Braid, Cord, Tuck, Embroider, &c., in the strongest manlike made. Warranted not to get out of order for three years. It has taken the Premium at New York and other STATE FAIRS, and received the highest premium at the Pennsylvania Fair, and at those who have seen THEM. The only LOW PRICE Machine in the market that has received a PREMIUM. All others at the same price are INFRINGERS.

"The beautiful Machine makes the Running Stitch at the rate of seventy stitches a minute."—Frank Leslie's.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like sewing by hand."—N. Y. Tribune.

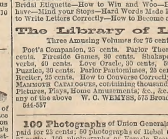
Single Machines, all complete, sent to any part of the country per Express, packed in box with printed directions, on receipt of price, $5. Sole delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted everywhere. Circular containing Liberal Inducements sent free.

Address all orders to
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
U Office, 122 Nassau Street, N. Y.

"Psychomancy"—How either sex may fascinate and win the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple and harmless moment will can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free to all. Sent for 25 cents, together with a guide to the art married of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Illustrated. 100,000 copies already sold. Address
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

EVANS' TOILET GEMS,
Consisting of Diamond, Emerald, Ruby, Regal Azure, Gold and Silver Powders. These gems are sprinkled in the hair, and present a glittering and brilliant appearance. For balls, parties, and evening gatherings, they are elegant and fashionable. Sold only at HUNT & CO.'S, Perfumers, 138 Seventh Street, Philadelphia. Sample box of either kind sent by mail for $1 15; enclosed in letter, $1 00. Circulars free.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?



IMY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of price.
R. W. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Book of Receipts, 40 pages, with estimates &c. Address's BEACHE & CO., 718 Broadway, N. Y. U

A Rare Method of Weaning at All the various games of Cards, Dice, &c., sent free. Address Cards $1 per pack, or $2 per dozen. Address W. L. CRAWFORD, Manufacturer of Playing Cards, No. 64 and 67 Nassau street, New York. U.

50 cent SAMPLE, sent free, with terms, for any one, to show size and style of the best hoop skirt line. Address LA MONTE, BAYAUOU & CO., No. 31 Broadway, New York. 534-7

Guide to Beauty. 100 pages. Mailed for 25c. Address C. JENNISON, Box 5,071, P. O., New York. U

DR. STRICKLAND'S SKILLFUL COUGH BALSAM is confined to such Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption and all Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle. 524-9

Short-Hand Without a Master.
By which Lectures, Sermons, Speeches, Trials, etc., may be obtained in a few hours. Sixty-first edition, with Engravings. Price 25 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 2,410, New York. U

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY, ST. NICHOLAS BLOCK,
Photographic Materials,
STEREOSCOPIC GOODS,
Wax Vivys, Scenery, Groups, etc., etc.

Photo Albums, great assortment. Cartes de Visite of noted persons, etc., etc., etc. French, English and American novelties. U

An Album for Thirty Cents! NEW! BEAUTIFUL! EXQUISITE! CHEAP! A beautiful Gold Metallic Album, containing four (4) Photographs in metal frames, and HIGHLY PERFUMED, opening with Spring Clasp, neat, compact, for 30 cents. Address CALVIN, WILLIS & CO., No. 167 Broadway, N. Y. U

"FANDANGLE."
Gentlemen, send for a "Fandangle," which will make such fine whiskers grow that Rebellion will be over saw. Price 25 cents. Address, with stamp, ALLEN & CO., Box 201, Boston. 543-6

"FANDANGLE."
Ladies, send for a "Fandangle," and gratify your curiosity for the Fun of the thing. Address, with stamp, ALLEN & CO., Box 201, Boston. 543-6

WONDERFULLY STRANGE!

MADAME M. H. FERREDAULT,
Who has astonished the scientific classes of Paris and London, has now permanently located herself at Albany, N. Y. Madame Ferredault, by the use of her wonderful instrument, known as the Horoscope, guarantees to produce a likeness and picture of the future husband or wife of the person, together with the date of marriage, leaving no room for disbelief. Her office hours are morning, afternoon and evening. Madame Ferredault will send, when desired, her Horoscope to any person up-to-date in what it purports to be. By stating age, length of complexion, color of hair and eyes, and inclosing $2 50 cents, and stamped envelope, addressed to yourself, you will receive the Horoscope return mail. Address
MADAME M. H. FERREDAULT,
642-51o No. 3 Howard St, Albany, N. Y.

A CURIOSITY!!

Free to All. A Rare Treat.

Gentlemen, do not fail to send a two cent stamp, and receive a GREAT PAPER, replete with the choicest literature and rare illustrations. Free.
CHARLES E. MACKEY,
U 181 Nassau street, New York.

COLORED CARDS IN VISITE
FIFTY CENTS PER DOZEN.

I will send upon receipt of 67 cents 12 Cartes de Visite of French Grisettes in different positions, or the same for 50 cents in currency. 543-8 T. ALLUS, 61 Nassau street, New York.

Royal Havana Lottery.
Official Drawing of February 14th, 1866.

No. 29,035	Prize	$100,000
No. 15,735	"	50,000
No. 19,217	"	10,000
No. 12,217	"	10,000
No. 4,210	"	5,000
No. 29,220	"	5,000

Before the 1st of April.
Prizes paid in gold. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for Doubloons, Gold and all kinds of Gold and silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers, 16 Wall st., N. Y.

Something New.
For Agents and Dealers to sell. 20 Novel and Useful Articles; profits large. Send stamp for circular.
U. STOCKWELL & CO.,
133 Nassau street, N. Y.

Beauty—Hunt's Bloom of Roses.
A charming, delicate and perfect natural color to the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; highly recommended for real and natural beauty. Price $1 18 cents by mail, securely packed, from operation. HUNT & CO.,
U 138 South Seventh street, Philadelphia.

$1,500 PER YEAR! We want agents everywhere to sell our Celebrated Lock Stitch Family Machines. Three new kinds. Under and upper feed. Stitch alike on both sides. Licensed, and warranted for all paid. The only machines sold in United states for less than $40, which are fully licensed by the Inventors of Wilson, Grover & Baker, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. All other cheap machines are infringements. Circulars free. Address, or call upon SHAW & CLARK, Biddeford, Maine.

Eastrinsey Made Easy;
Or Mysteries of Making Love fully explained, with specimen Love Letters. Price 10 cents. Send orders to Box 2,410, P. O. N. Y. U

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, Rebel importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles, cheap for cash.
FRANKLIN BIRON, 27 Ann St., N. Y. 000

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. Rules contain the Mystery of Cards, how to catch fish and all kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Cordials; Counterfeit Money; Adulterations exposed; Ventriloquism Made Easy; Information of importance to the Ladies; the Language of Flowers, &c., &c. Send, securely sealed, for 25 cents. Address CRESCENT & CO., New York.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning to young men and others who suffer from Nervous Debility, etc.; supplying at the same time the means of Self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. By inclosing a postpaid, addressed envelope, any one can have it sent to him. Address, NATHANIEL MAYHEW, Esq., Lock Box 3,222, Rings County, N. Y.

UNITED STATES

PRIZE CONCERT

TO BE DRAWN AT

Crosby's Opera House,

CHICAGO, MAY 28th, 1866.

125,000 Valuable Prizes,

Valued at $492,375 25, will be presented to Ticket Holders, including

$100,000 IN GREENBACKS!

NUMBER OF TICKETS ISSUED 500,000,

PRICE $1 EACH.

This is the greatest inducement ever offered to the public, one ticket out of every four drawing a prize.

The following Prizes are a few among the many to be drawn (for full list see Circulars):

1 Gift, in Greenbacks			$30,000
1 do	do	do	10,000
1 do	do	do	5,000
1 do	do	do	4,000
1 do	do	do	3,000
1 do	do	do	2,000
25 do	do	$1,000 each	25,000
20 do	do	$900 each	18,000
20 do	do	$100 each	2,000
20 do	do	$50 each	1,000
1 do	Residence No. 832 Wabash avenue		10,000
1 do	do	981 Lake shore	8,000
1 do	do	37 Newberry street	5,000
8 do	Cottages, on Pullen, near Pullen Park		6,000
2 do	Cottages, 169 W. Liberty and 537 W. Indiana streets		6,000
2 do	Cottages, in good locality		5,000
10 do	City Lots, $500 each		5,000

The drawing will take place, after the Concert, on the Stage of the Opera House, where 10,000 persons can witness it. A Committee will be appointed by the audience to superintend the same. All purchasers and agents will be supplied with correct lists of drawing as soon as published. Parties holding tickets will retain them until after the drawing, and if their number appears in the list of drawn Numbers, they will forward their ticketsimmediately, with full direction as to the shipping of their Moneys. Tickets are for sale at most principal Hotels, Book and Music Stores in the city, and at our Office 133 Dearborn street; price $1 each; sent by mail on receipt of price and stamp for return postage.

Good and reliable Agents wanted in every Town and Village in the United States, to whom great inducements are offered.

SPECIAL TERMS OR CLUB RATES:

Any party procuring a club of five or more names for tickets and forwarding us the money for the same, will be allowed the following commission, viz:

WE WILL SEND

5	Tickets to one address for		$ 4 50
10	do	do	9 00
20	do	do	18 00
30	do	do	26 00
40	do	do	35 00
50	do	do	43 50
And $1	do	do	50 00

In every case send the name and post-office address of each separate subscriber.

Money by draft, P. O. order, express, or in registered letters, may be sent at our risk.

All communications should be addressed to

WIGGINS, BRADFORD & CO.,

133 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.

Post-Office Drawer 5,913.

REFERENCES—Hon. Wilkinson, Ex-Senator of Minnesota; Hon. Geo. V. Lawrence, M. C., of Penn.; Hon. Alex. Randall, Ex-Governor of Wis.; Hon. Wm. Mon. Montgomery, Ex-M. C., of Penn.; Hon. Major Gen. Rich, Ex-M. C., of Ind.; Hon. Ira J. Laycock, of Kansas; Hon. Wm. Lathrop, Lyons, Iowa; Hon. Hon. Joseph Knox, of Chicago; Hon. C. Grotes-Smith, of Minn.; Jacob Forsyth, Agt. M. S. R. R., Chicago, Ill.; H. Kronberg & Co., Importers of Watches, Chicago; Mumsell, Whitz & Co., New Orleans, La. o 547-500

Moerschaum Pipes Repaired.

Boiled in wax, Amber fixed on, &c., &c., at the shortest notice, and at the price less than any other in the city.

o E. BERG, 52 Nassau street, (up stairs.)

Wanted! Agents!!

$150 per month, to sell the celebrated COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING-MACHINE. Price, $18. Has greatest invention of the age. Send for descriptive Circulars. Address SECOMB & CO., Chicago, Ill., or Cleveland, O 547-500

CEDAR CAMPHOR

For Moths. Sold by Druggists everywhere, HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Boston.

ITCH! SALT ITCH! RHEUM!

Cured by REDD'S CRIMEAN OINTMENT. Price 38 cents. Send 44 cents to BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., and get a box by mail.

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

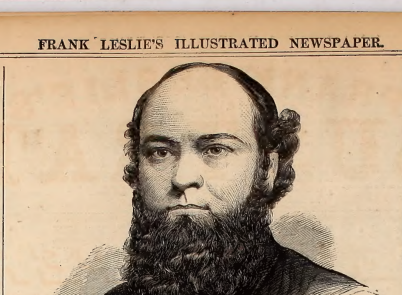
A new, practical, and original work, illustrated with 125 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost, including stables and out-buildings, with a chapter on the construction of BALLOON FRAMES.

Price, $1 50, mailed free, to any address.

GEO. E. & F. W. WOODWARD, publishers, No. 37 Park Row, New York. 545-80

FLORENCE

LOCK STITCH



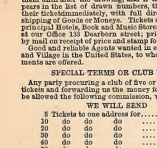
SEWING MACHINES.

Highest Premium Gold Medal

FAIR AMERICAN INSTITUTE, 1865.

The best in the World. They have the Reversible Feed Motion. They have a perfect Self-Adjusting Shuttle Tension. They make four separate and distinct Stitches on one and the same machine. They have many advantages over all others.

597-480 FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO., 505 Broadway, New York.



MISSING MAN.

MR. WILLIAM PARDEE DAVIS, LEFT HIS HOME IN RICE CITY, RHODE ISLAND, FEBRUARY 14, 1866.

SEE PAGE 14.

MECHANICAL TRIUMPH.

BRILLIANT AND UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS OF THE AMERICAN STEEL SHIRT COLLARS, CUFFS, AND STEEL SHIRT BOSOMS.

Superbly Enameled Linen-finished Steel Shirt Bosoms, Cloth Collars, 20 Styles; Stitched, $1, $1.25; Ladies' Collars and Cuffs, $1 50 each. Mailed Send price & size. BILLOW & FOSTER, 78 NASSAU St., N. Y.

ORTNER & HOULE,

2 St. James's Street, London, England, Practical Engravers, Designers and Jewelers by Special Appointment to Her Queen and the Royal Family.

MONOGRAMS AND HERALDIC DIES

for Note Paper, &c., in the most unequaled and artistic style. Orders executed on receipt of money order or reference in England. Three illuminated Specimen sheets of Monograms, &c., &c., for Albums, 5s. each. 547-500

Union Dime Savings Bank.

Canal Street, cor. of Varick.

Deposits from 10 cents to $1,000 received.

Six per c.nt. interest, free of tax.

Deposits in March draw interest from April 1st.

547-500 Assets—$1,902,226.26.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH.

If you want the best fitting, strongest, and most serviceable paper collar ever offered to the public, don't fail to purchase the

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR

The most Economical Collar ever Invented.

Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides.

The following styles are now made:

Patent REVERSIBLE Enameled PAPER COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Bank Note Paper COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Plain Linish PAPER COLLARS

To be obtained all Furnishing Goods Dealers throughout the country.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & Co., Agents, 541-520 Winthrop Square, Boston.

"A Scientific Wonder."

EUROPEAN POCKET TIME-KEEPER,

One Dollar Each.

(Patent applied for June 29th 1865.)

AN EXACT and RELIABLE POCKET TIME-KEEPER for Ladies or Gentlemen. A decidedly unique and wonderful novelty. Correctly constructed on the most approved SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES, and surrounded to REMOTE SOLAR TIME, with absolute accuracy and the utmost precision. More truthful than the most costly and elaborate Time-keepers of modern manufacture. It never can be wrong. "It requires no key," or winding up. Never runs down. It can never be too fast or too slow. It is a most remarkable article. Approved by the Press and all who have seen it. Introduced into this country from Europe, where it is also legally protected by "Letters Patent." Price for a single one, with plain or fancy White Dials, in Gold or Silver Gilt Case, only $1. Sent, postage paid, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Safe delivery guaranteed. All orders must be addressed to J. W. DELANEBRE & CO., Sole Proprietors, tfo 204 and 206 Broadway, N. Y.

WHISKERS and MUSTACHES forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using DR. SEVIGNE'S RESTAURATEUR. Co. PILLIERE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, P. O. DRAWER 31, TROY, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 542-540

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 556 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $80 each. 0538-45

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlements, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. E. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of HORACE GREELEY, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune

"It is one of the most extensive private tracts, to an almost ideal perfect position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of live this of the Western prairies."

To all wanting Farms.

$7 FINE WATCHES $7

AT OLD PRICES.

English Silver Watches - -	$ 5, 8, $10
Pure Silver Hunting Lepines - -	$12 Each.
Fine 18 Karat Gold-Plated Watches	$12, $15, $20.
Fancy Compass and Thermometer Watches - - - -	$16, $20.
Silver Hunting Levers - - -	$20, $25.
Ladies' Gold Enameled Watches	$20, $15 to $75.
Coin Silver American Levers - -	$30.

All kinds of Good Watches, low.

CATELY BROTHERS, Importers,

tfo 102 Nassau street, N. Y.

ITCH. (WHEATON'S) ITCH.

Salt Rheum. OINTMENT. Salt Rheum.

Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cure Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 Cents; by sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, Mass., will be forwarded free by mail. For sale by all Druggists. 541-500

BEAUTY.—Autumn Glow, Crimson, and Silken CURLS produced by the use of Professor DR. BARRY'S FRISER LA CURLEUSE. One application warrants it to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy, massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price, by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ, & CO., Chemists, P. O. DRAWER, 31, TROY, N. Y. sole Agents for the United States. 542-540

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S

AGRAFFE PIANOS.

101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. tfo

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S

LABOR-SAVING SOAP.

This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the finest delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for hard ess, which will not shrink after being washed with this Soap. It may be used in hard or salt water. It will remove paint, grease, tar and stains of all kinds. One pound warranted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions scent with each bar for making three gallons handsome soft soap from one pound of this Soap. Each bar is wrapped in a circular containing information for the use of every family. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take nowhere.

B. T. BABBITT,

Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71 and 74 Washington St, New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP. Fifty per cent. saved by using B. T. BABBITT'S PURE AND CONCENTRATED POTASH or READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common potash, and superior to any other saponifier or ley in the market. Put up in one pound cans, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, 12 pounds, and 18 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making hard or soft soap. One pound can will make 15 gallons of soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in the market.

B. T. BABBITT,

Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St, New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS or Cooking Soda. Put up in one pound packages with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common flour bread. Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington street, New York.

50 PER CENT SAVED BY USING B. T. BABBITT'S BEST YEAST POWDER. Each Biscuit or any kind of Cake may be made with this "Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No saleratus is required when sweet milk is used. Nos. 64 to 74 Washington st., New York. o

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE!

We are in want of a few responsible Agents in every Town and Village in the United States, to sell Certificates of Shares in the National Prize Distribution!

The Agency can be conducted without interfering with other business, or it will give any one permanent employment, without capital required. Reputable Agents who canvass for us are sure or being liberally compensated. Send stamp (if convenient) for Specific terms to Agents, and address

L. M. HARRIS & CO.,

Managers National Distribution,

547-500 Boston, Mass.

"Will Power!"—To acquire Self-Control; to conquer Habit; to attain health and strength, and to avoid vices—a better life! Your case considered, are invited to address, L. C. W., in care No. 8,843, General Post, New York. 545-70

TO CURE

Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL and Disorders arising from excesses, use

SMOLANDER'S

BUCHU.

Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York; and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents. 533-470

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 60 cts. THREE of different powers for $1. Address

500e F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

ROGERS' FRAGRANT ODONTOLINE

FOR THE TEETH

For Sale by Druggists, Fancy Goods Dealers and Perfumers.

o

FUN! ADAMS' JEWS HARP!

Send Five cents to Drawer 5,070, Chicago, Ill., and receive, by return mail, Adams' "Jews Harp," which is something that will please you. o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 186- by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 548 – VOL. XXII.] NEW YORK, MARCH 31, 1866. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 19 WEEKS $1 00.

The Paris Universal Exposition of 1867.

THE monotony of Congressional debate was very pleasantly and, it is to be hoped, usefully broken, on the 14th, by Gen. Banks, in a speech on the proposed great Exposition, or World's Fair, to be held in Paris next year. In his capacity as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the House of Representatives, Gen. Banks reported a series of joint resolutions to carry out the previous acceptance by Congress of the invitation of the French Government to the United States to take part in the Exposition. They provide for the appointment of 10 Commissioners to represent the United States, and appropriate $100,000 for their salaries and other necessary and incidental expenses. They also authorize the employment of one or more government vessels for the transportation, free, of the products and articles intended for exhibition.

Gen. Banks supported the resolutions in a speech, as already intimated, of great interest and eloquence, and which elicited the observation from Mr. Conkling that "it was one good to hear, and of a kind, unfortunately, not often heard in Congress now-a-days." The House paid the speaker the compliment of unanimously suspending its rules limiting the time in which a member may speak, to enable him to complete his remarks, which were listened to by a full house and crowded galleries with deepest attention. Gen. Banks pictured concisely but clearly the great resources of our country, and showed how their exhibition in Europe would necessarily react in our favor. React not precisely in the same direction with the exhibition of our strength and elasticity during the late civil war, but in showing to the world that we are as much to be respected for our industry, skill and intelligence, as for our power on land and sea. He showed that by placing before the people of Europe the varied products of our soil, and the appliances of our arts, we should attract more and more that emigration which has contributed so much to our wealth, not alone in the augmentation of our supply of labor and skill, but in actual capital, of which almost every continental emigrant is the possessor. Having shown our capacity as a great power, and our determination to be a great nation politically, with a firm and stable government, it only remains for us to show that we have the means and the purpose to be in the mechanic and fine arts, in the production of raw materials, in our mines and our commerce, not alone second to no country in the world, but in all these respects, and in all that goes to constitute a prosperous and civilized state, the very first.

It may at first seem, from the vote of 70 ayes to 65 noes by which the joint resolutions were carried, that the popular branch of the National Legislature did not adequately comprehend the advantages which would accrue to us from an a proper representation in the great Paris Fair. A few, perhaps, of those who voted in the negative may have been actuated by a kind of Chinese or Japanese exclusivism and conceit, and a few others by a sincere conviction that in the present condition of our finances, not even so small a sum as one hundred thousand dollars should be expended for any purpose, if it could be avoided. But the larger part of the dissentients were men who acted under a strong feeling of dissatisfaction with France, and of hostility to the offensive policy of the French Emperor in Mexico. They think that our dissatisfaction in this respect has not been adequately expressed, and would neglect no opportunity of signifying to the Tuileries that the American people are impatient spectators of European encroachments on this continent. So strong is this feeling in the House, that a motion that no part of the appropriation should be expended until after the evacuation of Mexico by the French came very near carrying, and probably would have carried, if the mover had succeeded in effecting a call of the roll. It is better as it is. The French people, and above all, the European people, whom we shall reach and whose attention we shall attract through the proposed Exhibition, have no interest in or sympathy with the dreams or purposes of the French Emperor. They will learn, from the proper display of our products and the results of our industry, that concerning us, which has been and is steadily disguised from them by the publicists who write in the interest of monarchy and imperialism. By such a display we shall challenge their admiration, earn their respect, and attract to our shores the very men who will be foremost to assist us, if the occasion should arise, to repel foreign aggression or chastise foreign insolence.

There is little doubt that the resolutions will pass the Senate, receive the Presidential sanction, and become a law. The appointment of Commissioners rests with the President and Senate, and it is to be hoped the power will be exercised irrespective of all partisan considerations. The salary of each Commissioner, $1,000, is happily so small, that it will not be likely to attract the spoilsmen. Indeed, it is simply nominal; for no person of requisite ability and position to adequately perform the duty of Commissioner could expect to spend less than four times this sum. We regard the appointment as simply honorary, and the honor should be conferred where it will be appreciated and likely to confer greatest benefit on the country.

It is to be regretted that this action of Congress comes so late, for according to the original programme, all applications for admission to the Exhibition were to be made before the 1st of March of this year, although the time for forwarding articles remains open until the 1st of December next. We presume, however, that the time within which applications may be admitted will be somewhat extended. This is desirable, so far as we are concerned, in order to have anything like an adequate representation on our part. The fact that articles may be sent out free in a TERRIBLE DISASTER AND SUFFERING NEAR TWIN LAKE STATION, DACOTAH TERRITORY—A COMPANY OF U. S. TROOPS LOST IN THE SNOW.

Government vessel will stimulate many to become exhibitors who would not otherwise be desirable to be such. Information on all matters connected with the Exhibition may be obtained by addressing: "United States Agent for the Paris Universal Exposition, No. 40 Park Row, New York."

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, MARCH 31, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be Addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE—We have no travelling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are impostors.

The Jury Question.

We recur to this subject, not alone because of its intrinsic importance, but because some of the views we expressed have been combated in quarters entitled to respect. In our number of the 17th inst., we published a letter from "G," and some of his strictures on our first article we proceed now to consider in the same spirit of courtesy which characterizes his letter, feeling sure that a candid examination of both sides of the question cannot fail to do good, even though a perfect agreement of opinion should not result from the discussion.

We may frankly concede to "G" that trial before a wise and impartial judge, under whatever form or name he may sit, would be preferred by many nations, and more than this, that justice would be as substantially administered, in most cases, by such a system, as by that now in vogue. The radical defects of trial by jury are palpable enough, and have long since engaged the attention of jurists. But we take it for granted that in a free country the right of a trial by jury can never be safely relinquished by the people, and the question we started with was not how juries may be superseded, but how their mode of action may be reformed. Let us come to this: is thus reduced to much narrower limits than a full consideration of all the points of his letter would have allowed, and we can this more fairly deal with his remarks on the ground that juries adopt to arrive at their decisions.

Juries are selected indiscriminately from all classes of our citizens. None are exempt except on the plea of age or infirmity. Does it not follow, therefore, that the objection to submitting complex or difficult cases to their decision, founded on the incapacity of the majority, is one "G" states it, of nine or ten out of twelve, to understand or appreciate the facts, strikes at the very foundation of the rule of the majority? If the majority of our citizens in the proportion of three to one, or four to one, or twenty to one, are "creatures of impulse, prejudice, or passion," incapable of reasoning correctly, how can the decisions of this country be safely entrusted to their judgments? Juries are restricted to judging of facts, and "G" thinks that their average capacity is unable to do this fairly with these. The use of this average capacity we commit the solution of the complex questions of finance, of political economy, of the relations of the States—in short, of the Government of the country, and on all these the grand jury of the people passes its verdict, and who will question that it is, in the main, right? We are far from wishing to advance any ad captandum argument, but we conceive that "G" proves too much, and in his condemnation of juries, places the intellect of the country too low.

"G" says that the decision by a majority would not work well. We reply that in Scotland it has and does work well, and as we stated before, the trial of a commission to be formed into this and kindred subjects was in favor of its introduction into English practice. We cannot for a moment suppose that "G" takes the accurate logical capacity of our jurymen below that of those countries, and though lawyers would, no doubt, prefer that their arguments should be weighed and sifted by a judicial mind, trained in the same groove as their own, "G" will not be able to persuade the public that questions of fact are not best left to the opinions of men taken from the ordinary affairs of life, and restrained neither by the technical rules of law nor official routine and prejudice.

We have not space here, neither is it necessary, to go into the details of the origin or history of jury trial in England and Scotland, differing as they do in the two countries. It is, however, to the point to state that, from many causes, the trial by jury in civil cases has never been popular in the latter country, while in criminal cases it has always prevailed there. In fact, so inconvenient was the practice of enforced unanimity found—in civil cases—that in 1854 a change was made, and a proviso was introduced that, after six hours' deliberation, a verdict returned by nine out of twelve jurymen should be effectual. This would, we think, do away with the objections fully stated by "G," but as for from obviating the force of his argument, drawn from the unsystematic and illogical debates carried on in the jury-room, we see in these only the honest and laborious efforts of untutored minds to do substantial justice between man and man. Where justice fails, it is "where the jury could not agree and were discharged," and although the heavy expense, delay and vexation of a new trial; and any attempts to remove this grievance, while preserving the safe-guard of the jury system itself, are worthy of the serious attention of every one. We are sure the people of this country will never consent to cut the tree down in order to prune it.

What is the meaning of so many fires in cotton warehouses, not only in this city but all over the country? During the last year cotton has been destroyed by fire to an immense extent, on a scale not in the least warranted by the experience of the past. In this city we have had several such fires, involving a loss of millions of money, and their origin is enveloped in a mystery that all the fire-marshals and detectives are unable to unravel. In one case the warehouse and the fire had been smoldering for days before it was discovered, and when first seen it was by the glare of the flames, which had burst into a vivid red hot. In some cases these great warehouses have not only been under the special surveillance of the police, but of private watchmen, who have failed to discover the danger until too late. Some theorists contend that it is spontaneous combustion, a theory that is unsupported by facts, as cotton has been known to take fire, not by itself alone, but when brought in contact with substances, in which, however, these circumstances are, science has not yet fully determined. It may occur through some peculiar condition of cotton; but if so, it is strange that no one has entered at once upon the subject, that we may guard ourselves against a perpetual recurrence of such disasters. Under the present mystery, there are the result of cotton speculations which nothing but a fire will set right—cotton speculators can understand it—that is doubly mysterious that an inquiry should be made. Let us have a searching investigation.

On an evening of last week, a meeting was called at the rooms of the Union League to which a large number came—a full house. The meeting drew about 30 of the members, who for a couple of hours did duty eloquently on their own behalf, and failed to do so much as touch the public ones. They admitted the subject of gas, as handled by the different companies in this city, to be a swindle, but would only, when the time came for action, refer it to a committee, who are to report at the next meeting what is to be done. There is no doubt this is a step in the right direction, and if the Loyal League Club will only take hold of the subject in earnest, they will do something that will entitle them to the gratitude of the whole city. There is a bill now before the Legislature to incorporate a new company, under the title of "The United Gas Company," the avowed object being to combine its profits so as to give the best possible light, and to the consumer to get all benefits over that. The plan sounds good, and if there is no job in it, we cannot see how it can fail to prove no better than help it along through the opposition of the old monopolists.

A PROPOSITION is now pending in the Legislature to incorporate the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The names of a large number of prominent citizens appear as corporators, and there is no doubt the Society would do a good work. The ingenuity of man is never sure to prevent the glaring acts of cruelty to animals that are now constantly seen in the city, so it appears to very properly that a legal alternative argument is needed. The unwarranted abuse of horses, the practice of driving butcher carts through the streets, the cruelties to calves and sheep hanging half unconscious from cart, and the many kindred acts of cruelty that now shock the sensibilities of humanity can no longer be tolerated. It is a relic of barbarism that ought not to disgrace the metropolis of an enlightened people. Societies similar to the proposed have long been in existence in London and other transAtlantic cities, and New York should not be behind its cosmopolitan in any humane movement.

THE city of Springfield, Ohio, is doing a rushing business in the Mayor line. The Common Council lately undertook to kick out their old Mayor, Snyder, and put one Zaymon in his place. Snyder, not intending they shall have a big thing on him, sticks fast to the emblems of authority and office, refusing to budge, and the papers have had advertise for business in the Springfield Republic:

"A NEW BROOM SWEEPS CLEAN."

JAMES TREMBLY, Mayor of the City of Springfield, O. Office in the basement of the City Council.

may be found at regular hours at the Council Room, in the City Hall building.

"Business is Business, and Must be Attended to."

Ear a new now dollar and Cay feed just received.

And then comes Snyder:

"NEW BEE, NONE HERDS, AND NOT ARE REMOVED."

A Session of the Common Council will be held at the old stand.

The occupant of the low-breaking portion of community is respectfully solicited.

Business done with the "old, original, reliable" City Docket and Seal

A BILL is under consideration at Albany, which proposes that any person, not a resident of our State, who shall sell anything in this city on account of a non-publish, shall take out a license—price $200—or be fined $300 for each offence. If anything can be more absurd than this, we would like at once to hear of it. New Jersey or Connecticut, in their worst days of endeavoring to make business cities from other States who stood their ground, could not pay their governmental expenses, never conceived anything quite as bad, for we will not see the citizens of New York so to believe that they have the hand in so gross a movement. If such a law is carried, we shall hope to see retaliation from other States, to demand passports from New Yorkers, and forbid them all rights of citizenship. This is State rights with a vengeance.

As some of the most fearful part of the Fenian agitation is progression on the other side of the water, we cut this from the London Telegraph of March 1. It is only an opening in the terrible hell that Fenians are inaugurating:

"There are two rather sad stories come out of the government action in the suppression. You remember a man named Clarke, a few weeks ago, in the street in this city, Two men, acquaintances of his, called for him, asked him to take a walk, and a shot him. He died the next day. (It reminds one of the Italian assassinations, mutatis mutandis, rather through Florence.) The true story of the tragedy is said to Clarke was a Fenian, and lived in Brooklyn. He lived in a street where the government discovered the cartridges, and shortly after he was noticed by his co-conspirators to have plenty of money. In this case one can see that it was supposed that the fire had been smoldering for days before it was discovered, and when first seen it was by the glare of the flames, which had burst into a vivid red hot. In some cases these great warehouses have not only been under the special surveillance of the police, but of private watchmen, who have failed to discover the danger until too late. Some theorists contend that it is spontaneous combustion, a theory that is unsupported by facts, as cotton has been known to take fire, not by itself alone, but when brought in contact with substances, in which, however, these circumstances are, science has not yet fully determined. It may occur through some peculiar condition of cotton; but if so, it is strange that no one has entered at once upon the subject, that we may guard ourselves against a perpetual recurrence of such disasters. Under the present mystery, there are the result of cotton speculations which nothing but a fire will set right—cotton speculators can understand it—that is doubly mysterious that an inquiry should be made. Let us have a searching investigation.

On an evening of last week, a meeting was called at the rooms of the Union League to which a large number came—a full house. The meeting drew about 30 of the members, who for a couple of hours did duty eloquently on their own behalf, and failed to do so much as touch the public ones. They admitted the subject of gas, as handled by the different companies in this city, to be a swindle, but would only, when the time came for action, refer it to a committee, who are to report at the next meeting what is to be done. There is no doubt this is a step in the right direction, and if the Loyal League Club will only take hold of the subject in earnest, they will do something that will entitle them to the gratitude of the whole city. There is a bill now before the Legislature to incorporate a new company, under the title of "The United Gas Company," the avowed object being to combine its profits so as to give the best possible light, and to the consumer to get all benefits over that. The plan sounds good, and if there is no job in it, we cannot see how it can fail to prove no better than help it along through the opposition of the old monopolists.

A PROPOSITION is now pending in the Legislature to incorporate the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The names of a large number of prominent citizens appear as corporators, and there is no doubt the Society would do a good work. The ingenuity of man is never sure to prevent the glaring acts of cruelty to animals that are now constantly seen in the city, so it appears to very properly that a legal alternative argument is needed. The unwarranted abuse of horses, the practice of driving butcher carts through the streets, the cruelties to calves and sheep hanging half unconscious from cart, and the many kindred acts of cruelty that now shock the sensibilities of humanity can no longer be tolerated. It is a relic of barbarism that ought not to disgrace the metropolis of an enlightened people. Societies similar to the proposed have long been in existence in London and other transAtlantic cities, and New York should not be behind its cosmopolitan in any humane movement.

THE city of Springfield, Ohio, is doing a rushing business in the Mayor line. The Common Council lately undertook to kick out their old Mayor, Snyder, and put one Zaymon in his place. Snyder, not intending they shall have a big thing on him, sticks fast to the emblems of authority and office, refusing to budge, and the papers have had advertise for business in the Springfield Republic:

"A NEW BROOM SWEEPS CLEAN."

JAMES TREMBLY, Mayor of the City of Springfield, O. Office in the basement of the City Council.

may be found at regular hours at the Council Room, in the City Hall building.

"Business is Business, and Must be Attended to."

Ear a new now dollar and Cay feed just received.

And then comes Snyder:

"NEW BEE, NONE HERDS, AND NOT ARE REMOVED."

A Session of the Common Council will be held at the old stand.

The occupant of the low-breaking portion of community is respectfully solicited.

Business done with the "old, original, reliable" City Docket and Seal

A BILL is under consideration at Albany, which proposes that any person, not a resident of our State, who shall sell anything in this city on account of a non-publish, shall take out a license—price $200—or be fined $300 for each offence. If anything can be more absurd than this, we would like at once to hear of it. New Jersey or Connecticut, in their worst days of endeavoring to make business cities from other States who stood their ground, could not pay their governmental expenses, never conceived anything quite as bad, for we will not see the citizens of New York so to believe that they have the hand in so gross a movement. If such a law is carried, we shall hope to see retaliation from other States, to demand passports from New Yorkers, and forbid them all rights of citizenship. This is State rights with a vengeance.

As some of the most fearful part of the Fenian agitation is progression on the other side of the water, we cut this from the London Telegraph of March 1. It is only an opening in the terrible hell that Fenians are inaugurating:

"There are two rather sad stories come out of the government action in the suppression. You remember a man named Clarke, a few weeks ago, in the street in this city, Two men, acquaintances of his, called for him, asked him to take a walk, and a shot him. He died the next day. (It reminds one of the Italian assassinations, mutatis mutandis, rather through Florence.) The true story of the tragedy is said to Clarke was a Fenian, and lived in Brooklyn. He lived in a street where the government discovered the cartridges, and shortly after he was noticed by his co-conspirators to have plenty of money. In this case one can see that it was supposed that the reward for betraying the secret, when in fact he had only received money from the government which he and was simply 'think of cash,' because he had received money from the government which he and was shot he gave the police, when dying, a long and circumstantial story, which he walked out with him, and of the circumstances of the murder. The account of the murder, which was given by Clarke, was also, flying him to screen the brotherhood. Knowing he was dying, and that his sympathy suspected him, the poor fellow still 'died game.' Another story is of Captain Dowling, who, when he found himself wounded in his first fright he offered to turn informer to save his life, but when he came to the table to testify, he then refused to say one word against his former associates. He was thereupon tried, and, as the fate, he possessed; he was thereupon tried, and sentenced to five years' penal servitude. Before his wife and family, his younger children were lying ill in a fever hospital, and this was left so, in addition to his other misfortunes, he turned out of employment because the workmen threatened to leave the employment of the 'informer' were expelled. All this accumulation of misery Gill's brave wife has had to bear, to betray the Fenians, and yet the poor devil faced it all."

WHEN we meet with such paragraphs as the following, which we cut from an Arkansas paper, we feel that there is somebody entitled to a police duty in that quarter, no matter whether it be United States soldiers or Confederates:

"We are informed by a military gentleman, one of whom served under Morgan, fought at Shiloh, and was in the Vicksburg campaign, that on the Arkansas river.' The weapons used were bowie-knives. Major Rowe's command, it is said, has constructed to cut off his opponent's (Colonel Zaymon's) nose, slash his face terribly, and finally put out one of his eyes. Then he was satisfied."

THE military bill, which went through the Senate on Wednesday, provides that the army of the United States is to consist, in time of peace, of 54,000 men, formed into 45 regiments of cavalry, and 50 regiments of infantry. Eight of the infantry regiments, and in accordance with an amendment moved by Mr. Wade, two of the cavalry regiments are to be composed of colored men. An infantry regiment has, besides the officers, 1,000 men. These may be increased, at the discretion of the President, to 1,000. Our peace establishment, therefore, would number from 95,000 to about 70,000 men.

THE War of the American Revolution closed about the middle of November, 1782, and of all the many thousands who once figured as Revolutionary soldiers on the pension rolls of the Government, but three remain—William Hutchins, of Penobscot, Me., and Samuel Cook, of Clarendon, Orleans County, N. Y. Several have died within the last year; and when the last one shall die closes the closing of the books. We trust the Government will promptly announce the fact by a proclamation of military honors to the last man. But the death of the last Revolutionary soldier will be fitly and generally commemorated.

THE Chilleans seem to be in high favor with English capitalists. The loan of $2,500,000 which was issued upon the Chilean credit was taken at a premium of four to two and a half per cent., and what is most significant, eight times the sum asked for was offered. As all know, Spain could not borrow a dollar in any money market in the world, on account of her practical repudiation of all the foreign loans she had formerly negotiated.

A FRENCH official return (unpublished) shows that the Mexican expedition has cost France, up to the 31st of December, 1865, no less a sum than 27,000,000 sterling. The losses in the French army during the same time have been 1,100, viz; killed, 2,819; died from wounds or effects of climate, &c., 4,028; disabled for life, 3,167; grand total, 11,444.

AMERICAN literature has sustained a severe loss in the death of Jared Sparks, LL.D., who died at Cambridge, Mass., on the 14th of March, of pneumonia. Mr. Sparks graduated from Harvard College in 1815, and was for a time a tutor in that institution from 1819 to 1823. His principal literary monument is the "Library of American Biography," of which he was the editor, and to which he was the principal contributor. His Lives of Washington and Franklin, accompanying editions of their works, are models of concise and appreciative biography. It has been stated that more than 600,000 copies of Mr. Sparks's books have been printed. A Boston contemporary remarks of him, with justice and discrimination:

"His industry was untiring; his intellect vigorous and active; his spared neither time nor labor in his researches, and gave the results of them to the public in a style of great clearness and accuracy of expression. He was governed by the highest principles. He was full of kindliest affections, and ever manifested in private the most genial qualities of a pure and good heart. He was loved as much as he was esteemed, and the respect felt for his abilities and his character was strengthened by a close intimacy during a long portion of his mortal nature. He has left the example of an unspotted character, the result of a cheerful Christian faith."

TOWN COSSIP.

WHAT is New York coming to?

This is a question to which citizens are beginning to ask in all seriousness, at least such of them as are capable of so consistent considering anything.

The great fault of the American people has always been want of thought, and, as a consequence, a rush into all difficulties heedlessly. By this means they lose their social and political rights, and even their business and financial castles are violated or swept away with a ruthless hand.

If this is true of the American people in general, it is especially true of New Yorkers, who are a concentrated type of their countrymen. They are so fast that they run over everything, missing, in their hurry, the most vital objects. We had hoped that the last year's terrible war we have just passed through would correct this, but the hope was fruitless, and on we go in the same way as before, if not a little worse. We are in too great a hurry to attend to our elections, and the result is that shysters and thieves slip into offices whose honest men are afraid to offer themselves. We are in too great a hurry, when these men are elected, to attend to what they are doing, and, as a consequence, we are elected to any swindling degree. Shysters have free and swindles built up in our midst that match the very brood out of the working-man's mouth.

At this moment half New York is unhoused, or in about the same condition. They are struggling under the rents which landlords will not abate, and secretly looking out for new houses, while they are afraid to move for fear of losses. They are pinching stomach and back to pay the capitalist and keep above their heads, hoping for an abatement of the evil at some not very distant day; but they are hoping against hope, there will be no relief until some radical action is taken by legislative bills that shall compel somebody outside of estate, but in all necessities of life and in legislation will not come in the present disposition of the people.

We are informed that a bill will soon be brought and have made rent to help poor men, but to assist capital and protect it from the purse of legislators.

Who will be the first rich man to originate a movement against his state, and either get up proper dwellings for the poor, or, what is more to the point, set on foot a movement against the evil? We propose him that does so, greatness which shall be lasting and remembered.

Another point that is just now agitating New York is its cleanliness. Although Fifth Avenue is splendid for us, and also an excellent—still we say—observation, we cannot help but keep up from being sick. The cholera scare of last fall has brought forth a host of sewage of laws that are intended to keep us clean, and, as a consequence, we have more filth than we ever had before. Each has yet to be seen. The Commissioners, like all new brooms, seem to wish to sweep clean, and as a consequence, the streets are filled with unsightly policemen pearing into area-ways, with a note-book in one hand and a pencil in the other, and chimney-sweeps looking up chimneys, advising sanitary measures with dirty-faced children, peering into dancer-pots, and in one case arrested for not having the proper quid of soap in the gutter. This is heralded as the first arrest—we have not yet seen the second—and we can imagine the excitement and disgust of Mrs. Loughlin, of Chelsea Place, who suddenly found herself locked up in the station house for the crime she had done all her life—washed a sweet spoken. Of this "first arrest" we have no comment to make. It was, without doubt, legal, and we submit to Messrs. Brown, Knapp and Devoe, whether it is a good idea to spring these kind of traps upon a people who have never before been subjected to laws on their domestic idea of getting rid of their filth? Now that it has been done, we presume the purposes of doing so, and then leave a card printed in English, German and French, telling the necessary sanitary rules for the future, and then give the law time to grow from fines and the station house, which card it should be the part of the Commissioners each beat to keep in the kitchen of the house and inspect every month, to see that it keeps in place? This is a simple thing, but may be more effective than a fresh arrest in a week than by any other mode.

Now that the law does anything, she generally does it on a large scale, no matter what it may be. Just now she is wondering over a robbery, a mere trifle—only a million and a half of dollars. A Mr. Jones is one of these rich men who are lost in the crowd of rich men of this city. Strong, hale and well to do in business, he had an iron safe in which he usually stowed a few millions in greenbacks and bonds. Mr. Lord was no old man, over sixty, but he began to feel himself on the down-hill, and also became looking over his worldly wealth, and what little else he can cut off his executors and collect interest upon them. Mr. Lord had so much money that a million or two, more or less, was of little consequence, and accordingly he made the escape of going away and leaving his safe unlocked and open, with a million and a half of money in it. This was very perhaps unwise, at least younger than Mr. Lord, happened along between two days, and finding these bonds and greenbacks lying around loose, took care of them and has, without doubt, by the time invested them for his own benefit. The Union Signal Asylum, or Foreign Missions, or some other benevolent object. Mr. Lord in the meantime takes it coolly, and continues to eat off his own table and sleep on his own, having entered a bank in the little transaction by simply offering a reward of $10,000 for the return of the money. The robber says by the deliverers, who we have no hesitation in saying are generally successful in any affair where a large reward is offered.

It seems just now as if all the South was let loose from New York. From unofficial letters we have seen from different Southern sections since the war, as well as from their newspapers, it would be supposed that all Yankeedom was overrunning the Southern country; but if that is so, we are satisfied there is no robbery about it, but a full exchange. Here we have Southern men in no unlimited extent, but we have no way, no Southern women. In fact, we candidly believe that the last one left here, and will leave only the unsightly memories of one war in their houses long after both who went into the field and suffered from it will think of doing. Our hotels and boarding-houses are full of our reconstructed brethren, some of them, we are sorry to say, of a very bad class, and not calculated to do either this or any other community much service, they having "left their country for their country's good;" or, in other words, not being able to stay at home, have sought refuge in this great crowd. During the week, we remember to have met on Broadway three Confederate Brigadiers, one of whom was reduced to the ranks for cowardice, or something else; and another who was notably cruel and hated by his own people. We hope that our Southern brethren and sisteren will bear with the Yankee down there; for we assure them we have to bear with the blessed fire-eater—though he is not so hungry now—up here.

There is little doing that is new among the theatres; they all threaten something new, but, so far, the old attractions prevail. Wallack threatens to play, in a week or two, himself, and then to produce the new play of "Never Too Late to Mend." Lucy Rushton threatens a new spectacular musical burlesque, which shall surpass anything ever shown on the American stage. The Winter Garden threatens the last "Hamlet" matinée on the 21st inst.; and the Olympic threatens, also, a grand romantic spectacular drama.

Amid them all, it seems as if Barnum was carrying off the palm with his new play of "Israel in Egypt," and somewhat astonishing old play-goers of New York, who have been wont to look upon the Museum with indifferent eyes. They can do so no longer, for the scenery and general get-up of the new play has never been surpassed in New York. The panorama of the river Nile is grand, and the general public show their appreciation by crowding the house nightly. It is the critics we appeal to, that they may see and enjoy.

Last week we made notice of the departure from England of Mr. J. Newton Gotthold; from a letter just received we understand that Mr. Gotthold makes his first appearance in this country on the 28th inst. at Winter Garden, as Othello.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND.

THE first number of FRANK LESLIE'S CHILDREN'S FRIEND has just been published from this office, and we call attention to its handsome typographical appearance, and pleasant contents.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND is a monthly magazine, and is intended to fill the void, so long existing in this country in child literature. It is made up of stories, poems, anecdotes, etc., adapted for the infant mind, and profusely illustrated with excellent engravings. The price is $1 per annum, and we think there is no way that a child could be so well pleased for a dollar as by a years' subscription to this magazine.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—A gentleman, residing near Boston, drew the attention of the Town Council to a slough in the road as a nuisance, but no notice was taken of it. One day he found, to his amusement, that two Councilors had walked into it by accident, and were floundering about in the mire, when he addressed them thus: "Gentlemen of the Town Council of Boston—I have often petitioned to your honorable body against this slough, but I never had any attention paid to my petition. I now come forth to express my delight to see you at last moving in the matter."

—— A gentleman recently brought to the Treasury at Washington, a large bundle of partially-burned Treasury-notes for redemption. They were given to one of the lady clerks to separate and paste upon sheets, so as to determine their value. The lady reproduced nearly $2,000 more than the anxious owner had been able to do, who evinced his appreciation of her skillful dissection by the presentation of $100.

—— The Pithole (Pa.) Record states that an oil borer in that place, a few days since, struck a crevice in the rock, and, on using the sand pump, brought to the surface a live fish, about four inches long, of a brown color, and having no eyes. It was brought from a depth of 616 feet, and when placed in water and exposed to the atmosphere, expired in a few hours.

—— The San Antonio (Texas) Herald is charmed with the serene peace that prevails in that city; "With the exception of 15 or 20 fights, and the exchange of a few friendly shots, without any unfortunate results, nothing has happened of moment for two days."

—— A few days since, a farmer drove a span of horses to Schenectady, N. Y., and meeting a stranger, sold them to him for $600. The farmer took the money home, and made the unpleasant discovery two days afterward that it was all counterfeit.

—— A man, 62 years of age, while attending the funeral of his wife, at Cincinnati, who was murdered, near that city, one day last week, was arrested as the murderer. He denied all knowledge, and sought to throw the crime on some negroes, but it was pretty clearly fixed on himself.

—— A Western soldier, who has been through all the campaigns and shared in many of the fiercest battles of the war, writes from his home that "he never realized the horror of war till he got home to Indiana, and found his girl married to a stay-at-home dry-goods clerk.

—— An old gentleman was admitted to the almshouse, at Washington, who, five years ago, was a citizen of Fredericksburg, worth $10,000.

—— A girl, bound to a family at Litchfield, Montgomery county, Illinois, recently hung a little boy, in retaliation for a whipping his mother had given her.

—— Just as one John Elton had closed a most fervid exhortation for sinners to flee from the wrath to come, at one of the Baptist Churches, at New London, Conn., on Sunday night, the sheriff arrested him for stealing a minister's overcoat. After considerable lying, the overcoat was produced.

—— A lady in Pittsfield, Mass., recently brought suit against a doctor of that city for malpractice, and after six days' trial, the jury awarded her $3,000 damages.

—— There are now in the vaults of the United States Treasury about $141,000,000 in notes and coin, which is the largest sum they have ever before contained.

—— A young German girl, going to California to be married to her lover, had her nervous system so deranged by thinking about it, that when she landed at San Francisco she was a raving maniac.

—— A Connecticut Yankee is in Washington with a patent labor-saving Constitutional Amendment machine, for the use of Members of Congress, warranted to turn out 1,300 amendments per hour. He'll make a fortune.

—— There are 30,000 people in Tennessee who can neither read nor write. The Memphis Bulletin thinks that it would be well to teach them, rather than waste time in abusing the Yankees.

—— A colored militia company is being formed at Norwich, Conn.; 43 men have been enrolled, and the company will soon be full. It will be the first company of the kind in the State.

—— The floor of the Presbyterian Church, at Greenbush, N. Y., "settled" last Sunday, during a funeral service, and caused great consternation, but it was vacated before any damage resulted.

—— A little boy recently died at West Bethel, Maine, from playfully piling stones on his stomach while lying down.

—— During the last two years the Government has realized from sales of confiscated and abandoned cotton, sugar, etc., in the State of Mississippi, over $6,000,000.

—— James Gordon was lately conveyed to the Toronto (Canada) hospital, to have a surgical operation performed, but dreaded it so much that he cut his throat and died.

—— Amongst the prominent skaters at the reservoir pond, near Baltimore, this winter, was Mrs. Henry E. Johnson, late Miss Harriet Lane, niece of ex-President Buchanan.

—— The Tishomingo (Miss.) Patriot says it has had the melancholy pleasure of announcing the death of five newspapers in Corinth.

——The new town of Reno, Pa., is without a grog-shop, and by the terms of the contracts for the sale of lots and leases, the purchasers or lessees are prohibited from selling, or permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage on the premises, and a violation of this clause of the contract works a forfeiture of the ownership or occupancy of the premises.

—— A lady in Cleveland, Ohio, the other day, was very affectionate to her husband, and at supper handed him a cup of tea, which he declined to drink, but handed it to one of his children. Thereupon the woman sprang forward and seized the cup, thus saving the child's life. The cup contained arsenic. An arrest and trial of course follows.

—— Of all the "smart" instances of Yankee ingenuity, perhaps the smartest is the trick played on the authorities of New Brunswick, after their recent offer of $3 for the snout of every bear killed in the colony. A large number of snouts were recently brought in, chiefly by Indians, but in the course of time it was discovered that most of the trophies were imitations only, cunningly manufactured of India-rubber and gutta-percha, by clever manipulators in the State of Maine, who sold them to the Indians at half a dollar each.

—— The oldest stove, probably, in the United States, is one which warms the hall of Virginia's Capitol in Richmond. It was made in England, and sent to Virginia in 1770, and warmed the House of Burgesses for 60 years before it was removed to its present location, where it has been for 30 years. It has survived three British monarchs; has been cotemporaneous with four kingly monarchies, two republics and two Imperial governments of France. The great Republic of America has been torn by internecine strife, the breaches partly healed, and still the old stove remains unmoved in the midst of all. Esto perpetua!

—— There is an old man, 77 years of age, a county pauper in Indianapolis, Ind., who a few years ago was the most popular preacher of the Baptist church in that locality, and was loved and respected for his piety. But he loved whisky, and drank it, and he is now preaching in his life a more powerful sermon to drunkards than he could ever preach verbally.

—— An effort is on foot in the Southern States to collect an endowment fund for the college of which Robert E. Lee is President, to enable the trustees to pay him such a salary as would be deemed a worthy equivalent for his pre-eminent services. Agents are at work collecting for that purpose.

Foreign.—In the cellars of Baron Rothchild's mansion, Rue Lafitte, Paris, are 24,000 bottles of every species of the wines existing at the commencement of this century, from the Lachryma Christi, which every visitor to Naples has tasted, to the purple-tinted sweet wines of the Cape; from the common wines of the Macon vineyards, to the rare vintages of Medoc. The value of this collection amounts to about $50,000.

—— Jerpoint Abbey, near Thomastown, County Kilkenny, is one of the oldest establishments in Ireland. It was founded in 1180, and richly endowed by Donagh, King of Ossory. The abbot was a Lord of Parliament. The Order of Cistercian Monks, to which it belonged, was dissolved in 1539.

—— Snowdrops and primroses had made their appearance in some parts of Dorsetshire, England, earlier this year than has been known for many years.

—— The following official telegram was only 21 hours in transmission from India to London: "Bhootan, Feb. 25.—The guns lost at Dewangiri have been restored to our officers by the Bhootan chief. The invading force will now return."

—— The correspondent of the Temps, writing from Naples, tells us that Queen Victoria has sent an autograph letter to the Pope, thanking His Holiness for the instructions he had given to his Irish clergy with regard to the Fenian insurrection.

—— The French Government, at the suggestion of the Empress, has ordered that a certain number of young girls educated at the Imperial School for Orphans of Military men at St. Denis shall be provided with places in the telegraph offices. From 25 to 30 pupils are now practicing daily on Morse's apparatus, with a view to qualify themselves.

—— Nine young Roman Catholic priests, educated at the College of the Foreign Missions in France, recently left Paris for Marseilles, whence they will proceed to Egypt, and thence to preach the Gospel in Japan, Cochin-China and Thibet.

—— A new and somewhat expensive fashion has latterly been introduced by the Empress of Austria. Her Majesty attaches a diamond to represent a dewdrop, to a natural flower, which is worn in the hair or borne in the hand as a bouquet.

—— A magnificent Hungarian mantle, trimmed and lined with ermine, is being made at Pesth, for the entry of the Empress of Austria into Hungary. It is to cost £400.

—— Green peas, asparagus, artichokes and new potatoes, such as are not often seen until a month later, have already appeared in the vegetable markets of Paris.

—— Mr. Justice Keogh and Mr. Justice Fitzgerald will receive £3,000 for their extra services as judges in the late Fenian trials by Special Commission in Ireland.

—— A private telegram from India repeats the statement that the new cotton crop is 400,000 bales less than last year, owing to injury by frost.

—— One person in every 166 in France is decorated with the Legion of Honor.

—— There is great excitement in English clerical circles in regard to the revision of the liturgy of the Established or Episcopal Church. A committee recently waited on the Archbishop of Canterbury, asking him to recommend the appointment of a Royal Commission for that purpose. He declined to interfere with it. The Establishment seems to be giving way before the charges and onslaughts of its younger and more vigorous non-conformist offspring.

—— A philosophical London cabman speaks thus of a section over which his wheels made their tracks: "If you run over a youngster down here, the folks don't say nothin', kase they have got more children and no wittles for 'em—but you just run over a goat or a kid, or a sow or a pig, and I'm blest if a mob ain't arter you in two minits!"

—— Two young English noblemen, sons of the Duke of Argyle and Earl of Belfer, have recently arrived at Port au Prince, and been presented to President Geffard. After stopping at the West India ports, they will visit this city, and make a tour through the United States.

—— A certain M. Frantz, metallurgist, and M. Henri Faure, editor of the France Medicale, have just startled the scientific world of Europe with the announcement that they have succeeded beyond all doubt in a plan of transmuting the baser metals into gold.

—— A new grand avenue is projected in London, from the Houses of Parliament to Eaton Square, 150 feet broad, at a cost of £7,000,000 sterling; but such schemes in London are not carried out as readily as in Paris.

—— Another revolt has begun in the Lebanon—this time, however, an armed opposition of the Christian tribes against the Turkish Government. The leader of the rebellion is a Maronite Christian, and the cause is said to be the imposition of heavy and unequal taxes on the mountaineers—chiefly on the tobacco plant.

—— The Dublin Freeman's Journal announces that, owing to the recent attacks made upon the police while in the discharge of their duty, and owing to the recent riot in Cuffee street, the police commissioners have issued orders for the swords recently distributed to the force to be sharpened.

—— A man named Clarke, who is supposed to have given information to the police, was entrapped by five supposed Fenians into a lonely place in Dublin, where he was ruthlessly attacked and shot in the shoulder. He died of his injuries on the following day.

—— Professor Wheatstone, of England, has made a great achievement in electro-telegraphing. With his automatic instrument he can transmit 600 distinctly legible signs or letters in a minute.

—— Slaves from Africa continue to be landed in Cuba, and one planter recently bought 100 for $80,000. The Mayor of Manzanilla, refusing to wink at the slave trade, has been assassinated.

—— The death of a Mormon Bishop is thus announced: He was 87 years old, and leaves an interesting family of 11 wives and 47 small children to mourn his death.

—— A monument is to be erected to the memory of John Brown, at Torrington, Conn. (his native place), provided funds enough can be raised for the purpose.

"PROCEED WITH THY ELEPHANT."

IN Columbiana County, Ohio, resides an old fellow renowned for his belligerent disposition, who is generally known as Friend Shavey. Born and bred a Quaker, he was long since read out of meeting on account of his quarrelsome propensities, but he still pertinaciously clings to the plain clothes and the plain language of his earlier days, possibly as a protection against the wrath which he is continually provoking by his overbearing and irritating demeanor. He is always the owner of the crossest dog in the neighborhood, the most troublesome, breachy steers, &c., and is continually in hot water with some of his neighbors in consequence of the depredations committed by his unruly live stock. A few weeks since Van Amburgh's Menagerie, traveling through Columbiana, was obliged to pass his residence. A little before daylight, Nash, the keeper of the elephant Tippoo Saib, as he was passing over the road with his elephant, discovered this pseudo-Quaker seated upon a fence by the road-side, watching a bull which he had turned out upon the road, and which was pawing, bellowing, and throwing up a tremendous dust generally. In fact, from the fury of the animal's demonstrations, one would readily have taken him for one of the identical breed that butted a locomotive off a bridge.

"Take that bull out of the way!" cried Nash, as he approached.

"Proceed with thy elephant," was the reply.

"If you don't take that bull away, he will get hurt," continued Nash, approaching, while the bull redoubled his belligerent demonstrations.

"Don't trouble thyself about the bull, but proceed with thy elephant," retorted Friend Shavey, rubbing his hands with delight at the prospect of an approaching scrimmage, the old fellow having great confidence in the invincibility of his bull, which was really the terror of the whole country around. Tippoo Saib came on with his uncouth, shambling gait; the bull lowered his head and made a charge directly upon the elephant. Old Tippoo, without even pausing in his march, gave his cow-catcher a sweep, catching the bull on the side, crushing in his ribs with his enormous tusks, and then raised him about 30 feet in the air, the bull striking upon his head as he came down, breaking his neck and killing him instantly.

"I'm afraid your bull has bent his neck a little," shouted Nash, as he passed on.

"Bent the devil," cried old Shavey, with a troubled look at his defunct bull; "thy elephant is too hefty for my beast, but thee will not make so much out of the operation as thee supposes. I was going to take my family to thy show, but I'll see thee and thy show blowed to blazes before I go one step; and now thee may proceed with thy elephant and be d——d—please," the "please" being added as Shavey took a second look at the proportions of the stalwart elephant-keeper.

THE AUTHOR OF RICHELIEU.

SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, the author of "Richelieu," chiefly resides now in Knebworth, the ancient and magnificent family seat in Hertfordshire, having in a great measure abandoned politics, and devoting himself as completely as his delicate health will permit to his literary works. He is physically a sad wreck, wan, wasted and broken. The eye alone retains its fire and brilliancy, and shines out like a diamond from a faded casket. He now needs the stimulus of opium to give him power of work, and through the night toils over some new tale in the room called "Mrs. Bulwer Lytton's," which was occupied by her in her lifetime, and which is hung round with her drawings and paintings, and other mementoes of a mother, from whom, he says, he inherited all his love of literature, and who was looked up to with the deepest love and reverence by all her children.

The feeling which dictated the character of this room is best told by the following inscription over the chimney-piece: "This room, long occupied by Elizabeth Bulwer Lytton, and containing the relics most associated with her memory, her son trusts that her descendants will preserve unaltered—Liberis virtutis exemplar."

He has, in many pursuits, achieved, if not the highest, very nearly the highest eminency of any man of his time, As a statesman he has been a member of the Cabinet, and Secretary of State for the Colonies. As an orator he has on the copyright law, and on one or two other questions, delivered orations which will always be remembered as master-pieces of eloquence. As a novelist and poet he takes the highest rank, and in the Lady of Lyons and Richelieu he has written, if not the two best plays, certainly the most popular ones of his day. In connection with Richelieu, it is a singular fact that the family of Bulwer Lytton inherited Knebworth Manor and Fort from the family of Booth. On the ancient screen hall, which remains from the time of Henry VII, and which all Americans visiting Knebworth will remember, the arms of Sir Rowland Lytton are quartered on all the panels with those of Booth, of which family, through marriage with a daughter, he was heir; and all the upper compartments of the stone mullion windows are emblazoned with the arms of Booth.

SECRET OF MAGIC.—Robert Houdon concludes his memories with a chapter of Arab miracles, which he explained. The Aissaona eat pounded glass. Houdon powdered some for himself and ate it, and he avers that his appetite for dinner was improved by the same. They walk on red hot iron with bare feet, and pass their tongues over white-hot plates of iron. Prof. Sementrici discovered that by rubbing into the skin a solution of alum evaporated to a spongy state, it was rendered insensible to the action of red hot iron. He rubbed himself with soap, and found that even the hair did not burn. He rubbed the alum into his tongue, and lapped the glowing metallic surface without pain. Houdon himself then tried passing his hands, slightly dampened, through a stream of melted iron, and found, as others have done, that it left no scar on him. An English conjuror used to thrust a sword through his body, shove a knife up either nostril to the handle, and thus spitted, sing a song. Houdon bought the secret of the invulnerable, and now divulges it. The performer was very thin. With a waist-belt he strapped his tender paunch tight down upon the vertebral column, substituted a card-board stomach for the compressed part, covered all with flesh-colored tights; between the true and false abdomen he fastened a scabbard, covered the apertures on the sides with rosettes, placed a sponge filled with red liquid in the scabbard, and there thrust his sword, which came out covered with bogus blood, of course. The pug-nosed mountebank enjoyed a physical conformation which permitted the delicate and frightful performance.

PROBABLE CONDITION OF EARLY RACES.

THEY were ignorant of pottery, for the Esquimaux, the Polynesians, the Australians, some North and South American tribes, and many other savage races, have none even now, or at least had none until quite lately. They had no bows and arrows, for these weapons were unknown to the Australians and New Zealanders; their boats for the same reason must have been of the rudest possible character; they were naked, and ignorant of the art of spinning; they had no knowledge of agriculture, and probably no domestic animal but the dog, though here the argument is weaker, inasmuch as experience is more portable than property. It is, however, in my opinion, most probable that the dog was long the only domesticated animal. Of the more unusual weapons, such as the boomerang, blowpipe, bolas, etc., they were certainly ignorant. The sling and the throwing stick were doubtless unknown, and even the shield had probably not been invented. The spear, which is but a development of the knife point, and the club, which is but a long hammer, are the only things left by this line of argument. They seem to be the only natural and universal weapons of man.

We might be disposed to wonder how man was at first able to kill game; but we must remember that if man was unskillful, animals were unsuspicious. The tameness of the birds on uninhabited islands is well known; the wariness of animals and the skill of man must have increased almost pari passu. The same argument may be applied to the mental condition of savages. That our earliest ancestors could have counted to 10 is very improbable, and that man can have existed in a lower condition than that thus indicated. So long, indeed, as he was confined to the tropics, he may have found a succession of fruits, and have lived as the monkeys do now. Indeed, according to Bates, this is the case with some of the Brazilian Indians.

"The monkeys," he says, "lead in fact a life similar to that of the Pararauate Indians."

Directly, however, our ancestors spread in temperate climate, this mode of life would become impossible, and they would be compelled to seek their nourishment, in part, at least, from the animal kingdom. Then, if not before, the knife and the hammer would develop into the spear and the club.

CHILDREN'S HAIR.

THOUGH medical writers, in the part of their several works that relates to the nursery, are explicit enough with regard to the general physical management of children, it is remarkable that so little is said in regard to the course of treatment proper for the hair and scalp. Now, this reticence cannot be the result of indifference to the state of the hair, nor to the operation of physiological laws, with which every medical student is familiar. I can assign no more satisfactory reason for the fact above stated than this: The popular impression that the scalp is exempt from the operation of those laws of cleanliness, which everybody admits affects the rest of the body's surface, is entertained also by the learned; or else the latter believe that they have but a choice of evils—the least being to let the scalp alone, while the greater would be to keep that surface thoroughly clean, at the expense of constant trouble to the hair; so that old, bad custom of harsh combing and brushing, and the copious use of oil and grease, still constitute the practice of mothers and nurses, with the permission and implied approbation of the family physician.

How many cases of serious disease of the scalp in infancy and childhood are directly or indirectly the result of this objectionable treatment it would be impossible to decide; but from the marvelous delicacy of the integuments at that tender age, and the susceptibility of the constitution, ere its habits have become fixed and its processes part of a settled routine, we cannot but infer that disease of the scalp must often have been produced in this manner, and that, in a vast number of other instances, the disorder must have been terribly aggravated by the same malign influences. Does any sensible person, once fully satisfied of the infinite delicacy of the cuticle on the head of a child, imagine that so tender a surface may, with impunity, be daily raked and harrowed with fine-toothed combs and stiff-bristled brushes, and also inflamed and irritated with violent friction and stimulating application? No; every touch affecting so delicate a texture, should be soft and soothing—every application as mild as possible.

THE VAULTS OF THE BANK OF FRANCE.

THE walls of these vaults are of stupendous thickness. On descending the steps leading to their entrance, the first obstacle we find is an iron-door, locked with three keys, one of which is in the hands of the Governor of the Bank; the second is kept by the cashier, and the third by the censor; so that this door cannot be opened without the simultaneous consent of these three functionaries. We thus gain access to a first compartment, containing the funds for current use. The safe kept here is so curiously constructed, that if you do not know the secret of its construction the slightest touch anywhere will set a noisy alarm agoing, loud enough to startle all the inmates of the establishment. The next compartment is circular, and called the Serre; it cannot be entered without the same ceremonial, and it is fitted up with fire-proof shelves. It contains all the important deeds, notes and papers belonging to the bank, also deposits of private persons. Here the Duke of Brunswick used to leave his jewels, previous to going on a journey. Mademoiselle Mars used to send her diamonds there; the lingot d'or was deposited in the same place, &c. After the Serre come the vaults, properly so-called, the entrance to which is closed by an iron door, secured by several combination locks; it turns on central pivots, like Italian doors. It gives access to a well-hole, containing a winding staircase, admitting but one person at a time, and leading to subterranean galleries 420 metres in length. These are filled with iron casks, containing lingots and coin, and labeled according to their contents. By way of additional security, the well-hole might be filled up with clay, and the vaults with water, at a minute's notice, if the safety of the treasure were menaced in the slightest degree.

AN unlucky English traveler, dressed in the usual French garb, is thus dealt with: "He was madly in love with a Scotch vivandiere (petticoats leading M. Louis Noir astray), at Balaclava, and bored her with his addresses. The young woman, no longer able to endure the annoyance, forbade him the door. After many a vain attempt to overrule the objections, the tourist determined to commit suicide, but, in presence of the great events which were being played out, in no paltry manner. Having first bequeathed his fortune to the vivandiere, he caused a deep hole to be dug, in which he placed 20 pounds of powder; over this excavation a slab was laid, and upon it the rejected one, cigar in mouth, took his seat. He tranquilly finished his weed, which was no doubt a good one and not easily parted with, and then applied the expiring embers to the magazine below. 'L'explosion eut lieu,' and two minutes later a charred mass, descending from the heavens, fell into the port—a mass which astonished British seamen recognized as a human body, and proceeded to fish from the water. There was a general cry of 'A man from heaven!' some declared that he had been kicked out of the sun; others, that he was an aeronaut come to grief. However, the man, whoever he was, came round, and the vivandiere, touched by this proof of affection, capitulated." The blowing-up is not so extraordinary as some may fancy; for, adds M. Louis Noir, Captain Pernier was blown-up with his battery, and was found sitting 500 yards off, wondering what the devil had happened, and not in the least hurt.

THE GREAT PIGEON-SHOOTING MATCH AT GREENVILLE, NEW JERSEY, BETWEEN MR. JOHN TAYLOR AND MR. WILLIAM SEEDS, FOR $1,000 A SIDE.

THE GREAT PIGEON-SHOOTING MATCH.

PURSUANT to announcement, the pigeon-shooting matches for the championship of America and $1,000 a side, between John Taylor and William Seeds, the "Jersey Boy," were shot at Greenville, a few miles distant from Jersey City, on the afternoon of Tuesday and Wednesday, the 6th and 7th inst. The superior skill displayed by the men in previous encounters, caused the present meeting to be regarded with much interest by the knights of the trigger in this vicinity, about 1,200 of whom mustered to witness the

FIRST DAY'S SHOOTING.

The weather was clear and cold, and the very high wind prevailing was anything but favorable to the exhibition of first-class marksmanship. The first match was to be shot on the following conditions: 50 double birds each, ounce and a half shot, 18 yards rise and 100 yards boundary, each to find and trap for the other, and each man to gather all doubtful birds himself. Very little speculation was indulged in, the "outsiders" being shy of investing, partly because of the adjudged equality of the men in point of expertness, but more particularly on account of the mysterious allusions to a "cross." Mr. Evans was chosen referee; Miles Johnson and John Midmer, judges; while Mr. Weeks pulled the string for Taylor, and Dickens for Seeds. At one o'clock P.M., the "Boy" drew a bead on his first pair, bringing them down in fine style—"killed dead." Seeds followed up this beginning until he had killed 71 birds, and missed 29. Taylor commenced by killing both his first pairs, and going on until he had killed 73 and missed 29. Taylor now missed three pair in succession, throwing him six behind; he, however, soon picked up, and ended off that day a winner by one bird.

MR. JOHN TAYLOR, OF JERSEY CITY, THE WINNER OF THE FIRST DAY'S PIGEON SHOOTING MATCH.

SECOND DAY'S SHOOTING.

It was originally intended that the second match should be 100 single birds, but for some reason it was determined, after the first had been concluded, to change it to 50 double birds, with a single trap, the same conditions to govern it as in the previous contest. The attendance was scarcely one-third as large as on the preceding day—a circumstance mainly attributable to the suspicion with which the performances of the day before had constrained the match to be regarded, although the continued gusty, disagreeable state of the weather doubtless tended, to some extent, to produce this result. There was no betting at all, though it was observed that those who were anxious to bet their "pile" on Taylor in the first match, were correspondingly desirous of risking it on "The Boy" now. About one o'clock P.M., Seeds again took the initiative, leading off by killing his first couple.

MR. WILLIAM SEEDS, OF BRIDGEBOROUGH, THE WINNER OF THE SECOND DAY'S GREAT PIGEON SHOOTING MATCH.

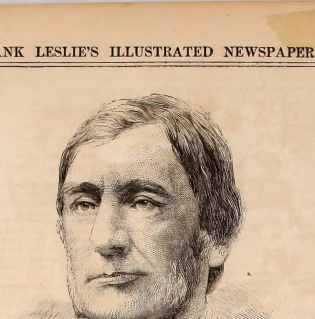
That day ended with Seeds winning by four birds, having killed 84 and missed 16; while Taylor killed 80 and missed 20.



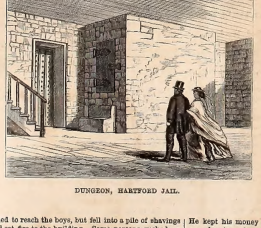
There can be little doubt that these two men are the best shots in the world; and, though Seeds be the victor in this match, it detracts nothing from the great skill of his antagonist. They have each met foemen worthy of their steel. The shooting of the two men presented some points of contrast in style, Taylor being generally slower to shoot, and more willing to trust to long shots, than his adversary. Many thousands of dollars were dependent on the result of this match, which is one of the most important ever contested. At least 10,000 spectators were on the ground; but, notwithstanding the general desire to get the best places for observation, the utmost order was preserved.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

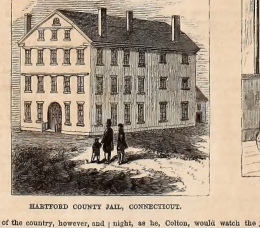
THE eminent American essayist, the son of an Unitarian clergyman at Boston, was born about 1803 and graduated at Harvard College in 1821. Having turned his attention to theology, he was ordained minister of the second Unitarian Church of Boston; but embracing soon afterward peculiar views in regard to forms of worship, he abandoned his profession, and, retiring to the quiet village of Concord, devoted himself to his favorite study—the nature of man and his relation to the universe.

He delivered an oration, called "Man-Thinking," before the Phi-Beta-Kappa Society, in 1837; and an address to the senior class of the Divinity College, Cambridge in the following year. He did not pretend to reason, but to discover; he announced, not urged.

In 1836 Mr. Emerson published "Literary Ethics; an Oration;" and in the following year, "Nature: an Essay." In 1840 he announced the Dial, a magazine of literature, philosophy and history, which was continued four years. In 1841 he published "The Method of Nature," and "Man the Reformer;" three lectures on the times; and the first series of his "Essays." In 1844 he gave the first and second series of his "Essays;" and published lectures on the New England Reformers, the young American, and Negro Emancipation in the West Indies. He afterward delivered lectures on Swedenborg, Napoleon, and other subjects. In 1846 he published a volume of poems. In 1849 he visited England, and delivered the lectures which now form the volume called "Representative Men." In 1852, in connection with Mr. W. H. Channing, he published the "Memoirs of Margaret Fuller, Marchesa d'Ossoli." Mr. Emerson, in 1856, published a work entitled, "English Traits," and in 1860 "The Conduct of Life." He has also contributed largely to American periodicals.



RALPH WALDO EMERSON.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.



THE OLD JAIL AT HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.

FOR many years past, probably very few persons have spent a day in the city of Hartford without noticing an old, white, brick building, which stands at the corner of Market and Trumbull streets. It is out of line with the buildings on either street, and seems to have pushed itself forward in disagreeable prominence into the middle of the roads. The building, at a distance, has a slightly tottering look, but near at hand is found to be solid and substantial. Modern residents think of it simply as a large printing establishment, but older inhabitants recollect it as, for many years, the county jail. This solid old building is vacated, and is soon to be demolished, and deserves an extended notice before it passes out of sight.

The jail was commenced, and in 1794 was so far completed as to be occupied. Among the first of those placed in it was an old, crazy woman named Betty Goodale, who had been picked up while wandering through the streets, and put in there for safe keeping. From her room in the upper story there was a water conductor, which led through the floor and into the street near the basement of the building. One Sunday, when the keeper had gone to church, with the keys of the jail in his pocket, some boys went to the mouth of the conductor, and called through the pipe to Betty. At first she took no notice of it, but they kept on calling her opprobrious names, until, in a rage, she seized a coal of fire, and dropped it through the conductor. It has an occasional outbreak, and debtors walked their accustomed round, until they were able to "swear off," or until they had tired out their creditors.

DUNGEON, HARTFORD JAIL.

HARTFORD COUNTY JAIL, CONNECTICUT.

KITCHEN, HARTFORD JAIL.

About the year 1827, a certain John Smith was incarcerated for debt. John had been engaged in the slave trade very largely, and was supposed to be rich. He kept his money out of the country, however, and one day turned up insolvent, owing to the United States Government $400,000, and individuals some $200,000 or $300,000 more. John hadn't the face to "swear off" at first, but tried to break jail. He succeeded in getting some young men interested in releasing him. They obtained some false keys, let themselves into the jail, unlocked John's door, and had everything ready to rush or slip out. It happened, however, that one of the young men, named Colton, was a little intoxicated in the early part of the evening. While in this condition, he told the workman, who was named Hartshorn, that he might go to bed that night, as he, Colton, would watch the jail for him. This awakened Hartshorn's suspicions, and aroused him to greater watchfulness than usual. As a result, the young men had but just let themselves into Smith's room, when the door was shut upon them, and they found themselves locked in together. They all got a term in State Prison for their pains.

BAB-BOOM, HARTFORD JAIL, CONNECTICUT.—SKETCHED BY H. C. CURTIS.

In 1836 the new jail was finished and the old one cleared out. For about two years it was occupied as a tenant-house by a regular swarm of black and white families. It has been used as a printing-office and book-bindery ever since. The inside of the building has, of course, been greatly changed. The outside has been painted over white, and quite a part of the foundation exposed, by digging on the north side. The whole of the stone work was originally under ground. The outside walls show their original thickness, which is about three and a half feet in the west part. The walls of the front part are much less in thickness. The walls had the appearance of settling in some places, as many as 25 years ago, and some friends warned the occupants that they were in danger while occupying in the building. The old concern seems to be good for any ordinary breeze yet, however.

It is said that on one occasion it became necessary to cut a doorway through one of the inside partitions. A carpenter, who did not know anything about the interior uses of the building, nor the thickness of the walls, offered to do it by the job at about the usual rates. His offer was taken, and he went to work. He soon found that there was something to the wall besides lath and plaster, and has always considered since that he did not make much out of that job. Whoever undertakes to demolish the building may find some parts of it most unexpectedly and unreasonably tough. The old structure will not go down in a day, but it will not be many weeks before there is one less of the old city landmarks.

DISASTER AND SUFFERING IN DACOTAH TERRITORY.

THE route from Fort Wadsworth, Dacotah Territory, to Sank Centre, Minnesota, has just been the scene of a most fearful case of suffering and death. The writer, who describes the affair, says:

Company A, Second Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry, Captain A. R. Field, Jr., commanding, was ordered, a short time since, to march from Fort Wadsworth, D. T., (about 80 miles south-west of this post, Fort Abercrombie,) to Sauk Centre, Minn.

The company was divided into two detachments. One, of some 34 men, under Lieutenant William L. Briley, left Fort Wadsworth on Monday, the 30th ult., and the other detachment, comprising the balance of the company, under command of Captain Field, left on Tuesday morning.

The detachment under Lieutenant Briley arrived at Twin Lake Station on Monday afternoon, (40 miles distant from this post,) in good shape.

The captain, with the balance of his command, left Fort Wadsworth on Tuesday morning at three o'clock, and had very pleasant weather during the first part of the day.

They passed over the Coteau, and left it all in good condition, and, when about four miles this side of the Fort of the Coteau, they met the paymaster, Lieutenant-Colonel Smith, who was on his way to Fort Wadsworth, with an escort consisting of Lieutenant Gerrish and of this command.

They stopped and chatted for a while, and each party passed on their way.

This meeting was at 11 A.M., and some 20 or 22 miles from Twin Lake Station, which point Captain Field expected to make that evening.

When within about 12 or 14 miles of the Station, Captain Field, with three of his men, left the balance of the command under Lieutenant Stevens, and went on ahead, intending to have fires and everything prepared for his men when they arrived.

It was blowing and snowing some when he left the command, but very soon after leaving it there came on one of those terrible winter-storms wherein it is unsafe for man or beast to be away from timber or shelter.

Lieutenant Stevens and his party faced it until the animals refused to go any further; they would not and could not be made to face it, and they were obliged to turn back and seek camping-ground at the foot of the Coteau. All but thirteen reached it, and they camped down in the snow, burying themselves in the snow as a shelter from the bitter blasts.

One poor fellow (a corporal of the 13, died about 12 o'clock at night, while the rest crept closer in to their cold bed, excepting one noble fellow, who, all the night long, stood his lonely watch endeavoring to keep up a camp-fire upon smoldering fire-wood, answer them that they might not smother, and to see how they fared, and would cover them that they might not freeze; and, when he found one that was stupid or cold, he made free use of his "black-snake wing" to bring back the freezing man to life. And once, too, on the march, he observed a mule teamster who was freezing, but still determined to ride his mule. Him he pulled from his mule, and gave a severe whipping with "his black-snake," until nature, under the lash, again took distance to the storm.

The next day this portion of the command returned to Fort Wadsworth; but numbers of them were badly frozen. The last seen of Captain Field and his men was when they left to go into Twin Lake Station in advance of the detachment.

Captain Field had with him five horses (one led), and two dogs, when he left his command. Three horses were found; two are missing, as well as the dogs.

The storm of Tuesday was awful. Ten cannot describe it. I have lived in Minnesota over nine years, and never, never have seen such weather as I have during the past winter.

The names of the soldiers with Captain Field I have not yet ascertained.

Since writing the above, I have learned that the name of the corporal who was frozen to death the night of the 30th was Harkness—I think, Lysander G.

CLIDING ALONG; OR, THE HEART AND THE STREAM.

BY MR. J. B. SWETT.

Gliding along,
The years went on like the flow of song;
And a free heart rode on the tide of years,
Unknown to sorrow, or sighs, or tears;
Till the current, at last, of the stream of life,
Cast the heart far out on the sea of strife.

Rushing along
On the foam-capped waves, in the tempest strong;
Where the shriek and roar of the mad sea broke;
And the wrath of God seemed suddenly woke;
The heart, appalled by the fearful scene,
Prayed to its home to its native green.

Rushing along
Through the spray of blood, and the winds of wrong,
'Twas borne at last, 'mid the sweep and shock,
And its frail bark wrecked on a hidden rock:
And the heart, at last, all shivering, cold,
Crept back to the scenes and the haunts of old.

Creeping along
It sought, bowed down by the weight of wrong,
The sympathy sweet of those known before;
But the love of those hearts, green in days of yore,
Had withered and died, and was green no more.
The stream, however, that ran through the glade,
Where the heart, in its young days, had often played,
With its ceaseless ripple, and murmuring song,
Heedless of time, went gliding along:
And the heart, so long and so often tried,
Would linger hours by its emerald side,
And listening long to its musical tide,
Found quiet, there, in the green stream alone,
That from all else in the world had flown.

CRUISING.

BY LIZZIE B. COOKE.

THE winter of 1864 was certainly one of the pleasantest of my life. At that time I was Lieutenant on one of those vessels sent to convey, and protect, if need was, steamers and merchantmen belonging to the loyal States, which were plying on Southern waters. Much of the time we were idle, but the possibility of a tiff with some saucy Confederate pirate kept us continually on the alert.

Sometimes our path left its foam-mark on warm Gulf Stream waters; sometimes lying becalmed for days on lone, infinite-reaching depths—no distant, purplish outline—no fringe of islands, breaking the monotony—we were lured to the belief that the world we had left, the world invisible by aid of instrument or keener vision, was but imaginary—that we had been the sole occupants of it. All that was real in life centred in ourselves, until some white sail, caught in rosy sunset folds, slipped along the circling rim of sky, when the hearing, restless, agonized world assumed its true place in our consciousness; as we pictured snowclad homes, as we seemed to clasp, shadowy-fancy like in the twilight, tenderly-loved friends; as we remembered our country, red-blossoming with the chain upon the altars of freedom.

Those were rare days, when, slipping between the frowning Morro and its grim companion, the Punta, we anchored in the harbor of Havana.

As I write the word, I remember quaint dwellings, whose barred windows revealed glimpses of soft-eyed Spanish girls, the shaded Paseo, with glittering volants—beautiful women, courtly men; cool sea airs, tangled with the breath of tropical blooms; rose-hewn baths, through whose perforations a tideless sea palpitated with musical beat. We landed our way in and out, between island ranges and coral reefs, cornering like a queen the Caribbean Sea, sometimes anchoring at one port, sometimes at another. Traversing the mountain roads of these sea-ringed isles, gorgeous tropic scenes, combining wealth of color, grace of outline, riotous luxuriance of foliage, were unfolded, and our enchanted gaze fell upon fields of sugar-cane, flooded in golden seas of light; avenued cafetals, whereon the spicy fragrance of coffee-plants, thick hung with crimson berries, mingled with the perfumes of the orange, the alspice, the mignonette; picturesque ocean wastes; groves of plantains, of "weeping, homesick cocoas;" solitary, regal palms softly limned against the sky; jungles interlaced with blossoming vines; pendulous mosses that swayed in the ambient air; birds, whose plumage seemed to have been dyed in sunset glories, and coal dulls lined with peacock, dropping fires. Roving amid such scenes, I learned to comprehend that infiltration of poesy—the result of the climate and dreamy landscapes of the Orient upon the minds of its children.

You are impatient? You wish I would relate my story? I have my to tell? I do not wonder. Yet I could linger over these reminiscences for hours—I am never wearied of the retrospect. Surely in the indolent, dreamy repose of the tropics, it should have been my fate to live and die.

Three or four of us one day explored the island of Nevazza, or Nevassa—I half forget the name—and returned to the Powhatan excessively fatigued. It had been no light exploit to clamber over its rocks—dazzlingly white in the fierce glare of the sun, owing to large deposits of phosphate or lime—and the whole place was riddled with pits concealed by treacherous, scintillating incrustations. David could never have desired a more satisfactory place wherein to bestow his enemies.

"Bert," said Nat Blauvelt, M.D., after our returns, as we sat on the deck, a phosphorescent sea glowing beneath, the Southern Cross gleaming above us, puffing the smoke of our cigarettes into blue rings, "remember one thing, you have reminded me all day of Captain Rogers—he is just such a dare-devil as you. You walked over those infernal pits as carelessly as though enjoying a sunshine along the Paseo. I expected every minute to see you take a short cut, at express speed, for Old Nick."

"Who and what was Captain Rogers, pray?"

"Who was he? An old chum of mine. What was he? A man with the strongest will God ever put in a human body!"

"Will?"

"I was thinking to-day that he might better have fallen into one of those abominable holes, than to have married as he did."

"Why?"

"Well," rolling another cigarette, "with all his will, he possessed an immense amount of conceit. Meeting him one day at the club, he entertained me with a long discourse upon the relative beauties and merits of three young ladies, to whom he was then paying court. One of these, suffering off with a puff, "I warn you"—puff—"no matter how great the temptation"—puff—"never have too many strings to your bow. It don't pay—I told him so. I said to him:

"Will, take my word for it, you'll never marry either of those young ladies.'

"He looked up, quite indignant; he had convinced himself, I presume, that his powers of fascination were so great, that he had but to take his pick, or establish a harem on a small scale, to suit his fancy. I was right, though. Some six months later he called on me with the most delirious human specimen I ever encountered.

"'What's the matter, Will?—have you been to the Tombs?' I quizzed.

"'No! confound it. It's no laughing matter; if you think it is, just try it on,' and he threw himself on the lounge, seeming to give Jack a hitch that sent him whining to me.

"'Miss M——— married?' I asked, coolly.

"'Yes,' he growled, savagely.

"'And Lizzie F——?'

"'Engaged to some country clown.'

"'Still, you have one chance left; don't get discouraged, my dear fellow,' I exclaimed, sympathizingly.

"'No a chance, Nat,' he solemnly replied, pacing the room in the deepest dejection.

"I laughed. 'Try again; better luck next time. You've smitten enough to set up a retail establishment—woolen goods are up.'

"It was too much. He flung himself out of the room. I didn't see him again, until one evening, while visiting some friends in Brooklyn, who should appear upon the scene but Will!

"There were two young ladies in the family we were calling upon; one, brilliant, accomplished, with an exquisite voice, which she used to advantage—while the other was as plain as—as she could be, and live through it. Quiet and reserved, too, she shrank into one corner, and I don't believe Rogers addressed ten words to her all the evening. You may judge of my surprise, when upon meeting, Will said:

"'Nat, I'm going to propose to Miss Martha De Puy. Don't you think she'll do?'

"'Do? I repeated; 'what in the name of Cupid do you mean?'

"'Mean?' said Will, 'I mean to ask her to marry me. I don't exactly fancy calling her at present by her Christian name, but when we are in Brooklyn, next Saturday, and will settle the matter.'

"Well," I solemnly protested, "for the love of decorum, if you're afraid or ashamed to see her at home, in order to prevent a scene, propose to her in the street—to your car. Why, man! you must have lost your senses.'

"'I won't dispute the point,' replied Will, coolly.

"Mother was away from home, so I ordered Bridget, on Saturday morning, to have the parlors in perfect order, and lighted early in the evening, as I expected company. She carefully obeyed; and when my two cronies, and I, De Puy would call an engagement, that detained me until ten, leaving, you see, a fair field for Will and Miss De Puy.

"'Done, old fellow,' he exclaimed, as he took me aside, for a moment, after we parted.

"I laughed.

"'It's no joke, I assure you,' he replied, firing up.

"'No! I shouldn't think it was,' I rejoined, dryly, I was vexed with him. Two people more diverse in every respect could scarcely be found.

"Two weeks later, I should think, I received a note from Rogers, inviting me, my family, nephew, and myself, to a tea-party at his house. His mother would expect us, and Miss De Puy would be there, and on no account must we fail them."

At this point, Dr. Blauvelt—having exhausted his stock of cigarettes—rose as well—perposed going down stairs, and having made ourselves comfortable in dressing-gowns and slippers, I impatiently awaited the denouement.

He continued:

"The evening waxed, several tedious games of whist had been played, and taking advantage of a break in the conversation, Will arose, and beckoned me to accompany him. Following him into the hall, he closed the door, and began in a whisper:

"'Nat, I'm going to be married to-night!'

"'Impossible,' I urged.

"'Not at all,' he replied. 'I repeat that I shall marry this evening—the thing has been definitely arranged.'

"'You have taken everything into consideration, Miss De Puy's sister?'

"'Yes!'

"He spoke with the air of a man who has fully made up his mind, and whose decision nothing earthly could change. I thought of that poor girl, dressed in black—pale and dejected she seemed to me—sitting quietly in the parlor, and my heart ached for her. I called my nephew, Dick Towers, out of the room. Mother looked surprised at the mysterious manner in which things in general were being conducted, and Father's mother. Miss De Puy's face was a shade paler than usual.

"'Dick,' said I, after I had succeeded, by various pantomimic efforts in getting him into the hall, and had fastened the door, 'are you willing to be groomsman for a happy couple? I presume the three elderly ladies will not object to assist at the ceremony?'

"'Dence!' was his only reply, as he gazed incredulously at Will, and then at me. I explained matters:

"'Will, here, says he'll certainly be married this evening, and you and I are to start, post-haste, for a minister.'

"'Gay old wedding party,' laughed Dick; 'three old women and two old bachelors—humph! Going to dance, Will? Les Lanciers—the German —which shall it be?'

"'Be serious,' demanded Will, commencing to fidget; 'it's eleven o'clock now.'

"We drew on our overcoats, listened to all directions, and opened the front door. A cold rain, dashed with snow and sleet, cut our faces.

"'Ugh!' shivered Dick; 'stand outside a few moments, and I guess your ardor will be somewhat cooled, Rogers; mine is below zero now.'

"I glanced at Rogers; every line of his face was set and determined. Evidently if we wouldn't go for the parson, he would, and that was something not to be thought of. We hired a carriage at the next street. Will had given ample directions; we were to drive to the corner of Broadway and —— street. There dwelt a divine well-known to Will, in having officiated on record, as far as practicable, under his ministrations. It was about midnight when we reached the residence indicated, and Dick and I, before the door, by the flickering rays of a street lamp, before ringing the bell, to see whether it would not be better to relinquish this crazy expedition, but the engineer and train of Jack's brilliant sent him whining to me.

"'Miss M——— married?' I asked, coolly.

"'Yes,' he growled, savagely.

"'And Lizzie F——?'

"'Engaged to some country clown.'

"'Still, you have one chance left; don't get discouraged, my dear fellow,' I exclaimed, sympathizingly.

"'No a chance, Nat,' he solemnly replied, pacing the room in the deepest dejection.

"I laughed. 'Try again; better luck next time. You've smitten enough to set up a retail establishment—woolen goods are up.'

"It was too much. He flung himself out of the room. I didn't see him again, until one evening, while visiting some friends in Brooklyn, who should appear upon the scene but Will!

"There were two young ladies in the family we were calling upon; one, brilliant, accomplished, with an exquisite voice, which she used to advantage—while the other was as plain as—as she could be, and live through it. Quiet and reserved, too, she shrank into one corner, and I don't believe Rogers addressed ten words to her all the evening. You may judge of my surprise, when upon meeting, Will said:

"'Nat, I'm going to propose to Miss Martha De Puy. Don't you think she'll do?'

"'Do!' I repeated; 'what in the name of Cupid do you mean?'

"'Mean?' said Will, 'I mean to ask her to marry me. I don't exactly fancy calling her at present by her Christian name, but when we are in Brooklyn, next Saturday, and will settle the matter.'

"Well," I solemnly protested, "for the love of decorum, if you're afraid or ashamed to see her at home, in order to prevent a scene, propose to her in the street—to your car. Why, man! you must have lost your senses.'

"'I won't dispute the point,' replied Will, coolly.

"Mother was away from home, so I ordered Bridget, on Saturday morning, to have the parlors in perfect order, and lighted early in the evening, as I expected company. She carefully obeyed; and when my two cronies, and I, De Puy would call an engagement, that detained me until ten, leaving, you see, a fair field for Will and Miss De Puy.

"'Done, old fellow,' he exclaimed, as he took me aside, for a moment, after we parted.

"I laughed.

"'It's no joke, I assure you,' he replied, firing up.

"'No! I shouldn't think it was,' I rejoined, dryly, I was vexed with him. Two people more diverse in every respect could scarcely be found.

"Two weeks later, I should think, I received a note from Rogers, inviting me, my family, nephew, and myself, to a tea-party at his house. His mother would expect us, and Miss De Puy would be there, and on no account must we fail them."

At this point, Dr. Blauvelt—having exhausted his stock of cigarettes—rose as well—perposed going down stairs, and having made ourselves comfortable in dressing-gowns and slippers, I impatiently awaited the denouement.

He continued:

"The evening waxed, several tedious games of whist had been played, and taking advantage of a break in the conversation, Will arose, and beckoned me to accompany him. Following him into the hall, he closed the door, and began in a whisper:

"'Nat, I'm going to be married to-night!'

"'Impossible,' I urged.

"'Not at all,' he replied. 'I repeat that I shall marry this evening—the thing has been definitely arranged.'

"'You have taken everything into consideration, Miss De Puy's sister?'

"'Yes!'

"He spoke with the air of a man who has fully made up his mind, and whose decision nothing earthly could change. I thought of that poor girl, dressed in black—pale and dejected she seemed to me—sitting quietly in the parlor, and my heart ached for her. I called my nephew, Dick Towers, out of the room. Mother looked surprised at the mysterious manner in which things in general were being conducted, and Father's mother. Miss De Puy's face was a shade paler than usual.

"'Dick,' said I, after I had succeeded, by various pantomimic efforts in getting him into the hall, and had fastened the door, 'are you willing to be groomsman for a happy couple? I presume the three elderly ladies will not object to assist at the ceremony?'

"'Dence!' was his only reply, as he gazed incredulously at Will, and then at me. I explained matters:

"'Will, here, says he'll certainly be married this evening, and you and I are to start, post-haste, for a minister.'

"'Gay old wedding party,' laughed Dick; 'three old women and two old bachelors—humph! Going to dance, Will? Les Lanciers—the German —which shall it be?'

"'Be serious,' demanded Will, commencing to fidget; 'it's eleven o'clock now.'

"We drew on our overcoats, listened to all directions, and opened the front door. A cold rain, dashed with snow and sleet, cut our faces.

"'Ugh!' shivered Dick; 'stand outside a few moments, and I guess your ardor will be somewhat cooled, Rogers; mine is below zero now.'

"I glanced at Rogers; every line of his face was set and determined. Evidently if we wouldn't go for the parson, he would, and that was something not to be thought of. We hired a carriage at the next street. Will had given ample directions; we were to drive to the corner of Broadway and —— street. There dwelt a divine well-known to Will, in having officiated on record, as far as practicable, under his ministrations. It was about midnight when we reached the residence indicated, and Dick and I, before the door, by the flickering rays of a street lamp, before ringing the bell, to see whether it would not be better to relinquish this crazy expedition, but the engineer and train; but while my hand was still on the bell-handle, our John started his horses, and deaf to all entreaties, was soon invisible. In a few moments the faint sound of distant wheels was all that indicated to us his existence.

Of course it was our bounden duty to investigate as many as possible in this wild scrape, so we rang the bell. There was no response. The occupants had probably gone to bed long before. However, as it wasn't the funniest thing in the world to stand, even on ministerial doorsteps, in a drenching rain, we rang again with a peal sufficiently loud to have awakened Rip Van Winkle himself, referring at the same time in no complimentary terms to the rain and the sacred order of matrimony.

"Bless me, Bert! your cigar is dead out; relight, and I'll proceed."

I relighted.

The door summons was effectual. We heard the fall of slippered feet proceeding cautiously toward the door, and the dominie, with dressing-gown thrown hastily over his shoulders and a fellow candle in his hand, confronted us, and frightened by the apparition at dead of night of two such dripping mortals as ourselves, regarded us with a fixed, incredulous stare.

"'Captain Rogers—you know him? his father was a distant connection of my family—some more or so—requires your immediate services,' I managed to say.

"'Certainly, I know any Captain Rogers—haven't any deacon,' stammered the reverend gentleman, slightly confused, and preparing to shut the door in our face.

"'Oh, yes! you must know him,' I gasped; 'deacon in your—church.'

"A dark look of suspicion clouded the light, the candlestick dropped from his hand, the same saucy whiff sent his bonnet de nuit into the street, and, overcome with fear, pain, and a sense of the laughter from Dick and me, the minister recovered his senses.

"'Ah! you mean the gentlemen—Deacon Rogers. Oh, yes, I know him well; step in—step in; and his son is dying?'

"'Yes,' I replied, faintly convulsed; 'about the same thing though—he wants to be married!'

"'Well, gentlemen, this is really extraordinary, very extraordinary, but if you will excuse me a few moments—my present toilet is not quite adapted to such an occasion—I will accompany you.'

"'A most remarkable thing,' he muttered, as, in advancing to find the balustrade, he gave the candlestick to Dick, and motioned it rudely to the elder cluster to the other end of the hall. The same thing though—he wants to be married!'

"'Well, gentlemen, this is really extraordinary, very extraordinary, but if you will excuse me a few moments—my present toilet is not quite adapted to such an occasion—I will accompany you.'

"'A most remarkable thing,' he muttered, as, in advancing to find the balustrade, he gave the candlestick to Dick, and motioned it rudely to the elder cluster to the other end of the hall. The same thing though—he wants to be married!'

"'Well, gentlemen, this is really extraordinary, very extraordinary, but if you will excuse me a few moments—my present toilet is not quite adapted to such an occasion—I will accompany you.'

"'The Rev. Mr. B——— soon made his appearance, in full, rustling official habiliments, and we proceeded. There was nothing to do but to walk; stages had stopped running for the night, and cars were not of that day; but we were determined to be jolly, and the jolliest of the trio was the minister.

"In the distance, after proceeding for some time, we saw a dimly burning light. Nearer and nearer it came; some carriage was out; perhaps we could secure it. We called; our faithless John stood still.

"'Why did you leave us?' I demanded.

"'Shure, an' I had another engagement, and I thought ye would n't be out of a spree.'

"He was quite ready to take us in, however, and we reached Will's about one. The knot was soon tied, I gave the bride away, and Dick looked as though she had entered the Vale of Sorrows. Then came another dilemma. Will and Dick had no clothes.

"'Now, you must find me a hotel'

"'Impossible, at this time.'

"'But you must,' Will urged; and must it was.

"'Beautiful time to look for hotels,' Dick growled, as we once more crossed the threshold into the storm. We had fortunately retained the carriage. And a beautiful time we had of it! We applied at every hotel up-town, and finally returned.

"'No go, Will,' said Dick.

"'But it must go!' answered Will.

"We returned to the Everett House, and finally, after long debate, secured a lodging somewhere on the top floor, took Will and his bride there, and then I saw mother home.

"One more task remained to me—to drive Mrs. De Puy over to Brooklyn. It was five in the morning when we reached her house, and the old lady begged me to remain and explain matters to Sue; so I dismissed the carriage, and resolved to brave it through.

"The very first question that Sue put to me when we had assembled in the breakfast-room, was:

"'Where's Mattie?'

"'Captain Rogers can tell you better than I. The last I saw of them, they were at the Everett House.'

"'You don't mean to say ——

"'I mean to say that Mat is now Mrs. Rogers; all further explanations must be applied for at headquarters.'

"But Sue was angry. I shielded her mother as much as possible; but I believe Sue owes me a grudge to this day for helping Will."

"And Will?" I asked, as Nat paused a moment.

"Ah, Bert! it has proved a sad thing—sad enough; but see here, Lieutenant Ormsbee, you and I have used up about a dozen of the best Havanas, and you don't marry in order to repent at leisure; and now, 'Good-night.'"

TO VICTORY.

THOU—struggled for, with bitter pain,
Through heaps of sacrificial slain.
And, when the toil of strife was hot,
Receding, but forgotten not,
Oh! Victory!—

Hast come at last, to end our pain,
And, smiling, bid us smile again;
While Peace, on her dove-pinions low hings,
And wanders o'er the land, and sings
Of Victory.

But ah! our eyes, dim with distress,
Can see but half the loveliness—
Yet feel the tears that overflow
Then, tearfully, but rapturously,
Hail, Victory!

May God, through all the bloody strife,
And bloodless, of a nationslife,
Through after, as through former night,
Give us, still battling for the right,
The Victory.

A Little Story.

BY J. EVELYN HUNT.

THERE was a pause succeeding it; it seemed very much like fighting against destiny. At least, so thought pretty little Kate Stetson; and, like a good philosopher, she resolved to yield without further parley.

I'm afraid she was not wholly indifferent about the matter, either; for, although she turned away her head, and answered, half-pettishly, "Well—there—yes, Will!"—still I caught a glimpse of a blush and a tear.

So, probably, did Will Kelso, for he bent his handsome head until his dark hair swept Kate's cheek, and I'm sure, pressed her to his heart.

But, if I had a doubt, it was answered by just looking at the doorway.

There she stood. Grim, gaunt, foreboding, with hands uplifted, and face expressive of the most horrified amazement.

"Ahem!"

A start, a shudder, a quick nestling of a little hand into the great brown palm, which opened to receive it.

"Ahem!" the second time.

Nestle a little closer, Kate, and trust the arm that holds so steadily that is now encircling you.

"Ahem!" again, and at last the astonished sun-flies cleared her throat and found her voice.

"Kate! Kate Stetson! is it possible! am I dreaming? or have I in reality obtruded upon a lover's conference?"

So answer, save a toss of the golden curls, and a look of defiance startling around the dainty mouth.

"And you, sir! whom I have forbidden the house more than once, how dare you, sir! As for you, Miss Kate, I am ashamed—ashamed"—repeated with a decided emphasis—"that for this boorish fellow, I am ashamed! How dare you, sir!" and her wrath having waxed greater and greater, Miss Stetson panted from sheer exhaustion.

"Why"—very coolly—"as I would dare enter any house to which you were one of those visitors."

"Stolen property! What do you mean?" the sallow face flushing red, and the eyes growing a little fiery.

"Mean? Why, nothing more, good madam, than that your fair niece, here, stole my heart some time ago, and though I could not live very comfortably without the article, I came to reclaim it, or to obtain another as its equivalent."

"And you have, sir?"

"Certainly, madam. I rarely fail in what I undertake, and we were just sealing the compact when you interrupted us."

"Out upon your impudent assurance! Do you dare to tell me that you have usurped upon this girl's affection, and made her believe she is in love with your worthless self?"

"I don't know about the impudition, Miss Stetson, though I might acknowledge the unworthiness," with a reverent look toward Kate. "It was a plain question, with some simple illustrations, to which this little lady has just now answered, 'I will.' If she has been deceived, she will learn to-day."

This was the climax, and the exasperated spinster was speechless.

A moment after the house clock struck ten, and as the last stroke fell the aunt recovered her tongue and her accustomed calmness.

"You will allow me, sir, to inform you that the doors of my house are always locked at ten o'clock, and I never consent to Miss Kate's entertaining visitors after that hour. You will, therefore, oblige me by conforming with the regulation, and making your adieux at once."

There might have been a little satire concealed in the last request, but you would never have guessed it from the stately, indifferent expression which the injured lady had now assumed.

"Certainly, madam; I am most happy to conform to so wise a regulation. But your niece having promised to entrust herself and her happiness into my keeping, I feel in honor bound to assume the protection of her from this time forward; and I, therefore, have one request to make of you—that you will express no further indignation to her, but expend all your anger upon myself alone."

Without another word to Kate, the young man advanced to Miss Stetson, raised her thin hand to his lips, and, with a courtly bow, withdrew.

Now, Will Kelso knew perfectly well that this was the only outburst of which Miss Stetson would be guilty; for she prided herself upon her perfect composure, under all circumstances, it being extremely vulgar, according to her code, to give any outward expression to one's feelings. But the ungentlemanly fellow could not refrain from giving this last wound to her affronted dignity.

"Good-night, Aunt Minerva," and the little figure marched out of the room in a don't-care kind of a way, that tended but little to soothe the ruffled spirits of her relation.

"Verily, she is an apt scholar," and Miss Stetson curled her lip as she closed the parlor door.

Kate Stetson was as bewitching a piece of humanity as ever turned a man's heart and brain; and it was no wonder Will Kelso loved her, as love her he did, nobly and truly. He was by no means a bad fellow; a little too reckless and independent, perhaps, but he was fighting his own way through the world, and when a man buffets Fortune, he must needs wear a bold front.

He was the son of a farmer, an honest man, but who had left his boy but little more than his untarnished name. It had only been by hard labor, mental and physical, that the young man had gained the stand he had. Talents he had, and he was making the most of them; and already among the medical faculty of the country his name was gaining an honorable notice.

The Stetsons were of one of the oldest families in the State, and it seemed as if all the pride of half-a-dozen generations had descended upon and concentrated in the heart of Miss Minerva. The last of her family, it galled her not a little that her brother's child could think with any other feeling than disdain of that country fellow, Kelso. Why, for three of his college vacations he had worked upon her estate, the same as any farm hand! Kate marry him—impossible!

* * * * * *

"Indeed, indeed, you must come, doctor; they're hurt terribly, both of them—Miss Minerva is dying, they think."

He was a man of prompt, determined action, and ten minutes later Dr. Kelso stood within the quiet parlor, and stood there for the first time in five long, weary years.

"Where shall I find them?" he asked, in a quick, imperious tone.

"Here, doctor, in the library," and old Martha prepared, as quickly as her superabundant flesh would allow, to lead the way.

He sprang past her, and entered the room.

Two couches rolled upon the floor; two faces almost whiter than the pillows where they lay. And one—the younger and the fairer—bore on its snowy temple a horrible deep gash.

"Oh, God!" and with the groan his momentary weakness passed away, and tenderly, as one who had forgotten himself, and all else but the sufferers before him, the skillful physician began his work.

A careful examination told him that the wound upon the temple was not so dangerous as it seemed, and that the older woman lay nearest death.

"Should he save her if he could? that woman who had blasted all his life, and hers—his Katie's?"

A moment only, and the terrible temptation was conquered; and Dr. Kelso worked as a man will work who has all to lose with failure, and all to gain with success.

She gasped, she breathed, she opened her eyes, and fixed them upon him in a wild, uncertain way. It was long before they seemed to recognize him, but they did at length, and with a cry of half-pain, half-fear, she strove to raise her head, but could not. Quite at the mercy, then, of this man she so despised, lay poor Minerva Stetson. If only he would storm or rave, or be some other than this quiet, attentive physician, it seemed to her that she could gather strength to rise up and oppose him. But no; he watched her quietly, as he would have watched any one rescued, as she had been, from a sudden and terrible death. But the strong man shuddered, as he pictured the scene—the frightened horses tearing madly down the hill, the broken bridge, the sharp and fearful crash!

And if one of the two injured women must die, can you wonder he was glad it was this, and not the other—his love, his darling! And hopeless as the case might seem, he would do his best to save her, too, this woman whom he hated. But as he thought how small was her chance of life, Minerva Stetson looked up and met his earnest, commiserating gaze. I think it stung her, even then in her utter weakness, to be so pitied, and by him; for she looked away quickly, and noticed nothing more till he was gone.

* * * * * *

Two days later and Minerva Stetson knew her hours were numbered, and she signified her desire to speak with Dr. Kelso alone.

"I have done you and Kate a great and terrible wrong. But here on my death-bed I crave your pardon. Can you, will you grant it?"

Looking at the poor, weak woman before him, he was too noble to do other than assure her his forgiveness was complete.

"Then listen, and I'll tell what may partly cover and excuse my fault. Years ago, my brother died and left his little girl to me, binding her complete obedience to me till she should be twenty-one. Kate was gentle and yielding, and I never found occasion to enforce my authority until you came and wooed her. Come nearer. There was a reason, deeper than pride of birth or wealth, why I should bid the child forget you. Your father loved me once, and I loved him. Ay, loved him! though he was a common farmer lad. My father liked him, too, and made him welcome in the house, as became his daughter's choice. He was so strong and brave—Reuben Kelso! No matter—you are like him, somewhat. But there came one day a little thing to make him doubt me; and I, proud in my consciousness of perfect truth, flung back his doubt with scorn. We parted then, and lived the lives you know. But when, as the years went by, I saw your mother's fair young face shine out beside your father's, at his farm-house door, and watched your baby fingers clutching to pull her curls, I envied, and I hated him, and her, and you."

She paused there; and, in the silence, who knows how much she suffered?

Then, musingly, "And you've tried to save my life!"

She was failing very fast, and Dr. Kelso rose to summon in her few attendants.

The dying woman caught his motion, and, rousing, gasped:

"You're sure—you have forgiven—you—and Reuben?"

"We are sure."

She caught the answer—that was all. And so the once proud beauty died, and none but Reuben's child stood by to see the end.

"Six years ago, to-night, Miss Stetson, do you remember it?"

A little sigh, and then a clear—

"I do."

She was less fair, perhaps, that ugly scar upon the temple refusing to be hid, albeit the bright curls drooped to kiss it lovingly. More quiet, too, the face had grown, and gathered a certain, resolute tone, unlike the bonnie, playful Kate of yore. Nevertheless she seemed very beautiful to Dr. Kelso, as she stood there with the firelight falling on her pale and clear-cut features.

"Kate, I dreamed that night how I should make a little home, a happy home for you. I lost the dream a while, for years even. But it goes on to-night from where I lost it then. The house is ready—waiting. Will you come?"

What need had she of a home other than this? and richer she was a thousand times than this generous-hearted physician would ever be. She was not avaricious, surely. Perhaps she caught the yearning, waiting look in the dark eyes bent upon her. Whatever she thought, or whatever she guessed, I only know she laid her white hands quietly in those held out toward her, and answered simply:

"I will come."

FATE OF FAST MEN.—The vicious die early. They fall like shadows, or tumble wrecks and ruins into the grave—often while quite young, almost always before 40. "The wicked liveth not half his days." The world at once ratifies the truth and assigns the reason, by describing the dissolute life of "fast men;" that is, they live fast; they spend their 12 hours in six, getting through the whole before the meridian, and dropping into darkness while others are in the glory of light. "Their sun goeth down while it is day." And they might have helped it. Many a one dies before he need. Young men of genius like Burns and Byron, to whom, when dissipated and profligate, 37 is so fatal, and your obscure and nameless wandering stars, who waste their time in libertine indulgence—they cannot live, they must die early. They put on steam till they blow up the boiler. They run at such a rate that the fire goes out for want of fuel. The machinery is destroyed for want of fuel. The machinery is destroyed by rapid speed and reckless wear. Nothing can save them. Their physical system cannot stand the strain they put to it; while the state of their minds is often such that the soul would eat the substance of the most robust body and make for itself a way of escape from the incessant hell of its own thoughts.

ABOUT COMING TO BELIEVE ONE'S OWN LIE.—It has been remarked of Lady Morgan, as an autobiographer, that Irish in all things, she was pre-eminently Irish in her facts, for which she depended very little on her memory. Not that retaining one impression of a scene or incident, she deliberately stated or wrote down another; but that retaining none, or an imperfect one, she stated or wrote down what was best calculated for immediate effect, most pleasing to her public, or most flattering to herself. We are told that she once wrote to Lady Charleville from some town in Warwickshire, to say that she had settled down to finish one of her books in a charming country, in a pretty apartment opening on a conservatory, with a velvet lawn before her door; and that Lady Charleville, returning shortly afterward from London to Dublin, stopped at that place, hunted up the address, and found "Glorvina" in a small lodging in the suburbs, looking on a cabbage garden. "Paradoxical as it may seem, there was as much self-deception as vanity in this. She had fancied herself into the heroine of one of her own romances, with the accessories, and wrote accordingly. The real and the fictitious were so blended in her, that it gradually surpassed her power to separate them."

CORINTHIAN ORDER OF ARCHITECTURE.—The Corinthian order is supposed to be imitative of the proportions of a young virgin, as the Ionic and Doric were of those of man and woman. The invention or origin is thus related by Vitruvius: "A Corinthian virgin just marriageable died. After her interment, her nurse collected some vases and toys which had pleased her while living, put them into a basket, and placed it on her tomb, covering it that it might endure the longer, with a tile. The basket being placed on the roots of an acanthus, depressed it in the middle, causing the leaves and stems, which grew up in spring, to encircle and twine round the basket; but being resisted by the angles of the tile, they convolved at the extremities in the form of volutes. This was seen by Callimachus, who, delighted with it, formed from its model a new capital, the most elegant and beautiful of all the orders." Such is the account given by Vitruvius; but notwithstanding, all the three orders are generally supposed to be derived from the Egyptians, as Cecrops, the founder of Athens was an Egyptian; and it is well known that the Greeks borrowed their manners, customs and laws from that nation.

BRIGANDAGE IN ITALY.

BRIGANDAGE is the rule, not the exception, in Southern Italy. A recent traveler there tells the following story:

"We hear constant stories of the outrages perpetrated by the brigands of Southern Italy; all our friends returning from Naples whom we have met here being full of excitement over the perils they have successfully braved, or the misadventures of their less fortunate acquaintances. Dr. W. told us a good story the other day, which has the additional interest of being a true one.

"An Englishman, engaged in the superintendence of some mines belonging to the late Duke of Parma, was informed one morning by his servant that a man wished to see him, who declined mentioning his business to any one but himself. Being much engaged at the moment, he felt half unwilling to admit him, but at last concluded to do so.

"The Italian stated that he was in possession of information that would probably save him from being robbed, if not murdered, but that, before disclosing it, he required to be paid a certain sum, which he named.

"This proposition was at once declined, but Mr. M. told him he would give him some trifling gratuity, and if in the end his suspicions turned out to be well-founded, and his story proved to be correct, he should be rewarded liberally.

"To this the man assented, adding 'You are an Englishman, and I can trust your word; and now, listen, and judge whether I speak truly. You propose to visit the mines at ——, on the 8th of this month. You have engaged Beppo Quattrini's vettura and horses, and he himself is to drive you, and you will carry with you so many hundred scudi, for payment of wages now in arrears.'

"'It is true,' replied Mr. M., 'that I am going to the mines on the day you name, and also that I have engaged Beppo Quattrini and his carriage, and that I may possibly have some money with me, though what interest all this may have for you I cannot imagine.'

"'Listen, signor! On reaching a stone bridge, some distance from Parma, three men will attack the carriage, and Beppo will offer no resistance. You will be robbed, and probably murdered, for dead men tell no tales. And now, does the signor think my story worthy of credit?'

"'Not in the least;' the signor was not to be moved by such a papera; with an Englishman's cool disbelief in danger, and dislike of being forced into a ludicrous position, and swindled by an adventurer working on his fears through a clever story, he pooh-poohed the whole affair, and dismissed his informant.

"That night he dined with the Grand Duke, and mentioned casually his visitor of the morning. The Prefect of Police was at the table, and when dinner was over, he drew him aside, and assured him that such a warning was not to be lightly disregarded.

"'You may be satisfied every word the rascal said was true; but you need not trouble yourself about the matter. Continue your preparations as before; keep a silent tongue in your head; and leave everything to me.'

"The morning arrived, and Beppo drew up his horses at Mr. M.'s, where the prefect had previously called and given his instructions.

"'You will take a gend'arme, whom I shall send you, as your valet, and he will ride beside the coachman; at the nearest village two more will be in waiting, who will enter the carriage, and accompany you to the mines.'

"The start was made. Beppo dared not object to the companionship of the servant, who, as they approached the village indicated, drew a pistol, and placed it to his ear.

"'Listen, briconne! you are sold; you are a dead man! if you wink so much as an eyelid, I will blow your brains out, maladetto!'

"As they approached the fatal bridge, three men, armed to the teeth, rushed from their ambush; one of them seized the horses, but was fired at by the man on the box, and mortally wounded, though at the moment he succeeded in making good his escape. The two other miscreants made a dash at the doors of the carriage, and were instantly shot dead by the men inside. The coachman got off in the end more easily than he deserved; and it is to be hoped, for the good credit of Englishmen, that Mr. M. discovered and rewarded the man who had given the warning, and undoubtedly saved him from certain death."

A CHOLERA STORY.

A STORY is published in Paris confirming the fact of the immense influence of the nerves in cholera, as illustrated in the year 1832, by Professor Recamier. He was summoned to a bedside, where he found a dying man, the features rigid, cramp all over the body, the voice changed; in fact, all the most fatal symptoms strongly characterized. After an attentive diagnosis, the sagacious doctor snatched off the bed-clothes, and commenced flogging the patient with all the strength he possessed. The spectators—for an instant electrified—were naturally enraged. The dying man, by one expiring effort, started from his bed, threw himself on the doctor, who ran off, hotly pursued along passages and corridors by the cholera patient, till both reached the top of the hospital stairs, when the breathless professor stopped, and, looking at the ghastly pursuer, coolly asked:

"And how do you feel?"

"Feel!" said the astonished patient. "Feel, indeed! Why," after a pause, "I have no more cramps!"

"I believe you. But after this fine race you require rest."

Some cups of tisane and the the pseudo moribund was saved.

SPECIMEN OF NEGRO ADVERTISING SOUTH.

WE cut this from a paper published at Turnwold, near Eatonton, Georgia, called The Countryman. It tells its own story:

WORK WANTED.—We have established a shop at Turnwold, where we are prepared to do all manner of wood and iron work, wagon-making, and repairing included. We have not turned fools because we are free, but know we have to work for our living, and are determined to do it. We mean to be sober, industrious, honest, and respectful to white folks—and so we depend on them to give us work.

Jan. 30, 1866. WILLIAM & JIM.

A MATRIMONIAL ADVERTISEMENT.—A lady advertised some time ago, in the Parisian journals, under the initials "A. C.," that she was young, handsome, and worth $2,000,000, and was anxious to get married, but did not care whether her husband was rich or poor. She invited the aspirants to her hand to send their photographs. A month afterward, having in the meantime received 1,500 applications, she started a journal, soliciting subscriptions from all her would-be husbands, and promising to publish her reply to the respective candidates in her new journal. She immediately received several thousand francs, the aggregate amount of the subscription money, and forthwith published all the letters. The journal ceasing to appear after that first, and it seemed last issue, the befooled parties now appealed to the court, where the trial of the ingenious lady has lately taken place. Among the most spicy letters is that of a drum-major, who declares himself ready for all sacrifices, including that of his post in his regiment, provided he can secure Mlle. A. C. and her 2,000,000. A cook writes to her: "My physique is admirable, mademoiselle, and my two sisters are milliners. Your 2,000,000 would make us the kings of France." Among the amateurs of this double-millioned woman are not a few persons occupying high stations, who thus find their matrimonial ambitions rather awkwardly exposed.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

IN a class in an Eastern college, there was a chap noted for his waggery. One day the professor of logic was endeavoring to substantiate that a thing remains the same, notwithstanding a substitution in some of its parts. Our wag, who had been exercising the Yankee art of whittling, at length held up his jack-knife, inquiring:

"Suppose that I should lose the blade of my knife, and should get another inserted in its place, would it be the same knife as it was before?"

"To be sure," replied the professor.

"Well, then," the wag continued, "suppose I should then lose the handle and get another, would it be the same still?"

"Of course," replied the professor.

"But if somebody should find the old blade and the old handle, and should put them together, what knife would that be?"

We never heard the professor's answer.

IF nobody's noticed you, you must be small:
If nobody's slighted you, you must be tall;
If nobody's bowed to you, you must be low;
If nobody's kissed you, you're ugly, we know;
If nobody's envied you, you're a poor elf;
If nobody's flattered you, flatter yourself;
If nobody's cheated you, you are a knave;
If nobody's hated you, you are a slave;
If nobody's called you a "fool" to your face,
Somebody's wished your back in its place;
If nobody's called you a "tyrant" or "scold,"
Somebody thinks you of spiritless mold;
If nobody knows of your faults but a friend,
Nobody'll miss them at the world's end;
If nobody clings to your purse like a fawn,
Nobody'll run like a hound when it's gone;
If nobody's eaten his bread from your store,
Nobody'll call you "a miserly bore;"
If nobody's slandered you—here is our pen—
Sign yourself "Nobody" quick as you can.

"WHAR," asked a renowned stump orator, who was running for the office of constable, "whar, my enlightened friends of the 66th Militia District, was Andrew Jackson in the battle of New Orleans? Wur he thar? He wur. He wur a ridin' up and down on a bobtail Arabian, a wavin' of a crooked saber, and up to his armpits in blood and mud, and a givin' the British thunder; the genius of his country a holdin' of her ægis over his head, cotton bales paveneering in front to protect him from danger, and the American eagle, with the stars and stripes in its beak, a soarin' aloft in the blue empyrean, crying, 'Hail Columbia!'"

A POOR and simple old Frenchwoman, who had subsisted chiefly by begging cold victuals, died a few days ago in Waterville. On her deathbed, appearing restless, she was asked if she wanted anything? She replied, "Only one here—to be buried in a clean white dress." Her last words, when asked what she hoped for in the future, were, "Good warm breakfasts!" Mr. Percival kindly provided a "clean white dress," at the expense of the town, and the poor old beggar has gone to her "good warm breakfasts" with the Father of Mercies.

AT a Naval Court-Martial, lately held in Brooklyn, the following dialogue is said to have taken place between one of the witnesses and the court:

"Are you a Protestant?"

"No, sir."

"What are you, then?"

"Captain of the foretop."

A COUNTRY schoolmaster, happening to be reading of the curious skin of the elephant:

"Did you ever see an elephant's skin?" he asked.

"I have!" shouted a little six-year-old at the foot of the class.

"Where?" he asked, quite amused at the boy's earnestness.

"On the elephant!" said he, with a most provoking grin.

ONE very cold night, a jolly old fellow, who had partaken rather too freely of flip at a tavern, started for home in a sleigh, and on the way was upset, and left by the side of the road. Some persons passing the same way a short time after, discovered the old fellow, holding his feet up to the moon, ejaculating to some invisible person named John: "Pile on the wood; it's a thundering cold fire!"

THE following odd conversation took place during a petty trial in London lately:

At the magistrate's request the mother stepped forward.

Mr. Yardley—What is your husband?

The mother—He is a tailor.

Mr. Yardley—And I dare say earns good money?

The mother—No sir, not now.

Mr. Yardley—Why not?

The mother—Not in cucumber season. (Laughter.)

Mr. Yardley—Not when?

The Mother—Not in cucumber season.

Mr. Yardley—How is that?

The mother—Because when cucumbers are in, the gentry are out of town. (Laughter.)

Mr. Yardley—That is new to me.

A FIVE-YEAR-OLD chap was assigned the duty of "rocking" his little brother to sleep. After a few minutes of fruitless effort to soothe the restless infant to slumber, he called his mother's attention to the state of the case, with this remark:

"Ma, this fellow won't go to sleep—I think he wants something."

All questions as to what the baby wanted were only answered by a blush and a downcast look, but in a few minutes after, while the infant was in the enjoyment of what he really did want, little five-year-old explained himself by the interrogation:

"Ha! didn't I know what he wanted?"

AN APT REPLY.—Sheridan once succeeded admirably in entrapping a noisy member who was in the habit of interrupting every speaker with cries of "hear, hear." Richard Brinsley took an opportunity to allude to a well-known political character of the time, whom he represented as a person who wished to play the rogue, but had only sense enough to play the fool.

"Where," exclaimed Sheridan, in continuation, and with great emphasis, "where shall we find a more foolish knave or a more knavish fool than this?"

"Hear, hear!" was instantly bellowed from the accustomed bench.

The wicked wit bowed, thanked the gentleman for "his ready reply to the question," and sat down amid convulsions of laughter from all but their unfortunate subject.

WHEN Foote was once walking with his friend Guhagan, in Soho square, they met a most miserable object, who earnestly solicited their charity. Guhagan refused; and, on Foote giving a few pence, said:

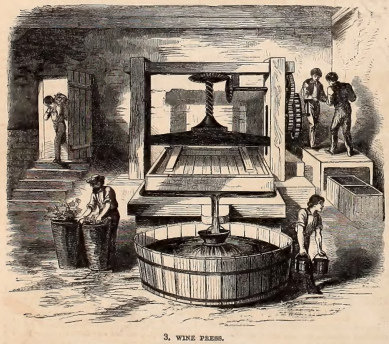
"I believe you are imposed upon, for I am morally certain that fellow is an impostor."

"He is either the most distressed man or the best actor I ever saw in my life," replied the comedian; "and, as either one or the other, he has a brotherly claim upon me."

HERE is the characteristic English satire, half punning, half witty, by Theodore Hook, on Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound":

"Shelley styles his new poem 'Prometheus Unbound,'
And 'tis like to remain so while time circles round;
For surely an age would be spent in the finding
A reader so weak as to pay for the binding."

THE vessel that no woman objects to embark in.—A court-ship.



A STORY is told of a cool old sea-captain, with a virago of a wife, who met an artificial devil, such as larking boys contrive, in a lonely place. As the ghost obstructed his path, the old fellow remarked:

"If you are not the devil, get out! If you are, come along with me and get supper. I married your sister!"

THE GREAT WORKSHOPS OF AMERICA.

1. WINE CULTURE—VIEW OF ONE OF LONGWORTH'S VINEYARDS ON THE OHIO RIVER.

3. WINE PRESS.

A BOTTLE OF WINE.

How It Is Made.

TRAVELERS on our Western rivers oftentimes see spots that bear so different a hue and general appearance to what is about them, that they naturally excite the curiosity. To those who have traveled in Europe there is nothing novel in the sight; they only see reproduced the vineyards of the old country, and so perfectly reproduced as to carry the mind entirely away from the locality.

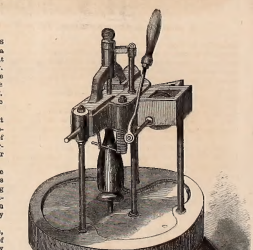
As we wanted, in illustrating this great branch of our native industry, a model vineyard, we have sent our Artist to that of N. T. and W. R. Anderson, in the neighborhood of Cincinnati, on the Ohio River, for our sketches.

Those vineyards are the ones which have already become famous as those of Nicholas Longworth, the great pioneer of wine-making in the West. They have for a quarter of a century upheld a reputation second to no European wines, and are every day improving by practice.

Our sketches are taken in the vintage season, which in this country is the latter part of October. Then the vineyard presents a busy scene, and all the poetry that artists and writers have told us from sunny Italy, France, Spain and Germany, is repeated in our very midst.

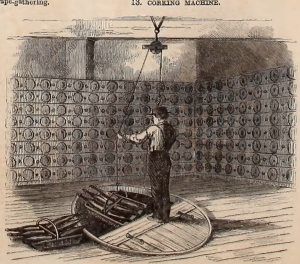
The vines are principally cultivated and the labor done by foreigners, and as a consequence, all the characteristics of old country labor are carried out, one of the strangest to American eyes being that of the working of women with the men, making no distinction in the employment, up to the time of the grape-gathering.

After that their work ceases, and men work alone. Up to this time it is not at all difficult for the visitor to the Longworth vineyard to imagine himself within the bounds of Louis Napoleon's dominions, and surrounded by the very originals of the country.



The process of manufacture is this:

The grapes are carefully picked, bruising being avoided, and brought in huge crates to the wine vaults (No. 2), for the press. This is only occasionally varied by pressing the grapes in the vineyard and bringing in the fresh juice, or must, as it is technically called, to the cellar in casks. All large establishments have their own presses, but the smaller growers are obliged to depend on the larger for the first process or making of must. This pressing is done by bruising the grapes—after they are brought in—and throwing them into the receptacle of the press, which is simply a square box with a perforated bottom, through which the juice flows into a tub beneath (No. 3). From this tub it is dipped in buckets or conducted by a hose into immense casks, where the first fermentation takes place, after which it is transferred, by the same process to the casks below, in the cellar (No. 4). Here the temperature is subjected to little or no variation through the year, on account of the depth and admirable construction of the cellars.



When the sparkling wine is to be made—that is, the champagne—late in the spring, the wine is forced or pumped up from the vaults into the work-room, where it is received into casks, and a solution of rock-candy added; after which the wine is immediately bottled. The effect of the rock-candy is, in a few days, to cause

2 ENTRANCE TO THE VAULT.

13. CORKING MACHINE.

7. LOWERING WINE INTO COLD VAULT, AFTER FERMENTATION.

LONGWORTH'S VINEYARD AND WINE HOUSE, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

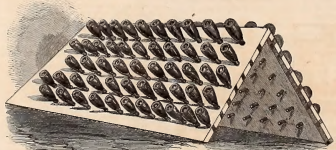
12. FINISHING STAND AND CROCHET FOR CUTTING CLASP.

8. LOWER CELLAR—SPARKLING, AFTER FERMENTATION.

fermentation in the bottles. The work-room (No. 6) contains the machines for bottling, corking, and wiring. These machines, though not very complicated, require great dexterity in their management, as well as long practice, and are the most interesting features of the whole wine-making.

After this corking and wiring, the unaccustomed observer would think that the great point of the process was over; but not so, it has only just begun. The manipulation, causes it to disgorge the sediment (No. 12), or permits the gas to do it, after which the bottle is quickly passed to another, quite as dexterous in his line, who sweetens it, and, like a flash, hands it over to another at the corking-machine (No. 13), who, with a few blows of a mallet, a twist, a turn, and a magical movement of the fingers, sends forth the bottle corked, ready to be rewired and labeled, packed, and transported to the Cincinnati house, ready for the drinking of all the world; for the thing is a solemn fact, all the world do drink this Cincinnati wine.

4. INTERIOR OF DRY WINE VAULTS, 135 FEET LONG.



9. ON POINT.

5. HOSE FOR CONDUCTING WINE FROM VAULTS.

And this in the making of wine in a nutshell. The process is no mystery—only a question of delicacy and skill; and we make no doubt that the time is rapidly coming when American wines are to be the wines—or, at least, sufficiently appreciated by our own people to get us, by their use, out of our abominable habit of spirit-drinking.

bottle, now firmly closed, goes through another process. It is carefully watched for fermentation. When that commences, it is lowered into the vaults (No. 7)—this lowering depending entirely on the state of fermentation—where, the temperature being much cooler than above, the fermentation is of course immediately checked. Before lowering into these vaults comes the great trouble, that caused by the bursting of bottles—the second fermentation being the lottery of the whole manufacture.

10. ON POINT.

11. SECTION VIEW OF BOTTLES ON POINT.

Kill, of course, does much; but all the skill in the world will not provide for the contingencies of change of atmosphere. If the breakage in this state is under 10 per cent., the wine-makers deem themselves lucky; but sometimes it runs so much over that mark as to be ruinous.

On being lowered to these vaults, the bottles are stacked up, as represented in the engraving of the lower cellar (No. 8), where they remain until the sediment is deposited on the lower side of the bottle. Of these lower vaults there are four, each 135 feet in length and 30 feet in width.

The object now is to draw of the sediment, or impurities, without disturbing or injuring the effervescing qualities of the wine, or wasting it. To accomplish this, the bottles are put on point, as it is termed, and is represented in the three engravings (Nos. 9, 10 and 11); the sediment is by this process gradually collected at the neck of the bottle, and deposited on the cork.

The bottle in this state goes into the hands of a skillful workman, who, with wonderful rapidity, cuts the wire, frees the bottle from the cork, and, by one skilful

6. BOTTLING, CORKING AND WIRING SPARKLING WINE.

THE history of the invention of clocks is very imperfectly known. By some it has been ascribed to Pacificus, Archdeacon of Verona, in the ninth century, and by others to Boethius, in the early part of the sixth. The Saracens are supposed to have had clocks which were moved by weights, as early as the 11th century; and as the term is applied by Dante to a machine which struck the hours, clocks must have been known in Italy about the end of the 13th or beginning of the 14th century. It is said that the first clock made in England was furnished out of the proceeds of a fine imposed upon the Chief-Justice of the King's Bench, in 1368, and that it remained in its original situation, in Old Palace Yard, as late as the reign of Elizabeth. In the reign of Richard II. a large astronomical clock was made by Richard of Wallingford, Abbot of St. Albans, which was regulated by a fly. But the most ancient clock of which we possess any authentic account was erected in a tower of the palace of Charles V. of France, about the year 1364, by Henry de Wick, or de Vick, a German artist. A clock was erected at Strasburg about 1370, at Courtray about the same time, and at Spire in 1395. In the following century public clocks appear to have existed in all the principal towns of Europe, and private ones to have come into very general use.

THE LAY OF THE CROSSING-SWEEPER.

BY WALTER T. CONRAD.

All day long in the crowded street,
Where the sidewalks ring with the tread of feet,
And the banners float from the towering roofs,
Mid the rattle of wheels and the clatter of hoofs,
A flitting shape in the busy scene,
I labor to keep the crossings clean.

Hither and thither, from side to side
Of the crowded street with my broom I glide,
This way and that way, to and fro,
Forward and backward I come and go;
While the human throng, rushing, eager throng,
Jostle each other the whole day long.

Over my bridge, through all the day,
From sidewalk to sidewalk of bright Broadway,
In separate currents they pass me by;
Each face I can read by a glance of the eye—
By a glance of the eye have learned to know
The warmth of the heart that beats below.

Scattering mud with their iron hoofs,
That echo aloud to the distant roofs,
The mettled steeds, in their lofty pride
Go dashing past, and the coaches glide,
In gilded splendor adown the street
That rings with the tread of passing feet.

How grand it must seem to be seated there
In the place of that lady, proud and fair,
As she rides in her carriage, so costly and fine,
In her rich dress and jewels that shine;
What wouldn't I give to be her this day,
To ride in my carriage through bright Broadway!

Yonder comes one across the street
With a face so fair and smile so sweet,
That I sometimes think when I look in her eyes
Of the angels that dwell in the far blue skies,
But I know from her dress and her thin white hand
That she does not live on the fat of the land.

And here comes another who steps to one side,
As he passes me by, in his insolent pride;
Who steps aside in his dread of me—
Oh, the bitterest kind of a swell is he!
How I would like, from his head to his feet,
To spatter him well with the mud of the street!

They come and they go all the livelong day,
The old and the young, the sad and the gay,
Over my bridge, from side to side
Of the beautiful street, with its fashion and pride,
And its stately buildings, so grand and high,
That lift their forms to the far blue sky.

There's another crossing, both deep and wide,
From the corner of this world to the other side,
Where we all must pass on our homeward way,
The rich and the poor, the sad and the gay—
To the city eternal, whose streets, I've been told,
Are built of jasper and paved with gold.

Bound to the Wheel.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GUY WATERMAN'S MARK," "REUBEN'S WAR," ETC.

CHAPTER LXXVI.—THE VERDICT.

THE appearance of Roy Small in the witness-box—that is to say, of one of the two men whose doings on a particular midsummer night had led to the alderman's murder, and so to the events which make up all that is essential in our present story—told powerfully on the people present in the court-house. The occasional clank of his irons, the sight to those near of the handcuffs on his wrists, and a certain hardness of demeanor in the man that more than compensated for the small stature and womanly smoothness of countenance that had caused him to be ironically known as "Baby Roy," these things deepened in every breast the interest in the evidence he was about to give, for there were still people who would not believe but that the prisoner were themselves the murderers of Alderman Maude.

Roy's first use of the recovered power of his vision was to glance furtively about, till he caught sight of Bob, who had managed to slop for a moment, though ordered to withdraw. The two exchanged looks—perhaps other and more significant, though altogether unnoticed, signals, for Roy's face cleared as if he had become satisfied the position described to him by Bob in the midnight visit to the prison, was unaltered, and he knew what to do.

He turned his look at Anthony; but did not venture to confront, even for a single instant, the look in that face, so turned his side toward the prisoner.

When the acknowledged facts of the burglary had been elicited, Mr. Martin, on the part of the prosecution, began to approach closely the dangerous but all-important matter of the murder.

"What firearms had you?"

"Two pistols—I had one, and Jack one."

"Both loaded?"

"Yes."

"Both single-barreled?"

"Yes."

"And how and when were they fired off?"

"Jack didn't fire his at all, but threw his on the ground when he was getting through the window, and hadn't time to stop and look for it."

"Do you swear he did not fire it at the alderman before he threw it on the ground?"

"I do. He never saw the alderman. He came running in, and almost jumped through the window, while I watched the alderman and the t'other gentleman."

"You swear he did not fire at all?"

"I do. I'm quite sure o' that. He would have bit me if he had fired, for I was in the doorway loading into the alderman's bedroom."

Mr. Martin handed the pistol to the jury.

"Look at that."

"This is Jack's piece."

"How do you know?"

"Because the lock was broken, and I got it mended for this very job, and here's the mark in the metal."

"Do you know how this piece was fired?"

"I think I do."

"Well?"

"A gentleman in a light coat ran after us, and he fired at us, but missed; and I guess it was Jack's pistol he had, for I saw him come running round a corner as we were getting down from the window, and he stooped as if to pick up Jack's piece."

"Is it much true, my lord," said Anthony.

Sir Norman Lake rose in his place, and held up his hand in deprecation of hasty speech. Anthony bowed in apology.

"And now," continued Mr. Martin, "about your own piece. How was that fired?"

"I fired it at him," said Roy, doggedly, inclining Anthony; "leastwise, if it was him who followed us."

"Was that because you were in danger of being caught?"

"It was because somebody fired at us—not once, nor twice, but three times—and I couldn't stand it; and so, thinking it was him, let fly, that's all."

"Was that last shot after you had left the spot just below the window where you jumped out?"

"Yes; when we were running away. That shot flicked a piece out of my ear—here's the mark now for anybody to see as likes."

"And when the second one?"

"Directly after the first."

"Do you know who fired that shot?"

"I guess him."

"Are you sure it was aimed at you?"

"No, I can't say. I thought so; but it might has been that as killed the alderman."

"How long a time elapsed between the first shot, which you say the alderman himself fired at you, and that second shot which was fired after you?"

"Perhaps a minute—perhaps less. I wasn't very fit for calculating time just then."

"I should think not."

"Well, that's all I know about it. I know I didn't shoot him, and I know Jack didn't shoot him."

"Should you know your piece again?"

"There's a slice, as looks to be clean shaved off of the butt-end," said Roy, "if it's mine." The convict looked with interest at the weapon in Mr. Martin's hands.

"My lord and gentlemen of the jury," said that gentleman, "may I request you, in connection with the extreme importance of an identification of these weapons, to look at this piece?"

It was handed round, and the spectators saw pass over every face, as it glanced at it, that air of conviction which is so unmistakable.

"Take this piece into your hands, Roy, and, remembering your oath, tell me, is that your piece—the piece you fired off as you were running away?"

"I swear it. I'd know it among a thousand," said Roy. "I'd know it blindfold—by the feel."

"And what did you do with your piece after firing it?"

"Threw it at the head of the youngster over there, for meddling with Bloody as didn't concern him, and Jack Perry, with a scowl at Essn.

"Essn, my lord, you will remember," said Mr. Martin, "has testified that he picked up a pistol under the exact circumstances just narrated, and gave it to the prisoner some days later."

"Prisoner!" said Roy, as there was an almost awful silence in the court, as people waited to hear some indication of what the Judge himself thought of this evidence—"prisoner, I wish to give you a word of solemn warning. If you and your companion really did kill this aged gentleman, whatever chance there may be of your lives being spared by an honest confession, even at this late hour, would be forfeited by your present silence. Depend upon it, the truth will be made known, and if that condemns you, I shall be sorry to say, even till I have seen you stand where now stands the prisoner Anthony."

"My lord," said Roy," with some agitation, but with a certain eagerness and solemnity, "would I and Jack have owned to the business of the robbery, when the governor came to us and told us we hadn't known it was all right about the murder?"

"Where is the governor?" asked the Judge.

Mr. Governor was sworn, and testified that the two convicts had shown no hesitation—no unwillingness—to tell him the whole story just as it had been narrated, although he had said nothing to alarm them on the one hand, or to tempt them on the other.

"Witness," again said the Judge, "I have given you warning. Let me add, that if the evidence you have given, or shall give to-day, shall prove to have been honest evidence, I will take care the fact shall be made known in the proper quarter."

The Judge ceased, and bending himself with his papers, and the buzz of conviction running through the court told Roy he was safe, that his story was believed, and that he and his pal were not going to be suddenly put into Anthony's place, as he had had misgivings might happen.

During that buzz Mr. Martin sat down, and Sir Norman Lake rose to cross-examine.

"How were you dressed at the time you appeared in the alderman's bed-room, and kept guard while your companion was plundering the safe?"

"In a smock-frock."

"Light-colored?"

"Yes."

"Think again. Remember your oath, and answer me deliberately. Was it not your companion that wore the smock-frock?"

"I ought to know, I should think," said Roy. "It don't matter to me, as I know on, which of us it were; but, as it happens, I did wear a smock-frock, and Jack didn't."

"And did you, wearing that smock-frock, go along the corridor, followed by the housekeeper—"

"No," interrupted Roy.

"Stop—take time. Do you swear you did not, after the alderman must have been killed, go along the corridor; enter the safe-room; answer the housekeeper, who called after you, thinking it was her master, by saying the door, to let her in; and then leap out of the window?"

"Why, what a fool!" was Roy's answer, intended to be insolent; but which, as it happened, was the precise reply Sir Norman would have liked.

"You swear that nothing of the sort occurred, do you?"

"I do," said Roy.

"Is that your smock-frock?" demanded Sir Norman, causing a garment to be handed to Roy, who put his head into the hood, and produced a rag of a red handkerchief.

"This was mine."

There was a laugh as the article was displayed.

"My lord, may I ask permission to let that man put on the smock-frock, and that the housekeeper, before giving her own evidence, may see him?"

While Mrs. Milton was being sworn, Roy was invested with the smock-frock, and then Sir Norman said to her:

"Please to look at that man, first as you see him now, and then when he has turned his back—Roy, turn round!—and tell me, have you any reason to believe you have seen that man in that dress before?"

"Never, sir," was the housekeeper's unhesitating answer.

"You are quite sure?"

"Quite."

"That will do for the present."

Sir Norman paused, looked at the jury, and saw they understood precisely the character and boldness of his proceedings in taking up a question the prosecution had left alone—the question of the wearer of the coat. Curious eyes glanced at Sleuth, but saw nothing there to enlighten them. Sir Norman recommenced:

"Roy, what share did you give your accomplice, Bob, of that night's booty?"

"No share at all. He didn't care one. He pushed us on to the job, and then left us in the lurch."

"And was he content with nothing?"

"No."

"Well, then, what did you give him?"

"I told you above, nothing."

"What, not even a scrap of paper?"

"Oh!" exclaimed Roy, with a wonderful air of honesty-proving surprise, "I had quite forgot the Judge's adjuration. 'I thought you meant——'"

"Roy, it's what you mean that is of importance now. Be careful. You did give him a piece of paper. What was it?"

"A will, or a codicil, or a testament, or some thing of that kind."

"A will, or a codicil, or a testament? Very good. Where will, codicil, or testament was it?"

"The alderman's."

"The alderman's? Taken from the safe?"

"Yes."

"Signed?"

"Yes."

"What date?"

"Can't say."

"Try. Was it March 22, 1816?"

"Can't say that."

"Did you set so little value on a document that certain persons might have been willing to pay it any money?"

"We knew as we couldn't use it," said Roy, "and so, when he bothered us, we gave it to him."

"You say it was signed, and, no doubt, was also witnessed?"

"Eh?"

"The paper was witnessed?"

"Don't know, I'm sure."

"Look at that paper." There was a name at the bottom—the alderman's, you say. Were there not also two names by the side, of people who had been duly documented signed?"

"No. There was no names but one; Silas Maude, or some such name."

Sir Norman Lake called on the prosecution to produce the codicil in accordance with the notice he had given them that it would be required. It was handed to him instantly.

"Look at that document. Was that it?"

"No. It was like this, but there was only one name."

Vainly did Sir Norman put the question in a dozen different forms. Bob had done his work well, and Anthony's defenders were unable to wring out of the burglar anything but a statement exactly contradicting what they were desired to be the truth.

"Call the other man," said Sir Norman.

"Stop, Roy," said Mr. Martin, in his kindest and most paternal tones, "Have you any reason to believe that Bob ever really benefited by your gift?"

"I thought so when I heard of his fortin', and till quite lately; but I didn't know about Essn then, and I didn't know—leastwise, I didn't think—about witnesses."

"That will do."

Triumphant was the glance of Roy as, on leaving the dock, he met, in the regions below, his pal Jack, and signaled him all was right.

Jack's examination was soon over. Duly warned beforehand to stand to his breast of it, but to let them find out no witnesses to the document, he, too, passed through the trying ordeal in a satisfactory manner, and thus helped to leave in the court a strong belief the men had had no hand in the murder; and that Anthony's advisers were engaged to a forlorn hope if their cause depended on showing that Bob had sold Sleuth a codicil which had given him all the property.

Grooms, gardeners, household servants, and strangers passing by about the time of the murder, confirmed, substantially, the fact that only two shots had been heard in the house—the one fired by the alderman at the burglars, the other the one by which the alderman was killed; and the whole aim in the ground—the one supposed to be fired by Anthony with one of the burglar's own pistols, the other by the fugitive burglars.

Then the jury re-appointed in the box, and testified, in the clearest manner, to her having, immediately on the discovery of the murder, followed some one who evaded her whom she first addressed as Mr. Sleuth, and then, in the safe-room, where she saw he wore a light coat, as Mr. Anthony.

Jack was recalled, wearing the smock-frock, and Mrs. Milton was a little more dubious about his identity, for he was taller and bulkier than Roy; but, on the whole, she felt satisfied it was not the burglar she had seen that night.

"Did you see Mr. Sleuth soon after this incident?" she was asked by Mr. Martin.

"Yes; almost directly."

"Where?"

"He met me when I got back into the corridor."

"Wearing a light coat?"

"Oh, no."

"Could he easily have got there, after changing his dress?"

"Not easily, sir."

"Do you think he did?"

"I don't know what to think."

"What did you think at the time?"

"That it was Mr. Sleuth."

Mrs. Milton turned almost with an air of personal distress to Anthony, as she said this, as if entreating him to believe she had no choice but tell the truth. He smiled in answer.

"And did you then believe it was somebody else?"

"Yes. I thought it was Mr. Anthony."

"And did you ever tell him so?"

"Yes."

"And what did he say?"

"He denied it."

"And did you, after that, think you had erred?"

"Yes, by degrees."

"But never discovered any fresh facts to justify that change of belief?"

"Only this, sir. I have known Mr. Anthony since he was a boy. Many and many a time he has lain in my arms when he has been ill, and a more truthful, honorable lad never breathed—nor a more truthful, honorable man."

The buzz of acquiescence that ran through the auditory did not, as Mr. Stamp plainly saw, create a single doubt in the minds that the chain of circumstances against Anthony had received a second and powerful link. Mr. Martin perceived it, and exclaimed at it.

"You have told us how you met Mr. Sleuth after your vain pursuit of this person in the dark coat; please tell us how you found Mr. Anthony."

"At the murdered man's bed-side, kneeling, and in great trouble."

"Was he saying anything?"

"Yes. He was asking forgiveness."

"For what?"

"I didn't hear."

"You found him at the bed-side, kneeling, in great trouble, and asking forgiveness?"

"Yes."

"Was he still wearing a light coat?"

"Yes."

"Had he had time to get there, if it had been him you saw in the safe-room?"

"Yes, and more than time. Mr. Sleuth, as Mr. Sleuth would have had to pass by the same road, outside the bed-room where I found Mr. Anthony, and have gone through the length of the corridor, where he met me."

"Exactly. And that is in addition to the delay in the removal of the coat?"

"Yes, sir."

"And had Mr. Anthony anything in his hand as he knelt?"

"Yes, a pistol, which he told me, when we talked it over afterward, he had picked up and dried at the burglar's as he pursued them."

"His pistol, then, was empty at the time?"

"I supposed so."

"Did you previously been in the alderman's room, but after his death?"

"Yes; it was then I discovered his murder, and raised the alarm, and was calling for a doctor."

"Did you then discover anything in the room?"

"Yes; a piece of something burning on the bed."

"Not in a flame?"

"No; smoldering like."

"Look at that!" Something was handed to the housekeeper. "Look carefully before you open it—now open it. Do you recognize it?"

"Yes; this is the wadding I found on the bed."

"Do you read anything on the paper?"

"Yes; 'Kirkib, tobacconist, Oxford.'"

"Have you found or seen that piece before?"

"Yes; I had seen packets of tobacco lying about in Mr. Anthony's room, before he quarreled with the alderman, having the same name on the paper."

"Had you ever any conversation about this wadding with Mr. Anthony?"

"Yes."

"What did he say?"

"He couldn't understand how it should have happened that the burglars should have used for wadding a piece of paper that had come from his Oxford tradesman."

"Did he say anything else?"

"Another time he seemed troubled about it, and he asked me if remembered his uncle receiving a present of half a pound of tobacco from him at Oxford, and I told him I didn't; but, no doubt, he might, and I knew nothing of it."

"Such a present might have been sent, but you did not know of it?"

"Yes, sir."

"You have told us about Mr. Anthony's pistol. Do you know anything about Mr. Sleath having one?"

"Yes; I saw Mr. Anthony and Mr. Sleath looking at their pistols together, and I was nervous because Mr. Sleath's was still loaded, he said."

"Was it a single-barreled pistol?"

"No; a double-barreled one—the alderman's own."

"Did Mr. Sleath make any remark about how one barrel had been fired?"

"Yes; he said the alderman had taught him how to fire it off, and wanted him to use it against the burglars, but he had been afraid to do so, never having handled a pistol before, and that then the alderman had fired."

"That disposed of one of the barrels. What became of the contents of the other?"

"Mr. Anthony fired it off just then."

"In your presence?"

"Yes, sir."

"Are you aware of any other pistol or firearm having been in the possession of Mr. Sleath under any circumstances?"

"No, sir."

Mr. Martin sat down, convinced he had riveted a new link about the unfortunate prisoner, in showing that while he might have shot the alderman before opening the burglars, Sleath, on the other hand, could not seemingly have done so, as only one shot had been fired during the affray, from his weapon, the alderman's pistol—the shot fired by the brave old man himself.

Sir Norman Lake declined to cross-examine the housekeeper, and Mr. Martin called for George Slocum.

The witness, a respectable-looking tradesman, bowed respectfully to Anthony, who reciprocated, and then Mr. Martin began. The cedidil was put into Mr. Slocum's hands.

"Can you identify that writing?"

"Yes. 'Slocum—£73.8.10—June 10.'"

"In whose hand-writing is it?"

"I presume, Mr. Anthony Maude's."

"Why do you presume that?"

"Because it is so like his hand, and because the memorandum went to refer to a letter I wrote to him about the time."

"Was that letter a demand on the prisoner for the sum mentioned in the memorandum—£73.8.10, and did you threaten him with arrest if it were not paid on an early day—the very day of which you have spoken?"

"I did, because——"

"Never mind the because. You did write such a letter?"

"I did."

"And you were paid—when?"

"After the inquest came into the alderman's property."

"Your letter was before the murder—was it not?—and you were paid after?"

"Permit me——"

"Answer the question, sir."

"Yes."

"That will do. Call Mr. Knibb."

Mr. Knibb ascended as Mr. Slocum descended the steps of the witness-box.

"Did you have dealings with the prisoner at Oxford?"

"Yes; for some years."

"Do you recognize the writing on the back of the document now put into your hand?"

"It looks like Mr. Maude's."

"Have you any serious doubts about it?"

"I cannot be certain."

"But you incline to think it is his?"

"Yes."

"Was he in your debt in June, 1865, and did you press him about that time for payment?"

"Yes."

"Before or after you heard of his accession to the property?"

"A week or two before."

"And you were paid after?"

"Yes."

"Do you recognize the piece of burnt paper now shown to you?"

"No."

"Can you tell us anything about it?"

"I so happens that I can. There are figures here—very much new—2.10. I put such figures at times, when busy, upon packets of tobacco, to indicate to my young men they are sold on credit, and are to be debited before delivery."

"Two for February, the second month, and ten for the day before the month."

"Have you your day-book here?"

"Yes."

"Turn to the 23 of February, 1866. Do you find any entries?"

"Yes. I sold Mr. Anthony Maude that day a half pound of a choice kind of tobacco."

"And can you identify the paper as belonging to that packet?"

"Yes; because I use a different sort of paper for such packets, and I have no other entry of a similar kind on the 23 of February."

"Did I not tell you," asked Anthony, "that it was to send to my uncle?"

"It is very likely, sir; but I cannot, I am sorry to say, remember anything about the tobacco, beyond the fact I did supply you with such a packet."

"That will do, Mr. Knibb."

Then Mr. Martin, addressing himself to the Judge, said:

"It is, perhaps, hardly necessary, my lord, to take up time by the examination of more witnesses to prove that the prisoner was in very serious difficulty just before the murder, else I have five other witnesses waiting."

"I acknowledge it fully," said Anthony.

Dr. Pempess's name now resounded through the court, and that handsome and portly gentleman stood up, and was about to go to the witness-box, when Mr. Martin began to suggest the court would probably allow him to speak from where he was; but the doctor strode away sturdily—gold spectacles on nose, and a deep shade of sadness over his face—to the usual place, as if he did not choose to avail himself of any privilege which degraded on Mr. Martin's initiative.

The cedidil was at once placed in his hands.

"Do you recognize that?"

"Yes."

"When did you first see it?"

"On one day in August, 1865, when I happened to be at Mr. Hende's house, his desk was open, dreadfully knocked off the table, and a drawer came out; and in lifting the drawer up, the bottom hung partly loose, and this paper was discovered by Mr. Anthony and Mr. Sleath, I believe, almost simultaneously."

"It is in this document, is it not, Mr. Sleath now holds the property?"

"Yes."

"And you in a position to state whether or no he ever could have held it but for this sudden discovery?"

"I am satisfied, from my own knowledge, he could not."

"Was there anything in Mr. Sleath's behavior that led you to suppose he knew beforehand what was likely to happen?"

"I am bound to say there was not. He was greatly excited at the discovery, and astounded at one, when thrown down, to guard the paper."

"Thrown down! By whom?"

"By Mr. Maude, who, I thought, merely meant to look at the paper without interruption from Mr. Sleath."

With regard to this cedidil; has its genuineness ever been disputed?"

"Never, to my knowledge."

"Not by Mr. Maude?"

"No. He and his lawyer acknowledged it."

"Did you know anything of the alderman's intention to bequeath his property to Mr. Sleath?"

"Yes. He told me, when he brought Mr. Sleath to his house, he intended to do so."

Mr. Sleath bowed his thanks, and sat down. Then up rose Sir Norman Lake, and Sleath knew that the storm clouds were gathering at last.

"How long have you known what business took you to Mr. Maude's that day?"

"You may, sir," said the doctor, crossly, while a faint spot of red began to appear on his cheek, and grew and grew till the whole face was suffused with color. "I received an anonymous letter, in a lady's hand, telling me that Anthony Maude, my intended son-in-law, had spoken—spoken discreditably of me——"

"The particular language does not matter, doctor. I presume it was unpleasant to you?"

"Maude for yourself, sir. He called me—so I was told—a——"

Of course there was a roar of merriment through the court. But when that was over, the doctor added:

"I was angry at the time, but I am not sure but that he was right, for I have since learned what it was that made him give utterance to the phrase, and I publicly own I might do the same thing had I been in his place and had his provocation."

There was no laughing now, but one of those sudden bursts of feeling which, in such an instant overwhelm all laws of routine, and carry judge, jury, and spectators in one tumultuous emotion.

"Silence! Silence!"

It was with moist eyes and a swelling heart that Anthony saw his uncle's friend, his uncle's old man friend, as by a common instinct, to Clarissa, who blushed and trembled, and tried to shrink herself deeper and more profound into the recesses of her long, thick veil.

"RICHARD SLEUTH!" The utterance, by the usher, of this long-expected name roused, by a sudden commotion, followed by a sudden hush, the two top galleries. They were known by rank and rivals in their dead uncle's favor, were also generally believed to be rivals in love. Nothing persons looked, indeed, to find the whole solution of the mystery in that direction.

Sleuth, when called, was where he had been all through—on the bench, not far from the Judge. The colonel had taken care to leave him his seat, but of the witnesses for the prosecution; and as Sir Stamp had told Sir Norman that Sleuth would be more dangerous out of sight than in hearing of the witnesses for the defense, Sleuth was not excepted, in apparent respect to their position as magistrates, from the exclusion. Sleuth, indeed, had then secured one of his most coveted objects in the bad hazard all that it was possible to hear before himself being examined.

At first all was plain sailing. The general state of things before the arrival of Anthony at Mr. Hende's, who had been sent for by the alderman on Mr. Sleuth's aid, the discovery of the cedidil, the appearance of the man in the smock-frock at the door of the dressing-room, the young alderman's bold demeanor and action—all this he told in low, measured, agreeably-sounding tones, and with well-chosen but simple words. But when he came to the incidents of the murder itself, and of the first minutes immediately after it, he was remarkable with what deliberation he spoke, how he dwelled on his words, how he repeated by rote any previously planned narrative. He had, indeed, only too much reason to weigh in the balance the subtle differences of meaning between two words or two phrases, for he was now going over ground where, unfortunately for him, he could not repeat his old story without giving it some quite new glosh. Let us here take up his examination—a friendly one, be it remembered.

"When the alderman lived, on you say, and missed the burglar, where were you?"

"There was a pause, I think, with a not altogether unpraiseful embarrassment, in Sleuth's avail:

"I am here to tell the whole truth, pleasant or unpleasant. I must own, then, I had never handled a weapon—was afraid of such things—and I crouched down in a corner, as far away as I could get—I scarcely know where, I was so excited—and then the doorway into the dressing-room was full of smoke; and when the alderman called to me and put the weapon into my hands, and told me to pursue the villains, I hesitated, and then suddenly threw the weapon from me, and moved to another shot, and that made me think I should be shot at. I think, indeed, I was—yes—and as I had a loaded pistol, and thought most likely the burglars had fled, I made sure no one but myself and one of them men—had no other pistol loaded ready. I would not have had time to reload; and besides, I was stung by the alderman's reproaches, and so I made my way through the smoke to the window, and jumped out, and tried to overtake the man, but did not."

"How did you not know the alderman was killed by that shot?"

"No; I assumed as I hable to say now that he was. I had no idea the alderman was injured, till I met the housekeeper, and she told me."

"Did you wear a light coat that night?"

Sleuth's sky tongue compelled him to pause for an instant before he replied, quite aware of the fact that if Phillis were only kept out of the court, he was sufficiently safe; but he had himself discovered that the business of the man of whom he had purchased the coat had been established so long ago, and the people gone, no one knew whither.

"I did not!" he said with strong emphasis. As he said this, he saw Mr. Stamp handling a bulky bag, and he could well tell you, my lord, that it was some little portion of the truth. However, it was not his turn yet.

"Did you receive a paper from Bob, and which he professed to have obtained from the hands of burglars?"

"Yes; he brought me a paper, with a sort of wild notion that it was to make his and my fortune; but on looking at it, I found it was only a number of bills and receipts which my uncle was so fond of beginning, but which he never completed. He could tell you, my lord, if you don't think it necessary to examine him, that he found, in this scrawl, a list of the articles I have given a description."

And did you ever see the paper that has been produced to-day—the real cedidil—before it was discovered so unexpectedly in Mr. Maude's desk?"

"Never!"

"And you swear you did not therefore put the pencil memorandum on it?"

"I do."

"Had you any means, as by conversation with Mr. Maude or otherwise, of knowing the facts referred to in the memorandum?"

"Not the slightest, I beg pardon. My cousin told me, at times, of his previous embarrassments, but he never told me the details, never mentioned the name of Slocum to me."

"You are sure of that?"

"Quite sure. May I be permitted to add, that if I am to be cross-examined, I hope that it was Mr. Maude himself who first made known publicly the existence of that memorandum."

"Was he the first to discover it?"

"I—I believe so. Perhaps Mr. Stamp told him of its existence."

"Therefore, if it had not been then made known by somebody, there would have been a voluntary concealment?"

Sleuth was silent, and thus again won golden opinions from those who were already favorable witnesses.

He saw Mr. Martin sit down, and Sir Norman Lake, and he knew his cue; so, for an instant, for now he was aware it was to be a death struggle.

There was some bustle about the place where Sir Stamp was sitting, and not look, but the eyes anticipated the object they would presently see, and he was not deceived. A coat was handed up to him—it was light-colored—and he was asked:

"Is you recognize that coat?"

"No."

"You swear that?"

"I do."

"Do you know nothing about it?"

"Nothing whatever."

Sir Norman raised his eyebrows in wonder and beach for a minute in his own mind whether Stamp, Miss Pompess, and all of them had been in a delusion—knew him to be guilty, he would say.

"Can you enlighten us, Mr. Sleuth, as to the origin of that anonymous letter Dr. Pompess received?"

"I fear I can," said Sleuth, in an attitude and with a tone of the deepest humiliation. "It is for one very painful to my life that I could under circumstances of a nature that it is impossible to go into, in a court of justice, but which I have to mean who have themselves known what it is to encroach on the affection, the faith, and the sense leniency—I say, and I do so with the deepest sense of humiliation, that, wishing to break off the acquaintance between my cousin and Miss Pompess, I did use a fact that had come to my knowledge in a manner of cousin, injurious to the lady and her father, and I beg them now to forgive me."

"Hem!" whispered Mr. Stamp to Sir Norman. "That satisfies me, I think. It's for us two putting her up. Amuse the court while I now send for Phillis. We have to try on the attitude more harder conditions soon, and with somewhat less of success."

Sir Norman went back to his place, and there was so faint that his servant, the butler, brought him a glass of water, whispering, at the same time:

"She's coming, sir!"

Suddenly there was a rushdub in the court—Phillis had fainted away, and been removed by his servant.

Mr. Stamp saw the movement, and beckoned hastily to Clarissa.

She understood that he wished her to meet Phillis, and comfort her, and she rose and glided she had some suspicion as to Sleuth's illness and sympathized.

She instantly glided out, and there were people on the stairs, all bowing respectfully as she passed, whether, after all, Miss Pompess did not care more for Sleuth than for Anthony.

While the court waited for Phillis, and the Judge retired for a brief space, a low conversation went on between Mr. Stamp and one of the jurie clerks.

Gradden seems quite satisfied that there was no difficulty—no danger?"

"Quite, sir. He told me to say she seemed only anxious for the time to come when she might be sent for."

Mr. Stamp then began to hold serious converse with Sir Norman as to Phillis's probable evidence, and what might be done to counteract it, as conveyed—he arrest by order of the Judge—when the very hair of his head seemed to stir and rise in mute theirie horror as he caught Gradden's face who literally rushed into the court, and, though he strove to address the words to his employer, was unable to moderate his agitation, and was, therefore, heard by all those around him:

"She's gone, sir! Gone with Mr. Sleuth, in Mr. Sleuth's own carriage. He met us; hardly spoke to me; ordered my driver to stop. His servant got between us. They ran round the corner into Thames street, and went I reached the corner I saw nothing of them, only a carriage driven by Mr. Sleuth's servant at a gallop."

"Merciful heavens! Where is Miss Pompess?"

"Gone, sir. She came up just as Mr. Sleuth broke away from me, and then, as each were stopping just for an instant, Miss Pompess, half mad at first, thought either that I was in pursuit, and ran on after the carriage to follow it till she came up; then ordered her own carriage to stand prepared at a moment's notice. She went to it, got in, drove off, telling me to tell her father not to fear for her, that two men should not escape, and that you should soon hear from her."

"Worse and worse! Had she staid, she could, at least, have kept Sleuth quite safe, and hear something of what Phillis told her. Sir Norman, I am sure only one course—get out these facts as strongly as they will let us."

The Judge now returned, and was startled and angry at the confusion that prevailed; but when he heard, in low whispers, from the magistrates close by, Mr. Macguire, what had happened, he seemed himself to be greatly struck, and to be at a loss how to act in the coming agitation of the court, to take time for reflection.

Sir Norman Lake broke the silence.

"My lord, and gentlemen of the jury," began the young baronet, his natural low manly tone and mind disturbed by what he had got to say, "I am sure you have prepared to receive with the true owner of that coat, who, in fact, gave it to us—who was prepared——"

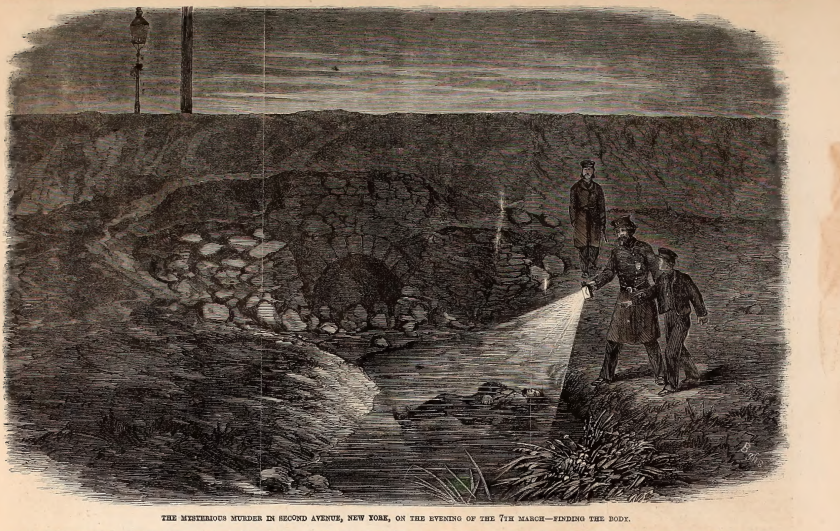
"I object!" hastily interrupted Mr. Martin. "I cannot, with all respect to your lordship, avoid remonstrating against any course of procedure for the defense should think we are not only to hear the evidence for the prosecution fully by the court and jurie, perhaps compromise innocent men's lives and reputation, by listening to cock-and-bull stories of witnesses who might, should, should, or would appear before you. I protest indignantly against such an irregular proceeding to your lordship's authority to know whether I am not entitled to object to it?"

"Certainly, Sir Norman," said the judge. "I am sure we must not ask the jury to listen to ex parte statements."

"But, my lord—my lord!" cried out Sir Norman, passionately, "is innocent blood to be sacrificed in the very teeth of the evidence that, I assure you, will——"

"I cannot listen to this—I cannot, indeed, Sir Norman. I am afraid of the very worst of wrong if they listen to it. Do you not see that if the evidence your witness was to have given us is serious, it is also to make the general failure of that so slowly and deliberately, and so skillfully laid out? And it is indeed serious, for I know the witness herself—for I gather it is a woman you have in court—and I am afraid that the prisoner only the more scarching because of the drift of their testimony. Let us proceed."

With heavy hearts did Anthony's friends and advisers hear those fateful words. As to Anthony himself, he had already nothing left to stay the desk with both hands to steady himself and support his head, which seemed, now and then, too, of course, knew of what was, or was supposed to be the evidence—Phillis's evidence—how—forgetting the court, the spectators, the jury, the judge—remembering only Clarissa's presence, and that, by some strange chance, she bowed, his head upon his hands, and there, and there, in a kind of heavy sort of self-stupefying go as it would, without care for such pain.



But this must not and did not last. Clarissa's devotion and courage made him ashamed of his own want of both qualities. Higher rose his stately head as he sat erect beside his lawyer and close observers declared that they saw him frequently, during the various awful hour, soon, as it moved by some inner sense of something that was unusually beautiful.

Why should we dwell on the rest of the trial? Its pieces embrace only a repetition of what Anthony's character for truthful and honorable dealing. His uncle's note was produced to show that it was not Anthony who had been deceived to be reinstated in the old man's favor, and, therefore, had not, as was asserted by some, had the suspicious circumstances affecting Sleuth were brought out by the prisoner's counsel, and the departure; but even that, the subtlety of Mr. Martin could not, in small measure, get by, he managed to show the peculiar nature of Sleuth and Phillis's relation—and, therefore, why Sleuth might be willing to get rid of any witness having an enemies in the court, not to be exposed before the world; but, on the other hand, that Phillis was that it did not concern the world to know of.

But there was one who feared for Anthony up to the time of the Judge's charge, they lost that hope as he proceeded. Again he warned the jurie, that they were not to listen to hearsay, the prisoner, in a case that made only the more weighty his previous character, in fact, bore the entire stress of proof sent to convict the prisoner. His burden of debt and fear of summary bankruptcy, the fact that Sleuth would inherit all if he did not do something decisive; his quarrel with Sleuth—of this, indeed, the cedicil, which was subsequently found in his desk, hidden away made it evident—and his presence at the spot certain that if the alderman died without further explanation, and the cedicil were produced, then all was his own; his denial that it was he who were the right coat; and then the final discovery that the coat was in the possession of Sleuth—was no option but accept the consequences, with that one single reservation—reservation on the back, evidently placed there about the time of the cedicil, and by which other circumstances circumstance, though not individually sufficient to convict, were, in their weight, as a whole, of the gravest character, and demanded from the jury a most conscientious consideration, as well as a firm purpose to fulfill their duties to God and to the laws of their country entrusted to their keeping, unmoved by those natural emotions which the many admirable qualities of the prisoner were so well calculated to excite.

Something in this strain the Judge spoke. The jury were dismissed to their discussions, and it was not till nearly three hours had expired, and the candles had been lighted, they returned with the fatal verdict of their souls—a verdict of—

"Guilty."

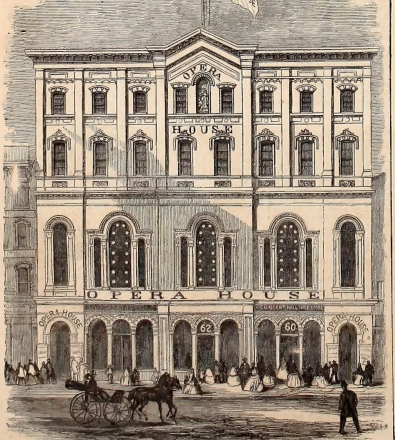
THE MYSTERIOUS MURDER IN SECOND AVENUE, NEW YORK, ON THE EVENING OF THE 7TH MARCH—FINDING THE BODY.

A MYSTERIOUS MURDER

And an Unidentified Body.

New York has its many mysteries, a large part of them unraveled ones. Within the past few years we have had in our midst several murders, strange and horrible ones, which have gone into the void of time, belying the old proverb, that "murder will out."

About seven o'clock on Wednesday evening, March 7th, the 23d Precinct Police found the body of an unknown man lying in a small creek, at 100th street, near 2d avenue. When discovered, life was quite extinct, and upon examination it was found that the deceased had been shot through the head with a pistol; but in what manner and by whom the unknown deceased was shot still remains a mystery. The corpse of the unfortunate man was conveyed to the station-house in 86th street, near 4th avenue, where they are kept awaiting identification.



The coroner was notified, and proceeded to the spot, for the purpose of making an investigation, with the view of elucidating the mystery surrounding the finding of the body. During the examination, it was discovered that the portion of 2d avenue which intersects 100th street forms an embankment about eight feet in height, through which a small creek runs, along the low ground on either side, and empties into a culvert under the street. The body was found lying in the creek, and traces of wagon-wheels were discovered, parallel with the railroad track, where the vehicle had turned out when it neared the culvert. The footprints of two men were distinctly seen along one bank of the creek to the spot where the body was discovered, and thence back to the bank, about 100 yards above the culvert, from which place the wagon had evidently been driven on, after the men had returned, seated themselves, and drove off.

The deceased appeared to have been a very respectable man, and was well dressed. He was about five feet eight inches in height, apparently about 30 years of age, with short, sandy hair, and goatee. He was attired in a white knit undershirt, white linen overshirt, with turned down collar, and a silk necktie, with broad black and red stripe, and fine white counter stripe; a pair of black and white mixed woolen pantaloons and white suspenders, white knit drawers, a pair of fine calfskin boots, black woolen vest, ribbed, light mixed sack undercoat, fashionable style, and a dark blue sack overcoat. In the pocket of his overcoat was found the supplement to a morning journal, dated March 6, and in the outer pocket of his overcoat was found a box of Colt's pistol caps (London manufacture). In his pantaloons pocket were found two purses, one of black and the other of yellow buckskin. The first was empty, but the other contained 815 in United States Treasury notes. No hat or cap was found.

A post-mortem examination of the remains was made by Dr. Robinson, assisted by Dr. White, of 86th street, at the station-house. The body appeared to be fresh, and death had not occurred more than 24 hours previous to the autopsy. A large quantity of extravasated blood was found about the head and face; a large gunshot wound on the right temple, near the top of the right ear. The wound was made by a conical ball half an inch in diameter, the bullet passing directly through the brain and skull, coming out about two and a quarter inches from the corner of the left eye and top of the left ear. The wound had a very ragged appearance, the bone was fractured, and the flesh torn. On cutting up the scalp, the doctors discovered a large quantity of powder about the wound where the ball had entered. The entrance wound was much discolored by the burnt powder, showing conclusively that the pistol, or other weapon, must have been held quite close to the head when fired.

The bullet passed through both hemispheres of the brain, fracturing the right and left spheroid bones, and also the ethmoid bone, causing almost instant death.

A gang of men were employed in dragging the creek in search of a weapon, or anything that might be used as evidence to elucidate the mystery, and their search was rewarded by finding a Colt's navy revolver, with all its barrels loaded, showing clearly that no suicide had been committed. From the circumstances made apparent thus far, it is supposed that the unfortunate deceased was conveyed by his murderers in a wagon to the creek, and thrown in to avoid detection. The remains will be kept for several days at the station-house for identification. In the meantime, Captain Hutchins and Detective Robert Brown, of the 23d Precinct, are making every exertion to discover some clue that may lead to the clearing-up of the mystery.

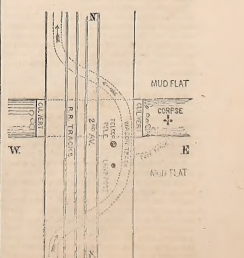
THE OPERA HOUSE AT PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

THE OPERA HOUSE AT PITTSBURGH, PENN.

PITTSBURG, the iron city, has been treating herself to a new Opera House, a drawing of which we give.

SKETCH FROM THE HEAD OF THE MURDERED MAN.

The exterior of the house it is unnecessary to describe—it is faithfully portrayed. The interior is beautifully frescoed, and decorated in blue and gold, very artistic and effective. The dress-circle and parquette are furnished with chairs, cane-



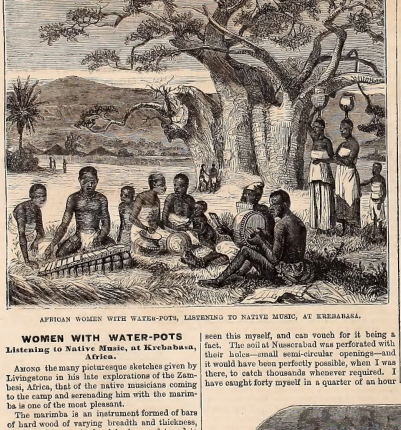


DIAGRAM OF THE PLACE OF MURDER.

GRAND MEDICINE AMONG THE NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

seated and comfortable, while the orchestra is got up in style, with 40 beautiful carved walnut chairs. The whole lower part of the house will seat 1,400 people, and the galleries will hold 1,100 more, in addition to which there are two private boxes, decorated in brocatel and white lace.

The house was built by Mr. Gardner, who, by his enterprise, has given Pittsburg a house that her citizens need not be ashamed of.

AFRICAN WOMEN WITH WATER-POTS, LISTENING TO NATIVE MUSIC, AT KUEBABASA.

WOMEN WITH WATER-POTS

Listening to Native Music, at Kuebabasa, Africa.

AMONG the many picturesque sketches given by Livingstone in his late explorations of the Zambesi, Africa, that of the native musicians coming to the camp and serenading him with the marimba is one of the most pleasant.

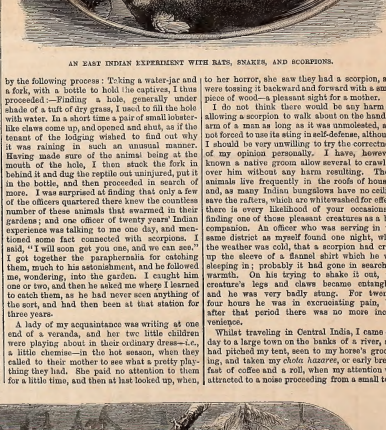
The marimba is an instrument formed of bars of hard wood of varying breadth and thickness, laid on different sized calabashes, and tuned to give the notes, somewhat on the same principle as the wood and straw instruments often exhibited in this country as curiosities.

The water-carriers (women) as an illustration of the power of music in every clime, halted on their labor and listened attentively to the sweet sounds, and as each piece ended, testified their pleasure by applause, and at the end of the concert the musicians were sent away, delighted by the present of a few pieces of cloth. "Music hath charms," etc.

AN EAST INDIAN EXPERIMENT

With Rats, Snakes, and Scorpions.

A CORRESPONDENT in India sends us some interesting matter connected with these reptiles, well worth giving to the world. The first is the record of a great battle between the three abovenamed:



I saw a very curious experiment with a cobra, which was, however, rather cruel. All houses in India having a current of air continually passing through them, it is necessary to protect the candles by glass bell-shaped shades. Under one of these, inverted, was placed the snake, in company with three large black rats, a couple of scorpions, and a centipede. The centipede is about six inches long, and if it crawls over a man leaves the unpleasant feeling of very painful rheumatism for more than a year. I am unable to state the feelings of this happy family at being thus suddenly thrown together; I should judge, from their proceedings, that their ideas were, to say the least, antagonistic. The snake lay quiet; the scorpions ran races round the edge of the shade; the centipede rolled himself up. The rats were the only creatures which seemed alive to the unhappy state of their confinement, and showed it by a game of leap-frog over the venomous part of the family. By an unlucky trip on the head of the snake, one of the rats at last roused him from his insensibility, and expiated his offense on the spot, as he fell dead from a bite. The other rats instantly darted on the snake, who succumbed to their united attack; they hit him from head to tail, and he died, having, however, with the little poison left after killing the first rat, severely wounded the second. The scorpions now began their part of the entertainment, and, knowing that the drowsiness attendant on snake-bites must be kept off at all hazards, humanely forced the rats into activity by running under them and stinging them as they hopped about. Their mode of treatment proved, however, a failure, as the second rat who had been wounded, died. The two rats, however, had first put the scorpions hors de combat, so the last of this combative family were now the rat and the centipede; the last-named had no chance with the former, and speedily fell a victim, the rat coming off victor. As a tribute to his pluck and prowess, he was allowed to return to his native haunts, where he may probably be still enjoying perfect health.

Common scorpions are not generally deadly in their sting. They seldom are more than three or four inches in length, and are of a yellowish-brown, semi-transparent when young. Their holes are made in sandy soil, or also they lie perdu under stones. They run with their tails curled over their heads in a very stately manner. If placed within a ring of burning ashes they soon find their have no exit, and sting themselves between the joints of their back and die. I have seen this myself, and can vouch for it being a fact. The soil at Nusscrabad was perforated with their holes—small semi-circular openings—and it would have been perfectly possible, when I was there, to catch thousands whenever required. I have caught forty myself in a quarter of an hour by the following process: Taking a water-jar and a fork, with a bottle to hold the captives, I thus proceeded:—Finding a hole, generally under shade of a tuft of dry grass, I used to fill the hole with water. In a short time a pair of small lobster-like claws come up, and opened and shut, as if the tenant of the lodging wished to find out why it was raining in such an unusual manner. Having made sure of the animal being at the mouth of the hole, I then stuck the fork in behind it and dug the reptile out uninjured, put it in the bottle, and then proceeded in search of more. I was surprised at finding that only a few of the officers quartered there knew the countless number of these animals that swarmed in their gardens; and one officer of twenty years' Indian experience was talking to me one day, and mentioned some fact connected with scorpions. I said, "I will soon get you one, and we can see." I got together the paraphernalia for catching them, much to his astonishment, and he followed me, wondering, into the garden. I caught him one or two, and then he asked me where I learned to catch them, as he had never seen anything of the sort, and had then been at that station for three years.

A lady of my acquaintance was writing at one end of a veranda, and her two little children were playing about in their ordinary dress—i.e., a little chemise—in the hot season, when they called to their mother to see what a pretty plaything they had. She paid no attention to them for a little time, and then at last looked up, when, to her horror, she saw they had a scorpion, and were tossing it backward and forward with a small piece of wood—a pleasant sight for a mother.

I do not think there would be any harm in allowing a scorpion to walk about on the hand or arm of a man as long as it was unmolested, and not forced to use its sting in self-defence, although I should be very unwilling to try the correctness of my opinion personally. I have, however, known a native groom allow several to crawl all over him without any harm resulting. These animals live frequently in the roofs of houses, and, as many Indian bungalows have no ceiling save the rafters, which are whitewashed for effect, there is every likelihood of your occasionally finding one of these pleasant creatures as a bed companion. An officer who was serving in the same district as myself found one night, when the weather was cold, that a scorpion had crept up the sleeve of a flannel shirt which he was sleeping in; probably it had gone in search of warmth. On his trying to shake it out, the creature's legs and claws became entangled, and he was very badly stung. For twenty-four hours he was in excruciating pain, but after that period there was no more inconvenience.

Whilst traveling in Central India, I came one day to a large town on the banks of a river, and had pitched my tent, seen to my horse's grooming, and taken my chota hazeree, or early breakfast of coffee and a roll, when my attention was attracted to a noise proceeding from a small tem-

AN EAST INDIAN EXPERIMENT WITH RATS, SNAKES, AND SCORPIONS.

AN ADVENTURE OF A LUMBERMAN WITH WOLVES, IN MACHIAS, MAINE.

Pie, or sanpiá, close by, with a few date palms and the spiked bushes of the shrub of the same round about it, and on going to the spot, I found a curious scene going on. A black cobra had taken up a station on the lower stone of a flight of steps leading to the bottom of a bowrie, i. e. a well of a peculiar sort, which is generally small, square, and from the water to the top is built a stone structure, down which the natives are in the habit of going to wash their chutees, i. e., clothes. The native women, who usually perform the heavy work of the establishment, were busy at the edge of their chutees and ghurras, that is, their earthenware pots and jars, with the water for home consumption. These, also, may be seen Brahmins and others washing themselves, and pouring water over their backs from their lotas, or brass cups, the water being kindly to stay to wet their oily hides. It may be imagined that a well of this description is one upon which a high value is set, and the perturbation at the sight of a snake, which had probably come from the date bushes, or else from a chink in the stones of the bushes, or else from a chink in the stones of the well, was very great. The community happened to be all Brahmins, and therefore were averse to any harsh measures. But they had been themselves in the animal would have been destroyed. I was intensely amused by their efforts to induce him to move. They threw down small pebbles, and each one was endeavoring to induce his neighbor to go down, assuring him there was no danger. One old man with a white beard went down with an earthen saucer of milk and a few grains of rice to propitiate the cobra, but making a false step, he nearly stumbled, and let the milk and rice fall out without disturbing the creature. He beat a hasty retreat, amid the laughs of those who did not venture. Others threw small prayers; and the female portion of the assembly kept up an incessant chattering, making a noise I defy to be equaled by the fishwives of Europe. All should have killed the snake, but was deterred by the natives assuring me they could not do it from the veneration they adored the body, and by their many arguments of its being God's creature, etc., and as I saw no reason for wantonly offending their simple prejudices, I refrained from it, and so got on my side, and quietly dropped a few stones on the venomous creature till it removed and came up the steps. A snake-charmer was present by this time, and begging my leave, captured it, and I conclude, added to his store of creeping things; at any rate, it escaped death, and I saw no more of it, but retired amid the thanks of the natives and remarks on my wisdom.

I have had opportunities of watching snakes catch their food, and once had the good fortune to see one of my hens captured by a snake, and a cobra, which I destroyed and killed. The poor hen seemed unable to avoid its enemy, and although it made one or two efforts to escape, it appeared magnetized by the snake's cool look. The forked tongue of the snake protruded and quivered rapidly as it approached its prey, and then, after lying at the hen for a minute or two, and in two or three seconds the fowl died. I could have saved it, but I was too interested in the snake, its legs, and a few days had the satisfaction of avenging its death by slaying its destroyer.

Serpents cause great havoc in a poultry-yard at times, and the small cobra, bandicoodah, i. e., enormous rats, the great enemies of the feathered inhabitants of the same. In most countries, a snake of an inch, that is to say, three half-pence, is given by government for each dead snake, and as the cobra is considered a benefactor to the government magistrate or other officer appointed, that functionary might, if he is pleased, have a pretty fair collection of snakes. I have, I think, said enough about snakes to convince any one who wishes to live in India, that he had better get over his dislike to them, and that a neighbor as much as a man can, and I will conclude with one fact for the comfort and benefit of my fair readers, which is, that the snakes do not go a-visiting or encamping with your bed, do not always stay where you are, if they leave a reminiscence to show your insecurity. A chestnut horse of my own laid with whom I was intimately acquainted, went to rest one night, and seeing, as also fancied, a snake, screamed, called her sister and me to help, but disappeared, not a snake, but merely his skin and bit it, his reason for not staying in it being probably the prejudices of the inhabitants of the house retiring to bed, or his natural bashfulness at the approach of so pretty a personage in such slight apparel.

GRAND MEDICINE AMONG THE NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

MR. KANE, a wandering artist, of whom we have before spoken, and gives his sketches in these columns, gives the most excellent descriptions of Indian character, from among which we select that of the Dacotah medicine-man. He says:

The legitimate modes of becoming Great Medicine are many—self-denial, patience, and humiliation being the most important of them.

Among the Dacotas and several other tribes of North American Indians, he who is not can be recognized as a Medicine has most publicity undergo a terrible ordeal, in order to convince his tribe that the Great Spirit has taken him under his special protection.

The ceremony is thus described by a modern traveler:

The patient is placed in the middle of the village, opposite a pole eight or ten feet high, which is planted in the ground, and accompanied by the doctors, who sing, and accompany themselves on the drum.

As a third or fourth day of the pole, the arms of the neophyte are attached to a little higher a buffalo head, and a little higher a cord to hang the victim.

Two large incisions are then made in the upper part of his breast, and two wooden skewers are passed through them; then, by pulling the cord which is attached to the skewers, the poor creature sinks in such a manner that when it springs up again the body of the sufferer is raised to such a height that the points of his toes barely touch the ground.

The medicine-man is to the fire or doctor and remains in this position from exercise to exercise, holding his medicine-bag in his hand, and going perpetually at his blazing sun.

During the time the crowd forms a circle round the actors in the ceremony, and throws down at the feet of him who endures the ordeal of the sun without a murmur all sorts of presents, such as axes, guns, spurs, moccasins, etc., which are given to him who he is taken down at the end of the day.

His claim to be considered a medicine-man being established, he immediately ceases to believe like his fellow-men. He lives alone and apart from his neighbors, and the limbs himself exclusively to his new occupation—divination, and the banishing of evil spirits from the bodies of the sick. A being of such importance cannot, of course, attire himself like an ordinary creature, so he contrives to make himself as hideous as possible. Here is his portrait:

"His tunic was made of the skin of a yellow bear. Whether the color was natural or artificial I could not, but the effect was most strange. The beast had been flayed with great care, so as not to spoil the fur of the head or the limbs; and the cavity of the skin in which the doctor ensconced himself altogether, so that he had nothing himself left to be seen or appeared. Probably with a view to make himself more frightful still, he wore about his neck, waist, and arms, a collection of reptiles, especially rattle-snakes, lizards, owls, ducks, and dried turtle-backs; he had birds' claws spiked on his chin, and a fine collection of quadrupeds' tails, mixed with teeth, claws, and talons. To believe in the presence of a man under this terrific investiture, it was necessary to look at his feet and hands, which last remained free, in order to see the human extremities. To be believed to have such an apparition for the first time, is naturally to fly from it; but this soon gives place to a feeling of pity or disgust."

This then is the sort of doctor who is "called in" when sickness comes on. Should the patient, however, refuses to be banished by such simple physics as the savage knows how to prepare. It is very seldom that a Dacotah has an opportunity of observing the medicine-man's treatment of a patient; for he is generally dismissed to the prairies to fast. At first Mr. Kane is the witness:

"About ten o'clock at night I strolled into the village, and on inquiring for the house in one of the lodges, I entered it, and found an old woman supporting one of her grandchildren, a young man, in a state of nudity. In a state of nudity. Cross-legged and naked, in the middle of the room sat the medicine-man, with a tremendous drum of water before him; 12 or 15 other men were sitting round the lodge. The object in view was to cure the young man of a wounding her side. As soon as my presence was noticed, a space was cleared for me to sit down. The medicine-man immediately resumed in a state of profuse perspiration, from the exertions he had used, and soon took his seat among the rest, or joined in the younger medicine-men then took his place in front of the bowl, and close beside the patient. Throwing off his blanket, he commenced singing and gesticulating in the most violent manner, whilst the others kept time by beating with their hands on the smoke-brown drum, which resounded continually. After exercising himself in this manner for about a few minutes, he plunged his head under his body, he darted suddenly upon the young woman, catching hold of her side with his teeth, and shaking her as a fox would a rabbit, he pulled violently to suffer great agony. He then relinquished his hold, and cried out he had got the bullet. Immediately he went to his mouth; after which he plunged them in the water, and pretended to hold down with great force the supposed bullet, that it might not escape, but it might spring out and return to its victim.

"He then commenced to suck, and spurt over it, he turned round to me in an exulting manner, and held something up between the finger and thumb of each hand, which I could not distinguish. I got nothing, whereupon one or the Indians sharpened his knife and cut off a piece of something which was bloody. One of the pieces he threw into the water, and the other into the fire, accompanying the action with a diabolical howl, which to me bore but a moderate share in it. After which he got up perfectly satisfied with himself, and walked out of the lodge, without saying but relieved by the violent treatment she had undergone."

Instance number two is furnished by Mr. Kohl, in his work on the Indians of the Lakes:

"The drum had been beaten two evenings to announce that the Great Spirit was angry with the sick, which a young couple lived. There was a sick and dying child there, which the doctors attended daily, and the evening passed in the usual way. It did not resist the temptation to peep in, and so lifted one of the lower pieces of bark from the right spot, opposite the doctor and his little patient.

"The poor little he beg lay in its father's arms, who looked anxiously at the proceedings of the doctor. He knelt the doctor, who gazed fixedly on the suffering child, muttering some low and angry words. It was much like a cat playing with a mouse, except that in this case the illness and not the child represented the animal to be captured.

"The doctor's chief instrument was a hollow bone, very white and carefully polished. This bone, which was about two feet and a half long, and from the thickness of a little finger, the doctor repeatedly swallowed, and then brought up again low on the other end of the bone tube, and then ejected the illness he had drawn out into a basin, with many strange and terrible convulsions. At this he was accustomed by incessant drumming, rattling and singing by an assistant of the doctor, and many sighs from the mother of the child. But for all that, the poor little thing was hurrying rapidly to the grave.

"The next morning, when I arrived at an early hour, and walked into the lodge as a sympathizing neighbor, the child was no more to be found, but in the arms of its father's lap, wrapped in a thick blanket. He held it closely to his breast, and seemed to be utterly exhausted by the exertions of the past night, and sat on the ground with her face concealed in skins. All the rest were asleep, and I left the house without one than on the previous evening. The suffering patient was at his last gasp.

"On the evening of the same day I again passed, but could not find the lodge. At length I conversed myself, at least, that I had found the right one. But the bark shelter had been utterly removed, the inhabitants had disappeared, and the fireplace, ashes, and all there presented carried away. The little thing was dead and already buried, and the mourning parents, after the Ojebway fashion, had broken up their lodge and gone to the wild region.

ADVENTURE OF A NEWSPAPER, IN MAINE, WITH WOLVES.

THE article, from which our sketch was taken, occurred a short time since near Machias, Maine.

That region of the country, as is well-known, is a great hunting-ground, the getting of the timber thousands of stalwart men are engaged, and subject not only to the perils of their employment by floods and falling trees, by freezing and sometimes obscure starvation, but a more terrible danger still, that of attack by wild beasts.

William Merrill, a lumberman, working on the Machias during the late intense cold weather, had pushed his camp far into the woods in his sled, after which he commenced shantering quietly toward the river. He was upon the ice, some two or three miles from his camp, when he was overtaken by a pack of wolves, apparently not more than seven or eight in number.

There was no time for thought, therefore away started our wood-cutter. He had not run far when he became aware that the enemy was upon him, and almost with the thought they rushed out from the low timber on every side and in front. He was without a weapon of any kind, and for an instant stood appalled. There was no time, however, for thought; it was a case of life and death, and quick as any lumberman caught up the only available article of defense, which was a stick of stout hackmatack timber. The instinct he grappled it as a weapon was upon him, upward of 20, he thinks, as near as he could count in the excitement of the moment.

Stoutly he held about him with his stick, and one after another of the wolves received his death-blow, or what answered as well by sending them howling back into the brush. In a few minutes he had cleared the ice in front of him, and immediately his retreat back ward, always facing the wolves, toward the village. One of the wolves, more daring than the rest, made several onsets from the stick, until only five were left, and these, learning by experience, kept well out of the reach of the terrible lumberman's weapon. Only once in a while would one jump in upon him, with a snap of the teeth and a growl, but a piece of his flesh, and then dash away before the tortured man could get a blow at him.

This running fight was kept up for over a mile, until the lumberman, emerging from the wood, came in sight of the village, when the angry beast had been into the recesses they came from, while the wood. cutter, tanning and bleeding from a score of wounds, marched in triumph.

In relating this circumstance we are only telling one of the many wild adventures that have happened in this wild region.

CURIOSITIES OF EATING.

THE following will be read with interest by those who are obliged to study close economy in their diet:

"An old bear, formerly well-known in Washington city, was accustomed to dine on one meal in 24 hours; if, after this, he had to go to a party and ate a second dinner, he ate nothing at all the next day. He died at the age of 26.

"A lady of culture, refinement and unusual powers of conversation, whose husband became a widower, reduced from affluence to poverty, with a large family of small children dependent on her manual labor for daily bread, was left to the necessity of devising some means what articles could be purchased for the least money, and made most palatable and nutritious food for keeping her children longest from crying for something to eat. She succeeded in proving that they can live upon cakes and molasses, they were quiet for a longer time than other diet; and spirits. It has since been observed.

"A Hindoostanee Fakir of the United States Court House, who lived upon the hackmatack cakes he broke fast, he could sit on the bench the whole day without any inconvenience whatever, but the class was so confined he felt obliged to take a lunch noon. Buckwheat cakes have also been observed to produce the same effect upon table, and scientific investigation and analysis has shown that the buckwheat cake is a remarkably penurious, being in nature takes away our appetite for them in summer.

"During the late war, when the sugar did not hunger, the poor were found spending their last shilling for the sweet article, and even in the Sandwich Islands in New York, by those connected with charitable institutions, it was observed that molasses gave out first, that often laid out every cent in tea or coffee, instead of procuring the more substantial articles, such as meat and flour and potatoes. On being reproved for their apparent extravagance, they answered that they was surrounded by in both cases identical; their own observation had convinced them that a pound-cake of tea, tobacco, or liquor would keep off the sense of hunger longer than a pound cake of meat. The Scientific men can express this idea by saying: 'Tea, like alcohol, retards the chemical changes of the system;' in other words, it gives a nod to the dance of life, and thus prevents it from consuming the flesh and muscles of the body.

"It's person gets into the habit of taking a lunch between the hours of dinner, he will soon find himself getting fatter about the region of the knee-bone-dame; but if he will abandon the habit, without engagements for several days in succession as to take nothing between meals, he will find that by before he can dispense with his lunch altogether. These things seem to show that, to a certain extent, we are a mere habit. While tribes of Indian hunters and trappers have been known to eat but once in 24 hours, and that at night."

Punch says that a Yankee baby will crawl out of his cradle, take a survey of it, invent an improvement, and apply for a patent before he is six months old.

A FRENCH bishop said, lately, in a sermon: "Let everybody economize, when putting on precious and expensive attire, how narrow are the gates of Paradise."

TOO TRUE.

"What, Tom, you feel lonely? well, get a young wife to keep you company." "Indeed I wouldn't your life." "No, no! Jack, I need no such advice as there; I always find my wife's company drive the cares away."

It has been discovered that Othello held a legal as well as a military office in Venice. He was a lawful captain.

A COUNTRYMAN in Savannah, Ga., observed that a gang of darkies were working on the streets, and asked them what they were doing. He asked one why that hod was climbed to his top. "To keep people from climbing it," said the darkey: "keep of three pence hear, Massa."

WHY is a counterfeit coin like a whisper? Because it is uttered, but not heard (uttered).

PHOTOGRAPHS

Of Washington Crossing Lincoln; Lord Rips of Lower Lyons at Field Sights; Courtship; Blessed by Accident; Sweet Blushes; Drawn at the Bath; Tableau Vivant; Stranded Beauty; Superb Cupid; Stormy Bath; The Fatal Rose; Long Leaders for Course at Last. Ten cents each, or $1 per box. T. MELVILLE & CO., Publishers, Boston, Mass.

Honesty is the best policy in Medicine as in everything else. A Cathartic Medicine is a genuine preparation of that unequaled spring medicine and blood purifier, decidedly superior to the poor imitations heretofore in the market. Trial size 25 cents.

Barnum's New American Museum, Broadway, between Spring and Prince streets. The establishment does not advertise in the New York Herald. The Afternoon Performance will invariably Commence at 2o'clock. Every Afternoon at 2½ Invariably at 7½. Grandest and most successful Crowded and Delighted Audiences! The inaugural Historical Drama, MOSES; or, ISRAEL IN EGYPT. Magnificent Scenery, Costumes and Appointments. MOVING PANORAMA OF THE NILE. Interesting Ethnological Museum. Great Destruction of Pharaoh and his Hosts, Triumph of Israel. W. B. Harrison, Extraordinary Soprano. Great Living Curiosities; Giant and Gumless, Three Dwarfs, Albino Family, Fiji Cannibals, Giant Horse, Albino Cockroaches, Learned Seal, Happy Family, Grand Aquaria. Admission, 25 cents; Reserved Seats, 50 cents; children under ten, 15 cents.

NEW MUSIC.

Arabella-Fergus, Grand March.....35c.
Silver Threads among the Gold.....30c.
I Have Heard Sweet Music Stealing.....30c.
The Mountain Stream. By Wm. Reichardt.....40c.
I Can Not Sing the Old Notes, by Clarfoe.....30c.
Sweet Violets Waltz. By Jos. Sobey.....40c.
How You Seen Her Lately? (comic).....30c.
Turkish Reveille, Mounted Lieutenants, Shoulder; Cadet Catastrophe on Skating Pond.....40c.
Mailed, postpaid. FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery.

YOUNG FOLKS, WHY LIVE IN MISERY?

Your destiny, future prospects in life, and a good fortune, clearly revealed by THE WIZARD. He tells the affections of the opposite sex and guides you to a happy courtship and marriage. Like a star, he guides you to wealth, health and happiness; also many ways how to make money honorably. This great work will be sent by mail, post-paid, for 25 cents.
Dr. L. CHARLES, P. O. Drawer 6,010, Chicago, Ill. 546-9

$200 a Month made with STENCIL TOOLS. Sample and terms free. Address with stamp for catalogue and particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vt. 546-9

WHEELER & WILSON'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM

SEWING MACHINES,
625 Broadway, New York.

Fresh Garden and Flower Seeds, prepaid by mail, of the choicest sorts. Also, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Small Fruit Roots, Bulbs, Vines, Strawberries, &c., of the best kinds. Priced Descriptive Catalogues sent free to applicants. Wholesale Lists for the Trade. Agents wanted.
R. M. WATSON,
Old Colony Nurseries and Seed Establishment,
546-52 Plymouth, Mass.

MAGIC INK.

This Ink has the appearance of pure water. The words can be written on white by those not in the secret and remain so. A bottle, with secret, sent by mail on receipt of $1. S. BRIDDLE, Rockville, N. Y.
547-8

Holloway's Pills.—Impurity of the Blood is generally the cause of the various maladies which conquer the human body; if the blood becomes impure, health is the result. In order to secure through every fibre and tissue, Holloway's Pill will be found unequaled. They act simultaneously this vital element, but purify and invigorate it, and, by their tonic, laxative and wholesome stimulant in circulation, they strengthen each part, and give tone to the whole system. Sold by all Druggists.

The West Indian Hair Curler, warranted to curl the most straight and stiff hair, on the most approved principle. Highest premium awarded. Sent to any address on receipt of $1. Address THE HENDERSON HAIR CURLING CO.,
Box 2,351, New York Post Office.

Royal Havana Lottery.
Official Drawing of 3d March, 1866,
No. 2019.....drew.....$100,000
No. 8201.....do.....50,000
No. 2,000.....do.....25,000
No. 2012.....do.....10,000
No. 1,000.....do.....5,000
No. 1,000.....do.....5,000
Being the six capital prizes.
Private mail in paid. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for doubloons and all kinds of gold and silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers, 16 Wall st., N. Y.

Published this Day,
Tried and True,
BY ALTON CLYDE.
Price 25 cents. Also new editions of Mrs. Newby's Popular Novels:
COMMON SENSE - - - Price 50 cents.
FAITH, HOPE AND CHARITY - - Price 50 cents.
Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of Price.
T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS, Philadelphia, Pa.

300 per cent. profit for Agents.—Three Genteel Articles everywhere needed, and sell at sight. All sent, with particulars, free, by mail for 30 cents. Address H. DAVIS, Hinsdale, N. H.

JUST PUBLISHED—No. 97 of FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN, being the great Humorous Paper of America. It is admirable paper in a financial point of view. Contains 16 pages of illustrated and humorous matter, consisting of Romances, Burlesques, Western Tales, Local Tales, Comic Sketches, Humorous Poetry, etc.
FRANK LESLIE, Publisher,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, PENS, BRACELETS, CASTORS, GOBLETS, SPOONS, FORKS, NAPKIN RINGS, ETC., ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you have seen what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also our Circular containing full list and particulars, also our terms to Agents, which we have arranged on a liberal scale. Town to the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
206 Broadway, New York.

LADIES PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS
WHOLESALE & RETAIL
WARD 388 BROADWAY.

One Lady's Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles. o

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberry, Point Royal, and all other places, should be sent at that point, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 49 Broadway. Office changed low rates. 0000

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Sample, 25 cents. French Transparent Cards (24 views), $1 25 per dozen; $10 per dozen. The Alcohol Safe Playing Cards, $1 50 per pack. All by mail on receipt of Price. Address

FORWARDING AGENCY, 83 Liberty street, N. Y. 0

Vieve Brower; or, Life in the Concert Saloons of New York. A rich book. Just published, handsomely illustrated. Only 25 cents. Mailed free. Address Post Office Box 78. HOLLAND, N. Y. 542-51

Sensology, Psychologic Fascination, Marriage Happily Attained, How to Become Rich, With the Opposite Sex, Mastered, &c. This queer, useful, and spicy book, sent by mail for 25 cents. Address EVANS & CO., 41 South, Philadelphia. tf

Employment at your own Homes—either sex—suitable for a livelihood, or leisure hours in every city and town in the United States. Address, with stamp, for particulars, DR. WARNER, 84 Exec. 12th street, New York City. 544-7

INVENTOR'S FRIEND

Contains the Lady's Guide to Beauty; Useful Recipes for the Household; Horse Taming—complete; Parlor Theatricals; Dime Parlor Magician; How to Make all Kinds of Liquors without the use of poisonous articles; How to Detect Counterfeit Bills and Spurious Coin; the Secret of Gamblers, Pocket-book Droppers and Peter Funks exposed; How to make all kinds of Cements, Rouges, Salts, Curling Fluids, Hair Dyes, etc; How to make the Whiskers and Mustache grow; all kinds of Sublimino Fortune Teller, Twelve Golden Maxims; over 400 literary Receipts, Favorite Formulas of all Saloons, Receipts, Antidotes, Conundrums, etc., etc. Price 25 cents. Send orders by Post Office, Box 5430, New York. 542-3

Over Fifty Secrets numerous Jokes, Witty Sayings, &c., will be found in "THE LOUNGER." Sent free for FIFTY CENTS.

Address, P. O. Box, 5,057, New York.

JOE MILLER, JR.

A Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Hits, &c., &c. Price 10 cents. Send only to P. O. Box 3,410, New York. tf

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry! Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read this wonderful Matrimonial Guide and Adviser, by WM. LAKE, M.D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 24 Main Street, New York.

Pile Remedy

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it. Price $1 per package. Sent by mail.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

THOSE CURIOUS FASTENERS
25 CENTS.

Good Books 15 cents each. Courtship Made Easy—Bridal Etiquette—How and Who—How to Be-have—Mind your Steps—Hand Words Made Easy—How to Write Letters Correctly—How to Become an Actor.

The Story of Love,

Three Amusing Volumes for 75 cents.

Post's Companion, 25 cents. Parlor Theatricals, 25 cents. Firesides Stories, 25 cents. Shakspeare's Proverbs, 40 cents. Love Oracle, 50 cents; 500 Curious Puzzles, 25 cents. Parlor Pantomimes, 25 cents. Comic Reciter, 25 cents. How to Converse Correctly, 25 cents. Mammoth Catalogue, containing thousands of Books, Pictures, Flute, Horse Accessories, &c., &c., sent with any of the above. W. C. WEATES, 59 Broadway, N. Y. 544-557

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cents; 50 photographs of Rebel Officers for 25 cents; 12 photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Actresses for 25 cents. Address 547-54 BOYD & CO., Box 45, Holland, N. Y.

500 Photographs of the most Promi-NENT PERSONS OF THE AGE, embracing Actors, Actresses, Opera Singers, Officers of the Army and Navy, Statesmen, Authors, Art ists, Clergymen, Kings, Queens, &c., &c. Send, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address Box 5,410, Post-Office, New York.

Ventriloquism Made Easy, and the Second Sight Mystery, as practiced by ROBERT HELLER and others, fully explained. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 5,410, P. O., New York. tf

BETTER TO BE BORN LUCKY, THAN RICH.

Great Premiums to be Given Away.

To make sure and introduce our Golden Pens (over 6000 boxes of golden pens, pocket style, in beautiful metal boxes, for reasonable gold, for sale at $1 per box), we will give, to each person buying a box of Golden Pens, a premium ticket, which will describe a premium, some of the valuable premiums named below. The premiums are distributed on separate tickets. The tickets are placed in separate envelopes, and sealed up. They are then well mixed, and one conveyed privately. The envelopes will be drawn out, without regard to choice, and each sent to the purchaser. This will give all a fair chance. All persons sending us orders will be dealt with on the square. A beautiful list of Premiums to be given away:

1	Premium in Greenbacks		$1,000
2	"	7-30 Bonds	500
250	"	Cash, $2 each	500
1,000	"	Cash, 25 cents	2,500
50	"	50 S. & C. Sewing-Machines, $50 each	2,500
10	"	10 American Gold Lever Watches	2,500
10	"	10 American Silver Lever Watches, $100 each	1,000
10	"	100 Gold Double Chain Albert Chains	500
200	"	200 Chain Albums	200
20,000	"	20,000 Beautiful Albums, full of portraits of Generals, $1 each	20,000
20,000	"	20,000 Pocket Portfolios, Gilt series, 50 cents each	10,000
3,200	"	Cash, 50 cents each	1,600
500	"	Cash, $1 each	500
6,875	"	6,875 Boxes of Golden Pens $1 each	6,875
10,000	"	Single Gold Pens	800

In all, 69,000 Premiums.

These Pens are warranted not to corrode, with proper usage. They are the best $1 pen in existence. Nothing but the very finest gold pen can compare with them. We warrant to achieve a fame over every other steel pens. We will send a sample dozen, by mail, for $1. Also, for $1, we will send a Pen and Pencil, with a premium ticket, free, for $1. (Postage, extra, 25 cents.) Address, plainly, GOLDEN PEN CO., Box 5,057, New York. Postage extra, 25 cents. Send in your orders early. Agents wanted everywhere. Circular sent free.

UNION GOLDEN PEN COMPANY,
P. S.—Good Agents wanted. 543-6 Chicago, Ill.

FIRST PREMIUM
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5
THE EMBODIMENT OF
PRACTICAL UTILITY AND
EXTREME SIMPLICITY.

Originally Patented May 15, 1863; improvement patented June 1, 1865. A FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with Common stitchment, a most Wonderful and Rapid Lock-stitch Machine, Simple in construction, easy in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and weaves noiselessly by the aid of a Self-Acting Shuttle, as in all first-class machines. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand, and will stitch very rapidly, making 15 stitches to each evolution of the wheel. Will Gather, Hem, Fell, Braid, Tuck, Bind, Cord, Ruffle, &c.; the strongest machine made. Warranted not to get out of order for three years, and will last for ten. Premiums at New York and other STATE FAIRS, and received the highest premium at the late Fair of the Franklin Institute, where who have seen them. The only Low Price Machine that has ever been awarded a PREMIUM. All others at the same price are IMPERSONATORS.

"This beautiful Machine makes the Running Stitch at the rate of one thousand stitches per minute."—Scientific American.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is one of the best machines for family use."—N. Y. Independent.

"While simple or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand sewing."—Tribune.

Single Machines, all complete, sent to any part of the country per Express, packed in box with printed instructions, on receipt of price, $5. Sole Agency for Territories not allotted. Agents wanted everywhere. Circular containing full Illustrated Prospectus sent free.

Address all orders to

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
tf Office, 202 Nassau Street, N. Y.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and win the affections of any person they choose, instantly and secure. Either sex, by mail, for 25 cents, together with a Mysterious Oriental Charm, which will enable the fortunate possessor to love, marriage, etc., free by mail for 25 cents. Both sent for 50 cents. Married or single, all should send. Address this paper. Address Professor WRIGHT, 312 Fulton street, Philadelphia.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks upon the smoothest face without stain or injury to the skin. Sent by mail, post paid, to any address on receipt of an order.

E. G. GRAHAM, 199 Nassau St., N. Y.

GROVER & BAKER'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM
Elastic Stitch and Lock Stitch
SEWING MACHINES,
495 BROADWAY, N. Y. off

50 cent SAMPLE, sent free, with form, for Printing Cards, to those who enclose 2 2-5 c. in three hours time. Address LA MONTE, RAYMOND & CO., No. 29 Broadway, New York. 545-8

THE DOMINO CIRCULAR!

For Sporting Gentlemen. Send stamp, with address. Novel oddities and odd novelties. CLEMENT & CO., 64 John street, N. Y.

Beautiful False Mustaches, all colors: Cannot be told from natural ones. Mailed for $1 per pair. Address BLACKIE & CO., 713 Broadway, N. Y. tf

The Beautiful Art of Enameling the SKIN! WHITE CRESCENT SKIN ENAMEL, for whitening, beautifying and preserving the complexion, making it soft, fair, smooth, and transparent. It quickly removes tan, freckles, pimples, etc., without injuring the skin. Warranted. Sent by mail for 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 153 South 7th street, Philadelphia. tf

Cough No More

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure coughs, colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle. 524-7tq

Short-Hand Without a Master.

By which the method of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, Trials, etc., may be attained in a few hours. Fifty-first edition, with Surprising Price 25 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY, ST. NICHOLAS BLOCK.
Photographic Materials,
STEREOSCOPIC GOODS,
War Views, Scenery, Groups, etc., etc.

Photo Albums, great assortment. Cartes de Visite of noted persons, etc., etc., etc. French, English and American novelties. tf

An Album for Thirty Cents! NEW; BEAUTIFUL! EXQUISITE! CHEAP! A beautiful Album! Just published by Holland, by the aid of new mechanical instrument, known as the Horoscope, guarantees to produce a likeness, a picture of the future husband or wife of the person, together with the date of marriage, length of life, number of children, etc. This is no humbug, as thousands of testimonials can assert. Sent, with full directions, on receipt of 30 cents. Mind the pic-ure is what it purports to be. By stating age, height, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and inclosing 30 cents, and stamped envelope, addressed to yourself, you will receive by return mail, an Album. Address

Madame M. H. PERREGAULT,
542-51o P. O. Box 2076, Albany, N. Y.

A CURIOSITY!!

Free to All. A Rare Treat.

Gentlemen, do not fail to send a two cent stamp, and receive a GREAT PAPER, replete with the choicest literature and rare Illustrations. Sent free.

CHARLES E. MACKEY,
tf Box 5,410, New York.

COLORED CARTES DE VISITE
SIXTY CENTS PER DOZEN.

I will send upon receipt of 60 cents 12 Cartes de Visite of French Gentlemen in different positions, or the whole set of 24 for One Dollar. Samples, $2.

545-8 T. ALLUE, 64 Nassau street, New York.

$2 Something New. $2

For Agents and Dealers. Sells well. 20 New and Useful Articles; prints large. Send stamp for circular.

S. W. RICE & CO.,
tf 83 Nassau street, N. Y.

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses.

A charming, delicate and perfect natural rose for the cheeks. Nothing like it. Will not rub off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1 18 cents by mail. Sold by druggists generally. tf HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 153 South 7th street, Philadelphia.

Matrimony Made Easy!

Or Mysteries of Making Love fully explained, with specimen Love Letters. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 5,410 P. O., N. Y.

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for circular.

600 GEORGE BIRD, 27 Ann St., N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also contains the Hunter's Secret, how to catch Fish and all kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Cigarettes and Curling Fluids; Gambling Exposed; Ventriloquism Made Easy; Information of Invaluable Secrets; how to Win the Love of any one, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents. Address Box 5,057 P. O., New York. tf

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

Published for the benefit and as a warning to young men and others who suffer from Nervous Debility, etc., supplying at the same time the means of self-Cure. By one who has cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. Sent, inclosing a postpaid, addressed envelope, single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bx okyn, King's County, N. Y.

$1,000 $1,000
REWARD!
O'DOR! O'DOR!

I warrant my Golden O'Dor to free a beautiful set of Whiskers or Mustaches to grow on the smoothest face in from five to eight weeks. Also, Hair restored on bald heads, in eight weeks—proven by the testimonials of thousands. Price, $1. Sent, to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address DR. C. BISLOP, P. O. Drawer, 6,589, Chicago, Ill.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention arguably needed by everybody. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50 cents, that retails easily for $6, by E. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 520tf

549-51

A Sure Method of Winning at All the various games of Cards, Dice, &c., sent free. Marked Cards 24 per pack, or $3 per dozen. Address W. L. CRAWFORD, Manufacturer of Playing Cards, No. 63 and 97 Nassau street, New York. 8

OUR PUBLICATIONS!

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE 10 CENTS, OR $4 A YEAR.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Americana,
OR SPANISH-AMERICAN NEWSPAPER,
Published Weekly,
Within the United States, $12 yearly, in currency.
Ready to be sent by mails for Cuba, Mexico, Central America, Brazil, Peru, Chile, and all the South-American Republics—$12 yearly, in gold.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,
Or German Illustrated Newspaper,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or $4 a year.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or yearly, $4.

The Great Magazine of Fashion.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine,
Published Monthly—price $3 50, yearly.

Frank Leslie's New Monthly.
Price 35 cents, or $3 50 a year.

Frank Leslie's Children's Friend,
Published Monthly—price 10 cents, yearly $1.

Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun.
Published Monthly—$1 50 a year.

FRANK LESLIE'S

With Number 41 commenced the Lives and Portraits of the Self-Made Men of New England, beginning with

FRANKLIN PIERCE, ESQ.,
MAJOR C. O. ROGERS,
JOSEPHUS B. BELLOW, ESQ.,
JAMES T. FIELD, ESQ.,
W. W. CLAPP, ESQ.,
OLIVER DITSON, ESQ.,
ALVIN ADAMS, ESQ.,
HARRISON LORING, ESQ.,
HON. JOHN P. HALE,
HON. WILLIAM CLAFLIN
HOWARD MALCOM, ESQ.,
HORATIO HARRIS, ESQ.

Contents of No. 44.

THE YOUNG HOLLANDER; or, THE MYSTERY OF A BIRTH. A Story. Illustrated.
A NIGHT IN THE CATACOMBS. Illustrated.
THE TULLERIES. Illustrated.
THE OLD SHEARER'S ADVENTURE WITH THE FAIRIES. Illustrated.
A PANTHER HUNT IN ALGERIA. Illustrated.
A HIGHWAYMAN OF PUGA.
THE MONKEY AND THE DRUNKARD.
HE WILL BE DOWN. A Poem.
ABBEYFORD: A ROMANCE OF THREE WOMEN. Continued.
TOO LATE. A Poem.
THE FATAL FLOOD. A Story. Illustrated.
SELF-MADE MEN.—HON. T. PIERCE, Port and Publisher, Boston. With Portrait.
THE HUDDO-HOG. Illustrated.
THE ZULUS LEVYING TRIBUTE OF THE PORTUGUESE. Illustrated.
SPANISH AND MOORS PLAYING BULL-FIGHT. Illustrated.
METEORIC STONES.
THE SPIDER'S WEB.
CONTENTMENT. An Essay.
A NEW THEORY OF EARTHQUAKES.
THE WITCH OF SEVENOAKS.
TO GERTRUDE. A Poem.
ADDITION REALITY DISPLAYED.
A YOUTHFUL MARRIAGE.
THE LIFE OF A FEMALE TEACHER.
FASHION.
COSTUME OF A PRINCESS.
HUMOROUS ANECDOTES, ETC.
AN INDIAN DEATH-BED AND BURIAL. Illustrated.
SPEAKING FISH AT NIGHT. Illustrated.
THE MOTHER'S LESSON. A Story. Illustrated.
A TRIBUTE. A Poem.
AN ALLIGATOR HUNT.
CONE AND FOLIAGE OF THE MAMMOTH SEQUOIA SEMPERVIRENS OF CALIFORNIA. Illustrated.
GRANDFATHER'S CHILDHOOD'S LECTURES.—INSECTS.
ROSEBUD. A Fairy Story.
SOMETHING FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.
SPEND FEELLING AND THE HORN.
A LAP DOG'S TOMB.
FAMILY PASTIMES.—ENIGMAS, CHARADES, ETC.
UNCLES. Six Comic Illustrations.

And a great variety of Humorous and Miscellaneous Paragraphs. For sale by all News Agents. Price 10 cents. Annual subscription $4.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

On the 15th of every Month
Will be issued, a new Comic Paper, called

THE JOLLY JOKER,

Containing over 40 comical illustrations by the best artists of the new and old world, and

16 PAGES READING MATTER,

Consisting of Stories, Jokes and Anecdotes.
Sold at all News Stands, at 10 cents.

THE AMERICAN NEWS COMPANY,
Wholesale Agents, 119, 121 Nassau St., New York.

PRICE 10 CENTS.

$1,500 PER YEAR! We want agents everywhere to sell our celebrated PATENT LOCK-STITCH SEWING Machines. These new Machines, Under and upper feed, Warranted five years. Also our other Machines at reduced prices. Send for circular. Address, Gold Medal Sewing Machine Co., 18 Broadway, New York. Boston, Mass. Chicago, Ill. Pittsburgh, Pa. Cincinnati, O. St. Louis, Mo. Louisville, Ky. Indianapolis, Ind. Rochester, N. Y. Cleveland, O. Detroit, Mich. Milwaukee, Wis. Keokuk, Iowa. Galena, Ill. Rockford, Ill. Racine, Wis. Dubuque, Iowa. Burlington, Iowa. Davenport, Iowa. Rock Island, Ill. Peoria, Ill. Quincy, Ill. Cairo, Ill. Memphis, Tenn. Nashville, Tenn. Columbus, O. Springfield, O. Dayton, O. Zanesville, O. Wheeling, Va. Parkersburg, Va. Lexington, Ky. Evansville, Ind. Terre Haute, Ind. Fort Wayne, Ind. Toledo, O. Erie, Pa. Auburn, N. Y. Syracuse, N. Y. Utica, N. Y. Albany, N. Y. Troy, N. Y. Hartford, Conn. Providence, R. I. Portland, Me. Lowell, Mass. Worcester, Mass. Springfield, Mass. Lawrence, Mass. Manchester, N. H. Lancaster, Pa. Harrisburg, Pa. Reading, Pa. Wilmington, Del. Baltimore, Md. Washington, D. C. Richmond, Va. Petersburg, Va. Norfolk, Va. Wilmington, N. C. Charleston, S. C. Augusta, Ga. Savannah, Ga. Columbus, Ga. Macon, Ga. Atlanta, Ga. Montgomery, Ala. Mobile, Ala. Selma, Ala. Meridian, Miss. Vicksburg, Miss. Natchez, Miss. Jackson, Miss. New Orleans, La. Shreveport, La. Galveston, Texas. Houston, Texas. Austin, Texas. Brenham, Texas. Brownsville, Texas. Corpus Christi, Texas. Indianola, Texas. Lavaca, Texas. Victoria, Texas. Port Lavaca, Texas. Port Arthur, Texas. Sabine Pass, Texas. Orange, Texas. Beaumont, Texas. Liberty, Texas. Anahuac, Texas. Columbia, Texas. Velasco, Texas. Quintana, Texas. Matagorda, Texas. Bay City, Texas. Wharton, Texas. Eagle Lake, Texas. Columbus, Texas. La Grange, Texas. Bastrop, Texas. Austin, Texas. Seguin, Texas. San Antonio, Texas. Gonzales, Texas. Victoria, Texas. Goliad, Texas. Cuero, Texas. Clinton, Texas. Gonzales, Texas. Lockhart, Texas. Prairie Lea, Texas. Bryan, Texas. Hempstead, Texas. Brenham, Texas. Chappell Hill, Texas. Independence, Texas. Navasota, Texas. Huntsville, Texas. Crockett, Texas. Palestine, Texas. Nacogdoches, Texas. Henderson, Texas. Marshall, Texas. Jefferson, Texas. Shreveport, La. Monroe, La. Vicksburg, Miss. Jackson, Miss. Meridian, Miss. Selma, Ala. Montgomery, Ala. Columbus, Ga. Macon, Ga. Atlanta, Ga. Augusta, Ga. Savannah, Ga. Charleston, S. C. Wilmington, N. C. Norfolk, Va. Petersburg, Va. Richmond, Va. Washington, D. C. Baltimore, Md. Wilmington, Del. Harrisburg, Pa. Lancaster, Pa. Reading, Pa. Manchester, N. H. Lawrence, Mass. Springfield, Mass. Worcester, Mass. Lowell, Mass. Portland, Me. Providence, R. I. Hartford, Conn. Troy, N. Y. Albany, N. Y. Utica, N. Y. Syracuse, N. Y. Auburn, N. Y. Erie, Pa. Toledo, O. Fort Wayne, Ind. Terre Haute, Ind. Evansville, Ind. Lexington, Ky. Louisville, Ky. Nashville, Tenn. Memphis, Tenn. Cairo, Ill. Quincy, Ill. Peoria, Ill. Rock Island, Ill. Davenport, Iowa. Burlington, Iowa. Dubuque, Iowa. Racine, Wis. Rockford, Ill. Galena, Ill. Keokuk, Iowa. Milwaukee, Wis. Detroit, Mich. Cleveland, O. Rochester, N. Y. Indianapolis, Ind. Louisville, Ky. Cincinnati, O. St. Louis, Mo. Springfield, O. Dayton, O. Zanesville, O. Wheeling, Va. Parkersburg, Va. Pittsburgh, Pa. Chicago, Ill. Boston, Mass. Gold Medal Sewing Machine Co., 18 Broadway, New York. tf

Great American

PRIZE CONCERT!

AT

CROSBY'S OPERA HOUSE,

Chicago, Ill., March 28, 1866.

20,000 Valuable Gifts worth $99,500 will be presented to Ticket Holders.

100,000 TICKETS WILL BE SOLD!

One Gift, in Greenbacks,	$10,000
One Gift, in 7-30 Bonds,	5,000
1 Gift, Residence three miles from Chicago	4,500
2 Square Grand Pianos, 7 Octs. $500 each	1,000
50 Exp. Pat. Lever Gold Watches, $250 each	12,500
50 Superior & Medium Sewing Machines, $100 each	5,000
50 Gifts, 50 American Lever Silver Watches	1,000
50 Gifts, 50 Silver Lever Watches, $30 each	1,500
5,000 Gifts, 5,000 Fly Morocco Gold Clasp Albums	25,000
4,500 Gifts, 4,500 Clasp Albums, $8 each	36,000
10,000 Gifts, $10,000 Cash, $1 each	10,000
20,000 Gifts, Total value of which	$96,500

The great feature of our Prize Concert, is the manner in which gotten up, differing from anything of the kind ever before offered to the public—as follows:

1st. The Prizes are a great deal more valuable.

2d. All of them are genuine Gold and Silver goods, the very best manufactured. The Pianos and Sewing Machines are all new, and the manufacturers names are sufficient guarantee that they are surpassed by none.

3d. The manner in which it is to draw. Each ticket has its duplicate. These are placed in a wheel, and thoroughly mixed, a disinterested person, (selected by the ticket holders present at the Concert), draws their duplicate No.'s from the wheel, the first one drawn out gets the largest Prize, the next one drawn out, the next largest Prize, and in like manner until all are drawn.

To enable us to give away the valuable Prizes, we first sell sufficient number of tickets to insure us against loss, the Prizes are then distributed in order as the duplicates are drawn—unlike all other Gift Sales, where you buy your ticket, and should you draw a large Prize the Proprietor makes a dead loss of the value you draw, consequently any solution if ever got anything worth what your ticket cost you.

Dont throw your money away on valueless concerns, but send us your orders for tickets soon, if you would secure them; 50,000 already sold. Every ticket is registered before being sent out, the number, name of party purchasing, and address, and all will be notified by mail of the result of drawing.

Tickets, $1 each, or eleven for $10, sent by mail on receipt of price and stamp. Address,

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.
144 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ills.

P. S.—The above concert will positively take place on the 28th of March. Parties at a distance can send the funds for tickets—should they all be sold—will have the money returned to them.

BRIGGS, LEMON & CO.

TO SPRAINS

AND Bruises,

APPLY THE

Painkiller

Wanted! Agents!!
$150 per month, to sell the celebrated COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING-MACHINE. Price, $18. The greatest invention of the age. Send for descriptive Circular. Address SECOMB & CO., Chicago, Ill., or Cleveland, O.

CEDAR CAMPHOR

For Moths. Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Boston.

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

A new, practical, and original work, illustrated with 122 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost, including stables and out-buildings, with a chapter on the construction of BALLOON FRAMES.

Price, $1.50, mailed free, to any address.
GEO. E. & F. W. WOODWARD, publishers,
545-8o No. 37 Park Row, New York.

A Superb and Valuable Book.

Copeland's Country Life,

A Hand-Book of Agriculture, Horticulture, and Landscape Gardening.

This is the most complete, elegant and valuable work of the kind yet published.

It is adorned with 250 fine Engravings, Plans, and Illustrations, and is the book every person needs who has a farm or garden; and a book every lady should have who wishes to know the best manner of managing window plants and the flower garden.

Fifth Edition, Revised, &c., 872 pp. Price, cloth, $2. Sent free of postage on receipt of price. Sold only by subscription. Agents wanted.

DISSEMOOR & CO., 33 Cornhill, Boston.

FLORENCE

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES.

Highest Premium Gold Medal

FAIR AMERICAN INSTITUTE, 1865.

The best in the World. They have the Reversible Feed Motion. They have a perfect Self-Adjusting Shuttle Tension. They make four separate and distinct Stitches on one and the same machine. They have many advantages over all others.

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO.,
637-49o 505 Broadway, New York.

ANDREW HELLER JOHNSON'S GREAT RING TRICK.

"Fellow citizens, now observe, this is a very simple trick. Here are two solid rings, which I put together in this manner—there—see. Now they are one, and no power on earth can sunder them."

MECHANICAL TRIUMPH.
BRILLIANT AND UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS OF THE AMERICAN STEEL SHIRT COLLARS, CUFFS, AND STEEL SHIRT BOSOMS.

Superbly Enamelled, Snow-white Steel Shirt Bosoms, Cuffs, Collars, Etc., Reversible, Detached, $1, $1 50, $2, $2 50, $3, $3 50 per set. Mailed. Send price & size. Bosom & Paper, 75 Beames St., N. Y.

o 545-52o

100 Photographs of Handsome Ladies sent, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address B. L. FOX, 34 Varick street, New York city.

548-50o

ORTNER & HOULE,

3 St. James's Street, London, England, Practical Engravers, Designers and Jewelers by Special Appointment to the Queen and Prince of Wales.

MONOGRAMS AND HERALDIC DIES

for Note Paper, &c., in the most unequaled and artistic style. Orders executed on receipt of money order or reference in England. Three illuminated specimen seals of Monograms, &c., &c., for Albums, 5s. each.

547-59o

Union Dime Savings Bank.
Canal Street, cor. of Varick.
Deposits from 10 cents to $5,000 received.
Six per cent. interest, free of tax.
Deposits in March draw interest from April 1st
547-00o Assets—$1,902,226.39.

STAMMERING

cured by Bates's Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet &c., address SIMPSON & CO., 277 West 23d St., N. Y. 539-52o

Old Eyes Made New, without Spectacles, Doctor or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Comfort and Cure for the Ruptured.—Seven Letters. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Croup.—How it may be easily Prevented; also Cause and Cure. Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Confidential Information for the Married.—Sent free in sealed envelope. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Medical Common Sense.—400 pages—100 Illustrations. $1 00. Sent by mail, postage paid. Contents Table sent free. Address the Author, E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y. o2o2

$1. TIMEKEEPER. $1.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER and marvel of ingenuity. The European Pocket Timekeeper. "The most wonderful invention of modern times." "Chronicle" warranted correct. Needs no key or winding up. Price $1 each in Gold or Silver Gilt Cases. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address J. W. DELAMERE & CO., 302 Broadway, N. Y. tfo

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $20 to $30 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. Papers with descriptive matter, &c., sent free. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

Ladies & Gentlemen

OUT OF THE CITY,

TAKE YOUR OWN MEASURE AND SEND TO

E. A. BROOKS, Art's,

Importer and Manufacturer of

BOOTS, SHOES, &c.

575 Broadway, New York.

Directions for Measuring the Foot.

First. Place the foot upon a piece of paper and trace the outline of same with a pencil, which will give the length and spread of the foot, as shown in figure A.

Second. Make the following measurements, in inches and fractions, with tape measure, as shown in figure B, viz:

1st.—The Ball of the foot.
2d.—The Instep.
3d.—The High Instep.
4th.—The Ankle.
5th.—The Heel.
6th.—The Calf.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH.

If you want the best fitting, strongest, and most serviceable paper collar ever offered to the public, don't fail to purchase the

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR

The most Economical Collar ever Invented.

Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides.

The following styles are now made:

Patent REVERSIBLE Enameled PAPER COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Bank Note Paper COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Printed Stitch PAPER COLLARS

To be obtained at Furnishing Goods Dealers throughout the country.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & Co., Agents,
541-53o Winthrop Square, Boston.

Employment for Both Sexes.—Energetic persons of either sex in want of safe, respectable and profitable employment, can procure such by sending their address to J. M. D., Box 153, Brooklyn, N. Y. 45o

The Little Joker and A FINELY COLORED PHOTOGRAPH sent in a sealed envelope for 25 cents. Address, Box 5,057, P. O., New York. tf

To Nervous Sufferers of both Sexes.—A Medical Gentleman having the test ten years cured a great many sufferers who had undergone the usual expensive modes of treatment without success, is still willing to assist others, by sending (free), on the receipt of a post-paid addressed envelope, a copy of the formula of cure employed. Direct to DR. JOHN M. DAGNALL, 9 Clinton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. 11o

To all wanting Farms.

Lands in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, California, Oregon, Washington Territory, Idaho, Montana, Dakota, Arizona, New Mexico, Indian Territory, Alaska, and British Provinces, for sale by the Railroad and Land Companies, and by Individuals, in the Best Locations, and on the Most Favorable Terms, for Cash or Credit, at Low Prices, and Low Rates of Interest, are described in the Great Western Farm Journal, a large 32-column paper, published monthly at Chicago, Ill., and sent to subscribers at 50 cents a year. Specimen copies sent free. Address, GREAT WESTERN FARM JOURNAL, Chicago, Ill.

$7 FINE WATCHES $7
AT OLD PRICES.

English Silver Watches	$ 6, $8, $10
Pure Silver Hunting Lepines	$15 Each.
Fine 18 Karat Gold-Plated Watches	$15, $18, $20.
Fancy Compass and Thermometer Watches	$18, $20.
Silver Hunting Levers	$26, $35.
Ladies' Gold Enameled Watches	$20, $25, $30 to $75.
Coin Silver American Levers	$30.

All kinds of Good Watches, low.
CATELY BROTHERS, Importers,
tfo 102 Nassau street, N. Y.

ITCH. Salt Rheum. ITCH. Salt Rheum.
(WHEATON'S) OINTMENT.

Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cure Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 Cents, by sending 50 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, Mass., will be forwarded free by mail. For sale by all Druggists. 541-6o

BRANDY,—is Harn, Golden, Flavor, and Silken GUMA produced by the use of Professor DE MORNY'S Royal CHEMICAL OIL. One application warrants and to cure all kinds of straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy, massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to hair. Sent free by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address DEMORNY, CROSBY & Co., Chemists, 205 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 541-6o

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S

AGRAFFE PIANOS.

101 Bleecker Street. Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. tfo

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S
LABOR-SAVING SOAP.

This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will harden in the most delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for woolen goods. All will find that after being washed in this Soap. It may be used in hard or salt water. It will remove paint, grease, tar and stains of all kinds. One pound warranted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons handsome soft soap from one pound of this Soap. Each bar wrapped in a circular containing full directions for use, printed in English and German. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St.,
New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP. Fifty per cent. saved by using B. T. BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH or HOUSEHOLD SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in can of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 13 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 16 gallons of strong soft soap, by boiling cold. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St.,
New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS, "made from cream of tartar salt." Read none with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt, water and flour. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington street, New York.

50 PER CENT. SAVED BY USING B. T. BABBITT'S BEST PEARL TOP LYE. Light Biscuit or any kind of Cake may be made with this "Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No saleratus required when sweet milk is used. Nos. 64 to 74 Washington street, New York. o

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE!

We are in want of a few responsible Agents in every Town and Village in the United States, to sell Certificates of Shares in the National Prize Distribution!

The Agency can be conducted without interfering with other business, or it will give any one permanent employment, without a capital. Those who have the canvass for us are sure of being liberally compensated.

Enclose a stamp (if convenient) for Special terms to Agents, and address

L. M. HARRIS & CO.,
Managers National Distribution,
547-50o Boston, Mass.

TO CURE

Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL and Disorders arising from excesses, use

SMOLANDER'S

EXTRACT BUCHU.

Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York; and BARNES, BAILEY & CO., New England. BRADLEY & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents.

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 600 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Three of different powers for $1. Address
0000 F. B. BOWEN, 335 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 622 Broadway, (up stairs) 8th St., N. Y. Repairing neatly and cheaply. Call or send for circular. Pipes and Holders on hand. Pipes and Holders on sale by dealers generally. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $2 to $30 each.
c639-45

WHISKERS and MUSTACHIOS forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by the use of SETZONE'S RESTAURATEUR CAPILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the élite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials sent free. Address SETZONE MILLS & CO., Chemists, 383 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 543-52o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1866, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 549—Vol. XXII.] NEW YORK, APRIL 7, 1866. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1 00

Necessity of Harmony Between the Executive and Congress.

The country is glad to perceive that the acrimony between the President and Congress is sensibly abated. The differences between the Executive and Legislative branches of the Government do not appear, on reflection, to be as wide as the irritation and feeling created at the outset seemed to indicate, nor as great as the opponents both of Congress and the President sought to represent. Calm reflection has convinced high and low, and men of all parties and classes, that cordial co-operation between Congress and the Executive is essential to the speedy and complete pacification of the country. Separately, neither is powerful for good, and true statesmen will be loth to continue a state of affairs fraught with danger, but will seek earnestly and dispassionately to ascertain how differences, honestly entertained, as no one doubts they are, on both sides, can best and most speedily be harmonized. In doing this, they will not exaggerate the significance of words rashly spoken, or of criminations and recriminations lightly made. Human passions should subside in presence of the momentous problems presented by the condition of the country, as they should before the approach of the tempest and the rumble of the earthquake.

We think any calm observer of events, or who has carefully studied the uniformly expressed language of the President, to say nothing of his public conduct, will discover that there is really no difference between him and Congress in principle, and not a wide difference in policy. The President has declared himself in favor of granting suffrage to negroes who have fought in the Union armies, who have a property status, and who can read and write. He would vote for such a proposition were he in the Constitutional Convention or the Legislature of his own State. He may hesitate, perhaps, in attempting to deprive any State of its constitutional and hitherto sacredly respected right of deciding on the qualifications of its own voters, but at the same time he declares emphatically in favor of making representation dependent on the voting population—thus making the curtailment of political power in the lately rebel States the penalty of an undue limitation of the suffrage. In his letter to Gov. Sharkey, he urged the former of these propositions, not alone on the ground of right, but of expediency—as a means of speedily getting the Southern States out of their anomalous condition. In that letter, dated August 15, 1865, the President said:

"I hope that without delay your convention will amend your State constitution, abolishing slavery and denying to all future Legislatures the power to legislate that there is property in man; also, that they will adopt the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery. If you could extend the elective franchise to all persons of color who can read the Constitution of the United States in English, and the Constitution of the United States in English, and write their names, and to all persons of color who own real estate valued at not less than $250, and pay taxes thereon, you would completely disarm the adversary, and set an example the other States would follow. This and set an example the other States would follow. This you can do without perfect safety, and you thus place the Southern States, in reference to free people of color, upon the same basis with the free States."

There is no difference of opinion between the President and Congress on the important point of refusing men of rebel antecedents admission on the floors of the National Legislature. The President does not question the right of Congress to decide on the qualifications of its own members, nor does he recommend, as far as we understand his views, either the abolition or modification of the test oaths.

In all his communications with the Provisional Governors and the Conventions of the rebel States, he has steadily insisted on the abolition of slavery, as well as the acceptance of the constitutional amendment, and also, the recognition of civil rights for the negro and a constitutional republican of the rebel debt, as indispensable preliminary conditions to the rehabilitation of those States.

SCENE AT THE U. S. PENSION OFFICE, CUSTOM HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY—DISABLED SOLDIERS, WIDOWS AND RELATIVES, AWAITING THEIR TURN.

Now, on all these great and vital points, which underlie the question of reconstruction, the President and Congress are agreed, and it seems to us the common platform is wide enough to admit of difference of opinion on questions of detail, which any large-minded statesman could harmonize, without, in any way, imperiling that grand organization which has carried the country safely through a great war, and to which only can we look for a wise and permanent restoration of the country.

It seems to us that Senator Stewart, of Nevada, has drawn a larger and juster appreciation of affairs than most of his compeers in the Senate. He has embodied the views and suggestions of the President in an admirable manner, and we think the epitome will be found to embrace most that the Unionists of the land seek to obtain. There is not a loyal man in Congress or the country who cannot assent to the proposition of Senator Stewart, and the alleged fact that it meets the views of several eminent Southerners, to our mind, is much in its favor. It is indifferent to us by whom it was suggested or drawn up. Our interest in it extends simply to this:—

Would its adoption secure practically the results for which the war was fought? Does it offer a fair and honorable ground of cooperation—we will not say compromise—between Congress and the Executive? If so, we hope all parties on whom the reorganization of the country depends will gather to its support, and that it may speedily be adopted, so as to quiet the distracted minds of our people and give the wearied country rest.

Mr. Stewart's proposition is embodied in the following resolutions, which were presented to the Senate, and referred to the Joint Committee on Reconstruction:

Resolved, etc. 1st. That each of said States, whose people were lately in insurrection as aforesaid, shall be entitled to have its having fully and validly resumed its former relations to the Federal Government, when a Senator or Representative shall be admitted in the two Houses of the National Legislature, whenever said State shall have modified its Constitution as to do away all existing distinctions as to civil rights and qualifications of electors on account of race or color of its population, by reason either of said State prohibiting the exercise of elective franchise to persons of color, or providing additional burdens and disabilities to which they may have become liable by reason of connection with the rebellion.

Resolved, That in view of the thorough assimilation of the basis of suffrage in the various States with the Union, all other States not above specified shall be respectfully requested to incorporate an assimilation in their State constitutions respectively corresponding with the one specified.

Resolved, That in the adoption of the aforesaid resolutions it is not intended to assert a control over or to ask the part of Congress in regard to the regulation of the right of suffrage in the different States of the Union, but only to make a respectful and earnest appeal to their own good sense and love of country with a view to the prevention of serious evils now threatened, and to the peaceful perpetuation of the system, the happiness, and true glory of the whole American people.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, APRIL 7, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE.—We have no travelling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are Impostors.

A Timely Movement.

THE public, but especially posterity, will be thankful to Judge Lawrence, M. C. from Ohio, for the timely resolution introduced by him, and carried through the House of Representatives, "instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire as to the propriety of providing for the publication of a work giving topographical maps of the battle-fields of the rebellion, with roads, ravines, plans of the battle, position of troops, landscape, views of battle-fields, plans of forts, earth-works," etc.

Now is the time to collect, classify, and preserve the materials for the history of the most eventful period in our existence, and of the most widely extended and bloodiest struggle on record. It is not too late to make plans of every battle-field, every fort and earth-work, of every extemporized bridge or improvised railway, and obtain sketches and views of all the principal places and scenes which the war has made historical. An infinite amount of valuable historical material rests in the note-books of officers and men, which now can be easily called together, but which, in a few years, may be lost or destroyed. From the archives of a nation its people draw the justifications of their national pride, and on them they found their pretensions to greatness and dignity. In our own establishment and many hundreds of original sketches, besides the large number contributed to the Sanitary Fair (which, we learn, were largely purchased for Europe), drawn by our Special Artists in the field, which every day will be invested with new interest and value, and which, in less than half a century, will be invaluable. These alone would constitute the basis of an elaborate work like that proposed by Judge Lawrence.

We owe it to ourselves, and especially to the soldiers and sailors who participated in the late war, not less than to the patriot dead, to adequately preserve the facts and features of this gigantic contest for the appreciation and admiration of posterity. We owe it to the memories of the various Historical Societies of the country, and removable only by them? We throw out the hint without much reflection, and are but imperfectly informed as to the realization of the enlightened and patriotic purposes contemplated by the resolutions of Judge Lawrence.

"ALTHOUGH ye bray a fool in a mortar, yet will he not learn wisdom." A wonderful illustration of this saying is furnished in the recent action of the Legislature of Alabama. That State, as it seeks to override the Constitution, besides evincing a very mean and narrow spirit. It has passed a law, or rather attempted to pass one, of which the 12th and 13th sections are as follows:

12. To sell, or expose for sale, for one year, at any public place, or publish, or circulate, publish or cause to be monthly paper, periodical, or magazine, published outside of the United States, which contains any matter, article, or thing, calculated to create ill-will, hatred, or contempt, and to vend the same on the streets, or on boats or railroad cars, $25 dollars.

13. To keep a news depot for one year, in any city, town, or village, for the sale of any newspaper, periodical, or magazine, not including pictorials provided for in the last preceding section, $100 dollars.

The object of this is to exclude from Alabama precisely the kind of periodicals which that state cannot produce, and which are the subjects of terror of civilization. This is sectionalism and narrowness of these enactments become really pitiable, in view of their impotency, for the Constitution provides, that "no state shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing the inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts laid by any state on imports or exports shall be for the treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of Congress." The New York Post very justly remarks: "If the people of Alabama do not like Northern journals, they need not buy them; no one has compelled them to do that. But the passage of this tax law shows that there is a demand there for these journals, which these legislators weakly attempt to check. Of course the present act is only an entering wedge. It that holds, the legislature may tax a newspaper one thousand dollars for every dollar's worth selling any of the prohibited journals; if they may thus prohibit the sale of an illustrated journal, they may as similarly prohibit that of a daily; of all the dailies, printed out of the state, or in any particular state, and, if newspapers, then any other articles of merchandise may be thus kept out."

THE amount of fish consumed in the great cities of the world is something quite beyond what would be supposed. A recent British author tells us that in London, every year, there are supplied annually 500,000 cod-fish, 25,000,000 mackerel, 100,000,000 soles, 35,000,000 plaices, 200,000,000 smelts, 70,000,000 red herrings, and 1,000,000 dried cod. These, with the addition of molluscous shell-fish, to the amount of 920,000,000, and a daily demand for 10,000 lobsters during the fashionable or summer season.

THE proposal to found an American Lectureship at Cambridge, England, has been rejected. The proposal was somewhat new and daring; for not only were the subjects to be American history and literature, but the lecturers were also to be Americans. More, these lecturers were to have been nominated by Harvard College.

It is not to be presumed that Mr. Bancroft, in his oration on Mr. Lincoln, proposed to "insult" the representatives of foreign governments who happened to be present. Nor is it to be presumed that the incident of their presence could have prevented him from making such reflections pertinent to Mr. Lincoln's career as the occasion demanded. It was his duty that day to speak as if to the marble walls around him, with recognition only of truth and the justice due to his subject. Whether or not this Sir, or that Marquis, or the representative of Great Britain or of the Sandwich Islands, was likely to be pleased, was no business of his, and it is pure presumption, as well as assumption, on the part of the foreign press to assign latent or sinister purposes to the orator. We are not surprised that the "gilded jade" winces; but it was no part of Mr. Bancroft's intent to open its sores. If a faithful recital of events, and a just review of the course of foreign nations toward the United States during the hours of its greatest peril, can furnish cause of complaint, then the utterances of the French and English press on Mr. Bancroft have some excuse—not otherwise. We can only say that if Europe shakes under his impeachment, it will occur under the rigorous justice of the pages of history. Better to confute his statements, and show wherein his judgment erred, than call him "demagogue," and compare him to that British Thersites, the blackguard Roebuck! The criticisms of the British and French press are more searching than they have appeared to American apprehension, when we find our old and esteemed friend, the Spectator, loses its temper, and takes to scolding "like a very drab." From the rest of the London press, the News excepted, we never expect anything else.

A LITTLE book, entitled "Outcroppings; Selections of California Verse," has been published by Roman & Co., San Francisco. Among the poems is the following:

THE GOING OF MY BRIDE.

BY C. H. WEBB.

By the brink of the river our parting was fond,
And I kissed her, and kissed her, and still we kissed on;
For a band of bright angels were waiting beyond,
And my bride of a day was to go:

Was to go from our shore, with its headlands of years,
On a water whose depths were untold;
And the tears were to flow in the River of Tears,
Till it blent with an ocean of gold.

Our farewell was brief as the fall of a tear—
The wasting of words were a sin;
When my bride whispered low that a shallop drew near,
And the boatmen were waiting within.

Then I spoke, in one kiss, all the passion of years,
For I knew that our parting was nigh,
And I saw not the sails, for they were by tears,
And a light had gone out from the sky.

But I caught the faint gleam of an outdrifting sail,
And I knew by the bow curling sharp and curled oar,
That a bark was to bear her away.

All alone in my grief I now sit on the sand,
Where so often she sat by my side;
And I long for the moment I come to the strand,
That again I may sit by my bride.

In such lines as these there is something to touch the heart of every mourner. The book contains the names or initials of about 20 writers.

IF France a dead body must be buried within 24 hours of decease, and a petition has recently been presented to the Senate, praying that the interment may be delayed for 48 hours. Curtius met, who supported the petition, mentioned several cases of premature interment, and related a story which he had heard from a physician. A young priest, in the summer of 1826, fainted in the pulpit, and was given up for dead. He was laid out in his cassock, with a crucifix on the breast, and reciting the De Profundis while the coffin was preparing for the body. All this while, and long before the lid was fixed down, through motionless, heard all that was going on in an agony of mind impossible to describe. At last a friend, known to be a doctor, arrived, infancy came in; his voice aroused some dormant power, and next day the corpse was again preaching from the same pulpit. The Archbishop of Marseilles Cardinal then telling the tale, and in spite of official resistance the Senate voted the petition almost unanimously referred to the Minister of the Interior for action. The idea of the French authorities is, that as the living and the dead are, among the poor, forced to reside in the same room, interment cannot be delayed, but 24 hours is a horribly short space of time in a country where it is not sufficient to produce any symptom of corruption.

IN a discussion in the House of Representatives on the proposition that no portraits of living men should be put on Government notes or bonds, Mr. Thayer created some amusement by suggesting that we would soon be compelled to adopt a new mode of computing the value of money. Instead of the old-fashioned table, "10 mills make one cent, 10 cents one dime, 10 dimes one dollar," etc., we should be compelled to substitute something like the following—it being presumed that the head of Mr. S. M. Clarke is on the five cent fractional note, that of Washington on the one dollar note, and that of Mr. Fessenden on the 25 cent notice.

Two Clarkes make one Washington.
Two Washingtons make one Fessenden.
Two Fessendens make one Spinner.
Two Spinners make one Stanton.
Two Chases make one Hamilton.
Five Chases make one Baltimore.

THE exactions of the gas companies of London, although in no proportion to those of New York, are still intolerable, and have led to a proposition in Parliament similar to that pending in the Legislature of this State, namely, to take the monopoly of gas manufacture out of the hands of the companies, and vest it in the Municipality. Something ought to be done, and must be done, unless the public of the metropolis of Great Britain and the metropolis of the United States choose deliberately to consign themselves like geese to the felicities of being plucked without resistance.

A CURIOUS copy-right case was recently tried in London—the publishers of "The Post-Office London Directory" against the publishers of "The Imperial Directory of London." The ruling of the Judge covers and sufficiently explains all the points of law in which the public is likely to take interest.

"In the case of a dictionary, map, guide-book, or directory, where there were certain common objects which must, if correctly described, be described in the same words, a subsequent compiler could not fairly take the matter which had been gone through by the former compiler. In the case of a road-book, he must treat the distances for himself. In the case of a map, he must go through the same process of triangulation, and generally he could not take one word of the information previously published without independently working the matter out for himself, so as to arrive at the same result from the same common sources, unless, as might be, the previous publication for the purpose of saving it he had obtained the proper result, but no further."

AMONG the extraordinary facts brought out by the Commission now sitting in Jamaica, for the investigation of the late so-called insurrection, is this, that some of the "insurrectionists" (negroes of course), were executed by being set up as marks, and fired at from a distance of 40 yards. In view of the evidence, even the London Times is obliged to admit that "we cannot affect to doubt that acts more horrible than massacre have been committed by persons wearing the English uniform."

THERE will be a total eclipse of the moon on the night of March 30. It begins at 53 minutes past 9 o'clock, is at its total at 39 minutes past 11, and terminates at 25 minutes past 12. It is visible throughout the United States.

THE city of New York contains 311 churches, of which 61 are Protestant Episcopal, 45 Presbyterian, 35 Methodist Episcopal, 32 Roman Catholic, 29 Baptist, 20 Jewish synagogues, 17 Dutch Reformed, 9 Lutheran, 6 United Presbyterian, 5 Reformed Presbyterian, 5 Congregationalist, 4 Universalist, 4 African Methodist, 3 Methodist Protestant, and 18 which come under the heading of "miscellaneous."

TOWN GOSSIP.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY has come and gone, and once more all New York gave up its avocations for the day, to see "the finest pageantry in the world" amuse themselves as Saturday through the streets from daylight till dark, to the crash of martial music and the flaunting of gay green banners.

The march was the usual procession, five miles long, trailed its wandering way through a line of a quarter of a million of spectators; the small fights came off; the shamrock was drowned; and a few thousand beals were left to their accustomed lot, or floors, or anything else ready for their reception, and St. Patrick's Day was over. And then—the very next, the 18th day—we discover that there is a day which we hear so little, but which among the fair daughters of Erin is generally kept—Sheila's Day.

The derivation of Sheila's Day comes from this legend: St. Patrick, after his tour in which he made converts of the men, took, as was usual in Romanism, some in sight of the famous mountain of Reek, in the county of Mayo, to the women. And the beautiful girl, dressed as a peasant, approaching; and the saint spoke to her, and expressed his surprise at finding so much barbarism and so much barrenness of country. The girl modestly replied that she lived on the peak of yonder mountain, and that she had descended, as St. Patrick would come along that way, and on telling it to her father, he had sent her out to meet the approaching saint. With that the saint explained that he it was that she was seeking, adding, "I've been busy all day converting men and women, and I'm hungry and thirsty." "I'm glad to see you," says the maiden. "My name is Sheila; come with me to my father's house, and you shall have a drink." So to my father's house she went accordingly jogged along to their hut, where he found a venerable man, who gave him plenty to eat, and good water from the spring, and he had dessert, tea and tea, and gathering a great bunch of wild roses, she shook the dew from them, and made a cup of them for the saint, and then, and immediately fell away into a refreshing sleep, filled with delightful visions, from which he was refreshed and awakened, by the hungry and thirsty, bending kindly over him.

"Sheila, my daughter," he said, "what was that beautiful drink you gave me?"

"That," says Sheila, "was a drink that none but saints are permitted to take; and its name is mountain dew."

"Then," says St. Patrick, "let that restriction be removed; and henceforth, on the 18th of March, let your descendants, dear Sheila, take at least one cup of mountain dew." And such a treffle has been kept.

With that he knelt and blessed the well, and the flowers that grew around it; and the print of his knees remains to this day; and Sheila's Day has since been strictly kept by the ladies from the Emerald Isle; and in Dublin to be Irish, for the 18th was formerly—how kept open house, and were jolly.

Only four full occurrences of St. Patrick's Day, we are reminded of a little phase of New York life, an account of which we take from a daily paper, merely to show that we do not lack in the great city a variety of diversion:

"ONCE FIGHT.—At the place known by the initiated as the "Once Fight," the grand main commenced early on Saturday afternoon, and continued throughout the evening. At two o'clock a steady stream of sporting men, and many who are not so designated, began to pour through the narrow entrance, each man paying a preserving his card to the door-keeper. The pit was 12 in width, and 9 in depth. By five o'clock the amphitheatre was tolerably packed, and the betting began in earnest, and being the last day, quite brisk. The cocks were soon regarded to, and several fights, with long spurs, were decided. The short spurs were used as soon as the battle opened, betting commencing at once, and continuing with great spirit, and with others on single birds. During the progress of the battle, the excitement was intense, and the cheers for the victorious bird would reach the outer voices in the victorious bird would reach the outer voices in the celebrity made $5,000 during the match. The affair concluded without any human blood being shed."

In our issue of the 17th March, we made some remarks on the subject of Divorce, in which we merely stated facts. We said that those Divorce Brokers were sowing fearful domestic troubles among us, and should be stopped. We did not assert that their proceedings were legal, but that the thing was going on daily, legal or not. Our remarks have brought forth this letter from an eminent member of the bar, who clips the article, and says:

"The above, which appears in your ILLUSTRATED of March 17, page 403, is a mistake, and one which is calculated to do much harm. I do not suppose the editor of the "Town Gossip" intended to advertise the Divorce Brokers, but he could not have done so more effectually than by that very article. It seems to be a prevalent idea that the Divorce Brokers who advertise to obtain divorces by attorney in Indiana, can do all they pretend to. A divorce obtained in Indiana, between parties residing in this or any other State, except Indiana, is not worth the paper that it is written on, and any misguided man or woman who, on the strength of such a divorce, marries again, renders himself or herself liable to indictment for bigamy, and State's prison for five years.

"It is a settled principle of law that, unless one of the parties to an action for divorce have a bona-fide domicil in the State where the suit is brought, the court has no jurisdiction. Therefore, a man residing in New York, has no more right to apply to an Indiana court for a divorce, than he has to commence a proceeding for that purpose before the Khan of Tartary. Besides this general principle, there is a statute of Indiana (see Laws of Indiana, 1859, page 108), which requires one of the parties to an action for divorce, to have a bona-fide residence of one year in that State, and also a bona-fide residence in the county where the suit is brought at the time when the petition is presented. Unless one of the parties to the action has actually resided for one year in the State of Indiana, a divorce obtained there is worth nothing there, and consequently is void everywhere. The court granting a divorce under such circumstances, has no more right to do so, than the devil in your printing-office; and a decree of divorce signed by the latter, is worth quite as much as if it were signed by Judge Brackenbridge, and sealed with the seal of the Court of Common Pleas of Allen County, Indiana.

"A person who has been swindled by these Divorce Brokers, does not care to make the matter public, otherwise we might get rid of these 'dragons' without legislation. It may be a somewhat startling statement, but there is a generation of illegitimate children growing up around us, the effect of the Divorce Brokerage system."

On the subject of rascalities, we are pleased to record a case where two guardians of the law became breakers of it, and met with the promptest of punishment. Two men, Donnelly and Stewart, members of the Third Precinct Police, were charged with stealing four revolvers from the fire that occurred at 262 Broadway. The property was found on them, and Judge Dowling, after a short lecture, exactly suiting their case, sent them for six months each to the Penitentiary.

Some one who has carefully reckoned it all up, has sent in a schedule of the Fifth avenue. By it we learn that this street, from its commencement to the Central Park, has 340 residences, and not one of them cost less than $30,000. The average cost is $40,000, and the rent from $4,000 to $12,000 per annum. With all this price, every one of them is occupied, and more are wanted. A. T. Stewart's heads the list, and will cost when finished a little over a million.

Among the theatres there is nothing new to chronicle, each having gone on through the week in the same old groove, with the same attractions.

The Winter Garden with Mr. Booth, who ends his engagement on the 27th of March, and is succeeded by Mr. J. N. Gotthold, the young American tragedian, who has just returned from Europe. We hope to chronicle his success.

At Woods' Theatre, Lucille Western is carrying everything by storm, and forcing the critics to admit her real talent.

At Lucy Rushton's, the new piece, so long in preparation, is to be produced on the 27th.

At Niblo's, Maggie Mitchell in the "Pearl of Savoy." Next week she does "Little Barefoot," which will be a sensation.

The week, in most of the houses, has been a week of benefits, substantial ones at that.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—A young lady of Seymour, Maine, became warmly attached to a young man. Her love was not returned. She procured a preparation called "love powders," and with the assistance of another woman, mixed them with the young man's food. They poisoned and nearly killed him, and he is going to bring suit against the young lady for damages. Ungallant young man!—impressible young woman! But such is life.

—— A young man in Bridgeport, Conn., Robert Anderson by name, was engaged to a girl in that city, who would not name the day; so, getting desperate, he got up a surprise party one night at his lady-love's residence, and after a time proposed a tableau, with a mock marriage, in which he and Miss Bartlett (his betrothed) should be principals. A white dress and veil were procured, and a clergyman performed the ceremony, at the close of which the astonished bride was presented with a marriage certificate, and found herself a wife.

—— Harriet Pinckney, aged 90 years, daughter of General Charles Cotesworth Pinckney, of Revolutionary fame, died in Charleston, S. C., on the evening of the 15th. The deceased was everywhere known and beloved. Possessed of ample wealth, she bestowed it with an unsparing hand, and was thus the means of doing a vast amount of good to those who were in need of assistance.

—— In Missouri the planters are exhibiting great fairness in their labor contracts. Negro factory hands (men) are getting from $20 to $35 per month and board; small girls and boys, stemmers, from $5 to $10 per month and board; field hands (men), $20 to $25 per month and board. As a consequence the blacks are well disposed, there is less poverty, and the profits on capital invested largely increased.

—— Myriads of mice have made their appearance this spring in Ohio. The tall grass that covers the fields has given protection to them, and they have come forth increased in numbers a thousand fold. They have attacked the fruit-trees in some sections, and destroyed over 5,000 trees. They are so thick that in passing through the fields in some places they scatter before one in every direction.

—— During a recent fire at Jacksonville, Monmouth county, Pa., four children were burned to death. A boy of 12, by a floor giving way, was precipitated across a girder, where he hung roasting in the flames, in full view of the agonized spectators, without their being able to render any assistance.

—— An enterprising one-armed soldier has leased the Old Capitol prison for a brief period, and proposes to allow persons at 25 cents a piece to see the cells in which Wirz and other noted prisoners were confined.

—— The Galveston (Texas) News speaks of the arrival of about 30 French emigrants in that city, and says the gentleman who induced them to come out intends to try them in making cotton. They are from the Alpine regions, and possess all the qualifications to become good laborers in the field.

—— Three thieves were found dead behind the counter of a druggist in Charleston, S. C., one day last week. Poison had been put in some food, and placed in a convenient position, which the robbers had eaten of and died.

—— Polygamy is not very fruitful of revenue, whatever it may be in other respects. Utah, with 100,000 inhabitants, only pays $37,000 into the United States Treasury this year, whilst Colorado, with 80,000 inhabitants, contributes $100,000.

—— A couple in Oxford county, Maine, lived together until their family included 13 children. A libel for divorce was brought and granted, and the parties separated. After being apart two years they again met, and two weeks ago they were married again.

—— James Gordon was lately conveyed to the Toronto (Canada) Hospital to have a surgical operation performed, but dreaded it so much that he cut his throat and died.

—— Last year, Wm. B. Astor had the largest income of any person in the United States. The year before, Stewart had the largest.

—— Mrs. Elizabeth Ball, of North Carolina, has been sentenced, by a military commission in that State, to one year's imprisonment in the Penitentiary, for killing a negro.

—— The Governor of Montana, in a recent call for 500 volunteers to go against the Indians, requests them to arm and equip themselves, as he can only furnish 39 Springfield rifles.

—— The colleges of New England, 14 in number, contain this year about 2,500 under-graduates, of whom from one-third to one-half are professors of religion of different denominations.

—— In New Orleans, recently, two men engaged in carrying down a corpse, had each a leg broken by the stairs giving way.

—— The President having removed the editor of the Lafayette (Ind.) Journal from the Postmastership, and appointed the editor of the Courier in his stead, the friends of the former, on the 10th ult., held an indignation meeting on the subject.

—— A young lady in Florida, becoming insane, lately destroyed her ambrotypes and letters, set fire to her clothing in a wardrobe, and dressing herself in heavy woolen fabrics and a broadcloth cloak, set fire to her clothing and sprang into bed, where she was found enveloped in flames, with clasped hands, exclaiming, "Oh, ain't this glorious? Ain't I a martyr?" Though her limbs and the lower part of her body were baked, she did not appear to suffer pain.

—— It is a fact little known to general readers that mental occupations are preventative of insanity. From the report of the physicians of the State Lunatic Asylum of Pennsylvania, for the year 1865, the occupations of the unfortunates are classed as follows: Farmers, 373; laborers, 316; innkeepers, 376; blacksmiths, 18; miners, 21; merchants, 38; clerks, 32; lawyers, 12; clergymen, 6; students, 11; authors, 1.

—— A party of "Good Fellows," in Columbia, Ky., went to another "Good Fellow's" house to pull him out of bed, when one of the number was shot dead in the dark by the awakened man, who thought robbers were in his room.

—— In Sir Archibald Alison's "History of Europe," chap. 76, sec. 21, it is stated that the English navy, in the year 1813, "was manned by 140,000 seamen, and 18,000 marines, making a total, with the land forces, of 1,107,000 men in arms, all procured by voluntary enrollment."

—— A late writer defines Methodism to mean "Christianity in earnest."

—— A cat 23 years of age is living at Acushnet, Massachusetts.

—— The entire valuation of real and personal property in Illinois—$391,603,284—show an increase over last year of about 10 per cent.

—— The San Antonio (Texas) Herald is charmed with the serene peace that prevails in that city; "With the exception of 15 or 20 fights, and the exchange of a few friendly shots without any unfortunate results, nothing has happened of moment for two days."

—— An infant was lately found in a street car in Utica, having the following note pinned to its dress: "My name is Emma Holmes; my mother is too poor to provide for me, and I am left here to the mercy of some charitable friend, hoping that I may be taken by some family who will bring me up respectably."

—— There are already 43 papers in Tennessee, and the Nashville Dispatch says that in a few weeks this number will be increased to 50—10 more than in the best times before the war. Three new papers have also made their appearance in Georgia.

—— San Francisco statistics exhibit a very remarkable growth in population during the war. In 1860 there were 56,000 citizens; in 1865, 119,000. The Bulletin thinks that there will be a less rapid increase in the future. Its estimate for 1870 is 190,400.

—— A bill before Congress proposes the coinage of five-cent pieces, composed of copper and nickel, to take the place of the five-cent currency.

—— The letter-carrier's free delivery for the month of February in the city of New York, embraced the following numbers: Mail letters, 801,639; drop-letters, 404,230; newspapers delivered, 114,451; collected letters, 1,082,676.

—— Some of the admirers and personal friends of Gen. Sherman, in St. Louis, have recently purchased and furnished a house for him in that city, at a cost of $37,000.

—— As an illustration of the "ups and downs" of life, the St. Louis News mentions a former New Orleans district judge who is now a paper-carrier in that city.

—— Boston sells its house offal under a contract for $5,500 per annum, the ashes collected by the city at $8,000, and the street dirt and sweepings for $2,000.

Foreign.—Italy contains one-fourth of the total number of bishoprics in the whole world. There is, on the average, one bishop in that country for every 90,000 of the inhabitants. The dioceses vary in extent, some containing 500,000, others only 2,000 souls. The Archbishops of Pisa, Ferrara, Ravenna, Palermo, Cefalu, Girgenti, Mozzarra, and Catone, have salaries of upwards of £4,000 a year each.

—— Sir Morton Peto has recorded his experiences and observations in Canada and the United States, in a work, entitled "The Prospects and Resources of America, ascertained during a visit to the States in the autumn of 1865," just announced in London.

—— It is suggested in the London Chemist and Druggist that chloroform is an excellent medium for the removal of stains of paint from clothes, etc. It is found that portions of dry white paint, which resisted the action of ether, benzole and bisulphide of carbon, are at once dissolved by chloroform.

—— Le Pays, a French Canadian paper, says: "Canada, by not joining its interests to those of its rich and powerful neighbors, will be condemned to vegetate miserably under the tutelage of a foreign power, and be loaded with taxes, debts and beggars."

—— Mr. S. C. Hall's attempt to erect a monument over Leigh Hunt's grave in England has failed for want of funds.

—— In Belgium there are 18,000 persons who have a right to wear the order of King Leopold; and in France there are 64,000 with the ribbon of the Legion of Honor. This makes one decoré in 66 of the population in Belgium; and one in 166 in France.

—— In the French Chamber there are 58 lawyers; 55 mayors; 32 officers of rank; 18 merchants; 17 literary men; 12 bankers; 9 magistrates; 69 physicians; 4 chamberlains; and 2 equerries to the Emperor; 84 only of the members are in the habit of addressing the house, and of these 13 only are good speakers.

—— According to the new "Newspaper Press Directory," there are now established in Great Britain 1,275 newspapers; an increase in 10 years of 523. In London there are now published 226 journals; in the provinces, 707; Wales, 43; Scotland, 139; Ireland, 128; British Isles, 14. Of these there are 52 daily papers published in England, 1 in Wales, 12 in Scotland, 12 in Ireland, and 1 in the British Isles; total 78. In 1856 there were only 35 daily papers: 15 in London, 1 in Birmingham, 3 in Liverpool, 3 in Manchester, 3 in Edinburgh, 4 in Glasgow, and 6 in Ireland. So that the increase has been much greater in daily papers than in any other class of periodicals. It is remarkable that Wales only produces one daily paper: and, curiously enough, the number in Scotland and Ireland is equal—12. Scotland has added five to her number of daily papers in 10 years; Ireland six.

—— The Mexicans are kept busy in devising means by which they may keep out of the two armies. One week they receive a notification from Maximilian's provost marshals that they are drafted into the imperial army, and straightway a substitute has to be procured. The next week they receive a similar notice from the republican officials. Many of the wealthy men of that country have a representative in each army. The price paid for a substitute is about $400.

—— Among a collection of autograph letters by Lord Byron, lately sold by auction in London, was one, unpublished, in which he says: "I hope you will find me an altered personage. I do not mean in body, but in manner, for I begin to find out that nothing but virtue will do in this damned world."

—— One Dr. Davis, of London, has devoted his industry to a singular collection of skulls, of which he has nearly 1,500. He is going to issue a catalogue of them, illustrated with wood-cuts. That document will have more heads than a Calvanistic sermon of the last century.

—— It is said that at Santiago, the other day, the authorities, who had long been asking the patron saint for rain, to no purpose, brought him out into the public square, lined with troops, and gave the saint a round dozen, to punish his obstinacy, or quicken his recollection.

—— At the present rate of reduction, says an English paper, the national debt of Great Britain will be extinguished in about 400 years. As the Fenians evidently mean business, it is problematical which will be extinguished first—the British nation or its debt.

—— The London Spectator makes a calculation that there are 4,000,000 of sermons delivered annually in Great Britain, and flippantly adds that altogether they do not have the effect of a song by Tennyson, or a speech by Gladstone.

—— Mr. Henri Martin, the historian, is a candidate for admission to the French Academy. It is urged against him that he wears his beard long, which no academician has ever ventured to do.

—— Some of the London merchants have instituted a custom of charging an admission fee to their stores. The lady sight-seers can enter by paying a small fee, and examine all the latest styles and costumes without making any purchases, unless disposed to do so.

—— A recent letter from Paris says that public opinion in France has received, with great horror, the particulars of the sale, by their fathers and mothers, of the unfortunate young girls of Massachusetts to the semi-barbarous settlers of the Territory of Washington.

—— The French Government has issued a circular to all the maritime powers of Europe, requesting their support of their exhibition of fishing-boats and implements, to be held near Bordeaux, next September.

—— The new Catholic cathedral in Pekin will be 300 feet long, and 150 in breadth. Its spire will be higher than any in the imperial city.

—— A French religious paper, speaking of Gladiator's success on the English turf, says: "We are delighted in our souls to see a Roman Catholic horse beating Protestant horses!"

SCENE AT THE UNITED STATES PENSION OFFICE,

Custom House, New York.

THE press of this city has very justly denounced within the past week the want of accommodation for the disabled soldiers, widows, and relatives of men and officers killed in our late war, who are applying for their pensions. In consequence of short clerical assistance, these people, who have already so suffered for their country, are obliged to submit to every description of petty annoyance. From early morning till late in the day, through cold and rain, they have to stand in line, waiting their turn to receive the pittance doled out by the United States, perhaps sometimes when actually suffering from sickness or hunger. There is the aged woman coming to get the paltry $8 per month which she receives for a son's life, or the widow for that of a husband's, with, perhaps, two or three young children clinging to her skirts, and waiting through the weary hours because the mother could not leave them at home. At another place in the line will be seen a one-legged or one-armed soldier, or one with pale face, denoting his broken health, and hardly able to stand and keep his place in line.

Day after day is this repeated, perhaps bringing the poor women or disabled men back, after waiting all day, to renew the same the next, realizing forcibly the saying that hope deferred maketh the heart sick.

We sincerely hope that before another time for the payment of these pensions comes round, some course will be adopted, by which these poor people will be served as fast as they present themselves. It is a disgrace to our Government that those who have given their blood and affections to uphold that Government, should for one moment be obliged to submit to so much pain in getting the trifle awarded for their service.

SCREW VERSUS PADDLE-SHIPS.

AN eminent engineer officer, of our late army, who went out a passenger in the Britannia, writes home of his experience in ocean steamships:

"We had every opportunity to test the qualities of the propeller, and make comparisons with the paddle-steamers. From personal experience on board of both, and from conversations with men of science, I am satisfied that the stern-wheels are safer and more comfortable, as well as a greater economy of room.

"Side-wheel steamers present a larger surface to the wind when it is ahead; one wheel is always deeper in the water than the other, making one often useless, while the other is with difficulty caused to revolve. When the vessel rolls from one side to the other, there is a strain on the machinery which gives an unpleasant motion to the hull. As it is necessary to keep her on an even keel as far as practicable, only a small spread of canvas is allowed, scarcely enough to navigate with, if the machinery should be stopped.

"These objections do not apply to propellers. The screw being submerged, and in the axis of lateral motion, almost as much canvas can be carried as in a clipper-ship; which steadies the vessel and prevents rolling. Should the machinery break, the screw can be unshipped in a few minutes and the sails relied upon. The weight of works being near the keel, and the motion uniform, the vibration is so slight as to be at times unnoticeable. The model of the vessel has a great deal to do with comfort and safety. In many of the lines the vessels are too narrow for their great length. They are regarded as dangerous, as they are liable to "strain their backs." They also roll more, and the waves break over the bows in rough weather with an unpleasant frequency, keeping the deck wet.

"That the propeller will, in time, entirely supersede the paddle-wheel, for ocean navigation, is certain, and the sooner the change takes place, the better it will be for everybody."

IN France much attention has recently been bestowed upon the production of heat by friction, the experiments being the same as those conducted by our American philosopher, Count Rumford, more than 66 years ago. Rumford constructed a hollow cylinder of iron, into which he fitted a solid plunger, which was caused to press against the bottom of the cylinder. The cylinder was placed in a box containing water at 60 degrees Fahrenheit, and was turned by horse power. Two hours and thirty minutes after the friction had commenced, the water boiled. In the present French experiments, a copper cylinder and plunger are used, and the proposition is made to warm railroad carriages by the hot water produced by attaching the plunger to the wheels, and placing the copper globe under the car. It is claimed that the additional fuel required to get up the extra steam, in order to overcome the friction and produce heat, is not so great as would be necessary if the cars were warmed in the usual way.

A NEGRO SCULPTRESS.

UNDER this heading the London Athenæum publishes a letter from Rome, dated February, and signed "H. W.," of which the following is a copy:

"An interesting novelty has sprung up amongst us, in a city where all our surroundings are of the olden time. Miss Edmonia Lewis, a lady of color, has taken a studio in Rome, and works as a sculptress in one of the rooms formerly occupied by the great master, Canova. She is the only lady of her race in the United States who has thus applied herself to the study and practice of sculptural art, and the fact is so remarkable and unique that a brief sketch of her life, given almost in her own words, will, I am sure, be acceptable to the wide circle of your readers. 'My mother,' she told me only last Monday, 'was a wild Indian, and was born in Albany, of copper color, and with straight, black hair. There she made and sold mocassins. My father, who was a negro, and a gentleman's servant, saw her and married her. I was born at Greenhigh, in Ohio. Mother often left her home, and wandered with her people, whose habits she could not forget, and thus we her children were brought up in the same wild manner. Until I was 12 years old I led this wandering life, fishing and swimming,' she added with great glee, 'and making mocassins. I was then sent to school for three years in M'Graw, but was declared to be wild—they could do nothing with me. Often they said to me: "Here is your book, the book of Nature; come and study it." From this school I was sent to another, at Oberlin, in Ohio, where I remained four years, and then I thought of returning to wild life again; but my love of sculpture forbade it. Some friends recommended me to go to England, but I thought it better first to study in Rome.' And here she is, the descendant and member of a much-injured race, struggling against ignorant prejudice, but with genius enough to prove that she bears the image of Him who made all nations under the sun. Whilst her youth and her color claim our warmest sympathies, Miss Edmonia Lewis has a very engaging appearance and manner. Her eyes and the upper part of her face are fine; the crisp hair and thick lips, on the other hand, bespeak her negro paternity. Naive in manner, happy and cheerful, and all-unconscious of difficulty, because obeying a great impulse, she prattles like a child, and with much simplicity and spirit pours forth all her aspirations. At present, she has little to show; she appeals to the patronage and protection of the civilized and the Christian world. There is the cast of a bust of Col. Shaw, who commanded the first colored regiment that was ever formed, and who died 'a leader for all time in Freedom's Chivalry.' The bust was executed from a photograph, and now, as a commission from the sister of Col. Shaw, is being transferred to marble. Another commission is a bust of Mr. Dio Lewis, I believe of New York. Her first ideal group was to be executed under promise for some gentleman in Boston, and, in the true spirit of a heroine, she has selected for her subject 'The Freedwoman on first hearing of her Liberty.' She has thrown herself on her knees, and, with clasped hands and uplifted eyes, she blesses God for her redemption. Her boy, ignorant of the cause of her agitation, hangs over her knees and clings to her waist. She wears the turban which was used when at work. Around her wrists are the half-broken manacles, and the chain lies on the ground still attached to a large ball. 'Yes,' she observed, 'so was my race treated in the market and elsewhere.' It tells, with much eloquence, a painful story."

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

"OLD FRITZ," who raises pigs and cabbages somewhere in Queens county, appeared before Judge H—— as witness:

Question by the Court: "Your name?"

Answer by Fritz: "Vell, I calls mineself Fritz. But may be so—I don't know—it is Yawcup. You see, Mr. Chudge, mine moder she have two little poys; one of them was me, and one was my proder, and t'oder was me; I ton't know which, and my moder she ton't know, and one of us was named Fritz and t'oder Yawcup—or one Yawcup and t'oder Fritz, I ton't know which; and one of us got died; but mine moder she never could tell which it was, me or mine proder who got died. So, Mr. Chudge, I does not know whether I am Fritz or Yawcup; and mine moder she ton't know."

THE late Dr. Chapman, of Philadelphia, mourned of many, who will laugh at his wit no more, has left behind him a memory that will be transmitted through successive generations. His wit was equal to his skill. It was hard to say which did his patient the most good, and as he gave his patient the best of both, at the same time they probably helped each other. Just as it happened, when one of his patients revolted at a monstrous dose of physic, and said:

"Why, doctor, you don't mean such a dose as this for gentlemen?"

"Oh, no," said the doctor, "it's for working men!"

AT the annual town meeting, held a few weeks since, in a New England village, the subject of a new town house was under discussion. The usual amount of buncombe was present on that occasion, and much of it "blown off" in the shape of "gas." One man advocated the erection of a new town house, in order, as he said, "that the young men of our town might have a suitable place to assemble, and be so imbued with the spirit of liberty and patriotism, that every hair of their head would be a liberty-pole, with the star-spangled banner floating from it!"

THE last bit of Parisian drollery is due to an organ-grinder. He has on his instrument an opera-score, on which he keeps his eyes, turning the page at the proper time, while with the other hand he grinds out music. He has made a good deal of money, for the spectacle is laughable. The organ-grinder has, perhaps, been beaten by a priest, in one of the chapels on the Norman coast. His organ was completely out of repair, nevertheless he could not allow Christmas to pass by unhonored; what should he do but borrow an immense speaking-trumpet from an old captain. He chanted the whole mass through the speaking-trumpet! It need not be said that nobody slept that day in church. His parishioners think seriously of suing him for damages; since Christmas Day all of them have been hard of hearing.

A SINGING-MASTER, while teaching his pupils, was visited by a brother of the tuneful art. The visitor observing that the chorister pitched the tune vocally, said:

"Sir, do you use a pipe?"

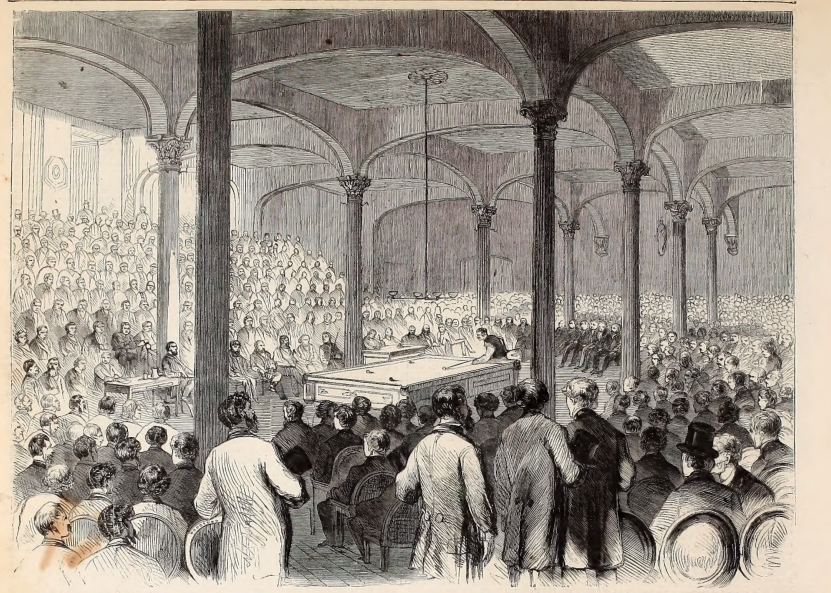
"No, sir," replied Semibreve, with admirable gravity; "I chew!"

THE question, Does getting drunk ever advance one's happiness? would seem to be put to rest by the Irishman who went courting when drunk, and was asked what pleasure he found in whisky:

"Oh, Nelly, it's a trate entirely, to see two of your swate purty faces instead of one!"

MRS. PARTINGTON asks, very indignantly, if the bills before Congress are not counterfeit, why there should be so much difficulty in passing them?

IT is a great comfort to a man, with but a dollar in his pocket, to know that if he cannot invest in 5-20s he can in 25s.



A WORTHY man, when told that he was about to die, said he was "Glad of it; he was tired of putting his shoes and stockings on and off." And this is about what life gets reduced to at about 70.

WHERE is paper-money first mentioned in the Bible? When the dove brought the green-back to Noah."

"Sir, you have broken your promise," said one gentleman to another.

"Oh, never mind, I can make another just as good."

GAIL HAMILTON says one can be daughter, sister, friend, without impeachment of one's sagacity; but it is a dreadful endorsement of a man to marry him.

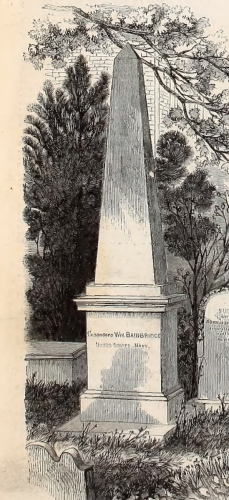
THE GREAT NATIONAL BILLIARD MATCH FOR THE CHAMPIONSHIP, AT THE COOPER INSTITUTE, NEW YORK, ON THE EVENING OF MARCH 13TH, BETWEEN MESSRS. JOHN DEERY AND JOHN MCDEVITT.

THE GREAT NATIONAL MATCH AT BILLIARDS,

On the Evening of Tuesday, the 13th inst.

THE great match for the billiard championship of America and $1,000, between John Deery, the present holder of the "Golden Cue," the sceptre of billiard sovereignty, and John McDevitt, who aspires to its possession, came off at the Cooper Institute. The "Hall of the Union" in that building had been specially fitted up for the occasion, the table (a magnificently ornamented standard American, of Phelan & Collender's manufacture), being placed in the centre of the hall, with the seats ranged amphitheatrically around it.

The large hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, every seat being occupied, and it was estimated that fully 2,500 persons were present, including many prominent municipal and Government officials.



This is the ninth match for the championship which has been played since its institution, by the American Billiard Congress, held in this city in in 1863. Dudley Kavanagh held it successfully against all challengers for two years, when he was compelled by sickness to forfeit it to Louis Fox, of Rochester, who had challenged for its possession. The latter did not long retain the honorary title and position of champion, for in his first essay to maintain it, he was vanquished by John Deery, into whose custodianship the "Golden Cue," its substantial emblem, consequently passed. Three challengers now appeared in the field: John McDevitt, of New York; Joseph Dion, of Montreal; Louis Fox, of Rochester; who, undeterred by his former defeat, again seeks to regain his lost position.

The first named had the prior claim to the champion's notice, and the recent match was the consequence. John McDevitt first came into prominent notice in the billiard world by his defeat of the famous professional, William Goldthwait, in their great match for $2,000, played in Cincinnati last May, when the comparatively unknown expert, who then hailed from Indianapolis, electrified the billiard world by vanquishing the accomplished young Eastern professional by 30 points in the game of 1,500 up. He at once took high rank among his professional confreres, and his Western pretensions were so enthusiastic in their admiration that they offered to match him against Dudley Kavanagh for $10,000 a side, but the challenge was not accepted. Since that time McDevitt has become a resident of New York, and for his present match had no many sanguine friends that the betting before the day of the match was $100 to $50 on him, and one offer of $1,000 to $400 met with no takers. In fact, outside speculation was very quiet on the match, and we did not see or hear of a single bet being made in the ball previous to the commencement of the playing.

The match was the American carom game, 1,500 points up, and commenced about 7½ o'clock. Deery selected Mr. C. O'Connor as his umpire, and McDevitt Mr. G. B. Hubbell. Mr. James Palmer was selected as referee. At one-third the game Deery led 47 points, two hours having expired to that time, and 500 points played. On the ninth hundred he was 163 ahead. Presently McDevitt made a shot which was decided against him as foul, and this seemed to discourage him. From that time Deery crept up, and finally, on the finishing of the game, which run for five hours, Deery was proclaimed victor, having won by 364 points.

We hazard no opinion on the game or the skill of the combatants. It was a peculiar one, and without doubt will be fought again. McDevitt was unfortunate, and according to the opinion of his friends, did not come up to the standard of his playing.

The next match for the championship comes off between Deery and Joseph Dion, of Montreal, within a few weeks.

TOMB OF COMMODORE WILLIAM BAINBRIDGE, CHRIST CHURCHYARD, PHILADELPHIA.

THE TOMB OF BAINBRIDGE.

AMONG the heroes of this day, both dead and living, there is much danger that those of the past may be forgotten. Posterity is always ungrateful, but we cannot realize that Americans will ever forget those who conducted them safely, either by arms or statesmanship, through the perilous days when they first sought to become a nation.

Among those was Mr. Bainbridge, Commodore in the United States Navy. In Christ Churchyard in Philadelphia rises a white marble monument to outwardly perpetuate his memory.

On its north side, reads—Died in Philadelphia, 28th July, A.D., 1833.

On the west—Commodore William Bainbridge, United States Navy.

On the south—Born in Princeton, New Jersey, 7th May, A.D., 1774.

On the east—Patria Victisque Lupasus.

Beneath lie the remains of the gallant sailor and courteous gentleman of the old school, whose name is familiar to every schoolboy in the second struggle with Great Britain, and whose memory must last in the hearts of his countrymen until the crack of doom itself.

GEN. EPITASIO HUERTA.

GEN. EPITASIO HUERTA is one of the most popular of the leaders of the liberal Mexican party, rushing next after Gen. Ortega.

Gen. Huerta was born in the State of Michoacan, of which he was elected Governor. He strongly embraced the "plan of Ayutla," and so distinguished himself under the liberal flag, that he rose with that party to the very highest point of estimation. In one of the numerous battles growing from the struggle, Gen. Huerta lost his left arm, but gained a character for indomitable courage. He defended his own State against the usurping Government; and offered his sword for the defense of Puebla, without asking authority or power. On the surrender of that place he was captured, and sent to France as a prisoner of war, from which place he was finally released by the French Government, and is now once more among his countrymen.

GENERAL EPITASIO HUERTA, OF MEXICO.

SURF SWIMMING AT HAWAII, SANDWICH ISLANDS.

FARRER, or surf-swimming, is a favorite pastime with the natives of the Sandwich Islands. According to Ellis, a recent writer, "individuals of all ranks and ages, and both sexes, follow this sport with great avidity. They usually selected the openings in the reefs or entrances of some of the bays, where the long, heavy billows rolled in unbroken majesty upon the reef or the shore. They used a small board, which they called papa farhee—swam from the beach to a considerable distance, sometimes nearly a mile—watched the swell of the wave, and when it reached them, turning their bosoms on the short, flat-pointed board, they mounted on its summit, and, amid the foam and spray, rode on the crest of the wave to the shore; sometimes they halted among the coral rocks, over which the waves broke in splendid confusion. When they approached the shore, they slid off the board, which they grasped with the hand, and either left behind the wave or plunged toward the deep and allowed it to pass over their heads.

"Sometimes they were thrown with violence upon the beach, or among the rocks on the edges of the reef. So much at home, however, do they feel in the water, that it is seldom any accident occurs.

SURF SWIMMING AT HAWAII, SANDWICH ISLANDS.

"I have often seen along the border of the reef, forming the boundary line to the harbor of Fare in Huahine, from 50 to 100 persons, of all ages, sporting like so many porpoises in the surf that has been rolling with foam and violence toward the land; sometimes mounted on the top of the wave, and almost enveloped in spray; at other times plunging beneath the mass of water that has swept like mountains over them, cheering and animating each other; and by the noise and shouting they made, rendering the roar of the sea and the dashing of the surf comparatively imperceptible."

THE OLD NORTH DUTCH CHURCH, CORNER OF FULTON AND WILLIAM STREETS, ABOUT TO BE DEMOLISHED.

THE NORTH DUTCH CHURCH, NEW YORK.

THIS building, situated on the corner of Fulton and William streets, is, with the exception of St. Paul's Chapel, the only church edifice now used for religious purposes in New York which dates back to a period prior to the Revolutionary war.

From the Rev. Dr. Dewitt's historical discourse, pronounced in this building on the last Lord's Day of August, 1856, we learn that measures were taken by the Consistory for the building of this house of worship early in 1767. In June of that year it was resolved, "That the church should be erected on the grounds of Mr. Harpending, that it should be 100 feet in length and 70 in breadth, that it should front on Horse and Cart Lane, and be placed in the middle of the lot." The grounds here referred to included not only the site of the church, but a number of lots in the vicinity, given to the Consistory by Mr. John Harpending.

In the summer of 1844, a portion of the vacant space, at the rear of the church, between Fulton and Ann streets, was filled by the erection of a plain brick building, fronting on Fulton street, three stories in height, for the accommodation of the Sabbath Schools, and for lectures and other services during the week.

This building, although a mere appendage to the North Church, yet as been the means of giving to t e main edifice its chief notoriety in later days.

This notoriety comes simply from the fact that the North Dutch Church attracted the attention of the public from the great success of the prayer meetings held there for the last several years. These meetings brought together the passers-by, the careless loungers, and the busy men of business. Within its walls conversions have been made that have snatched men from the very jaws of death and shame and restored them to society and to themselves.

After the demolition of the buildings on the same spot, a chapel is to be built, to commemorate the great successes that have been achieved in the cause of religion, and perpetuate, if perpetuation is necessary beyond the good done, the Fulton street Noon-Day Prayer Meeting.

MAGNESIUM.

THE metal magnesium is now extensively manufactured in this country and Europe. As we have large quantities of the native carbonate in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, we ought to be able to compete with England in this article. Various methods are used in its production: 600 parts chlorid of magnesium, 100 parts fused chlorid of sodium (or better, a mixture of 7 parts chlorid of sodium and 6 parts chlorid of potassium), 100 parts pure pulverized fluorspar are to be intimately mixed, and to the mass 100 parts sodium in fragments added, and the mixture projected into a hot crucible and covered. After the first energetic decomposition has passed, the fused mass must be stirred. The magnesium will be gathered in globules, and can easily be separated from the slag. It is afterward purified by downward distillation. The metal can be drawn into fine wire, and is now extensively used as a source of light in photography. Two ounces of magnesium will produce a light during 10 hours equal to that afforded by 74 stearine candles, or 3 to the pound, consuming 20 pounds of stearine.

The Boston Magnesium Company produce the metal in quantities, and some enterprising photographer ought to take pictures cheaply at night. By means of the magnesium light, the drawing-rooms of private houses, with the family sitting around the table reading or with their work, a family group can readily be taken. For microscopic photographs the magnesium wire is more available than the sun, inasmuch as it is always ready.

REMOVAL OF BODIES FROM THE VAULTS OF THE OLD DUTCH CHURCH, CORNER OF FULTON AND WILLIAM STREETS, NEW YORK.

THE GHOST ON THE RIVER.

I have just risen from a bed of sickness, and I take up my pen, as soon as I am able to hold it, to commit to writing the events of one afternoon, while they are still vividly impressed on my mind. Not that I think they will ever fade from my memory; but it is a relief to me to tell my story. I will tell it simply as it occurred to me, without comment; that I leave to those who may chance to read what I have written. And even if I tried, what comment could I make? What occurred is still to my mind unexplained—incapable of explanation. I have thought over it, I have caught eagerly at what I fondly hoped was a clue, but before I could follow it, it has broken and left me as lost as ever. I have tried to doubt the reality of my impressions, to persuade myself that I was the victim of some delusion. But as far as I can trust to my senses, what I saw, felt, and heard, was real—real to me, though concealed by a mysterious influence from some of those around me, and to others only partially revealed.

"Chelsea, and all the piers up," bawled the old man at the Temple Pier, as a steamer came up to the landing stage.

"At last!" exclaimed indignantly a voice near me; "I've been waiting for twenty minutes!"

"You can't expect always to be served first," said the old man, sarcastically adding as a vent for his feelings, "Temple Bar, Chelsea, and all the piers. Stand back, ladies, stand back; let the passengers land first, if you please," he went on, as a lady in black passed, and tried to get on board.

I was keeping close to this lady; she had walked down Essex street before me, and had passed the little hut where the man who gives the tickets sits, without stopping.

"Take your ticket here, ma'am. Hi! hi!" called the man, thrusting himself half through the window of his box, and trying to attract the attention of the lady who had passed. But she walked quietly on, and seemed not to hear him.

"Pimlico," I said, putting twopence on the sill.

"Would you tell that lady in black to come back and take her ticket?"

I promised I would do so, and followed the lady to the landing stage. I found her seated on the bench at the foot of the steps, her eyes fixed on the river, and her hands clasped. Her dress, a black merino, fitted her slight and singularly graceful figure to perfection. Her veil was up, and her face, which was rather pale, wore an expression of melancholy, which, in my eyes at least, did not detract from its exquisite beauty. I went up to her.

"I was asked to remind you," I said, "that you have neglected to take a ticket."

"You are mistaken," she said somewhat coldly; "I have one."

"Then I must apologize for troubling you," I replied, bowing; "but it is not my mistake, and you, I hope, will absolve me from all intention of rudeness?"

She bowed stiffly and said:

"Certainly; we will say no more about it."

Her eyes fell again on the river, as it swirled and foamed past the piles of the new embankment. I followed them. They were fixed on a piece of paper, which danced and tumbled on the muddy water. She stared after it till it was whirled out of sight. I remained still standing by her side; there was a strange fascination in her look and manner.

"Do you know what time it is?" she asked, turning to me. I was surprised at her addressing me of her own accord, after the cold manner in which she had repelled my previous attempts at explanation. I told her it was five-and-twenty minutes past three.

"Then I have five minutes to wait. The Chelsea boat will reach this pier at half-past three."

"You seem to be accurately informed," I said.

"Nine years ago," she said, in a weary voice, "the Chelsea boat passed this pier at that time."

"That's a long time to remember," I said, laughing.

She turned and laid her soft white hand upon my arm, as if to impress her words on me. "This very day, nine years ago, I left this pier by the boat, which started at half-past three."

"Nine years ago," I said, "you must have been a child."

She shook her head. "I was a woman, with a woman's thoughts, and more than a woman's troubles." Her cheeks were flushed, and her hands clenched tightly together. There was something very strange about her.

"Yes," she went on, excitedly, "we were together, I and he. He who was more than a husband to me—and less," she added in a low voice, glancing at her ungloved hand. There was no ring. She spoke more wildly now, and her voice was louder. "He had spoken words to me, such as I had never heard before, such as I could not bear. And I stood here under the bright heaven, with the merry earth all about me, and the golden river glistening in the afternoon sun, and one heart beating near me, which loved me more than all the world beside." She caught hold of my arm and clutched it. I had shrunk from her—the woman was mad. "I stood here," she continued, in a calmer tone, "and vowed a wicked vow: that I would shut myself out from the bright heaven and the merry earth, and would break the one heart which loved me more than all the world. I went and leaned on the bulwarks, and looked over into the river; he came and spoke to me, but my heart was hard and I would not hear him. I shuddered as we passed under Westminster Bridge, for it felt cold and dark there like the grave. And, as we shot out again into the bright sunlight, I jumped on to the bulwarks, and plunged into the river. I heard his cry of agony as I fell, and he jumped in after me. I soon felt his strong arms round me, but I clung about his neck and dragged him down. Twice he struggled to escape, but I pressed him close and closer. I could not die alone. We sank the last time. The tide washed us up and down, but my arms were still about his neck, and my face was close to his. They found us days afterward by the Erith marshes, locked in each other's arms."

I shrank from her. Her fingers relaxed their hold, and she released my arm.

"Days!" I murmured; "it could not be—you would have been drowned."

"We were drowned," she said, quietly. The woman was mad or I was dreaming. I looked round at the river, at the boats; I heard the thud of the hammers as they drove in the piles of the embankment; I bit my lips; I touched her dress to assure myself that I was awake. I looked at her—she was still there; she had relapsed into her old position. The color had faded from her cheeks, her eyes were fixed upon the river, and her hands were clasped.

"Chelsea, and all the piers," shouted the old man, and I turned to the boat. The lady in black was before me, and as I reached the deck of the steamer, and the clock on the Westminster tower boomed out the half-hour, she turned and looked at me. The boat was punctual to-day as it had been nine years before.

I followed her closely on board, impelled by a strange fascination I could not explain; which I struggled against, but was unable to overcome. The sun was shining brightly, and the river danced and sparkled in the afternoon light. There was the busy hum of life all around me. The splash of the paddles, the cries of the lightermen, the whistle of the engine as the train crossed over the new bridge at Hungerford—all the varied sights and noises of the river on a summer's day were present, to impress on me the reality of what was going on around me. But as I stood there on the deck of the steamer, I felt as one who has turned back the pages of his life, and sees and hears once more sights and sounds he dimly remembers to have seen and heard long ago. I felt as when, a child, I caught sight suddenly of my own reflection in the glass; and at that sight, the memory of what had been in times long passed seemed just about to return to me, till the very effort of thinking shattered the image which was being formed, and left me grasping the fragments of a memory.

I looked toward the shore. The old man was standing with his eyes fixed on his companion, an expression almost of terror on his face.

"She's on board," he whispered hoarsely to one of the crew, who was standing by the paddle-box, as he stooped and unhitched the rope from a hook on the landing-stage.

The man did not answer, but looked rapidly round the boat. At last his eye fell on my companion, and remained fixed on her with an earnest gaze, which showed she was the object of his search.

Once more I think over what I then saw, to try if a shade of doubt lurks in my mind as to the reality of what took place. No, I heard the words the old man uttered as distinctly as I now hear the scratching of my pen upon the paper. Nor did I merely passively receive their sense, I acted on them. I stepped toward the paddle-box to question him, but before I had time to reach it, the boat forged ahead and we were off. For a few moments, as the fresh breeze first cooled my temples, I seemed to shake off the spell which bound me to her who had confided to me that strange story. I walked forward, I struggled to get as far from her as I could. But then the thought of her delusion, of what she might attempt were there no one there to prevent her, came upon me with redoubled force. It was my duty to protect her, to see that she did not attempt to act in earnest the story she had told me.

I found her seated on one of the centre benches in her old position, looking dreamily at the river, never moving, never speaking. I stood near her. There were few passengers on board, and of them none seemed to notice the beautiful girl who was quietly sitting apart, apparently absorbed in thought. She walked to the side. I followed; I could not, I must not leave her. She leaned on the bulwarks, and watched the water foaming from the paddle-wheel.

She looked up into my face and spoke quickly:

"Would you try to save me if I fell into the river?"

"I cannot swim," I said, evading the question. I felt more convinced than ever that her mind was wandering; I must keep close to her. I could, at all events, prevent her jumping overboard; though if she once succeeded in that, I could be of no use. As I leaned there by her side looking down upon the water, it suddenly occurred to me that some of the crew of the steamer must know her. The words spoken by the old man at the Temple Pier evidently referred to my companion, and the man to whom he had spoken had asked no explanation of them. I had now a chance of leaving her without her incurring much danger—for she was seated again in the old place and the old position, absorbed in thought. I walked to the stern and spoke to the man who was steering.

"Do you know that lady in black?" I asked, pointing to the place where she was sitting. He looked at me rather strangely, I thought, but said nothing. I repeated my question.

"That lady in black with the red shawl?" he said; "no, I don't."

"No, no; the lady in black next to her, all in black."

He looked again, and then answered, sharply, "There ain't no lady in black there at all. Mustn't speak to me, sir—it's against the rules."

I had followed his eyes. He had looked straight to the place where she was sitting, but he had not seen her. Once again the veil seemed lifted from the past, and I saw what had happened long ago. The vision flashed across my brain and was gone; but so quickly that I could not retain it, and even the memory of what it was perished with it.

I was turning to find another of the crew, when I saw that the lady had left the seat where she had been sitting, and was again leaning over the bulwarks. It would not be safe, I felt, to leave her there alone, so I gave up my project for the present and joined her.

We were steaming close by the scaffolding of the new embankment, a strong tide was running out, and the yellow river foamed and splashed round the piles. My companion smiled as she watched it, a happy childish smile. The boat stopped at Westminster, she never moved, and I dared not leave her; she clung to the bulwarks, and gazed more earnestly than ever at the water. "You had better sit down," I said, wishing to get her away from the side.

"No—the time will soon come now."

"Do you get out at Lambeth?"

"Before."

"There is no pier between this and Lambeth."

She smiled a strange sweet smile. Her mind was running on that delusion of hers, that fantastic story of her suicide nine years ago. We were nearing the place where she said it had taken place; I must watch her closely. When we got to Lambeth I could appeal to the crew, to the passengers—would have her removed from the boat, and restored to the keeping from which she must have escaped.

The boat started; slowly it forged ahead under Westminster Bridge, and as the sunlight was shut out, and the dark cold arch stretched over us, I thought of her simile. It was like the grave, and I shuddered. I saw her shudder, too.

I tried to speak to her, but I could not; I went close to her, I almost held her. The boat shot out again into the sunlight; this was the time she had spoken of. I tried to grasp her dress, but my hand refused to move; I could not speak; I could not stir. With one bound she was on the bulwarks, and had plunged headlong into the river. I did not pause for one moment; without a thought I yielded to the irresistible impulse which seemed to force me to follow her. I dashed into the water after her—I sank—the water hissed and bubbled in my ears. I stretched out my hands vaguely, for I could not swim; they touched something; it was her dress. I drew her toward me. I felt her arms twine round me, and press me tight and tighter as we sank. Then for the first time the thought occurred to me of risk to myself. I should be drowned. I struggled to escape, but she held me firmly; I tried to push her from me, but she pressed me close and closer. I was being suffocated, her arms strangled me, and her weight dragged me down. We were still sinking, my strength was failing me, and I struggled more feebly. A rush of roaring, hissing water, a sense of utter darkness, and I remember no more.

* * * * * *

I was in bed when I woke again to consciousness; I felt weak and faint; I lay still with hardly the power of thought. Gradually the whole of what had taken place on that afternoon came back to me, clearly and distinctly as I remember it now.

"Is she saved?" I murmured, more as an echo to my own thoughts than as a question; for I did not know that there was any one in the room.

"Hush!" said a kind voice by my bedside, and a grave, middle-aged man took my hand. He felt my pulse: "Hush!" he said; "the fever has left you; you must not speak."

"Is she saved?" I asked again; "I must know."

He shook his head, but did not answer; he turned to a woman, who was sitting in the window

"The fever is gone," he whispered; "but he is wandering still. You must take great care of him."

"I am not wandering," I said, impatiently; "I only ask if the woman I jumped in after was saved?"

"She was not," said the doctor. "Now keep quiet; everything depends on that."

But as he looked to the nurse, I saw him shrug his shoulders. I was not satisfied. As I got gradually stronger, I tried to question the nurse as to the fate of the unfortunate woman, but I could get no information from her. She seemed almost frightened when I mentioned the subject; so I gave up asking her any questions, being determined that when I could get about, I would make inquiries for myself.

Many times, while I lay on my sofa, still weak from the effects of my illness, did I recall the incidents of that afternoon. Many times did the face of that poor girl return, haunting me with its exquisite beauty. I have tried to think how it was, that, knowing my own helplessness in the water, without one moment's hesitation I plunged in after her. The impulse on which I acted was sudden and irresistible; an impulse the effect of a cause unknown to me, and which, in all probability, I shall never know.

I was now nearly well, and was sitting up, turning lazily over some old volumes of the Illustrated London News. I was tired of the pictures, and was glancing through some short paragraphs of gossip, when the following lines caught my eye:

"Death on the River.—A few days ago two bodies, one of a lady and the other of a gentleman, were picked up by some lightermen off the Erith marshes. It appears that the deceased got on board a Chelsea steamboat on the 1st of this month. Soon after the boat had passed under Westminster Bridge the lady jumped overboard, and the gentleman immediately followed her. Neither of them ever rose again. Advertisements have been inserted in several papers, as the deceased were evidently in a respectable position in life, but the bodies have not yet been claimed. The lady was dressed altogether in black, and was of singular beauty."

I read it over again. I looked at the date of the paper. It was the very month, nine years ago. It was the very day—the 1st of the month. What strange fate was it that had thus thrown in my way a confirmation of that story which I had persuaded myself originated only in the brain of a mad-woman? Again I questioned the reality of what had happened—again I tried to think I had been the victim of some delusion. No; to me at least the events of the afternoon were real; my memory reproduced them all with minute particularity. How I had been saved, my kind doctor had told me; of the risk I had incurred there could be no doubt.

The first time I was able to leave my room, I hastened to make inquiries. I may say at once I met with no success. I questioned the crew of the steamer, and what passengers I could find, but to no purpose. They shook their heads; no lady had been seen to jump overboard. The old man at the Temple Pier was hardly more communicative; he had observed no lady particularly on that day; he did remember a lady jumping overboard, and a gentleman jumping in after her; he was then one of the crew of the steamer, it was a Chelsea boat. The gentleman and lady were both drowned, and their bodies were washed ashore, he believed, on the Erith marshes; but more than this he could not, or would not say. And with this I am obliged to rest satisfied.

LA SONNAMBULA.

The country between St. Nazaire and Vannes is neither beautiful nor interesting. Sombre forests of fir, stretching over mile after mile of undulating plain, and seldom varied by the appearance of a peasant's cottage or the mansion of a Breton noble, oppress the eye and fatigue the mind to such a degree that the wearied traveler is fain to turn his attention to the inside of the carriage, should he be unlucky enough to journey by the jog-trot railway that runs through this desert. There is not even excitement at the stations—in fact, excitement of any sort is discouraged by the paternal Government of France. It is unhealthy—it disturbs the mental equilibrium of the people; wherefore the utmost regularity of thought and action is produced by a discreet system of national education, which is just as visible at railway stations as elsewhere. You are not allowed, for instance, to walk up and down the platform—the impatience and suspense might produce agitation; you are, therefore, cooped up in an apartment according to the class whereby you travel; the train is placed so that its first-class, second-class, and third-class carriages are directly opposite these respective apartments, and at a given moment the doors are opened, and you are propelled into your proper place in the train, under the superintendence of several sergents-de-ville. So that in traveling through the country there is not even variety met with at these halting-places. You glide into the empty station, suddenly the doors are thrown open, in scramble a few Breton peasants, and away you go again, through the interminable forests of fir.

For fellow-travelers I had a lady and gentleman of uncertain age—the latter might be about 35; the former was good-looking, which ought to obviate all speculations as to years. They were not married, for he seemed particularly courteous and attentive to her; they were not brother and sister, for they were utterly unlike each other. I concluded them to be simply friends, or perhaps prospective husband and wife. The gentleman was somewhat reserved; answered her inquiries kindly but curtly; and seemed more amused than interested by her remarks. But how shall I describe the admirable manner—the ever-varying beauty, the brilliant, witty, bashful and simple conversation of his younger friend? The artless grace of her every movement was pretty and perplexing as the motions of a squirrel; she was constantly changing in her look, in her mood, even in the attitudes she formed; while in her casual observations there were such subtle drolleries, such unconscious shrewdness and humor, that the longer you listened the more you were charmed.

She dropped her glove.

I picked it up; and this little circumstance made us friends.

From a few words of thanks, she proceeded to remark upon the weather, then upon the country, upon the Breton populace, upon the French, upon the English, and their barbarous customs. She was indescribably engaging; she laughed and chatted, grew serious, and abruptly darted again into comedy; teased her companion for his austerity and reticent smiles; and gave herself such pretty airs and graces, that one could have fancied her a child of thirteen. She asked me if I had seen "Le Drac" when in Paris; if I had read the last new novel burlesquing the English; then hummed an air from the last page of the Journal du Dimanche—a very un-Sunday-like magazine which she held in her hand.

"It is a pretty air, is it not, Monsieur? The music is by Mme. Dentu, the words by Emile Cottenet. Listen:

'La coquette Micheline
Doit épouser mon cousin,
Aussi va-t-il ce matin
Jusqu'à la ville voisine
Acheter en magasin
Pour le grand jour, j'imagine
Le voile de mousseline
Avec les bijoux d'or fin.
Oh! oh! Michelette,
Est bien coquette.
Pauvre cousin,
Pauvre cousin,
Que je plains pas ton destin.'

"The poor lover, monsieur, returns with the jewels, and Michelinette runs off to the mirror, without even thanking him. She is so engaged in judging of their effect that she seems to forget even his presence, and in his eye there burns a tear—alas, monsieur, he weeps!—

'Mais elle a vu son chagrin,
Et remettant dans l'écrin
La parure qui la charme:
Ami, reprends ces bijoux,
Dignes, ma foi, d'une reine;
Et, puisque je t'ai fait peine
Le me mets à tes genoux.
Non, non, Michelinette,
N'est pas coquette,
Heureux cousin,
Heureux cousin,
Ne plains pas ton destin.'

So it is all over, and they are happy. You English have no such little quarrels, such pleasant reconciliations; you are always the same—cold, formal, methodical. I think if I married an Englishman I should tease him to death."

"And who would not desire such a fascinating method of quitting life?"

"Ah, monsieur, you flatter me! But what I reverence in these English is their power, their grandeur, their great wealth. They are all rich—all very rich, are they not?"

Despite the charming simplicity with which the question was asked, I was obliged, in reply, to suggest that in England I knew of one or two people who might be richer, with no great detriment to themselves.

"Why, you can carry fortunes on your fingers, in your waistcoat-pockets, in your purses. Will monsieur think me rude if I ask to see his ring?"

At once the diamond was in her possession, and with quite an infantine curiosity did she examine it. She then passed it to her companion, whose attention had already been fixed upon it while it was yet on my finger.

"You will think us monsters of rudeness, monsieur," said he; "but English workmanship is quite a novelty to us. The quaint figuring around the stone, for example, is purely northern. I presume monsieur has also an English watch?"

"Of the eighteenth century," said I, "an heirloom in our family."

"What a treasure!" he replied, with more vivacity than he had hitherto revealed. "Would monsieur have the goodness—?"

They were no less delighted with the watch, and insisted on my opening it to show its internal construction and the jewels which it contained. The back of the watch was also admired, with its quaint carving, and likewise its precious stones, which were more readily visible than those beside. The gentleman leaned back in his seat, as though somewhat ashamed of having exhibited this curiosity, while the young lady remained as lively as ever, and continued her conversation during the rest of the journey.

Toward evening we entered the town of Vannes, the capital of the department of Morbihan. I pitched my traveling-case into the first omnibus that presented itself, which happened to be that belonging to "Hôtel du Dauphin;" and I observed that my lady friend was also about to enter the same vehicle, when her companion made a slight gesture, and continued the conversation.

"Which hotel?" he inquired of the conductor.

"Hôtel du Dauphin, monsieur."

He remained in the omnibus.

"There is the "Hôtel de la Croix Verte," he remarked to his companion, "and the 'Hôtel de France.'"

"Le voiex—par ici, monsieur?" cried another conductor, with an expressive motion of the hand, and courteous inclination of the body.

The lady terminated the little debate by a slight shrug of the shoulders at her companion's hesitation; then, giving the conductor her small quantity of luggage, stepped into the omnibus, and we were all driven off to the Hôtel du Dauphin. Having taken apartments, and ascertained that the table-d'hôte was fixed for half-past five, we took advantage of the intervening hour to ramble through the quaint old streets of the town, and admire its extraordinary domestic architecture.

All this time I had been unable to discover the names of my companions; she only called him Louis; he addressed her sometimes as Denise—oftener as mademoiselle. As our acquaintance had begun without the usual English preliminaries of formal introduction or card-presenting, they were no wiser as regarded myself: nevertheless, we were soon on the most amicable terms, and our walk through the town was rendered doubly agreeable by the casual observations with which we greeted every fresh object of interest.

And of these there were plenty. The uneven, narrow, straggling streets were full of an old-fashioned, picturesque beauty. The projecting second-stories of the houses, adorned with grotesque wooden carving and full-length figures of saints, the open casements of green glass covered into diamond panes, the ancient walls of the town, the grass-covered fosse of the Tour du Connétable, the venerable and stately proportions of the cathedral, altogether presented an admirable picture of a feudal town of the middle ages, and only required the introduction of a few long-haired, hollow-featured, and strangely-dressed peasants, to add to it a thorough Breton character. Mademoiselle Denise was enraptured with these quaint characteristics of a former age. She seemed to have little acquaintance with the manners or appearance of the Bretons; and from object was matter for fresh wonder, and our walk was incidentally delightful.

She was not quite so pleasant when we returned to dine. She was the only lady present at the table-d'hôte; but she conversed freely, even when the subject of conversation became general. In fact, at one point, she led the conversation to that which had begun our acquaintance—the subject of watches, and, in fact laughing way, said if the gentlemen who were present would produce their watches, there would no two of them be found to agree in time.

"And a gentleman always prides himself upon the correctness of his watch," she added, with a playful look.

"Ah, mademoiselle," said one gentleman, "you compel me to contradict you. My friend's watch is perceptibly the same as my own."

Her comparison laughed; but she insisted that she was right, and refused to believe it, until the gentleman politely handed her both watches.

"There is one second in difference, monsieur; I swear it!" she cried, with the greatest glee, "and I am right after all."

"You are rude, Denise," said her friend; "let me return these gentlemen their watches."

"He spoils me, monsieur," she said to me, "and then reproaches me. Is he not cruel, then—a savage? Behold, therefore, how he glares!"

The glaring savage was at that moment engaged in drying his mustache after having taken a draught of vin rouge, and neither in action or in manner did he seem very terrible.

After dinner, having some letters to write to England, I bade my new friends good-night, and left them to converse together. I could see that Mademoiselle Denise had been most particular in arranging, for the following day, an excursion to the Castle of Suscinio and to Sarzeau, the birthplace of the author of "Gil Blas." Considerably before midnight I was fast asleep beneath the soft, thick coverlets and large pillows, which form the upper clothing of a Breton bed.

It could have been but a short time thereafter that I was awakened by a slight noise; so very slight, in fact, that it still remains a mystery to me how I should have heard it. When I opened my eyes I found the room filled with bright moonlight, which was streaming in through the casement, and drawing shadows of the bars on the floor and bed. I was about to close my eyes again, and address myself to sleep, when my attention was arrested by the evident movement of the door, which stood open to the right of the bed. It was certainly no miracle that it should open—for I never built bedroom doors or shutters; but when travelling I like that it should be opened at that time of night was certainly surprising.

Gradually I perceived the distance between the door and the wall become less; and judge of my astonishment when I distinctly observed a white figure appear—the figure of a woman—the whole person, without even the power to look at me. I need not pretend to say I was not frightened; the lonely house, the stillness of the night, the moonlight falling through the window, combined to make this vision a horror which chilled the blood in my veins, and made my heart beat painfully. But how thoroughly wretched by the apparition, I shook aside the vague impressions produced on the mind when in a state of semi-consciousness, and as I sought with a severe scrutiny to fix my eyes upon the face of this woman, I recognized, beyond the shadow of a doubt, the features of Mademoiselle Denise.

Judge of my astonishment when I made the discovery! And there could be no details about it. As she turned her face to the moonlight, the clear definition of her outline was sufficient proof, had proof been required. There were the same well-cut lips, the straight nose, the high but narrow forehead, even the dark gray eyes, which had grown familiar to me during the comparative necessity of the previous dozen hours. She was dressed in white, as I said; but this loose outer garment seemed only to be thrown over a darker garment, and in fact I should have thought her dressed as usual, with the addition of this loose white robe. Her feet, as was afterward observed, were bare, and her long fair hair hung down behind, until it almost reached her waist. Perhaps it was the striking resemblance to the "Ondine" or heroine of "La Somnambule" that first suggested to me a solution of this seemingly inexplicable mystery; and as I drew nearer to the door, certainly, I was convinced of the correctness of my supposition. She was either an habitual somnambulist, or had been attacked by one of the fits of somnambulism. The more I became assured of this fact the greater became my desire to avert the awkwardness and unpleasantness of her being discovered in such a painful situation; but casting over the chances of the matter in my mind, I came to the resolution of allowing her to do as she pleased, thinking that she would in a few minutes return to her own room, and the whole affair remain unknown to every one but myself.

So far as I could observe, her eyes were open; and on her first entrance into the room she had fixed them upon me, with a vacant, glassy stare, utterly devoid of recognition or intelligence. In the pale, dim moonlight, this mechanical return of the eyes was exceedingly unpleasant; but I strove to look upon it simply as the result of a physical ailment. Slowly, noiselessly, she then stepped past the table on which I had approached the small dressing-table which stood at the window. Her back was thus turned toward me; and it was only at intervals that I could observe her motions. She seemed to be examining the various articles which were scattered about the table, or hanging from the sides of the mirror. Presently I heard her repeat, in a low clear voice, these lines from the Prayer-book, which the good landlord had left in the room:

"Qui dit au soleil cesse la terre,
D'éclairer tout homme et tout lieu?
Qui dit aux étoiles, versez votre clarté?
O mes enfants, c'est Dieu!

"Le bleuet et le ciel soupirent,
Pour savoir si la nuit ou bien le jour
Qui verdit l'émeraude et l'herbe?
O mes enfants, c'est Dieu!

"Qui donne au bosquet son embrage?
Et quand l'oiseau chantera matin,
Qui dit à l'aube, ouvre ton voile?
O mes enfants, c'est Dieu!"

She replaced the book on the table, and continued her investigations among the other articles lying about. She took a long blue scarf, which I had hung over the mirror, and, throwing it over her head in the form of a turban, stood to contemplate in the glass the picture she represented. A slight gesture was sufficient to show how easily it could be conceived. The moonlight lent a pallor to her face, which otherwise her healthy complexion would certainly have prevented; and the ghastly whiteness, coupled with the long white garment she wore, looked almost hideous as contrasted with the bold blue covering which she had assumed, and, as I supposed, placed it on the table.

Still retaining the novel head-dress she had so ingeniously constructed, she seemed to take an inventory of my jewelry, which was likewise placed in front of the mirror. My watch, which hung from one of the dangling knobs at the side of the glass, she detached, and held to her ear, with the manner of a child.

"Chick! chick!" I heard her murmur; "mon Dieu, quelle vitesse!"

I recognized in this exclamation the same artlessness which had characterized her conversation during the day, and it forcibly reminded of the schoolboy who boasted to his playmate that "he had got such a splendid watch;—such a magnificent watch! he would wager it would go faster than any watch, clock, or time-piece in the town!"

Mademoiselle Denise seemed to be in no hurry to depart, and my suspense was momentarily becoming greater. What the consequences might be of her suddenly awaking from this physical stupor I dared not imagine.

I had heard of cases in which the somnambulist had been wounded to consciousness only to fall dead on the spot.

And there were many reasons why this strange affair should be known; to the lady herself the mortification consequent upon her being told of it, would, I knew, be inexpressible.

In a few minutes, however, I was greatly relieved by observing her unwind from her head my scarf, which she hung over the mirror in the same way which she hung over the mirror in the same way. Then she looked once or twice at her watch, and laid it down with a slight shrug, as though the watch she demanded to see last night at table. He observes not this—he fails asleep—but, presuming he has examined my watch, but speaks not. Ah, well, monsieur, he expects to meet her, but she comes not; we go to awake them; they are gone, their apartments are empty; they have fled, monsieur!"

"Who is the gentleman who has thus been robbed?"

"I, monsieur," replied one of their number, stepping forward with a slight smile which was very appreciative.

"And I also," I said, endeavoring to look quite as unconcerned, "have the honor to be your fellow-sufferer."

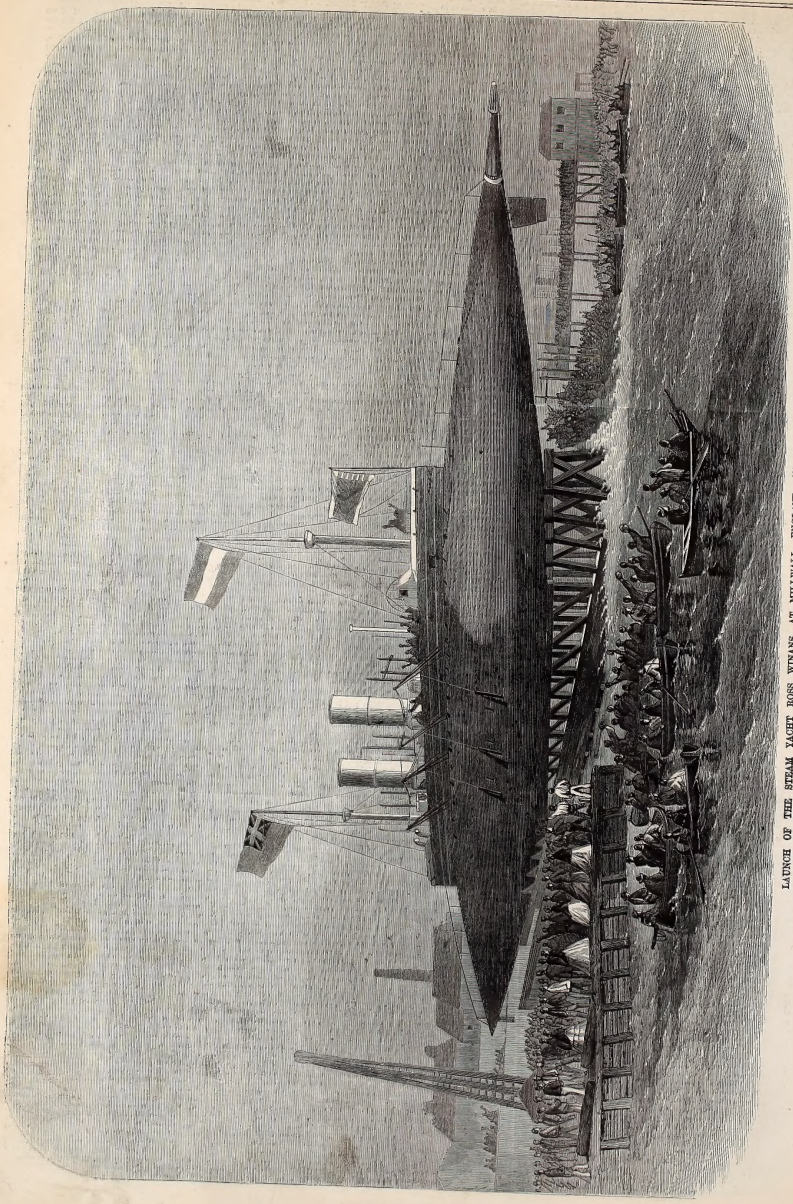
"You, monsieur!" cried they all, having never imagined that besides the unlucky traveler and the landlord there was still another victim.

"Mademoiselle also carries off my watch, chain, ring, and some other little trifles. But what then? If myself, as lover? mademoiselle is pleased, and we are too gallant to refuse her any enjoyment."

"Mon Dieu, what strange!" exclaimed the gentleman, with much doubt, French, thus to smile in misfortune."

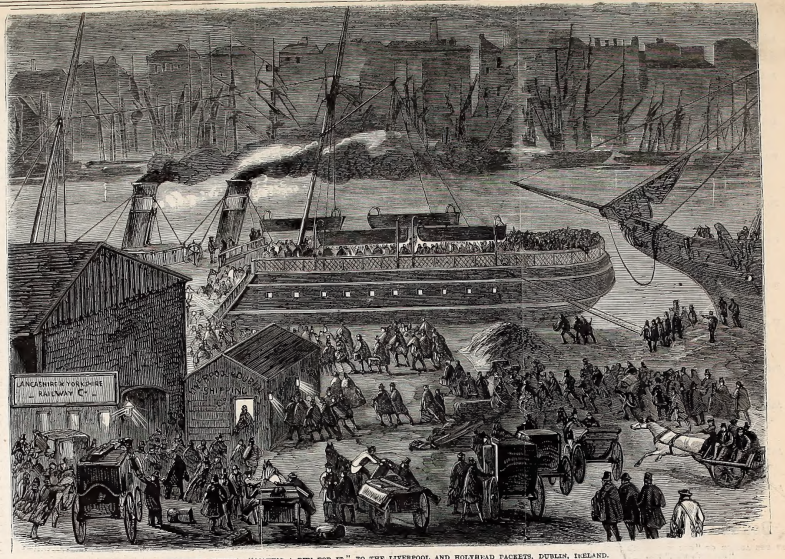
"I can assert thing possible," said another, with a shrug, "for mademoiselle and her friend seem to have had excellent plans, and by this time will be beyond all pursuit."

"With my plate," groaned the landlord, "and with the honor of my hotel. Monsieur, am I not a poor unfortunate?"



Certainly M. Dutoit looked sufficiently unhappy; nevertheless he at once prepared to rush off to the Prefet, and this commenced the search. For myself, I resigned myself to fate and a French breakfast; judging that I should hear but little further of Mademoiselle Denise or her friend Louis. My judgment was correct; in spite of the utmost official vigilance, nothing more was heard of the mysterious couple who thus suddenly from a painful habit which was even more awkward to others than to herself.

HIPPOPOTAMUS



Washing Clothes on the Nile.

The Ethiopian Nile is very beautiful—its broad, clear current flowing between banks of the most brilliant green vegetation, backed by palm groves and fields of sugar-canes. These soon give way to graceful mountain ranges. Here, when the sun had gone down, and the wind fallen, leaving the glassy river to glisten with the perfume of the bean-blossom, the traveler would moor his boat to the luxuriant western shore, and choosing a sandy nook, would beach a kelp pot on the plains, spread his carpet and cushions on the fine soft warm sand of the shelving river bank. Here the evening would quietly wane away, the sun casting round a fire of withered palm-leaves and branches of mimoses, their white turbans and slender dark figures, and the sweet gossip of the boatmen, while into the willing ear of the traveler, his servant would, might utter night, pour long strings of Arabian Nights' and Arabian Nights' amusement stories; varying them by more solemn converse on religion, in which both Christian and Mohammedan would agree that there was but one God, and that He was a merciful Father to all His children.

On this part of the river the hippopotamus was seen for the first time, or rather the head of one, which was quite enough, seeing it was a frightful brute: the head some three feet long, huge ear holes, hallowing to it: "How's your wife, old boy?" "Is your son married yet?" and other inquiries of a similar nature. This shapeless monster of a beast has a great reputation among the Arabs for sagacity. In illustration of this, they told the traveler that a woman being engaged one day in washing clothes in the fashion of the country, that is, laying them on smooth stones and then beating them with her feet, saw a huge hippopotamus watching her from the river. Presently he made for the shore; upon which she fled in a fright, leaving the clothes behind her. The brute quietly walked up to them, and imitating what he had seen her doing, "pounded" them so heavily with his own ponderous feet, that in a very short time they were all stamped to bits.

LAUNCH OF THE STEAM YACHT ROSS WINANS, AT MILLWALL, ENGLAND, ON 31st OF FEBRUARY.

SUSPECTED FENIANS "MAKING A RUN FOR IT" TO THE LIVERPOOL AND HOLYHEAD PACKETS, DUBLIN, IRELAND.

THE FENIAN MOVEMENT IN IRELAND.

From the relations of the Irish and English press, and from the letters of correspondents, we give a condensed account of all the Fenian movements in Ireland, and the means taken for their suppression up to the date of the sailing of the last steamer.

The Dublin police, under the authority of a general warrant from the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, began the arrest of persons suspected of taking part in the Fenian conspiracy, the day on which the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act was passed by the Imperial Parliament at Westminster, the law being so far anticipated by the Irish Administration. The first taken into custody were mostly strangers to Dublin, who had been there for some time passed without any apparent employment, but were never in want of money, and lived at respectable hotels and lodging-houses in excellent style. These persons had been kept since their arrival under the close observation of the police, as it was suspected that they had come from America for no good purpose, their dress and general appearance showing that they had been residents at the other side of the Atlantic. Although it was expected in Dublin that the Habeas Corpus Act would be suspended, these men evidently did not think that they would be interfered with for at least a week, which would give them sufficient time to make their arrangements for departure. Some of them were in bed, others were dressing, and some were at breakfast when the police came on them by surprise; and when they asked what charge was against them, in no instance did they receive any reply. No time was given for communication with friends or associates, and as fast as the arrests were made the prisoners were hurried off to the nearest station-houses, where they were locked up without being even told why they were taken into custody. The second class of prisoners taken up on Saturday week were principally those who had been residing in the streets adjoining the South Liberties and who, like their friends dwelling in various hotels and lodging-houses elsewhere in the city, had no occupation but walking about, and seemed to be waiting for some event, whilst they had money enough for their livelihood and did not inquire for work. As the day advanced the arrests became more frequent and general, and from every direction prisoners, most of them well-dressed and respectable-looking men, were to be seen going to the various station-houses, where large numbers of the police were kept on reserve duty in case their services should be required. Thirty-seven of the number arrested in the city on Saturday week acknowledged that they were American subjects of Irish descent, and that they had served in the American army during the late war. Eight men of

(Continued on page 43.)

THE POLICE ARRESTING THE FENIAN COUNCIL IN PILSWORTH'S TAVERN, JAMES STREET, DUBLIN, IRELAND.

BEREFT.

BY J. B. SWETT

BOUNDING Ocean, stretched before me,
Night has thrown her mantle o'er thee,
And I ponder as I wander on thy pebbly shore to-night:

For remembrance haunts me ever,
With the form now gone forever,
And they float in shadowy semblance o'er my spell-bound spirit-sight.

To thy billows, as they glisten
In the moonlight, do I listen,
And I fancy, in their plashing, as they dash against the shore,
That I hear the tones of voices,
Mingled with their varied noises—
Voices sounding like the ones I loved to hear in days of yore.

Is it real, or is it seeming?
Do I hear, and am I dreaming?
Do I hear the songs of loved ones floating o'er the moonlit sea?
Are they spirits of the cherished
Ones, who long ago have perished,
Coming to commune with my sad heart, and be again with me?

It is but the ceaseless plashing
Of the waters, shoreward dashing,
But my fancy tunes the ocean to a deeper, sadder measure;
My breast
And as thus I seem to hear it,
From the depth of my tried spirit
Flows a tide of wild emotion that will not allow me rest.

Once I wandered by thee, Ocean,
With a joyous heart emotion—
For a trusting heart was mine to love—a voice was mine to cheer;
But beneath thy stormy billow,
Has he found a coral pillow,
And, by fancy only, in thy voice his whispered voice I hear.

Roll ye on, O waters, ever!
This, my heart, is crushed for ever!
And as temperate o'er thy roamy face, in night's calm and peace,
Sing the requiem of my spirit,
That my loved and lost may hear it,
As he lies in death, low down within thy great, mysterious deep.

Bound to the Wheel.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUR WATERMAN'S WARD," "REUBEN'S WAR," ETC.

CHAPTER LXVIII.—THE REWARD.

WHILE the newspapers are thousands of breakfast-tables are filled with the particulars of the great trial just ended, and while a certain vague sense of dissatisfaction with the issue spreads through the minds of readers, in spite of the soporific doses administered as usual in leaders in support of the verdict, by writers who recognize as their supreme political and social law "whatever is, is right," and who therefore do their best to allay all manifestations of independent judgment, or a desire to measure things by "abstract" moral law, or natural and instinctive standards of right—while this transpiring on the surface of society through the length and breadth of the land, as the news of the verdict and of the details spread, there is a man whom the proceedings have made famous or infamous—it's all the same to him—who is stoutly trudging away from the alehouse where he has lived in a kind of half-secrecy during the trial.

He goes toward Dr. Pompess's house at Petersham, on business that makes him, wherever he thinks of it at all excitedly, which is not unseldom—take a little run, and enjoy himself over a sly laugh. He remembers that he has an attitude to preserve, as the "halderman's son-in-law" and avenger, that does not at all comport with such behavior. Bob accordingly when he comes lugubrious as an undertaker who expects every instant to meet a mlember of the "bereaved family" on whom he depends for his remuneration.

But he dimly and slowly becomes conscious of something unexplained going on in the public mind. Even in the alehouse over-night he might easily have found insult below the banter or chaff that was so plentiful, had he cared to do so. But he didn't: he only cared to keep the people about him all in a good humor as he could by making them eat and drink freely at his expense.

But now, as he is leaving the town, people stare at him with no friendly looks, from the door-steps or windows; and if he comes upon any little knot of men, they seem to take an odd pleasure in standing just where they are, in the very centre of the path, and compelling him to go outside, even though they open spontaneously to let anybody else past.

Sneers, jests, and irritating questions, put in a loud voice, for the whole neighborhood to hear, presently merge into more practical hostilities. Boys begin to throw mud, and even stones, without rebuke, except when the stones happen to hit, not Bob, but one of his companions. "Informer —informer!" is a wordsoften shouted after him. But, on the whole, Bob thinks if any of the "blackguards" had to get a thousand pounds, as he has, they wouldn't mind this; and so he won't.

Once fairly out of Hengston, he is left to himself, and he begins to speculate on how he had best spend the thousand pounds. Bob feels he is very much wiser, whatever other folks may say, than when he threw all his former fortune to the dogs. No more of that game! Catch him, No. This thousand pounds he'll invest, and he'll take good advice. Perhaps even that 'cute gent, Mr. Stamp, might'n't mind looking to it for him, if he paid him his commission.

So thinking, he got to Petersham, where he was very much annoyed, and a little alarmed, to discover that the doctor declined to see him, but sent out a message—he could go to Mr. Stamp if he liked, to whom the money had been transferred all funds remaining out of the money received from Mr. Sleuth.

Bob didn't like that. He vehemently suspected the doctor was trying to shirk payment. A pretty game for a gentleman, if that one his game! Bob felt the perspiration coming out on his face, at the mere thought that any one could be mean enough—a gentleman and a J. P., too—to rob a poor man of the natural reward of his industry.

While he stood outside the doctor's porch, wondering whether anybody would, at all events, remember how many miles he had come, and whether, after a walk of so many miles, they'd offer him a glass of ale and something to eat—while he was speculating, and feeling very hungry, he saw the servants collecting about him—the butler in his plain livery, and the surgeon footman, the groom, the lad's helper or two from the stables—and they seemed to be forcing back the maid-servants out of the way. Somehow, he didn't like their looks at all. So he suddenly took himself off, and heard a general roar of derision sent after him, as part of the reward.

"Oh, he knows well enough what we were getting ready for him!"

Bob didn't know anything of the kind, and was much too angry, and faint, and depressed, not to say terrified, to inquire. There was nothing for it now, but to trudge back the seven miles to Hut, but not bright sun, and the dry, stifling roads, which were detestable with clouds of dust, raised very quite and then in a moment by a wind, as if on purpose to make him (Bob) more miserable.

However, he got back to Hengston, worn out and foot-sore; and, as he saw he was becoming more than ever an object of attention, he hurried along, thoroughly ashamed and cowed, but at every increasing tail, and a very noisy tail, behind him, till he got to the lawyer's, and there he had to make a kind of fight, in which another or three mischievous-looking porcos stopping him, and turning him back upon the mob.

He got inside the lawyer's hospitable-looking, wide-open doors, and he clammed them to after him, before he remembered he must not take liberties with Mr. Stamp's place of business, and then after a brief delay, and he saw thankfully the tail was dispersing.

A clerk came to him, and asked his business.

"Dr. Pompess sent me," Bob said, confidentially, in answer—"Dr. Pompess, of Petersham, Justice of the Peace—and I've come to—to—receive the reward. I think that's the word."

"I will tell Mr. Stamp what you say," observed the clerk; and Bob thought the expression of his face was like a cat's, and very clear—a something between a sneer and a threat.

Bob wiped his brow, and reminded himself how he had stuck to the burglars, and how that had ended—in his getting a thousand pounds! Wouldn't he stick, then, to Mr. Stamp? Just wouldn't he stick to him, and do as he said and as he liked, he (Bob) would stick! That was the game. Never mind words—never mind bits of unpleasantness and rudeness! Stick to Stamp!

"Mr. Stamp is quite ready to see you, but he wishes me to give you fair warning that he is very much surprised that you should want to see him."

The clerk gave Bob the full benefit of this mysterious warning, and saw Bob turning a little. No matter. He responds gallantly to the assault.

"O' course I shall see him. I've come to see him—ain't I? Why shouldn't I see him—eh?"

"As you like," said the clerk. "This way."

Bob followed the clerk along a narrow dark passage, at the end of which his conductor opened a door, and revealed a light, large, and cheerful room, and Mr. Stamp sitting writing with his back to the fire, while Mr. Goaden was at a table busily writing to his employer's dictation.

Eh, Bob? that you? Sit down."

Such was Mr. Stamp's salutation, and Bob obeyed, thinking how much wiser it always was for a man of business to be civil to himself to bring his business to a prompt conclusion.

"I'm busy just now, Bob; but if you won't mind Mr. Goaden and me going on with our business I have in hand, I can listen to you at the same time."

This was charming, Bob thought. Of course, law was law; and a lawyer like Mr. Stamp knew that when a reward was offered and earned, it must be paid.

Again Bob's thoughts reverted to the ideal public-house and pretty bar-maid that was growing up in his mind, and he addressed himself to bring his business to a prompt conclusion.

To make clear the two currents in Mr. Stamp's speech, one addressed to Mr. Goaden, the other to Bob, we shall mark the former in italics.

"Now then, Bob, what is it?"

"Only the reward, Mr. Stamp," said Bob.

"Only the reward? Ha! true. *You finished aboutthe costs in Jarvis's case? Yes? Very well. Next, a warrant to be prepared instanter—any magistrate must convenient will do—*for the apprehension of Leave Monk for the name. The reward, Bob?—let me see. What was the amount?"

"A thousand pounds, Mr. Stamp."

"Large sum! For the apprehension of (leave o blank), as an accessory before the fact, in the robbery of (blank). Do you, Bob, consider yourself, now, entitled to this reward?"

"Of course I do, Mr. Stamp. Who else?"

"Who else? Very true. Let it be an instruction to take advice from counsel as to whether even a charge for murder might not be substituted for the lesser charge, or the lesser introduced in a separate count, supposing a failure of the principal. You have then, Bob, no sort of doubt as to the propriety and justice of this verdict?"

"Not a bit on it, Mr. Stamp."

"Well, I have myself doubt myself. Go on, Goaden. An additional count must be prepared for the charge of perjury; for if Mr. Monks should, after all, prove to be innocent—Don't mind our business, Bob. Go on with your own."

Bob, however, is staring at Goaden, and his pen, and his ink, and the sudden access of enlightenment truly terrible; and he tries to fancy he hasn't rightly heard; or has in some way misconceived; or, lastly, they are amusing themselves at his expense.

Pooh! what an idiot he is. It must be Dry and his pal they are going to try again, in order to get fresh facts. Of course, of course! What a confounded ass he's made a fool of himself by showing his fright.

"Have you done so far, Goaden? Go on, then, to the next. Your evidence will be required to prove the share in the robbery. The open confession in court of having instigated the whole business, and the recommendations of the convicts, will be nearly all that is required."

"Hem! As—as you seem worry busy to-day, Mr. Stamp, perhaps I had better come to-morrow, or the day after that," observed Bob, in a strangely altered tone.

"Well, I don't mind deal candidly with you. By-the-by, Goaden, I think you had better run over to the 'Fox and Grapes,' and ask if they know anything of the two gentlemen. I rather think he was to be there this morning. If you catch him, don't let him go till all is arranged, and he has signed a receipt in full. Good-day, quick back."

Goaden hurriedly took up his papers, and went out, leaving Bob in no enviable frame of mind, to finish the business as he could.

"As I was saying, Bob, I must deal candidly with you, and, therefore, I decline positively to pay him a penny, or to advance you a single half-penny on any plea whatever, until the next few days have passed; and in that time, if—hem!—he is not convenient to see me again, you are quite at liberty, so far as I am concerned—hem! I mean so far as my individual wishes are concerned—to come and claim the reward. I think you will got a reward—indeed, Goaden and I are moving zealously in what we think your true interests—"

Mr. Stamp stopped, turned to poke the fire, again turned to finish his sentence, when lo! the place was empty, and Bob, down, declining to wait the return of Mr. Goaden.

With a dry cough, followed by something that was almost a sob, Bob left the poor Alchemy's fate had not just then suggested a sigh instead, Mr. Stamp went out into the passage, and there saw, in the open space in front of his house, Bob completely surrounded by a mob of yelling men, women, and children—mostly, however, women, and all of them shaking their fists and showing the face with fingers and nails as venomous as the claws of a wild beast, or tearing great handfuls of hair out of their heads. And when began to haul him along—a fighting, cursing, screaming, heaving mass of fingers—toward a pump.

Seeing at a glance that the lawyer thought he would walk slowly toward them, and thus he became witness to a remarkable incident.

The fury of the mob, as the mob growing with its own excesses, they became quite ungovernable when they saw Bob bleeding from his head, having used his fists freely at first, and his clothes dripping all over like a drowned rat; and Mr. Stamp then shouted in real indignant earnest to them to stop.

They heeded him no more than a whirlwind would have heeded him. Bob was panting—now on the ground, now on his feet—now yelling with anguish—now emitting feeble and inarticulate cries for mercy, for they threw mud into his mouth every time he tried to use him open it; when suddenly a youth appeared among them, who called out:

"Father! father! defend yourself!"

The word "father" made every one turn; and the mob stood awed in an instant by the startling apparition of a young man's face and face gleaming with passion, and his arms wielding a most tremendous thing—a scythe, namely. The youth stood Esau, flourishing a scythe, which he had caught up from the door of an ironmonger's close by, and which he was using in his age-strength by decreasing the general sense of his emotion and fury. The apparition was so formidable that they fell back, and left a wide-open passage by where Esau and his father presently stood face to face.

"There! take that thing back," cried Esau, as he threw down the ugly weapon in a manner to make the mob again retreat. "I only wanted you to know who it was that stopped you at this pretty work. Fifty against one—a noble fight, isn't it!"

The people did not reply, except by indirect murmurs and hums. They were aware of the relationship and antagonism of the pair, and seemed to feel not only that Esau was doing a natural and right thing, but that the sooner now they got out of this unpleasant business the better.

And so presently Mr. Stamp saw Esau and Bob go down a quiet lane, where there were no houses. And then the very sight of Esau, so engaged, seemed to quicken the steps and the purposes of the lawyer, for he hurried back to his office.

* * * * * * *

"Pretty treatment, ain't it, boy! I'll serve 'em out; and that lawyer, too, a lookin' on. I need him—a varmint! Don't say I ain't revenged for you, Esau. I'm going to get a thousand pounds soon, and then——"

"You mean is the price of his blood!?" demanded Esau.

With a mocking oath Bob expressed his notion that this was a contemptible view of the case, but Esau gave him little time to talk.

"Father, to save your life I have given you a home to-day that is to me so truly horrible to repeat—"

"Oh, there ain't much love lost, if it comes to that," retorted Bob.

"Will you listen, when you know it is for the last time? I have but now again given you that name, in the hope to say that it may serve you. From standing-where you put him. Go away! I cannot bear to do while you can—for your hours are numbered."

"Will you make 'em pay me the money? and then I'll show you what wings is. Will you insinivate to 'em as I must have the blunt?"

"No."

"Then I stick like a leech to the last."

"Yes. This is but what I expected—was prepared for. I, too, have no time for talk. Help-less as I am, I must go on to watch, hour by hour, the progress of your villainous handiwork. Well, perhaps it is best. I used to find it hard to forget, at some chance times, who and what you were, and how different our relations might have been. I used to feel a coward in your presence, because I could not help thinking of such things. But all that is over now. Not because you are poor. I could kneel to you this moment and worship you, if you were my true father—I, however, know it were possible for me to either love you or respect you. Nay, I could almost feel myself one of the most fortunate of men if you were anything but what you are—one of the very basest creatures that ever walked this earth; so wicked, that I, too, grow wicked in my own thinking of you, and of our common blood. Oh, merciful Heaven! how am I to be forgiven while I know that I abhor you? I did not mean to say this. You make me. All your brutal treatment of me in my childhood—all the cruelty you showed to my mother, after running her—these things were so notorious. But now you finish well: you have driven my only friend, Simmons the headsman to the felon's dock, and you will drive him, if you can, to the gallows, and drink his very blood in the gold wrung from his own and other victims of your unparalleled infamy! I have no more words for you than to say—Beware! If I should live to see Anthony Sur— Surrey hang, you leave me! Will you go, before the temptation that I now feel coming strong upon me shall impel me to give you back the life that you got from you before the recollection of these things overpowers all my reason, all my sense, and makes me do things I shall never forgive myself for? Father, there was a time, for reasons you will never understand, have given their children to death by their own hands, and have called the world's sympathy for ever; is it quite impossible that there are children desperate enough, and fathers wicked enough to make a like unnatural crime?"

"That's your state of mind and 'art, is it? I said you were a jewel of a son, and so you are. Go a sovereign with a mad all ye sween ye!"

Esau threw the sovereign at him, and, turning, flew down the lane, unable to trust himself for another instant.

THE MAN-EATER OF CHUNDA.

THIS is the story told by an English officer in India of a tiger expedition:

One very sultry day in the month of May, 1850, I was encamped near the town of Chunda, on the banks of a tributary of the Nerbudda. Near by was a small village of huts called Chunda by the natives, and this which I can find no trace of in any map I have seen; it consisted of a few bouts only, and has probably ceased to exist. My duties as an officer in the revenue service carried me frequently to alternate work with pleasure; and the mornings being spent at one's office (N. B. A Punkah), the afternoons were generally passed in shooting large or small game, according to the opportunities of the locality and season. At the time referred to there was a fine fishing country, and it was the hot season, and thus I had every chance of indulging in the favorite recreation of Indian sportsmen.

The river on the banks of which occurred the events I wish to describe, was very narrow, its waters being but few distant, and in many places with its bed dry enough to allow a person to cross over from stone to stone. The banks were sandy and barren, with here and there a few large rocks and a green plant called "jon," with small sandy islands, round which flowed what water there was, covered with vegetation. In many places were deep pools teamed by alligators, which lay still basking on account of the shoal depth, for they do not dry up, as do the shallows of the river, from the heat of the sun.

My camp was stationed near the above-mentioned village, and was sheltered by the widespreading branches of an enormous banian-tree, whose branches, sending down their fibrous roots, formed a complete grove in itself. The pea-fowl roosted in the branches, and their discordant screams were my morning alarum at a little before daybreak, at which time I always rose and refreshed myself after a steaming night by a plunge in the river, the alligators were very tame, or else by making my water-carrier empty mussucks—i.e., leathern water-bags—over me until I had enough of it. I then proceeded to dress for a couple of hours before breakfast, and afterward settled to my daily work.

The forest around was base of leaves—for at the commencement of an Indian summer the leaves fall as in an English autumn—and, with the exception of a few evergreen bushes and evergreens, the jungle was but a collection of dried-up trunks of trees. Under any other conditions it would be impossible to get at tigers and large game without great danger, and, as it was, a range of 20 or 30 yards was all that could be depended on.

But, as I have written, I was sitting in my tent, my puttarvallas (i.e., messengers, &c.; literally, fellows of the bells, from their insignia of office) probably dozing outside, when in rushed a barefooted native—in fact, bare all over, save the smallest of cloths suspended by a string round his loins—and, throwing himself at my feet, embraced them, informing me, in lamentable and pathetic terms, that a "bachela" (child) had been taken off by a "sher" (tiger), "adini Mamsewalla," a man-eater, and that I was his "ma bap," mother and father, and that my greatness should, out of pity, make the tiger, whose grave he declared, out of greatness's bullock. The puttarvallas, having come in, led the creature out re-echoing his complaints, and obtained the further information from him that his "bachela" was not his offspring, but merely his pet buffalo, whose neck had been twisted and blood-sucked by the tiger.

It was only an hour before dark, but the cloudless sky was favorable to the light of the moon.

I had made every preparation for the hunting of the "man-eater." I had been on the track of a man-eating tiger for some time, but lately he had been quiet, and I had no doubt it was my friend, emboldened by past successes; for he had committed in my neighborhood some half-dozen murders during the previous 12 months.

It may be well to explain that by a "man-eater" I do not mean a particular kind of tiger, but an old one which has, through some chance, killed a man, and, finding him easy eating for bad teeth, repeats the dose, taking "one at a time" as often as he can.

I lost no time in starting with my "shikaree" (Anglice, gamekeeper)in the scene of action, and then a dismounted trek and two deep wounds into throat, from which the tiger had taken a hearty drink, and then departed.

About this time (here being no twilight in India) I calculated we should have enough moonlight to see the animal if he came. I prepared my guns for moonlight shooting by sticking a little piece of white paper to each of the muzzle sights by means of a piece of cobbler's-wax, which I always had for such purposes.

Anxiously and patiently I waited for two or three hours, and the moon shone more brightly; when my shikaree, who had the eyes of a lynx, touched my arm. I was too old a sportsman to move, but, with unwonted stealthiness, saw something creep between two small bushes, and presently could clearly distinguish a tiger's head. My suspense was increased by its withdrawing, and I waited in silence, and my patience was rewarded by seeing the animal walk out into the open space by the dead bullock and proceed to the body.

First he sucked at the throat and seemed to lick his chops, then he familiarly put his paw on the carcass as much as to notify that possession for nine points of the law, and he certainly looked a very dangerous customer to quarrel with concerning his property. When thoroughly satisfied that he was alone with his prey, he began to tear it with his teeth and claws. I was on the point of firing, when, by my intense anxiety, the gun slipped a growl and sprang away. Two pariah dogs had approached, attracted by the smell of the dead body, and the latter made a rush after them, but bitterly regretted having spared him while I had the chance of killing him with ease; but my shikaree said to me:

"Never fear, sahib, the jawoor (animal) will come back; he has not gorged yet."

No one who has not been perched on a tree for a night can comprehend the utter discomfort of sitting astride a branch and not daring to move. Although I felt settled myself to the best advantage, I was in great pain from being unable to stir; and my attendant did not relieve me by whispering, as he did, "Sahib, yah bhalu bahut ghar hai; sarhe rat ithur baithenge" ("Sir, this is a very good tree; we can sit all night in it").

Whether I could sit all night or not was undecided. The tiger, having put the dogs to flight, returned to the carcass, and before, he had time to eat a mouthful, I fired a right and left from my rifle, and had the great satisfaction of seeing the mighty brute spring high in the air and roll over. Before I could re-load he had recovered his feet and rushed off uttering the most terrific roars, that made, I doubt not, many a quadruped and biped crouch closer to their nightly dwelling-place, and which certainly caused my heart to beat some pulsations quicker, for my sport was concluded for the night; I could not hope to see the tiger come again, and from the thud of the balls, I had little doubt they both had given him a permanent reminder of his dinner on buffalo lump. I waited till I fancied I could beat a retreat with safety and then descended from my elevation cold and cramped; and with both barrels of my gun cocked, and with my carbine in charge of my trusty shikaree,

I told my shikaree I would start at day-break and desired him to get the assistance of a very good puggree whom I knew in the village close by, and we would try for the buffalo-destroyer early. A "puggee" is a man who can track animals by their foot-prints, or pugs, and by other signs which escape the uninitiated. In Guzerat the puggees are so expert that they can tell the track of a tiger over hard, clean, black rock, where a European could discover no sign; and their experience was formerly—and, for all I know, may be at the present day—turned to good account. When a robbery took place, a couple of professional puggees were put on the track of the robbers' footmarks, and they followed the scent until they ran the thieves down into some village, and if the footmarks could not be further traced, the municipal authorities, such as they were, were called upon to produce the offenders. They either did so or "emulsified" with just under a contribution of such an extent as should punish them and also remunerate the robbed or their fellow-townsmen, who assigns the expenses incurred in replacing the missing goods and chattels.

One district that I knew in Guzerat was formerly independent, and had a treaty with the British Government for the protection of British travelers. On one occasion an English gentleman's cargo was robbed in transit through this province. Compensation was demanded and paid, and in addition to the money a present of clothes, among which was a basket-work hat of the kind worn by the native cartmen. The native prize it for various reasons. As a rule, the Europeans it is good for rheumatism and other complaints, and they fancy that certain doses put forcibly down the throats of their children by the native female which bestows on the fortunate swallower the quality of bravery. The clavs are much valued as charms and as medicine, and the lascar qualifies to those of the unguent. English ladies who have Indian connections frequently wear these clays, prettily set in gold or silver, as charms on their chatelaines and watch-guards.

THE FENIAN MOVEMENT IN IRELAND.

(Continued from page 41.)

this class were arrested in Marlborough street by the police of the Division and lodged in Sackville lane police station. Two men were arrested at Portobello, at Poilsborough street, Palmerston place, Dorset street, Townsend street, and other parts of the city, where the police had been watching their movements for some time. Altogether, before two o'clock in the afternoon, there were about 30 arrests, and nearly 250 by the close of that day. The arrests in each instance were cleverly made. A detective officer accompanied a body of police belonging to the different divisions. He then visited the houses where the suspected parties resided, and, in most instances, found them in bed.

Owners of the houses where they lodged were in some cases arrested, and were simultaneously made to search for other parties, who were found. The men in some instances protested and made fight into outside the door, but no charge against them, but subsequently at resistance in the outlying districts were not inactive, for at Dundrum, Rathmines, Rathgar, Donnybrook, and other places within the police division, arrests were made with considerable skill. The arrests in the city amounted to above 30; the prisoners were conveyed to Kilmainham Jail in cabs and police vans, and on evening the majority of the men arrested during the course of the day were conveyed in the police vans in the cabs to Kilmainham jail, under a strong escort of dragoons and police. About half-past seven o'clock the last batch of prisoners, consisting of 20 men, were put into cabs and the men in custody also shouted from the cabs. On the street was a large assemblage of one cabman, one subaltern, and 150 men of the first battalion of the 9th Foot, were drawn up in line, and when the cabs with the prisoners apprehended in various parts of the town left the station.

The effect of the prompt measures taken by Government was instantaneous. Mr. Head, for large numbers of men left the city by the different railways, and the police obtained the fullest assurance from the North Wall were unusually crowded. The police were quick to note the fact that a number of men were about to sailing in Dublin for some time had gone to England in the hope of evading the vigilance of the habeas corpus act. A number of strangers took their departure by the Liverpool steamers, and the Holyhead packet was very much pressed by the Great Southern and Western Railway in consequence of the Liverpool Channel steamers. The police made no attempt to prevent these persons leaving Dublin. Mr. Head, however, issued orders against a respectable locality, that outside the municipal boundaries persons who were arrested, we are told their names as Burke, Kirwan, and M'Donell, and stated that they had been engaged in the war of the United States. Among the Americans arrested is a gentleman named Burke, who was frequently referred to in the letters read during the special commission.

The presence of these individuals in Dublin had been the subject of their movements for months, and they were subjected to careful surveillance, but no special steps were taken to arrest them. Some days ago, however, the police sought to make them acquainted with the fact that they were identified as "an American citizen;" and "I have only returned to my country after a long absence." Other large parties of men who had labored as artisans in America have also left Dublin for Liverpool within the last six or eight months, and it was these persons, in all probability, who were found in the possession of gunpowder, cartridges, rifle bullets, and Orsini shells, but in consequence of their absence from the city no searches or operations were carried on at the period of seizure, to operate could be successfully made.

In several parts of the city the police made a search for arms, and in the house of Michael Dalton, Cabra Hill, Dunmark street. It was formerly a Roman Catholic chapel, and it is now used as a residence for the Rev. Young Men's Catholic Association, the lower part of the premises being used as a lecture and meeting room. It was the part that was searched by the police, but no arms were found. The police searched the premises of Mr. Collins in the neighborhood of Stonebyrne, Queen street, North Circular road, but found nothing of importance in the house. In the house of No. 15 Bow street, also, they found no old swords, or powder-horns, but they found a number of caps, a can and a wad for the illegal possession of the arms.

The premises of Mr. Cummins, a grocer, in the city, a blacksmith named James R. O'Gorman, in Brick lane, on the opposite portion of the premises, and on searching the premises they found a neatly-made box containing 12 rifles, a number of ground ball-cartridges, about a stone weight of gunpowder, and a quantity of percussion caps. The box was found in a shed which O'Gorman was at once conveyed to the police station. Numerous other searches in houses were made, but were found, were obliged to give bail. Under special search warrants by the Lord Mayor, 17 prisoners, a few of whom had been arrested the previous day, were brought from Kilmainham to Bridge street, and during the street, exhibit a good deal of interest.

The principal alarm, during the first two or three days, was heightened by one or two startling incidents, which, may not have been connected with the Fenian conspiracy.

On the 8th day morning, at five o'clock, an Hackett, the guard who arrived in charge of the mails at the King's Bridge Terminus, and Mr. Ardagh, clerk in the Post-office, were driving thence to the General Post-office, some one at the corner of Mary's lane fired at them. The car was going at a rapid pace, and the shot did not wound either Mr. Ardagh, the guard, or the driver, but it passed very near Hackett's head. The person who fired immediately decamped.

On another occasion, on the same evening, Mr. Byers, the owner of a public-house at Glasnevin, was sitting quietly in his parlor, talking to a policeman off duty, when a car came to the door; he heard the voice of a customer ask for a shilling to pay the fare, and in another minute or two a person well known to him (Mr. Joseph Sutcliffe) came into the room, pulled a revolver from his breast-pocket, shot him, holding the pistol within a few inches of his head.

Among those arrested was Patrick J. M'Donnell, who has 11 upper, been at the head of the movement since the arrest of Stephens, to whom he was next in command. Some months ago, it is said, the police learnt something about his position in the conspiracy from a man named Corridan, addressed to him, which was found in the goods' store of the City of Dublin Steam-Packet Company. Nothing could be elicited from Corridan till he was found concealed in a yard in the rear of No. 15 Bow street, As the depot of the Fenian chief, it is believed that he was in close communication with persons up to the moment of his arrest.

John Morris, boat centre for Carlow, and hourly as dangerous as Corridan and Stephens, was also arrested at Belfast. It was to him, as the recent trial proved, that the large number of arms manufactured by Moore in Dublin were consigned.

A body of police Fenians assembled for drill, on the night of Saturday week, in a house at Cullen, on the borders of Tipperary, Kilkenny, and Queen's county. A police, and shot one constable, who has since died of his wounds. Among the Fenians who arrived at the 17th Regiment, on furlough. The Fenians fled, but most of them, the police believe, have since been arrested.

A constable was stabbed at Carrick-on-Suir while arresting one of the Fenians.

At Ballinrobe, Connaught, a constable was fired at and wounded.

The terrors made at Twiss, in the county of Meath, on Monday week, included Mr. Malone, one of the wealthiest and most respectable farmers in the county. Mr. Sheridan, son to the postmaster; and Mr. Leonard, draper.

In Athlone, on the same day, Mr. J. P. Fitzgerald, Crane by a police, and Mr. Broadstone Railway Station was among the prisoners.

At Limerick, on Tuesday week, a number of Fenian prisoners, with a strong party of lancers in attendance, were conveyed from the county jail in the city. The cheering of the populace was immense, and taken up by the crowds who waved their hats in the streets, and appeared to be in excellent spirits.

The Fenians arrested in Cork, at one of the Liverpool steamers belonging to the Dundalk Steam-packet Company, by the police and constabulary, amount in case containing nine brass-pistols and twenty of musket rifles. They were also in the same consignment barrels of powder, together with a number of rifle bullets.

On another occasion the police found a box of arms addressed to Mr. Fleming, "Bailey's Harbour," on board the Liverpool steamer

At Kilkenny, on the police entered a house in St. Andrew's lane, Dublin, and found in an upper room 161 rifles, and in another concealed in the wooden flooring. An adjoining apartment seems to have been used as a drill-room. Below were found 20 rifles and a large quantity of bullets.

The police got powder, weighing 25 pounds each, and 1,000 rifle bullets, by the arrest of Mr. Dalton.

The first battalion of the Coldstream Guards arrived at Dublin, on Monday, by the steamer Ranger, with 34 officers and 713 rank and file and was accompanied by the second battalion of the Scots Fusilier Guards, 30 officers, 26 soldiers' children, and seven horses. The regiment was received by the constabulary in command.

A detachment of the Royal Artillery from Woolwich, consisting of 100 men, commanded by Major Lloyd, R.A., was sent to Ireland on Monday week, to be stationed at Kilmainham Jail, Dublin. A detachment of the Military Train Corps, in charge of a large amount of baggage, arrived at Dublin on the same day. They were awarded to Island last week, and a detachment of the Royal Horse Artillery arrived at Dublin on Monday. Another detachment of the regiments is under orders for Ireland. The arrivals have also included a body of artillery, composed chiefly of Englishmen and Scotchmen, who have volunteered for service in Ireland.

In various parts of the country—in Tipperary, Kilkenny, Cork, Limerick, Dublin, Belfast, and other places—searches for arms and arrests are going on, and numbers of the Fenians have been taken prisoners. The police have been active in Cork and Queenstown, and the Fenians who have left for America, one of whom, Fitzgerald, had £400 in his possession.

It has been deemed expedient to call Galway, King's County, Westmeath, Queen's County, Down, Longford, Fermanagh, to the list of proclaimed districts.

The Fenian movement has also had, on Monday week, and several following days in Cork barracks, to inquire into the conduct of certain officers of the 10th Regiment; Sergeant Darrah, 31 Regiment; Sergeant Mahon, 10th Regiment, and Private Cullen, 10th Regiment James Rose, of the 20th Regiment. Col. Nugent was the president of the court-martial. The court proceeded to prosecutor in the trial of Corporal Rose. The charge preferred against him was that he, in the presence of Constable Carson, of the Irish Constabulary Force, at Cork, on the 5th of March, did use language to the county Clare, and a Fenian. All the Irish soldiers who have been on trial have acted with the most severe fire on the people" being conduct prejudicial of good order and military discipline, and to the prejudice of the character of War. The prisoner, in his defense, denied absolutely the truth of the charge. The court-martial resulted in a verdict of guilty; the sentence is not yet known.

A military court of inquiry has been sitting likewise at Cork, to investigate the charges against the non-commissioned officers of the 33rd Regiment, who are accused of misconduct during the late Fenian riots.

Several soldiers belonging to the Dublin garrison have been tried by court-martial for disorderly and seditious conduct, which grows a pretty general feeling of disaffection to the Fenian cause. Whether the positive means taken by the English Government will be effectual to put down the movement, or the contrary, remains to be seen; the next two weeks must tell the story.

THE GREAT "SANCY" DIAMOND.—The history of this diamond (weighing 84 carats) is very curious. According to Tavernier, it was found by a peasant, who, trying to raise money upon it for the benefit of his friend, sold it for 3,000 francs to a merchant of Lisbon. The man was beset by robbers, who murdered him and took away the jewel, and subsequently, by his master's fidelity, got back the diamond. The merchant sold it to the King of Portugal, who lost treasure. He then carried out his fatal intention, and sold it to the Grand Seignior, who refused to redeem it. In 1640 it belonged to Mahomet IV., and remained in the Turkish Treasury, whom it passed to the Duke of York. After his abdication he carried it to France. The jewel was sold to Louis XIV. During the memorable days of September, 1792, it was stolen in Paris from the rest of the regalia; it reappeared in 1828, when the Princess Paul Demidoff bought it from an agent of the Bourbons for £75,000. Lost under it was on view at Messrs. Garrard's in London, and finally, it has returned to its native land, being purchased for £36,000 by Sir Samuelius Jeejeebhoy of Bombay.

A DISTINCTION AND A DIFFERENCE.—Jones once discovered the respective interest of a distinction and a difference. He says that "a little difference" frequently makes a great many enemies, while a little distinction" makes hosts or friends to the one on whom it is conferred.

A REMINISCENCE OF COUNTRY LIFE—SETTING THE FIGURE OF FOUR-TRAP.

THE EMPRESS EUGENIE AND IMPERIAL SHOOTING PARTY AT MARLY.

"THE SCOUT" has, as we have told our readers before, become a regular institution, and if our brave neighbors could only be induced to make it less theatrical, and not quite so much an occasion for costume, it might eventually be a really national institution. The Imperial party has just been distinguishing itself by a capital bout of partridge-shooting in the admirable little wood at Marly, between Versailles and Saint Germans; and could the shade of Egalité, or of either of the three Louises before the empire, have witnessed the hearty simplicity of the affair, it would have been a little surprised—if shades are ever surprised at anything—at the workwoman-like way in which the Empress Eugenie brought down her bird with the gun handed to her by her Imperial husband. But for the presence of one of those wonderful Dresden-china-looking, cocked-hatted keepers, with a tremendous hound tugging at a leash, and evidently anxious to distinguish himself in an elephantine but utterly disconcerting manner, the whole thing would have been eminently respectable, even though the coveys were beaten up to the shooting-ground; and in the matter of costume the Empress set as piquant and pretty a fashion as could possibly be desired for any English woman, keen in the shooting season.

SETTING THE FIGURE-OF-FOUR TRAP.

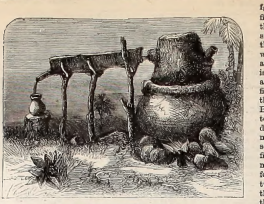
EVERY memory of our old country days, when we were boys and girls, comes most gratefully to our senses. The times when we thought nut-time so happy; when we counted upon the ripening of the apples; when every fruit and every season had its special delights, from the first gathering of the pinkster-apple, in March, to the bringing-in of the winter pears in November.

These are summer pleasures; but winter has its pleasures as well, and to the boy especially so. The tracking of rabbits, the snaring of partridges, the winter fishing through ice-holes, all have their charms; and of them we illustrate in our picture the setting of the figure-of-four trap. Every boy knows the figure-of-four trap. It is simply an arrangement of cross-sticks, that shall disconnect as soon as the bait is touched by animal or bird, and let down the weight that it upholds. The game bird is unlikely, but the hungry animal that is intended for a pie or a fricassee is there.

A FIGI ISLAND LIQUOR STILL, AND HEALTH DRINKING.

A VERY remarkable feature associated with Figian drinking customs is the Vākaceivo, a kind of toast or wish announced after the draught is swallowed. A man blows away the moisture that may remain about his mouth with a hissing noise, and then shouts aloud his toast, which is sometimes common-place, sometimes humorous, and sometimes sentimental.

Some of these wishes allude to the cannibal practices of the people: e.g., a skull, a man's heart, or a human ham. Others indicate the profession of the drinker: thus, the fisherman asks for a report from the reef, a husbandman for propitious seasons, and the sailor for a brisk wind. The ruling passion is thus frequently manifested—the covetous man calls for wealth, plenty of tortoise-shell, or a whale's tooth; the epicure for boiled fish, rich puddings, or turtle-soup. A kind neighbor of mine used to ask for "pleasant conversation." A tasteful diner was accustomed to say, "There, yet is that is kept back." An ill-looking doctor was ever crying out for a good god; and a little priest always said of the gods, "They pull and I pull."



Many drinking wishes are expressed enigmatically: "a red string" means sinnet; "a path that resounds," a canoe; "a bamboo basket," food from Somosomo; "a long pig," a human body (to be eaten); sugar-cane is asked for as "water in dams," and the milk of the nut as "water that trembles in the breeze."

The origin of this custom may, perhaps, be traceable to the common practice of ending a report and many business transactions by a short wish or prayer.

One of the oldest established and most peculiar of Figian social ceremonies is the drinking of Yaqona.

PHEASANT SHOOTING IN THE WOOD OF MARLY, FRANCE, BY THE EMPRESS EUGENIE

A FIJI ISLAND LIQUOR STILL.

Early in the morning the king's herald stands in front of the royal abode, and shouts, at the top of his voice, "Yaqona!" Hereupon all within hearing respond, in a sort of scream, Mamá, "chew it."

At this signal the chiefs, priests, and leading men gather round the well-known bowl, and talk over public affairs, or state the work assigned for the day, while their favorite draught is being prepared.

HEAD OF MALAGASEY, AFRICA, BELLÆ.

The young men having finished chewing, each deposits his portion, in the form of a round dry ball, in the bowl, the inside of which thus becomes studded over with a large number of these separate little masses. The man who has to make the grog takes the bowl by the edge and tilts it toward the king, or, in his absence, to the chief appointed to preside. A herald calls the king's attention to the slanting bowl, saying, "Sir, with respects, the yaqona is collected."

If the king thinks it enough, he replies, in a low tone, "Loba" (wring it), an order which the herald communicates to the man at the bowl in a louder voice.

The water is then called for, and gradually poured in, a little at first, and then more until the bowl is full, or the master of the ceremony says "Stop," the operator in the meantime gathering up and compressing the chewed root.

Now follows the science of the process, which Mariner describes so accurately that I cannot do better than transcribe his account.

The strainer is composed of a quantity of the fine fibrous vau (hibiscus), which is spread over the surface of the infusion, on which it floats, and the man who manages the bowl now begins his difficult operation.

In the first place, he extends his left hand to the further side of the bowl; with his fingers pointing downward, and the palm toward himself, he sinks that hand carefully down the side of the bowl, carrying with it the edge of the vau; at the same time his right hand is performing a similar operation at the side next to him, the fingers pointing downward and the palm presuming outward. He does this slowly from side to side, gradually descending deeper and deeper till his fingers meet each other at the bottom, so that nearly the whole of the fibres of the root are by these means enclosed in the vau, forming as it were a roll of above two feet in length lying along the bottom from side to side, the edges of the vau meeting each other underneath.

He now carefully rolls it over, so that the edges overlapping each other, or rather intermeting, come uppermost. He next doubles in the two ends and rolls it carefully over again, endeavoring to reduce it to a narrower and firmer compass. He now brings it cautiously out of the fluid, taking firm hold of it by the two ends, one in each hand (the back of his hands being upward), and raising it breast high with his arms considerably extended, he brings his right hand toward his breast, moving it gradually onward; and whilst his left hand is coming round toward his right shoulder, his right hand partially twisting the vau, lays the end which it holds upon the left elbow, so that the coils thus extended upon that arm, one end being still grasped by the left hand. The right hand being now at liberty is brought under the left fore-arm (which still remains in the same situation), and carried outwardly toward the left elbow, that it may again seize in that situation the end of the vau. The right hand then describes a bold curve outwardly from the chest, whilst the left comes across the chest, describing a curve nearer to him and in the opposite direction, till at length the left hand is extended from him and the right hand approaches to the left shoulder, gradually twisting the vau by the turn and flexures principally of that wrist: this double motion is then retraced, but in such a way (the left wrist now principally acting) that the vau instead of being untwisted is still more twisted, and is again placed on the left arm, while he takes a new and less constrained hold. Thus the hands and arms perform a variety of curves of the most graceful description, the muscles both of the arms and chest are seen rising as they are called into action, displaying what would be a fine and uncommon subject of study for the painter; for no combination of animal action can develop the swell and play of the muscles with more grace and better effect. The degree of strength which he exerts when there is a large quantity is very great, and the dexterity with which he accomplishes the whole never fails to excite the attention and admiration of all present. Sometimes the fibres of the vau are heard to crack with the increasing tension, yet the mass is seen whole and entire, becoming more thin as it becomes more twisted, while the infusion drains from it in a regularly decreasing quantity, till at length it denies a single drop. The man now tosses the dregs behind him, or with a new lot of vau repeats the operation until the liquid is clear and fit for use.

The cup-bearer then presents the cup to the king, who sprinkles a few drops on to the ground, and then drinks; while his couriers chant a thanksgiving, winding up with a glad shout and a clapping of hands, which is caught up by people living at various distances—as is the crowing of cocks—till the whole town is shouting and clapping. After the king, the next in rank drinks. It is considered a high honor to drink after the king: so much so that on the occasion of a Tongan boatman saving the king's life and being requested to name his own reward, he eagerly replied:

"Let my name be announced in the Yaqona-circle next to the king's as long as I live."

LIFE IN CENTRAL AMERICA.—FROM A SKETCH BY J. B. ROBERTS.

AN ABYSSINIAN OVEN.

HIPPOPOTAMUS WASHING CLOTHES—A NILE SKETCH.

THE CARPENTER OF SANGATANGO.

HEAD OF A MALAGASEY BELLE.

EVERYTHING connected with the toilet must of necessity be interesting to our fair readers, and if we can, by bringing forward the ideas of other nations, suggest anything to our own fair ones, we have certainly achieved a success. With this idea we give some little description of a Malagasey African woman's hair-dressing:

THE MAN EATER OF CHUNDA—WOUNDED AND VERY SICK.

"Their hair," says Madam Pfeiffer, "is coal black, as woolly as the negro's, and much coarser and longer, sometimes attaining a length of two feet. When this hair is worn in all its native luxuriance, it has a horribly disfiguring effect. The face seems quite lost in a virgin forest of thick frizzled hair, standing out in all directions. Fortunately, few wear it in this way. The men often have their hair cut off quite short at the back of the head, and leave only a length of six or eight inches in front, which looks comical enough, as the hair stands upright, and forms a woolly top-knot, but it is not so bad as the virgin forest. The women, and some of the men, too, who are exceedingly proud of their hirsute ornaments, and cannot make up their minds to shorten them, plait them into a number of little tails. Some let these tails hang all about their heads, while others unite them into bands or bunches, so as to cover the whole head. This kind of head-dress takes a good deal of time in preparing, particularly in the cases of the richer Malagaseys, who have their hair plaited into an infinite number of these little tails. On the head of one of these native beauties I counted above sixty plaits, the front ones of which were fastened to a ring surrounding the face, and distant about six inches. The good lady's slaves must have had a good day's work in bringing them to the right pitch of perfection. On the other hand, it may be urged that such a head-dress does not require renewing continually, but will remain in all its pristine loveliness for several days."

LIFE IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

NICARAGUA is a country to which, since the raid of Walker and his couple of hundred brave but hair-brained adventurers, the American people have always looked toward with considerable interest. From the sketch of a correspondent domiciled there, we give a representation of the Central American mid-day joviality, called by themselves "Las Onie," or as we say, the "eleven o'clocker."

At that hour, whatever he may be doing, the Nicaraguan must break off for an hour for his bite and his little drops—sometimes two or three of them—of Aguerdiente, just to kill the animalculæ in the water.

There is something jovial in this unbending, where master and man, black and white, come together for the nonce, under the shelter of the thatched roof, with hot sun shut away, and the cool winds playing around them from off the rippling water.

There are worse places to live in than Central America.

AN ABYSSINIAN OVEN.

MR. ST. JOHN, a recent traveler in Abyssinia, gives us many very interesting reminiscences of that land, from which we select an account of an Abyssinian kitchen and oven, with something of the manner in which the palate is tickled in that far-off country.

Imagine a small room, about ten feet long, six broad, and eight high, with or without a window, according to circumstances, but more usually, as in mine, without one, and at all events without a chimney, so that the smoke, which is always kept going, and that vigorously, finds the door the nearest exit, and it may be easily conceived that the atmosphere is so dense as to render it difficult for any one but a native to remain long in the room. Even the cook-women, who pass the greater part of the day in this smoke, never think of standing up to do their work, but always remain squatted as low as possible, either near the door or fire. Every article the room contains becomes, like the apartment itself, of a pure soot black. The kitchen utensils are, the "magogo" or oven, if it may be so called, a few jars of different forms and sizes, according to the use they are intended to be put to—some with long necks and narrow mouths, for keeping water in; others with wide mouths and no necks at all, for holding the liquid dough of which the bread is formed—and the earthen dishes or saucers in which the meat and other catables are prepared and served up.

The "magogo" is an oblong building, three feet by four, and about a foot high. It is constructed of clay and small stones, with a place in the interior for a fire. The whole is covered with a circular slab of a sort of pottery-work, being nearly the same material as that of which the dishes are formed, nicely polished on the upper surface, which is slightly concave in order to receive more easily the liquid dough for the bread. At the back is a hole by which the smoke may escape, and in front a sort of doorway by which the fire is lighted, and which, being placed exactly opposite the kitchen door, has always a draught of air to keep up a good fire. The cover is made of clay, and is used to keep out the smoke and dirt, and to retain the heat.

THE CARPENTER OF SANGATANGO.

THERE is nothing so interesting as the adventures of travelers, and especially those through lands as yet unknown. From this class we select some of the experiences of Du Chaillu, who will be remembered as the first gorilla hunter, and who is now traveling again through Central Africa. This is his story of an African carpenter:

"One day, while walking down the village of Sangatango, I saw a negro carpenter fellow go into his private fetisch-house, and was lucky enough to be able to watch his motions without being discovered. He first built a little fire in the middle of the hut, then stripped and marked his body with white chalk, making very peculiar and careful stripes on one of his arms, and in the centre of his breast; whilst doing this, which took some time, he kept up a constant mumbling of words which I could not understand, but which were doubtless prayers addressed to his fetisch. Then the fire was extinguished, and the hut was shut. When he came out I laughed at him; but he took the whole matter very seriously, of course, and told me that the spirit Numba, which has its dwelling in the ocean, had gone into his chest, and would kill him if he had not exorcised it by the ceremony I had seen."

THE STEAM YACHT ROSS WINANS IN ENGLAND.

THE singularly-formed vessel which has been under construction during the past twelvemonth or more at Mr. Hepworth's works, Cubitt Town, Millwall, from the designs of the owners, Messrs. T. and W. L. Winans, American gentlemen, residing in London, who have obtained a patent for this principle of ship-building, was successfully launched on Monday, February 21st. An illustration of this event appears on another page.

This strange-looking vessel, which has been popularly called "The Cigar-Ship," is made somewhat in the shape of a cigar; or, to speak more accurately, of a tapering cylinder, each side being an arc of a circle, the chord of which, forming the screw-shaft, is 256 feet in length. The breadth and height of this cylinder are 16 feet, and at 18 feet from each end is a screw propeller 22 feet in diameter, the blades of which, nine in number, stretch into the water on each side, and below to a distance of 6 feet beyond the broadest part of the vessel. The 18 feet beyond the screws at each end forms a continuation of the screw-shaft, and revolves with it, being a sort of elongated "nut" of the screw. At each end, the shaft works in a bearing, which is so contrived as to form a species of universal joint, in order to guard against any strain at the extremities. Underneath the vessel, at about 6 feet distance from the screw, at each end, are placed the rudders, the posts of which rise through the bottom, and are worked by machinery on the deck, between the funnels. This machinery is so arranged that either or both of the rudders can be moved at a time. The deck is 130 feet long by 10½ feet broad, and from it rise two short funnels and two telescope masts, which latter are only intended to carry flags. The part below the water-line is built of the best Lowmoor and Staffordshire iron plates, ⅝ of an inch in thickness, while the upper part is of steel plates, of the thickness of 5-16th of an inch. The framing consists simply of the inner circular girders, and she is divided into 20 water-tight compartments. In the engine and boiler-rooms she is further strengthened by inner rings of angle iron 7 inches deep, which are riveted to the side, at a distance of 3 feet from each other. Every rivet-hole in the plates has been counter-sunk, so that the vessel is perfectly smooth from end to end. The screw-shaft is of steel, 7½ inches thick in the bearings, being 7½ inches thick for the greater part of its length, but becoming thicker at each end, where it is 15 inches in diameter.

The engine-room is in the centre of the vessel, on the lower deck, and is 20½ feet in length, occupying the whole breadth of 16 feet. Here are placed three cylinder-engines, made by Messrs. Jackson & Watkins, from designs by Messrs. Winans. The engines are upright-cylinder high-pressure condensing engines, calculated to be of an ultimate power of 2,000 horse, and it is intended to work them up to from 1,500 to 1,800, the nominal power being about 250. A fourth cylinder is also placed in the engine-room, to move a counterpoise or pendulum, consisting of 20 tuns of lead, for the purpose of counteracting the tendency to roll, which the motion of the engines engender. Beneath the engine-room are the four boilers, in a room 25 feet by about 16 feet. They are similar to locomotive boilers, and supply superheated steam, having an arrangement of pipes, round which the flame from the furnace may be sent when desired, instead of passing directly into the funnel. The boilers are calculated to bear a pressure of 200lb, and will probably be worked at about 150lb.

Behind the engine-room is the saloon, somewhat resembling in shape a railway tunnel, 25 feet in length, the entrances being at the after end, at each side of a table which extends the whole length of the cabin, and rests upon the casing that surrounds the screw-shaft. This saloon is tastefully painted in white and gold, and the seats are covered with blue variegated damask. Two lustres hang from the roof under the skylight, and a pair of fixed lamps are also placed at each side at the further extremity.

At each side of the saloon, and also astern of it, are small state-rooms, handsomely and tastefully fitted up with berths and closets, and decorated in the same style.

Astern of the saloon and bed-rooms is the sleeping-place for the crew, with berths on each side, and in the centre is the windlass, which may be described as a long crank, to be worked by the hands of the men. Here, too, are the chains of the anchors, not the least remarkable arrangement.

The anchors are simply large cylinders, of metal, weighing a tun each, and are suspended in two tubes, which rise from the bottom of the ship, through which they are dropped. When hauled up, they come up so that their lower extremities are flush with the bottom, and appear from below like the bottoms of two large plugs.

It is said that, from the peculiar shape of the ship, she will offer so little resistance to the water that these will fully suffice to hold her.

Returning on deck, and passing forward of the two funnels, you descend into a smaller cabin, the smoking-saloon, 12 feet in length, furnished with a table similar to that in the after-cabin, and with seats covered with deep maroon-colored morocco leather. From the skylight hangs a lustre, and two lamps like those before mentioned are at the end.

Similar sleeping-rooms to those in the after part of the ship are also here, accommodation being provided in all for 30 persons.

Ahead of the smoking-saloon is the galley, which is roomy and commodiously fitted up.

Still further on is the forecastle, where the engineers and firemen have their berths.

Previous to launching, the ship lay on the ways, not as ships generally lie, sloping downward toward the river, but the framing was so constructed as to have her water-line level. At its extremity abaft, the shaft was protected by a sort of movable wooden sheath, like a thimble, secured by a chain or cable, which is shown in our illustration.

At four o'clock the tide was found to serve—the last blow was struck—Mrs. W. L. Winans performed the act of christening her the Ross Winans—and the launch went off beautifully, the vessel carrying the flags of England, America, and Russia; hoisting also the ensign of the Imperial Yacht Club of St. Petersburg, to which she is destined to belong. Owing to the above-mentioned peculiar arrangement in her building, she came into the water all at once, being sustained by the framing until half the vessel was over the river; and when she had fairly found her place, which she did in a minute or two, it was seen that she floated—according to expectation—exactly half in and half out of the water, the extreme points just appearing on the water. Her displacement of water is about 400 tuns; but, when she has taken in her coal, &c., it is expected to be from 500 to 600.

As the ship has been launched "all standing," with engines and everything complete, she is expected to be ready for sea in a few days.

Messrs. Winans have already constructed and launched three vessels built on this principle. The first, launched several years since at Baltimore, is 230 feet in length and 16 feet in breadth. She has but one propeller, of the same size as those of the Ross Winans, and this is in the centre of the ship. It is obvious that with this arrangement there cannot be the same strength and stability as with those of the new vessel. The first ship is said to have been driven, with a smaller engine than those on board the new ship, at the rate of 15 knots an hour. A smaller boat, 70 feet by 8 feet, has also been launched at St. Petersburg; and a third, of similar dimensions, at Havre, a few weeks since.

BOY MISSING.

GUSTAVE FROHMAN, aged 11 years, left his home about 10 o'clock on Tuesday, 20th of Feb., since which time he has not been seen or heard from. He wore a fur cap, pants and jacket of grayish color; is about 3 feet 8 inches high; color of eyes, gray; color of hair, light and straight. When speaking rapidly, is inclined to stutter. Any information in reference to him will be thankfully received by his parents, H. FROHMAN, 395 Eighth street, New York.

THE year 1832 was sadly signalized in Paris by scenes of disorder, which were the effect of the unhappy revolution of 1830; but it was still more marked by the horrors of the cholera, which then made its first appearance in France. One day Sister St. Mary was going into the charity hospital, when she was rudely insulted by a working-man, who followed and abused her, and would even have struck her, if some one had not prevented him. The good sister knew only how to pardon and pray. Some days passed. In the beginning of the month of April hundreds of cholera patients were crowded into the wards of the hospital, mingled with the dead bodies of those who daily expired. One morning a new patient was brought in, whose condition appeared desperate. "No more room!" was the abrupt answer of the person charged with the reception of patients; "doctors and nurses can attend no more." But Sister St. Mary was there; she recognized the patient, and exclaimed: "I will take care of him—I will find him a corner somewhere. Do not refuse him; I will tend him myself." She immediately enters on her task, and, without neglecting the other patients, she attends to this one with the most assiduous care. At the end of eight days the man was in a state of convalescence; but one morning he missed from his bedside the good Sister St. Mary, his benefactress. "Alas!" he was told, "she took the cholera herself, and died during the night." In fact, my very dear friends, the good sister died attending the wretch who had insulted her some days before; she had recognized him, and revenged herself on him after the manner of the saints. She died on the 8th of April, 1832.

RETURN OF THE JEWS TO THE HOLY LAND.—We are assured on good authority that the Emperor Napoleon recently invited the principal Jews of France to a conference on the subject of the return of the Jews to the Holy Land, in the course of which he entered thoroughly into the whole subject, and intimated his disposition to use his great power and influence toward that end. Whatever the motive, the fact of such a conference is a remarkable sign of the times. What may not this mysterious man yet effect? We should be glad to know how his proposals were received by the Jews there assembled.

HARRY SANDERSON, whose name is, perhaps, better known than any pianist of this country, has been tendered a concert by his friends, both personal and professional, before leaving this country for Europe. The tender has been made in a way that any artist may feel really proud of, and is to come off at Irving Hall on the evening of the 31st of March. Mr. Sanderson is going to Europe for a triple purpose—for his health, his study, and to show Europeans what an American has achieved. When we remember how kind he has always been in his efforts for others, we are sure that this concert must be a great success.

IN Ball & Black's window, corner of Prince street and Broadway, a picture exhibited is by Granville Perkins, a young artist, who is fast rising into a real excellence. The subject is "Cape Cruise, on the Southern Coast of Cuba," and the treatment is worthy of the rising fame of the artist.

Honesty is the best policy in Medicine as well as in other things. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a genuine preparation of that unequaled spring medicine and blood purifier, decidedly superior to the poor imitations heretofore in the market. Trial proves it.

Barnum's New American Museum, Broadway, between Spring and Prince streets. This establishment does not advertise in the New York Herald. The Afternoon Performance will invariably Commence at 2 o'clock. Every Afternoon at 2; Evening at 7½. The Scriptural Historical Drama, MOSES; OR, ISRAEL IN EGYPT. Magnificent Scenery, Costumes and Appointments. MOVING PANORAMA OF THE NILE. Scriptural Tableaux: Crossing the Red Sea, Destruction of Pharaoh and his Hosts, Triumph of Israel. W. B. Harrison, Extemporaneous Singer. Great Living Curiosities; THE WILD AUSTRALIAN CHILDREN, supposed to have belonged to a race of Cannibals; Giant and Giantess; Three Dwarfs; Two Circassian Girls; Glass Blowers; Three-Horned Bull; Persian Sheep; Albino Boy, Cosmoramas, Learned Seal, Happy Family, Grand Aquaria, 100,000 curiosities. Admission, 30 cents, children under ten, 15 cents.

A NEW ART ESTABLISHMENT,
779 BROADWAY.

The well-known firm of WENDEROTH, TAYLOR & BROWN, Philadelphia, have established a Branch in New York for receiving orders and making sittings for their FINE MINIATURES.

The Gallery of E. T. KELLEY & Co., 779 Broadway, offering the advantages of fine location and convenience of interior arrangement, has been obtained for this purpose.

There fine Pictures are executed by Messrs. F. A. Wenderoth and J. Henry Brown, of the Philadelphia firm, whose high standing as Artists was recognized many years before Photography was invented. Keeping Photography in its proper place as an aid, and not a dependence, they are, therefore, able to produce effects that are not to be looked for in the hands of mere colorists. A fine painting that is intended to be handed down for generations should be free from the imperfections of a sun picture; and none but a complete artist, who is able to draw for himself, can cast loose from his print, and improve the effect while securing the likeness.

Connoisseurs are respectfully invited to examine these Paintings for themselves.

Wenderoth, Taylor & Brown,
914 Chestnut street, Philadelphia;
779 Broadway, New York.

Magic Made Easy.—100 Astounding Performances in "Prestidigitation." 10,000 sold. Only 20 cents, post-paid, by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Kate Vaugh.—A Rich Story. Only 15 cents. Sent free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Rogues and Rogueries of New York.—Price 30 cents. Sent free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. 549-52

GIFT SALE.

The Days of Brass Jewelry are Over.

SEND TO THE COSMOPOLITAN JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION.

Gold Gift Sale

Under the management of Messrs. CALKINS & CO., well-known as the conductors of this, the most extensive enterprise of the times, having branches in nearly 100 cities and towns. Every article of jewelry in the mammoth stock of over $2,500,000 is WARRANTED GOLD, or NO SALE. All to be disposed of at the one average price of Two Dollars each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES, ALL TO BE SOLD FOR TWO DOLLARS EACH!

5	Superior Grand Piano Fortes	$800 to	$1,200
50	Splendid Seven-Octave Pianos	400 to	800
150	Melodeons, the Best Makers	100 to	200
175	First-Class Sewing Machines	50 to	150
200	Rosewood Musical Boxes, 32 airs	75 to	250
250	Mahogany " " 24 airs	50 to	200
250	Diamond Rings	50 to	200
500	Gold Hunting-Case Watches	75 to	200
500	Gold Ladies' Enameled Watches	50 to	300
1,000	Silver Hunting-Case Watches	35 to	100
1,000	Silver Open-Faced Watches	15 to	50
250	Silver Dining Sets—Splendid	75 to	300
500	Silver Salvers and Urns	50 to	250
500	Silver Tea-Sets—Complete	50 to	300
2,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains	18 to	50
3,000	Gold-Chased Bracelets	15 to	30
2,000	Gold Chatelain and Guard Chains	18 to	40
2,000	Gold Brooches, Lava and Coral	8 to	15
5,000	Gold Brooches, Opal and Emerald	15 to	40
5,000	Gold Ear-Drops, Jet, Lava, Coral, Mosaic, Opal and Emerald Set	8 to	46
5,000	Gold California Diamond Breast-pins	6 to	20
3,000	Gold Sets Soltaire Buttons and Studs	12 to	25
3,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, &c.	6 to	15
10,000	Gold Lockets, double glasses	8 to	25
10,000	Gold Lockets for Miniatures	6 to	20
3,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, &c.	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Plain Rings	6 to	10
5,000	Gold Chased or Engraved Rings	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Shield and Signet Rings	8 to	25
10,000	Gold California Diamond Rings	6 to	20
10,000	Gold Pearl, and Fancy Stone Rings	8 to	25
7,500	Gold Sets Ladies' Jewelry, Jet	15 to	25
10,000	Sets of Ladies' Gold Jewelry, Cameo, Pearl, Opal and Emerald	15 to	50
10,000	Gold Pens, with Silver Holders	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Pens, with Gold Holders	10 to	25
5,000	Silver Goblets and Cups, all styles	6 to	12
3,000	Silver Castors and Wine Holders	15 to	50
2,000	Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 to	30
1,000	Silver Card Cases	15 to	25
3,000	Silver Egg Stands	18 to	40
2,000	Silver Ice Pitchers	20 to	50
6,000	Silver Cake, Pie, and Fruit Knives	8 to	25
20,000	Dozen Silver Teaspoons	8 to	15
10,000	Dozen Silver Tablespoons	15 to	25
10,000	Dozen Silver Forks and Knives	15 to	40
1,000	Dozen Silver Nut Picks	12 to	20
5,000	Sets Silver Napkin Rings	8 to
10,000	Engravings in Rosewood Frames	6 to	15
5,000	Engravings in Gilt Frames	6 to	15
1,000	Fine Oil Paintings	25 to	100
6,000	Pearl Pocket Knives—six blades	6 to	15
3,000	Ivory and Pearl Back Combs	10 to	25
5,000	Pearl and Gold-Headed Canes	15 to	25
15,000	Photograph Albums, all styles	6 to	30
1,000	Opera Glasses	10 to	30

THE COSMOPOLITAN ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURING JEWELERS.

CALKINS & CO., Managers,
169 and 171 BROADWAY, N. Y.

☞ Has been organized with the special object of doing away with the enormous profits paid by the people to jobbers and wholesale and retail dealers in their goods, making articles for which the manufacturers receive on the average but $2 cost the customer at retail from $8 to $12, after passing through three or four hands. This splendid stock of the leading and most fashionable styles of Solid Gold Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware, worth $2,500,000 at retail prices, will all be sold for $500,000, or at $2 for each and every article [the exact average manufacturer's cost].

Remember this is emphatically a Gold Gift Sale, including no brass, or so-called Plated Jewelry; and every article is sold at the one average price of Two Dollars each, including Gold and Silver Watches, Splendid Pianos, &c. The Plan, Sealed advertisements, describing each prize, are well mixed, and sent regardless of choice to every customer—insuring $10 worth for $2. The proof ☞ We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the least article drawn, for $2, a Splendid Engraved Silver Butter Dish valued at $10, or a Photograph Album valued at $6, and you have the possibility of getting a

FINE GOLD WATCH OR PIANO.

Price of Envelopes 25 cents each.
2 for 50 cts., with a beautiful Card Photograph.

5 for	$ 1.00	"	Silver Butter Knife, worth	$	1.00
11 for	2.00	"	Silver Napkin Ring	"	2.00
17 for	3.00	"	Silver Salt Spoons	"	3.00
30 for	5.00	"	Set Silver Tea Spoons	"	6.00
65 for	10.00	"	Set Silver Forks	"	12.09
100 for	15.00	"	Silver Hunting Watch	"	25.00
200 for	30.00	"	Ladies' Gold Watch	"	50.00
400 for	60.00	"	Gents' Gold Watch	"	100.00

In all cases upon receipt of the money the premiums as above will be sent with the Envelopes.

Agents will be allowed 10 cents on every Envelope, provided their remittance amounts to over $1. Agents will collect 25 cents for each Envelope, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or stamps.

Address CALKINS & CO.,
169 and 171 Broadway, N. Y.

Courtship Made Easy.—A great work. Only 15 cents. Free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-42

Rarey's System of Horse-Taming.—64 pp. 15 cents. Free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. 549-52

Books! Books! Books!—Buy your Books only of HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. Catalogues free gratis to all. 549-52

JUST READY—The New Number of the Great Comic Paper of America, FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN, for May, 1866, has the most Humorous Cut ever published, illustrating the monster nuisance of the age, the Rush of House-Rents into the Air; or, Homes for All—John Bull and the Fenians—Caught in Their Own Trap—Bull Pester-ed by Fenian Musquitoes—besides numerous other comic cuts by the best Artists of America and Europe, as well as 16 pages of the very finest comic reading matter ever published. For sale everywhere.

FRANK LESLIE, Publisher,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.
THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELRY AT LOW PRICES.
100,000
WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, PENS, BRACELETS, CASTORS, GOBLETS, SPOONS, FORKS, NAPKIN RINGS, ETC., ETC.
Worth $50,000!
To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you are to have for it, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also our Agents in which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.
J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

LADIES'
PAPER COLLARS
& CUFFS
WHOLESALE & RETAIL
WARD, 387 B'WAY, N.Y.
One Lady's Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles. 0

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Sample, 25 cents: French Transparent Cards (32 views), $1 25 per hund.; 20 per dozen; also Marked Playing Cards, $1 50 per pack. All by mail on receipt of Price. Address FORWARDING AGENCY, 28 Liberty street, N. Y.
tf

Vieve Brower'on, Life in the Concert Saloons of New York. A rich book. Just published. Handsomely illustrated. Only 25 cents. Mailed free. Address Post Office Box 78, HOLLAND, N. Y. 543-51

Sensology, Psychologic Fascination, Marriage Rapidly Attained, How to Become Rich, Will the Opposite Sex Marriage, &c. This queer, funny, and spicy book, sent by mail for 25 cents. Address EVANS & CO., Box 2,445, Philadelphia.

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND
Contains the Lady's Guide to Beauty; Useful Recipes for the Housekeeper; Horse Taming—complete; Parlor Theatricals; the Parlor Magician; How to Make all kinds of Liquors without the use of poisonous articles; How to Detect Counterfeit Bills and Spurious Coin; the Tricks of Gamblers, Pocket-book Droppers and Peter Funks exposed; how to make all kinds of Powders, Rounds, Balls, Curling Fluids, Hair Dyes, etc; How to make the Whiskers and Moustache grow; all kinds of Amusements; Fortune Teller; Twelve Golden Maxims; over 400 Historical Facts; Proverbs of all Nations; Curious Questions, Anecdotes, Conundrums, etc., etc. Price 25 cents. Send orders to the Union Book Office, N. Y. 534-9

Over Fifty Secrets, numerous Jokes, Witty Sayings, &c., will be found in "THE LOUNGER." Send free for Price Circular.
tf Address, P. O. Box, 5,057, New York.

JON MILLER, JR.
A Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Poetry, &c., &c. Price 10 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York.
tf

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser by W. H. EARL, M.D., 300 pages. Mailed in sealed envelope on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

Pile Remedy

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure. For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

THOSE CURIOUS FASTENERS
25 CENTS.
Good Books 15 cents each. Courtship Made Easy—Bridal Etiquette—How to Win and Wed—How to Behave—Mind your Slops—Hard Words Made Easy—How to Write Letters Correctly—How to Become an Actor.

The Library of Love,
Three Amusing Volumes for 75 cents.
Poet's Companion, 25 cents. Parlor Theatricals, 30 cents. Fireside Games, 30 cents. Shakspeare's Proverbs, 40 cents. Book of Magic, 50 cents. 500 Curious Puzzles, 50 cents. Parlor Pantomimes, 25 cents. Comic Books, 25 cents. How to Converse Correctly, 25 cents. Mammoth Catalogue, containing thousands of Books, Pictures, Games, Amusements, &c., &c., sent to any of the above W. C. WEMYSS, 379 Broadway, N. Y.
544-557

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cents. 96 Photographs of Rebel Generals for 25 cents; 100 Photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Actors for 25 cents. Address
547-51 C. SEYMOUR, Box 48, Holland, N. Y.

600 Photographs of the most Prominent PERSONS OF THE AGE, embracing Actors, Actresses, Opera-singers, Officers of the Army and Navy, Statesmen, Authors, Artists, Clergymen, Kings, Queens, &c., &c., sent by mail, for 25 cents. Address Box 3,410, Post-Office, New York.
tf

Ventriloquism Made Easy, and the Second Sight Mystery, as practised by Robert Heller and others, fully explained. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 3,410, P. O., New York.
tf

Royal Havana Lottery.
Official Drawing of 3d March, 1866,
No. 3025.....Gros.....$160,000
No. 8624..... " 50,000
No. 8115..... " 25,000
No. 20312..... " 10,000
No. 17311..... " 5,000
No. 12238..... " 5,000
Being the six capital prizes.
Prizes paid in gold. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for doubloons and all kinds of gold and silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers, 16 Wall st., N. Y.

FIRST PREMIUM.
IMPROVED
$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5
THE EMBODIMENT OF
PRACTICAL UTILITY AND
EXTREME SIMPLICITY.
Originally Patented May 13, 1862; improvement patented June 8, 1863. The celebrated ALLY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with Cabinets attachment, a most Wonderful Combination of Mechanism, Simplicity, Perfection in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and works horizontal, sews with Cotton and Sewing Thread of all sizes. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand, and with double speed; reversing rapidly; making 16 stitches to each revolution of the wheel. Will Gather, Hem, Baste, Stitch, Tuck, Run and Braid&c. &c.; the strongest machine made. Warranted not to get out of order for THREE YEARS. It has taken the highest rank at New York and other STATE FAIRS, and received the FIRST PREMIUM at all the Fairs where exhibited, and at those who have USED THEM. The ONLY LOW PRICE Machine Patented, and that has received a Premium. All others at the same price are INFRINGEMENTS.
The Celebrated Machine makes the Running Stitch at the rate of several yards per minute.—Frank Leslie's.
"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is re eadily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.
"Work or goods or threads thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand sewing."—Tribune.
Single Machines, all complete, sent to any part of the country per Express, packed in boxes, with printed instructions on receipt of price, $5. Safe delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted everywhere. Circular containing Liberal Inducements sent free.
Address all orders to
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
tf Office, 162 Nassau Street, N. Y.

"Psychomancy.—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, condolence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This wonderful psychological secret is sent free, securing certain success in love, marriage, &c., free by mail. Also, a queer book, together with a guide to be married of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Three publications for 25 cents. Address, postpaid, Address
T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?
MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1 per box, mailed free, to any address on receipt of an order.
B. G. GRAHAM, 167 Nassau St., N. Y.

THE COMING CIRCULAR!
For Spring and Summer, 1866, ready shortly, with 4,000 Novel oddities and odd novelties. CLEMENT & CO., 64 John street, N. Y.
tf

Beautiful False Mustaches, all colors. Can be worn with perfect safety. Sent by mail for 1 dollar. Address, BLACKIE & CO., 713 Broadway, N. Y.
tf

The Beautiful Art of Enameling the Skin. WITHERSPOON'S ESSENCE, for whitening, beautifying and preserving the complexion, making it soft, fair, smooth, and transparent. It quickly removes tan, freckles, pimples, etc., without injuring the skin. Warranted. Sold by agents and druggists. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 South 7th street, Philadelphia.

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses.
A charming delicate perfect rouge, with perfect for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation.
tf 133 South Seventh street, Philadelphia.

Matrimony Made Easy;
Or Mysteries of Making Love fully explained, with specimen Love Letters. Price 10 cents. Send order to Box 3,410 P. O., N. Y.
tf

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, Instructive and Comic. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
900 HUNT & CO., 27 Ann St., N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also contains Hostetter's Secret, by which you can mix all kinds of Ganse; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Cordials; Counterfeiting and Detecting Poison; Ventriloquism Made Easy; Information of Incognito; Letter to Ladies how to gain the Love of any one, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents. Address Box 5,057 P. O., New York.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.
You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention urgently needed by everybody. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50 cents, that retails for $6, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 529tf

A Sure Method of Winning at all the games of chance, by any boy, sent by mail for 25 cents. Cards $1 per pack, or $9 per dozen. Address W. L. WOLCOTT, Manufacturer of Playing Cards, No. 43 and 47 Nassau street, New York.

COLORED CARTES DE VISITE
SIXTY CENTS PER DOZEN.
I will send upon receipt of 60 cents 12 Cartes de Visite of French Gravures in different positions, or the whole set of 50 different pictures, $3.
545-8 X. ALLIE, 61 Nassau street, New York.

Something New.
Sent by wholesale and retail to sell, 20 Novel and Useful Articles; profits large. Send stamp for circular.
tf S. W. RICH & CO.,
83 Nassau Street, N. Y.

OUR PUBLICATIONS!
Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE 10 CENTS, OR $4 A YEAR.
Frank Leslie's Ilustracion Americana,
OR SPANISH-AMERICAN NEWSPAPER,
Published Weekly.
Within the United States, $12 yearly, in currency.
Ready to be sent by mails for Cuba, Mexico, Central America, Brazils, Peru, Chile, and all the South-American Republics—$13 yearly, in gold.
Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,
Or German Illustrated Newspaper,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or $4 a year.
Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or yearly, $4.
The Great Magazine of Fashion.
Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine,
Published Monthly—price $3 50, yearly.
Frank Leslie's New Monthly.
Price 15 cents, or $1 50 a year.
Frank Leslie's Children's Friend,
Published Monthly—price 10 cents, yearly $1.
Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun.
Published Monthly—$1 50 a year.
Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Dropsy—The action of these remedies on the blood, clears the too rapid effusion from the serous membranes in the stomach, and by equalizing the flow of the secretions, quickly restores the healthy condition. The Ointment penetrates through the pores of the skin, drains, by evaporation, the fluid collected in the cellular tissue, and ultimately performs a radical cure. The Pills purify the blood and strengthen the digestive organs. Sold by all Druggists.

Cough No More
DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM for Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.
524-575

Short-Hand Without a Master.
By which the method of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, Trials, etc., may be attained in a few hours. Sent free. WITH SUPPLEMENT. Price 25 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York.
tf

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY, ST. NICHOLAS BLOCK.
Photographic Materials,
STEREOSCOPIC GOODS,
War Views, Scenery, Groups, etc., etc.
Photo Albums, great assortment. Cartes de Visite of Generals, Actors, etc., etc. French, English and American novelties.

WONDERFULLY STRANGE!
MADAME M. FERREGAULT,
Who has astonished the scientific classes of Paris and London, has now permanently located herself at Albany, N. Y. Madame Ferregault, by the aid of her wonderful instrument, known as the Horoscope, guarantees to produce a likeness of the future husband or wife of the patron, together with the date of marriage, personal appearance, occupation, &c. Has no humbug, as thousands of testimonials can assert, as well as the press of the United States, and that the picture is what it purports to be. By stating age, height, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and inclosing 50 cents, and stamped envelope, addressed to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail. Address
Madame M. M. FERREGAULT,
643-51o Drawer 202, Albany, N. Y.

A CURIOSITY!!
Free to All. A Rare Treat.
Gentlemen, do not fail to send a two cent stamp, and receive a GREAT PAPER, replete with the choicest literature and rare Illustrations. Sent Gratis.
CHARNES T. MACKEY,
307 Broadway, New York.

MAGIC CARDS.
Magic Cards, with illustrated directions. Price 50 cents per pack. Marked Cards, 50 cents per pack, or $4 per dozen. Address C. WILLIS & CO., No. 107 Broadway, New York.
tf

Mainnay's Cresco-Mustachio.
Whiskers and Mustaches forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks, without injury to the skin, by using DR. MAINNAY'S CRESCO MUSTACHIO. A certain remedy. Prepared by a modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost marvellous manner. It has been used by people of Paris and London with the most flattering success. The many testimonials in our possession attested, and its entire satisfaction is not equal in every instance, we will guarantee to every purchaser. Sent by mail, sealed and post-paid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials free. Orders orders only to the sole agents, BURROWS, SHAW & CO., Box 26, West Troy, N. Y.
tf

$200 a Month made with STENCIL TOOLS. Don't pull money for a free catalogue containing full particulars. Address S. M. SPENCER, Brattleboro, Vt.
546-9

Fresh Garden and Flower Seeds, prepaid by mail, at the shortest rate. Also, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, 150,000 Fruit Stocks, Grape Vines, Strawberries, &c., of the best kinds. Priced Descriptive Catalogues, gratis, to any address. Wholesale Lists for the Trade. Agents wanted.
B. M. WATSON,
Old Colony Nurseries and Seed Establishment,
547-52 Plymouth, Mass.

300 per cent. profit for Agents.—These Genteel Articles every where needed, sell at sight. All sent, with particulars, free, by mail for 35 cents. Address E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

THE GREAT NEW ENGLAND REMEDY
DR. J. W. POLAND'S
WHITE PINE COMPOUND.
"It was early in the spring of 1858 that this compound was originated. A member of my family was afflicted with a severe cough, in the throat, attended with a distressible cough. I had for months previous thought that a preparation could be got from the White Pine bark of white pine, might be so compounded as to be very useful in the case of the throat I had hung. To test the value of it in the case alluded to, I compounded a small quantity of the medicine that I had hung. Tasted and gave it in teaspoonful doses. The result was exceedingly gratifying. Within two days the irritation of the throat was removed, the cough subsided, and a speedy cure was effected. Since that time I have sent some to a lady in Londonderry, N. H., who had been suffering for some weeks with a bad cough, accompanied by a sudden cold, and had raised mucous streaked with blood. She received instant relief, and by the use of some three ounces, or 10 ounces of it, and got well. J. B. Clark, Esq., editor of the Manchester Daily Mirror, made a trial of the same preparation in the case of a severe cold, and was very complimentary. He was so highly pleased with its results, and so confident of success attending its sales if placed before the public, that he finally persuaded me to give it a name, and send it abroad to benefit the suffering. In November, 1859, I first advertised it under the name of White Pine Compound. In two years from that time my hand was scheduled in Manchester alone $100 worth, where it took the lead of all the cough remedies in the market, and it still maintains that position. There is good reason for all this; it is very pleasant to the taste, healing in its nature, is warming to the stomach, and pleasant withal to the taste, and is exceedingly cheap.
"As a remedy for kidney complaints, the White Pine Compound stands unrivalled. It was originally prepared for that purpose; but a person, in using it for a cough, was not a day cured of the cough, but was also cured of a kidney difficulty of 10 years' standing. Since that a substantial document has been issued by Messrs. Read & Co. the same compound, and have been completely cured."
The above was written by Dr. J. W. Poland, Since then, as in Manchester, the White Pine Compound has taken the lead in all St. Cough remedies, and the preparations for the cure of Kidney difficulties, in every State, has given universal satisfaction throughout the New England States.
In the past year has given great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an efficient cure for this, for that, and for every large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the medicine, and the people where it is prepared are high in the praise.
One bottle of this Compound is generally sufficient to remove a bad cough, and frequently I have known persons to have a cold entirely removed in two days by taking one bottle. The White Pine Compound is compounds la a large dose. I sometimes put a little white sugar to sweeten up with it, when taken as syrup to bed.
The limits to which I purposely confine myself in this circular will not allow me to say more concerning which I would like to give in favor of the White Pine Compound. It is universally acknowledged by all who use it to be unfailed to such a popularity among those whose opinion is valuable that it needs only to be seen, possibly, in part, prompt me to record more here than hurried people will have patience to read; so I will close, hereby recommending to all who need a Cough or Kidney remedy to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound.
TESTIMONIALS.
A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and, indeed, from all classes of society, speaking in the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.
Augusta, Kennebec County, Me., says:
"I find the White Pine Compound to be very effective for Coughs, Colds, and other pulmonary complaints, but also in affections of the kidneys, debility of the stomach, and general kidneyd organs."
Rev. J. K. Chase, of Rumney, N. H., writes:
"I have for years regarded your White Pine Compound as a valuable remedy. Indeed, I have found it regard it as even more efficacious and valuable than ever. I have used it in my own personal for a cold, and it works charmingly."
Rev. H. D. Dober, of West Randolph, Vt., who is a practicing physician, and Clergyman, in a letter to Dr. Poland, dated May 1, 1863, says: "I find it an excellent medicine in kidney disease."
The White Pine Compound, advertise at length in our columns, is not only as to its name inviting, but is a highly appreciated remedy. Dr. Poland, the inventor, has the confidence of the many who know him, a confidence that has grown with that laboring for nearly many years as a Baptist minister. His experience as a minister has led him to study especially subjects related to his medical discovery."—Boston Watchman and Reflector.
Any difficulty that the public may find in the White Pine Compound, in a leader of the daily, thus speaks of the Compound: "The White Pine Compound is advertised at length in our columns, and we are happy to learn that the demand for it is increasing beyond all former expectations. It is the very best medicine for coughs and colds we have ever known, and no family for one week will ever be without it. We speak from our own knowledge; it is sure to kill a cold, and almost as sure to cure. The greatest inventions come by accident, and its singular that the White Pine Compound, for colds and coughs, should prove to be the greatest remedy for kidney difficulties in the world. But so it is. We cannot tell it, so many testimonials come to us from well-known men, besides the thousands of cases we know from that we know he will not countenance that what is Wrong. Dr. Poland is a practicing physician, and prescribes roots and remedies for his ailments, with a delicate, consumptive look, almost as much as any one could desire. He made the discovery which has saved himself, and called out from hundreds of others the strongest testimonials possible. We have known Dr. Poland for years, and have seen his remarkable cures in others, spiritual men, and we are glad to state that we believe whatever he says about his White Pine Compound."
Should you think favorably of this medicine, be careful, when purchasing, that it is the WHITE PINE COMPOUND that you send to you, as we know that other preparations have been palmed off for it by unprincipled dealers.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND
is manufactured at the
NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT,
160 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON,
GEO. W. SWETT, M.D., Proprietor,
under the supervision of
REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.

Sold by wholesale and retail dealers in Medicines everywhere. Also: DEMAS BARNES, Park Row, New York; P. O. WELLS & CO., 112 Franklin street, New York; JOHN WELLS & CO., 112 Franklin street, New York; BURNSTON, HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia; BURNSTON, HOLLOWAY & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio; JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio; COLLINS & BROTHERS, St. Louis, Mo., General Agents for the West.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH.

If you want the best fitting, strongest, and most serviceable paper collar ever offered to the public, don't fail to purchase the

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR

The most Economical Collar ever Invented.

It having the embossed or pricd stitch equally well on both sides.

The following styles are now made:

Patent REVERSIBLE Embossed PAPER COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Bank Note Paper PAPER COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Printed Stitch PAPER COLLARS

To be obtained all Furnishing Goods Dealers throughout the country.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & Co., Agents,
841-830 Winthrop Square, Boston.

To Nervous Sufferers of both Sexes.

A Medical Gentleman having the past ten years cured a great many sufferers who had undergone the most expensive modes of treatment without success, is still willing to assist others, by sending (free), on the receipt of a post-paid addressed envelope, a copy of the formula of cure employed. Direct to DR. JOHN M. DAGNALL, 9 Clinton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. tlo

VIOLINS AND BOWS

Sent by express to all parts of the United States on receipt of the following prices:
GERMAN—Red or Brown—$2 50, $3, $4, $5, $6, $8.
BOHEMIAN—$5, $7, $9, $11, $13, $15, $17, $19.
FRENCH—Blocked and Lined—$6, $10, $12, $15, $20.
ITALIAN—$5, $10, $14, $16, $18, $20, $30, $35.
OLD MASTERS—Very Fine Tone—$40, $50, $75 to $300.
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description, at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for price list. Especial attention given to this department.
o FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery.

$100 per Month to Agents.

Business permanent and honest. Particulars sent free, or Sample of Goods (which retail at $6 40) for 50 cents. Address C. L. VAN ALLEN, No. 58 Beaver street, N. Y. o o

CEDAR CAMPHOR

For Moths. Use it early, and you save by killing swarms now in embryo. Sold by every Druggist. HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Boston. o

ROGERS' FRAGRANT ODONTOLINE FOR THE TEETH.

For Sale by Druggists, Fancy Goods Dealers and Perfumers.
o

c60w

GROVER & BAKER'S

HIGHEST PREMIUM

Elastic Stitch and Lock Stitch SEWING MACHINES,

495 BROADWAY, N. Y. otf

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newbern, Fort Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 66 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. O00o

WHEELER & WILSON'S

HIGHEST PREMIUM

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES,

625 Broadway, New York. o

Wanted! Agents!!

$150 per month, to sell the celebrated COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING-MACHINE. Price, $15. The greatest invention of the age. Send for descriptive Circulars. Address SECOLD & CO., Chicago, Ill., or Cleveland, O
547-500

FLORENCE

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES.

Highest Premium Gold Medal

FAIR AMERICAN INSTITUTE, 1865.

The best in the World. They have the Reversible Feed Motion. They have a perfect Self-Adjusting Stitch-Re Tension. They make four separate and distinct Stitches on one and the same machine. They have many advantages over other machines.

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO., 505 Broadway, New York.
667-490

MISSING BOY.

GUSTAVE FROHMAN, AGED 11 YEARS. - SEE PAGE 46.

$1. TIMEKEEPER. $1.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER and marvel of ingenuity. The European Peabed Timekeeper. "The most wonderful invention of modern times." "Chronicle" warranted correct. Needs no key or winding up. Price $1 each in Gold or Silver Gilt Cases. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of Price. Address J. W. DELAMELE & CO., 200 Broadway, N. Y. tlo

Old Eyes Made New, without Spectacles, Doctor or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Comfort and Cure for the Ruptured.—Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Croup.—How it may be easily Prevented; also Cause and Cure. Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Confidential Information for the Married.—Sent free in sealed envelope. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Medical Common Sense.—400 pages—100 Illustrations, $1 50. Sent by mail everywhere, postpaid. Contents Table sent free. Address the Author, E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y. cowo

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Three of different powers for $1. Address o00o F. B. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 69 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $80 each.
o639-45

100 Photographs of FEMALE BEAUTIES sent, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address B. L. FOX, 34 Varick street, New York city. 548-510

ORTNER & HOULE,

2 St. James's Street, London, England, Practical Engravers, Designers and Jewelers by Special Appointment to the Queen and Prince of Wales.

MONOGRAMS AND HERALDIC DIES

for Note Paper, &c., in the most unequaled and artistic style. Orders executed on receipt of money order or reference in England. Three illuminated specimen sheets of Monograms, &c., &c., for Albums, 5s. each.
547-300

Union Dime Savings Bank.

No. 74 Canal Street, cor. of Varick.
Dep osits from 10 cents to $5,000 received.
Six per cent. interest, free of tax.
Deposits before April 21st draw interest from April 1.
547-500 Assets—$1,809,226.36.

The Little Joker and a FINELY COLORED PHOTOGRAPH sent in a sealed envelope for 25 cents. Address, Box 5,067, P. O., New York. tf

UNITED STATES PRIZE CONCERT.

TO BE DRAWN AT

Crosby's Opera House, Chicago,

MAY 28, 1866.

125,000 VALUABLE PRIZES,

Valued at $492,575 25!

Will be presented to Ticket-holders, including $100,000 in Greenbacks; one fine Residence on Wabash avenue, $10,000; 12 City Residences, in good localities, valued at from $2,000 to $5,000 each; 19 City Lots, valued at $5,000; 40 Grand and Square Pianos, from $300 to $600 each; 10 Melodeons; 600 Gents' and Ladies' Gold, Diamond, and Silver Watches, valued at $76,000; 100 Diamond Rings and Pins, valued at $8,700; 500 Sewing Machines, valued at $8,750. $2" For full list of Prizes, see Circulars.

The Drawing will take place before the Concert, on the Stage of the Opera House, where 10,000 persons can witness it. A Committee will be appointed by the audience to superintend the same. All Purchasers and Agents will be supplied with correct lists of drawing as soon as published.

Tickets are for sale at the principal Hotels, Book and Music Stores in the city, and at our Office, 133 Dearborn street, price $1 each; sent by mail on receipt of price and stamp for return postage.

$2" Good and Reliable Agents wanted in every city, town and village in the United States, to whom great inducements are offered

SPECIAL TERMS, OR CLUB RATES.—Any person procuring a club of five or more names for tickets, and forwarding to the money for the same, will be allowed the following per-centage, viz.: We will send—

5 Tickets to one address for	-	$4 50	40 Tickets to one address for - - $35 00
10 Tickets to one address for	-	9 00	60 Tickets to one address for - - 45 00
20 Tickets to one address for	-	17 50	AND
30 Tickets to one address for	-	25 20	100 Tickets to one address for - - 85 00

In every case send the name of the Subscriber, their P. O. address, with town, county and State, in full. Money by Draft, P. O. Order, Express, or in Registered Letters, may be sent at our risk.

All communications should be addressed to

WIGGINS, BRADFORD & Co.,
133 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill. Post-office Drawer 6913.

References.

Hon. Wilkinson, ex-Senator of Minnesota.
Hon. Geo. V. Lawrence, M. C. of Pennsylvania.
Hon. Alex. Randall, ex-Governor of Wisconsin.
Hon. Wm. Montgomery, ex-M. C. of Pennsylvania.
Hon. Major Dan Mace, ex-M. C. of Indiana.
Hon. Ira J. Laycock, of Kansas.
Hon. Wm. Lotlingwell, Lyons, Iowa.
Hon. Joseph Knox, of Chicago.
Hon. C. Graves Smith, of Minnesota.
Jacob Forsyth, Agent, M. S. R. R., Chicago, Ill.
M. Kronberg & Co., Importers of Watches, Chicago.
Mansell, White & Co., New Orleans, La.

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are setting and building. Present population, 7,000. The beauty with which this place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

To all wanting Farms.

Send for Circular, containing Map of Vineland, and Price List of Lots. Address
CHARLES K. LANDIS,
Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

$7 FINE WATCHES $7
AT OLD PRICES.

English Silver Watches -	$ 6, $8, $10
Pure Silver Hunting Lepines -	$10 Each.
Fine 18 Karat Gold-Plated Watches	$12, $15, $20.
Fancy Compass and Thermometer Watches -	$15, $20.
Silver Hunting Lovers -	$30, $35.
Ladies' Gold Enameled Watches	$30, $35 to $75.
Gold Silver American Levers -	$30.

All kinds of Good Watches, low.
CATTLY BROTHERS, Importers,
tlo 102 Nassau street, N. Y.

ITCH. WINKLON'S ITCH.
Salt Rheum, OINTMENT Salt Rheum.
Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cure Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 Cents; by sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, Mass., will be forwarded free by mail. For sale by all Druggists. 541-650

BEAUTY.—Auburn, Brown, Flaxen, and Silken CURLS produced by the use of Professor De Rezex's FERMER LE CHEVEUX. One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy, massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price, by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, 285 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 542-540

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S AGRAFFE PIANOS.

101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. tlo

50 PER-CENT SAVED By USING

B. T. BABBITT'S

SALERATUS-SAVING SOAP.

This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the most delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for washing, which will require little effort to produce a fine Soap. It may be used in hard or salt water. It will remove paint, grease, tar and stains of all kinds. One pound warranted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons handsome soft soap from one pound of the Soap. Each bar is wrapped in a circular containing full directions for use, printed in English and German. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St.,
New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP. Fifty per cent. saved by using B. T. BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH OR READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other made. One key in the wrapper to every 10 cents. One pound is pearls, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 12 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of Soft Soap. One pound will make 6 gallons of Hard Soap. Less than this is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St.,
New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED By USING

B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS, B. "made from common salt." Bread made with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing left common salt, water and soap. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington street, New York.

50 PER CENT. SAVED BY USING B. T. BABBITT'S STAR YEAST POWDER. Light Biscuit or nice Cake may be made with this "Star Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No shortening is required when sweet milk is used. Nos. 64 to 74 Washington street, New York. o

Employment for Both Sexes.—Energetic persons of either sex in want of safe, respectable and profitable employment, can procure such by sending their address to J. M. D., Box 153, Brooklyn, N. Y. 4to

Dale's Tooth Powder.

Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., Proprietors. 543-650

Children's Carriages—every variety. L. P. THELIN, 310 Broadway, opposite St. Nicholas. 540-52cow

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE!

We are in want of a few responsible Agents in every Town and Village in the United States, to sell Certificates of Shares in the National Prize Distribution!

The Agency can be conducted without interfering with other business, or it will give any one permanent employment, and a good appointment. Those making agents the canvass for us sure of being liberally compensated.

Send a stamp (if convenient) for General Terms to Agents, and address

L. M. HARRIS & CO.,
Managers National Distribution,
547-300 Boston, Mass.

TO CURE

Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DYSPEPSIA, GOUT, GRAVEL and Disorders arising from excesses, use

SIEGLANDER'S Extract Buchu.

Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, B. BARNES & CO., New York; and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents. 548-500

WHISKERS and MUSTACHES forced to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using DR. SEVIGNE'S RESTAURATEUR DE PILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Nouns of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, 285 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 543-540

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1866, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 550 — Vol. XXII.] NEW YORK, APRIL 14, 1866. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

The Loan Bill—Specie Payments.

NOTWITHSTANDING the favorable revenue returns for the current year, which promise to be greatly in excess of the most sanguine anticipations of the Government, and which will cover all demands on the Treasury for the annual expenses of the nation and payment of interest on the national debt, besides yielding a surplus for the reduction of the same, still there must be some anxiety for the future of our finances, resulting from the fact that a very large proportion of our short date obligations must fall due within the next two years, and must either be paid or substituted by securities having longer to run. The amounts falling due semi-annually (apart from the regular expenditures of Government) between this date and the 1st of January, 1869, are as follows:

On or before	June 30, 1866	$138,674,874
"	December 31, 1866	47,685,000
"	June 30, 1867	8,471,000
"	December 31, 1867	310,960,000
"	June 30, 1868	369,415,350
"	December 31, 1868	297,364,482
Total		$1,201,680,606

It is not to be supposed for a moment that the revenues of the country will admit of the liquidation of these large sums as they fall due; although, from present indications, it is believed that at least $200,000,000 a year may be available to that end. If so, half of these obligations may be paid off and canceled by the 1st of January, 1869. For the remaining six hundred and odd millions, we must substitute other obligations, as we have already said, of longer date. In other words—postpone payment.

To enable him to do so with greatest ease and advantage, the Secretary of the Treasury submitted to Congress the plan or draft of a law, giving him certain powers additional to those conferred on him by existing laws, to be used in his discretion for our best financial interests. This plan has been before Congress, reported substantially, we believe, as it was submitted, by the Committee on Finance, under the name of "The Loan Bill." In general, the bill authorized the Secretary to retire Treasury notes or any other obligations of the Government, including, of course, legal tenders or "greenbacks," in exchange for any description of bonds previously authorized, "to such an amount, in such manner, and at such rate as he may think advisable." It authorized him, also, to issue bonds to be made payable, principal and interest, in any country and in the coin of the same outside of the United States—such bonds, however, not to bear more than five per cent. interest.

When the bill came before Congress, an opposition developed itself among a class of men who may be called "inflationists," and who believe that the prosperity of the country is really promoted by a redundant currency, and that the nominal values of things in depreciated and irredeemable paper are real and substantial, instead of false and deceptive. Knowing the views of the Secretary as to the importance and necessity of as speedily as possible bringing the currency of the country back to the specie standard, they saw that the power conferred by the bill would enable him to put his financial views in practice, and there were enough of them influenced, in various ways and by various considerations, to so limit that power, as to prohibit the withdrawal and funding of more than $10,000,000 of "greenbacks" or United States notes, during the first six months from the passage of the act, and restricting subsequent withdrawals to $4,000,000 a month.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH IN SESSION—RECEIVING REPORTS OF THE INSPECTORS, AT POLICE HEADQUARTERS, MULBERRY STREET, NEW YORK.

In this way, they contended, "the shock" of a return to specie payments would be prevented. They might have said, with much truth, that in this way the fool's paradise of an irredeemable paper currency would be continued for a dozen years—for, we are told, it would fully take that time to withdraw the Government notes, under the slow operations of the law. That is to say, unreflecting people in refusing to accept them except at large premiums, in exchange for buns! For confectioner, in our little game of mutual deception, read "the rest of mankind."

Only last night was the action of the House in refusing power to the Secretary, who has so judiciously conducted our finances, of placing our bonds abroad, in the currency of the various countries where our securities are popular, and paying the interest in the financial centres of those countries, at a maximum rate of five per cent. It is a mere expression of opinion on our part, but based upon some direct knowledge of European markets, that they would absorb, at lower rates, double the amount of any given issue of bonds, if loans were put in, to them, an intelligible currency, with the interest payable at some accessible point. Every man who has had the placing of American securities, such as railway or mining shares, or bonds, in any continental country, knows that it is indispensable to have them expressed in the currency of the country where they are sought to be sold. Our national securities have been more in demand in Germany than in any other country; but that demand has been so much with small and denominated capitalists, as among the middling classes and people of moderate means, who believe in the United States, and sympathize with its institutions.

We are not discussing the advantages or disadvantages, the desirableness or otherwise, of having our securities held abroad; but it is very certain that the foreign demand for them prevented our markets from being choked during the war, and has contributed, in a degree, to keeping up their value here. It is questionable whether our people, who can lend their money at so much higher rates, will care to take five per cent. for it; and yet we doubt if they would feel satisfied if the Government were to tax them in order to pay six or seven per cent. on its heavy obligations, when that Government could place them at five per cent., no matter whether here or abroad. This is the simple question: Can the Government place a greater amount of its obligations on the continent of Europe at five per cent. by the simple expedient proposed by the Secretary, than it could at six per cent. without it?

We will venture to say that every one qualified by experience to speak on the matter, will answer, "It can." At any rate the Government could only fail, and then we have would be done. We have never seen nor heard any valid reason for denying the Secretary this option, and we hope the bill will yet be so amended as to restore the provision to which we refer.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, APRIL 14, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE—We have no traveling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are impostors.

Uniform Bankrupt Law.

We believe the United States is the only great commercial nation which has no uniform or general bankrupt law. This is the more surprising from the fact that our people are more enterprising and active in business, more adventurous, reckless if you will, and consequently standing in greater need of such a law. An unfortunate merchant, inventor, or manufacturer, failing in business, has no resource, unless he may be able to compound with his creditors, except to break up all his relations and recommence life in a distant State or Territory, where his accumulations are not liable to be swept away by insatiable creditors. Hardly any of our readers can fail to recall some instance of a really honorable and useful man being totally crushed, and society deprived of the advantages of his energy and powers, under the plight of obligations which it would be utterly hopeless for him to attempt to meet, but which, if a chance of success were open to him, he might ultimately be able to pay.

The founders of our Government knew the necessity for some such law, and provided for its enactment. The Constitution expressly says: "The Congress shall have the power to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy throughout the United States."

The authority for such a law is complete, and it seems strange that it has not been exercised. For two sessions one of the ablest commercial lawyers of America, Mr. Jenckes, of Rhode Island, has directed his attention to the framing of such a law—one which, in all its essential provisions has met the approval of our leading business men. This has been under consideration in Congress for three years, and its provisions have been amply discussed and vindicated. The constitutionality of it and the expediency of its adoption have been refuted and silenced. Yet when it came up in the House, on the 23th of March, it was defeated by a majority of 11 in refusing to close the vote, by laying the motion to reconsider it failed, and so it may be reconsidered, and possibly passed. Should be succeed in securing a sufficient number of votes to this end by accepting amendments not fatal to the principle and practical operations of the law we hope Mr. Jenckes will accept them. The vote may be corrected by subsequent legislation. Let the first step toward a general bankrupt law be taken, in any event.

Collectorship of the Port.

THE delay in reference to the appointment of Collector of the Port of New York is something of an enigma.

It is now two months since the place became vacant, through the death of Mr. King, and the business of this department, we should suppose, would suffer more or less in consequence of the vacancy. Except there, the appointment is delayed not certainly for the want of candidates, for their name is legion, though the prominent ones may be reduced to half a dozen or less.

Among the most prominent, and from all accounts, the one who is likely to be the successful applicant, is Henry A. Smythe, President of the Central National Bank.

Mr. Smythe is one of our most popular and successful merchants, possessed of wonderful business energy and talent, and always has, just in the prime of life, and capable of sustaining any amount of physical or mental application. We believe in politics he is a democrat, conservative in his views, and bound to no particular clique or interest. He is one of those who seem to have friends everywhere, and belonging, as he does, to the most mercantile interests of the city and country, his appointment would gratify that and other influential classes, while it could offend no person or party.

His selection for the place would not only be a popular and judicious movement, but exceedingly gratifying to hosts of personal friends of all parties.

AMONG the simplest, most objectionable, and seditious plans of Confederate organization designed to meet the exigencies of the times, and enter into a permanent "reconstruction" of the Union, is that proposed by Jefferson Davis, of Geneva. It provides that every male citizen of every State of the United States, who is 21 years of age, of sound mind, and not a pauper, nor convicted of any infamous crime, and who can read the Constitution of the United States in the English language, and write his name, and shall have resided in the State of which he is a citizen for one year immediately preceding any election in such State, shall be an elector of all elective officers or legislators chosen at such election; and that after the census to be taken in the year 1870, and each succeeding census, representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included in the United States of America, according to the number in each State of electors qualified as declared in the preceding Article II., and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States according to the value of the real and personal taxable property situate in each State, not belonging to the State or to the United States.

THE republic of Bolivia has joined the South American alliance against Spain. This alliance represents the following territory and population:

	Area in square miles.	Population.
Bolivia	274,000	1,987,000
Chile	175,000	1,819,000
Ecuador	210,000	1,040,000
Peru	276,000	2,500,000
Total	1,621,000	6,346,000

As the area of Spain is estimated at 170,000 square miles, and the population at 16,000,000, the united Republics contain about two-fifths of the population of Spain, but exceed that power in territory more than five times. Bolivia, like Ecuador, cannot furnish, for the present, any considerable addition to the allied fleet; but the formal alliance greatly adds to the power of resistance thus far displayed by Chile, and is a new guarantee for the final success of the republican institutions of South America and their struggle with Europe.

SECRETARY MCCULLOCH announces that the May interest due on five-twenties would be paid early in April. The amount of gold required is about $22,000,000.

THE entire military force of the rebel "Confederacy," on the 4th of February, 1865, was 152,000 effective men, distributed as follows:

Under Lee, in Virginia	64,000
Command of Hood and Hicks, North Carolina	9,000
Command of Beauregard and Hardee, Savannah	22,000
Command of Dick Taylor, E. K. Hill and Howell Cobb, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi	7,000
Forces here west of the Mississippi, under Kirby Smith, Magruder and Price	50,000
Total	152,000

THE expression "white livered," had its origin in the auspices taken by the Greeks and Romans before battle, in which the examination of the pleura, that is white and thin, formed an essential part. If the liver were the usual shape, and of a blood-red color, the omen was favorable; if pale or livid, it was an augury of defeat. The transition from the victim to the inquirer was easy, and a coward was held to sustain that omen, was called "a man of a white liver."

A NEW "Reform Bill" is before the British House of Commons. It proposes to reduce the qualification of county voters from £50 to £14 occupancy. This will add a large rental, and to lodgers paying £10 or upward for apartments. The measure will add about 400,000 to the number of actual voters. It also proposes to disfranchise the electors of Sandwich, in the south of the island, for the great abuses; Tavistock has 453 electors, and two members; Totnes, 350 electors, and two members; Honiton 380 electors, and two members.

THE evidence of Gen. Lee before the Joint Committee on Reconstruction, of Congress has been published. In the generality of his replies to order, "I don't know" is the sum of most of his answers. The impression to be derived from the whole testimony is that Gen. Lee knows less about the condition of things and the state of public feeling in Virginia than any other man in it. He is not even sure of the question whether it would be possible to convict Jeff. Davis of treason before a Virginia jury, even if called on to do so by the force of the facts adducing his acts to be treasonable. He maintains still the doctrine of primary State alliance, and that the duty of the citizen is "to follow his State." He knows of no outrages committed on Union prisoners in Libby or elsewhere. He does not say human nature is the doctrine, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise!" When examined last winter before the committee of fifteen Congress, Gen. Lee was more decided in his opinions, and more emphatic in his statements. He then testified that the proposed employment of negroes came too late, and when asked if he would take command of the rebel forces, "with unlimited powers," he replied that he could not say that he would, because he could save the Confederacy." Yet, with this conviction he went into the field and fought a series of bloody battles, at a cost of at least 25,000 lives. Gen. Lee will require to explain this conduct, or his reputation must remain for ever under a cloud.

GREAT BRITAIN has really something to do to keep pace with the ambitious offspring of its "royal house." The heir apparent has been properly pensioned. So has his sister, married to the heir presumptive of Prussia. Now it is asked by "her Majesty's advisers" that the second prince, Helena, who is to marry a Danish Lackland, shall have the handsome annuity of £30,000 a year. Prince Alfred, the sailor-boy, who used to thrash the rather weak-headed Prince of Wales, at school, comes of age, and wants the nation to give him £75,000 a year, or three times as much as we give our President! We hope it will pay.

LABOR IN THE SOUTH.

WILKINSON COUNTY, MISS., March 13, 1866.

To the Editor of Frank Leslie's Newspaper:

In your Illustrated Weekly of March 24th, under the head of "Events," I find the following: "We could suggest a locality in the great city, where some thousands of hard-working, sober emigrant and laborers, with large families, can be found, * * inhabiting dark, unwholesome tenant-houses, paying heavy rents for such stifled room for sweep. And you would these over-worked and ill-housed people to be get away from their present misery?" etc., etc. Now allow me to suggest to them to come South. We need them. In the late war we staked our labor upon the sword, and lost. We accept the issue, however; we have made up our minds to abide by it; and now we want labor. You may ask where are our former slaves? Ah! where? Thousands are dead, large numbers are in the cities, towns, and villages, throughout the Atlantic North and South. At a low estimate, the South is short 1,000,000 laborers for the fields. Those we have left are not industrious, do not like to work, and therefore we want more in numbers. But do not think because we ask for laborers, that we wish to crowd the negro out. It is not so. He is now free, and we are willing for him to be so, and to take him and do for him what we can. Not take away who preach freedom on one hand with the Bible, and with the other hand holding by the hilt the sword of extermination or colonization. We are not able to afford such charity if we would. I have talked with a large number of planters, and the large majority are in favor of extending to the negroes every right except suffrage. Religion, education, labor and pay, all will be afforded them; homes and comfort for themselves and families; but it will take a little time to accomplish all this. We have to organize a little of our lost strength, and the more readily to do this, we must have labor.

Thousands of acres of rich lands are lying idle for want of it. I formerly employed two hundred hands, besides hands. This year I have started a colored land to laborers, free of rent, to put up fences and give them proper tillage. To the laborer I have, I furnish everything, and give them one-third of the crops of cotton, corn, etc. My calculations are to make six bales of cotton, with a sufficiency of corn, to each laborer. If they remain, and are faithful, they will, at the end of the year, possess $300, cash, and have their corn, potatoes, etc., for an other year. I have them bound in a contract expressly binding on myself as on them. They work five days in the week—ten hours each day.

If we succeed this year, we will know better how to manage hereafter; for, mind you, this is with me an experiment to all of us—I mean, by us, Southerners. I have, myself, but a few tried free labor, and did not succeed. They were mostly Northern men. The freedmen complained greatly of being swindled by their employers. But if we succeed or not, we can take a few laborers that will work. We are getting ridder our premises of the "lazy, worthless," and if I can come here and work, he can easily make from $1 to $3 per day at farming, or in any other employment he chooses. A good carpenter, or blacksmith, is welcome in this country, makes his $2 50 to $5 per day. Then let your benevolent men, for charitably, contribute a few cents funds to ship off the surplus poor, whom you say would be "glad to leave their prison-homes." Instead of spending your money on deaf and dumb heroes, let them give it to the lowly and the humble poor. Organize societies, and encourage the poor to go to laborers. Have agencies North, South and West, throughout the land. Let the poor that desire to be free go free to a home where they can earn a good living and breathe pure air, and make themselves a home for their old age and their children.

MISSISSIPPIAN.

FRANK LESLIE'S "ILLUSTRACION AMERICANA."

AMONG the many evidences of the rapidity with which New York is becoming the intellectual as well as financial metropolis of the continent, none * will be more striking than the publication of the first * * an Illustrated Newspaper in the Spanish language for the Spanish-American States. Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper is before us, and is without exception the most beautiful illustrated periodical of the day. We make no exception in favor of those published in London or Paris. Hitherto the Spanish American States have received their illustrated papers almost exclusively from Europe—not so much from choice as from their inability to obtain them elsewhere. This deficiency will now be supplied, and a large and important population supplied to them, thus binding closer and closer the American Continental States. Spain is pygmy compared to France and Paris as a resort for Cubans, Mexicans, Peruvians, and our other continental neighbors and friends; and the publication of Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper of the "ILLUSTRACION AMERICANA." It is published at $12 a year.

TOWN GOSSIP.

THERE is one terrible nuisance through all the streets and public places of New York that is unchecked by the police, and which is a disgrace to ever by the authorities, and yet in one of the most fearful sores on the body politic.

We allude to the hordes of beggar girls in every street and place of public resort in the city. One cannot move about without a gang crowding about him, thrusting before the perpetual song of "Please, give me a penny!" and "Please, give me bread, see perhaps a wretched, ragged, shocking girl, ranging from 4 years to 12, whining out the words with a half impudent, half appealing look that is perfectly sickening. In many cases the appeal is answered, sometimes from pity, but oftener to get rid of the annoyance, and another step taken in the downward career of these inevitable children of sin.

It seems wonderful that in a great Christian community like this such terrible misery can be viewed by the people with careless eyes, and in the midst of the whirl of fashion and excitement can absolve them from the fearful responsibility of the soul and body being lost.

Of all the poor children are speculations in the hands of grown people, who watch them warily from some side street, and in proportion to the cause they suppose the amounts they get by their efforts, punishing or rewarding them according to their success. Some of these begging children are the gain of stockkeepers, some peddlers of ballads, tooth-picks, and small wares, but by with all, the money is the same. "Please give me a penny!" Have we no remedy for this? Have we no means, in this great and wealthy city, to deal with this infliction, of converting the evil that is growing every day, adding fair to fill our streets with women of the most degraded description, and, in time, our prisons and poorhouses with thieves and drunkards, before they reach the age when they might be wives and mothers? They are the children of the lowest and worst, who have witnessed more than once some half intoxicated object, in the appearance of a well-dressed man, offer a penny for a kiss, scarce higher than his hip, a glass of ale, or it may be something stronger, in response to her appeal for a penny for bread, which was greedily swallowed. As time goes on she will know how to buy the poison for herself, and complete the ruin that began in the first instance has been forced on her.

It is a question that the enlightened and Christian people we claim to be, we must have some public institution, not one supported by private charity, where all such children may be taken by force if they will not by persuasion, and brought up in the ways of industry and morality. We want legislation that will allow us to take the child from its drunken parent, or from the street when vagrant, begging or stealing, and whether it will or not, (drive it shelter and warmth, teaching and, motherly care. Will not this enlightened age?

It is a favorite theme with the country press to discuss the fashionable extravagance of New York, especially as applying to its women. To a great extent this is true, but we cannot help thinking that this hostility has, as applied to dress and display, has the redemption of keeping them out of more serious mischief. Either women or men must have some occupation, or they fall as naturally into evil ways as a duck runs to water. Among the poorer or middle class of our women, they find plenty of occupation in getting a fine, or taking care of their families; but with the rich, they have only the adornment of their persons for an occupation, and the study of how to make a display. This keeps them out of more serious evil, and has only this bad effect, that it incites their poorer sisters to attempt the same foolish extravagance, which is but apt either to end in the ruin of their husbands, fathers, or themselves.

With common men this is different. Their field for extravagance and display is small, and if enlarged much, creates envy and, unless the parties are very wealthy, to be intrinsically able to bear the pressure—loss of credit. To counter-balance this quietness of dress, they must have some other vice, and as a consequence in N. C. we find more drinking, which are very apt to end badly. There is, then, a question, that in all small villages, there is a larger proportion of real vice, according to population, than in large cities. It is well for country people to fear the wickedness of New York, but it is well known that country people suppose it. It puts the keepers of our gambling-houses and concert-saloons, of low haunts of every kind, who it is forms the large majority of their customers, and they will tell you, strangers from the country, or boys brought up by those who have come to New York, and now do business in this city. We do not mean that the rural districts shall plume themselves on their morality without listening to the truth.

We are pleased to announce the effect of a good work. Since the Working Women's Protective Union opened the rooms for the benefit of the seamstresses and needlewomen of this city, it has sent 7,309 persons to employment; 1,728 persons have called for information on different subjects connected with their various trades and callings; 187 persons have given orders for work; the numbers varying from one to 100; 247 complaints of bad work or of employers' employees have been duly investigated, and 124 cases of extreme distress have been relieved by ascertaining the sufferers with appropriate aid. The field of usefulness which the Union has undertaken to occupy is a very large one, and it is to be hoped that the public will award it a generous support. The officers of the Association are: Hon. G. F. Daly, President; Wm. R. Roberts, Secretary; Moses S. Beach, Treasurer; Mrs. C. M. Kirkland, Superintendent; Charles E. Sprague, Attorney. Donations may be sent to the Treasurer, Moses S. Beach, Esq., Sun office, or to the rooms of the Union, No. 80 White street.

Among the sad facts of the day, we notice that the Empress Carlotta, the fair spouse of Maximilian, of Mexico, has sent to pawn, to Messrs. George Stock & Co., her piano, and has had forwarded a grand instrument, which shows plainly that her necessity is no way pressing, against Yankee music.

The session of the week, in a dramatic way, has been the debut of Mr. J. Newton Gotthold, as Othello, at Winter Garden. He is the brother of Mr. Andrew H. Gotthold, Treasurer, and his plainly the same character on two subsequent nights.

For any new actor to get three nights from a New York manager, at the time, shows that there must be something in him that has attracted somebody. Mr. Gotthold could not be unheralded, therefore, appear at Drury Lane Theatre, London, and from under the hands of Mr. Wallack as an instructor. He is an American, Virginian born, and went to Europe for study.

The house, on the night of the 28th, was densely packed, $1,000 having been taken at the box-office, which, in itself, is an atom wonderfully worth recording, when it is remembered that it was the second night, as he did, before an audience, a large part of whom were present to see, not so much whatever claim there say to the contrary, the worst and most exacting of all audiences. The first was whether it was from the stage created or ebb-cause, we know not, retained them to the very last. The curtain, instead of rising upon Othello like a covey of frightened partridges, five minutes before the appointed time of the play.

Mr. Gotthold is a fine reader, his voice is clear, and his articulation is good. He has a talent, also, for acting, an excellent figure, and his make-up is deserving of all commendation. There is but one thing wanting to make him a great actor, and that can only come with time: we mean confidence. With his physique, he possesses the requisites.

We look upon the debut of Mr. Gotthold as the best that has been given by any actor in the New York stage for many years, and we will be mistaken if he is not to be heard of yet in an emphatic way.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The friends of the Mexican Republic in Washington, have printed a statement of the comparative finances of Mexico and Maximilian during 1865 and 1achral rule. It shows that the total foreign debt of Mexico, on the 1st of January, 1862, was $70,000,000; which is due from Maximilian's government to Spain, $9,500,000 to France, and $3,000,000 to England—$82,500,000. While the annual expenditures of the Republic, as established by Congress in 1861, is stated at $17,000,000, those of the so-called Empire are said to be nearly $50,-000,000. It is also asserted that, in addition to the $130,000,000 as the amount of the public loans put out for Maximilian by France and Spain, by Forced Loans there have been expended from the public revenues of France up to the close of the year 1865, in the vain effort to propagate monarchial institutions on the American continent, $1,000,000 more.

The Planter's Banner, published in St. Mary's Parish, Louisiana, says: "Spring has commenced opening in good earnest. Blue-birds, mock-up-birds, martins and numerous other birds, are so busy as to make us feel drowsy. But, alligators, lizards and frogs are making, if possible, more spring displays. Indeed, we are though they would waver if they felt sure the cold weather was over. Leaves, buds, blossoms, flowers and green cover salute our eyes in all directions. Irish potatoes, young onions, celery, lettuce, beets, radishes and other green vegetables, appear in the gardens, and are gathered for special tables."

The Salt Lake Pilotte says: "We have information from good sources, that Brigham Young has secretly announced, in grand council, his unalterable determination to have no fall polygamy. He now declares that all church officials should forthwith be instructed to proselyte among the old and sear by every means in their embrace in plurality at once all persons who desired to hold good positions in the church. Immediate compliance was to be required, and those who failed or refused were to be informed that the church disowned them—all must become polygamists, or be no longer recognized as among the faithful."

The Richmond (Va.) Republic, is exceedingly indignant that the father of that city, after parting with jewelry, clothing, etc., in order to buy bread, should now be forced to labor 12 hours a day to earn 50 or 60 cents. It adds: "If the ladies will furnish us with the names of these ghouls, and a list of the prices they pay, we promise to so brand them with their infamy that they shall be known and despised throughout the land."

The Memphis (Tenn.) Post, asserts that, at the New Theatre in that city, the "Star Spangled Banner" and "Yankee Doodle" were recently hissed, and Southern airs applauded. It also says: "Yesterday two men were scrupping through the streets in Confederate gray, with bells having on the old 'C. S.' buckle, and they actually sang a song to the tune of Dixie. The citizens did not remonstrate. No one of them spoke in disapprobation."

New England papers represent a great scarcity of horses in every town and village, without any reasonable diligence of New York. Hotels and boarding-places are crowded with the overflow from New Yorkers, who have fled or intend to flee from the threatened cholera visitation. The fact is, that all London, Conn., there is not a place to be had. The same is true of Hartford and New Haven.

The North Carolina papers are full of statements going to show that plantations in that State are being rapidly bought up by Northerners. A Jerseyman recently purchased a plantation in Halifax county, N. C., $11 per acre. A New York Company are on the point of taking 50,000 acres in Granville county, where they will settle English emigrants.

About 1,000 rebels have been decreed in Mississippi to the pain of, which 656 were for desertion; 187 for criminality; 113 for cowardly, and 43 from disease. The case of Col. Wirz, the rebel prison keeper at Andersonville, has been referred back to the court during the last 11 months, it may be assumed that the grand total is not far from 1,000.

The new and large manufacturing establishments in Pittsburg suburbs, among which are 26 glass factories, 45 rolling mills, 21 nail mills, 40 iron foundries, 33 machine shops, 12 boiler works, 6 steel steel works, 10 brass foundries, 3 copper and tin mills, 9 glow works, 10 establishments for heavy chemicals, 4 white lead works, 4 oil refineries, 3 saw mills, 3 planing mills, 3 paper mills, 2 starch, glue, chemical works, saw, axe, copper and other manufactories, and 3 large gas works, employ, it is estimated, nearly $100,000,000 in value of her own manufactures—a fact which is not generally known, even in New York.

The New Albany (Ind.) Commercial remarks, that houses are so scarce in that city that persons living in the lower part of the town are building flat-boat houses, and moving them into the upper part of the city to remove their families into them. Several of these mansions are now afloat in the city, and attracting much public notice.

The Loyal Georgian, published at Atlanta in the interests of the Union men of Georgia, says that the colonies regular readers and subscribers to the extent of 1,000.

The West Baton Rouge (La.) Sugar Planter says: "It is a fact that the sugar crop cannot be completed by the Freedmen or of the freedmen. Employer and employed are mutually dependent on each other. The freedmen seem disposed to carry out the contracts they have made, working with a diligence and energy unaccustomed of by-gone days.

The Cincinnati Commercial calculates the probable expenditure of the city for the year, to be nearly more than $5,000,000.

A new line of steamers is announced to run between this port and the ports of Laguyra and Puerto Cabello, Venezuela, and Curacoa, Dutch West Indies, first vessel of the line, the Vicksburg, is expected to sail from New York on the 15th of April.

The state treasurer of Indiana recently received, in one package of money from the treasurer of Iowa County, $1,000 in gold, the contribution of the Hoosier States, made payable in Heaven, and with the Angel Gabriel as its present agent. The money was received by the National Bank of Jeffersonville, and is printed from a newspaper of that city. The package was sent to Boston it, and a sent will be brought by Mr. Morrison to Indiana.

According to official report, there are in Alabama 6,793,000 acres of land, of which 1,000,000 are in cultivation, 4,926,182 acres; in Florida, 1,932,796 acres; in Mississippi, 4,000,000 acres; in Texas, 9,000,000 acres.

An old colored preacher at Port Gibson, Miss., recently held 39 colored persons under water, and baptized a piece. On the following Sunday he succeeded in baptizing 39 people in the same place, and 39 more to pay. Becoming indignant at the parsimony of his congregation, he exclaimed: "I'll be dog-gone to baptize for glory, saying," he wasn't gwine to slosh himself up for nothing."

A gentleman, living about 10 miles from Wilmington, N. C., recently lost a bear with 12 negroes that they should have the use of his horses and carriages on Sunday to attend said implements, provided they brought him a nice one-horse wagon load of wood. He has been in the habit of getting four bushels and three pecks of corn, 373lb of fodder, 12lb of bacon, three chickens and a quart of molasses.

Gen. Sheridan, writing about Vicksburg, both in Mississippi and Louisiana, 8 Union Generals, between 20 and 30 of the colonels and majors, 50 captains, 100 lieutenants and non-commissioned officers, discharged at the close of the war from the Union army, are now engaged in that region, engaged in various occupations, many of them in partnership with their late foes in the late rebel army.

Spangler, Mudd and O'Laughlin, at last accounts from the Dry Tortugas, are taking their imprisonment very much philosophically. The former of the trio seems to be so get released from the busy irons they have been wearing.

Little Bee, one of the chiefs of the Chippewa Indians, at Leech Lake, of whom is now in Washington to see their Great Father, died on the 20th ult. of chronic bronchitis, aged 70 winters. His remains were interred, with Christian rites, in the Congressional Burying Ground.

A detachment of regulars passed through Circleville on Friday night, on their way to the lake cities, for the purpose of arresting deserters. The "Circleville Herald" says: "Two of the number were captured in this county."

The family of Mr. Uriah Tompkins, of Greensburg, Westchester county, consisting of six persons, were poisoned last week, by eating what was supposed to be food; but how it got there is a mystery. Some of the family were dead, and others were not likely to live.

A letter from Florence Nightingale, dated at London, Feb. 23d, speaks of her health as even more feeble than it was in 1859, and says, "I am always entirely a prisoner to my room."

The proposition of the British Government as to the real sovereignty of the Fenian Republic, arises evidently from a misunderstanding of their cousin.

The innocent inventor of a contrivance for charging soda water bottles, with a sample in his possession, was arrested in 1861, through the agency of "internal machine," and arrested in Hamilton, Canada, the other day.

THE SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' EMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF AGENCY.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Employment and Relief Agency, established in the last 10 months procured, free of charge, suitable employment for 2,000 discharged veterans, and relief for the disabled men, as well as for the families of soldiers and sailors. It has been originated by Col. J. B. Herman, supported by citizens of this and other cities and metropolis. The Employment Bureau has provided over 1,200 situations, and the Select Bureau is now distributing relief each week to about 200 families. It has already distributed over 300 individuals have, on the 23d of last month, been supplied with one or more articles, including coffee, sugar, tea, flour, smoking-tobacco, and some pocket-money.

The excellent engraving we give to-day will give an idea of the distribution of relief at the office of the agency. Mr. Herman, under the direction of the Manager, Col. Herman, assisted by the Chairman, Supervisor Willaman, the Secretary, William H. Field, and a number of volunteer gentlemen and ladies. It will be certainly gratifying to the charitable persons who are contributing to the relief fund, to see how judiciously their donations are distributed among the late defenders of the Union, and the families of those who have fallen in the defence of the nation's liberty. There is no subject that addresses itself with more force and sweetness to the hearts of our people; and such an institution honors certainly this community, as well as its originator, and those who have contributed to its support. The next distribution of relief will take place on the 20th inst. Donations in provisions can be sent direct to Col. Herman, and money to the Treasurer, Thos. Genlul (of Genlul & Phipps), 13 Broad street, or to Major-Gen. John A. Dix, who has kindly consented to attend in person the next distribution.

SOME ZOOLOGICAL STORIES.

Not long ago, a man too tipsy to be cautious was poking up with a stick the cobra di capello in one of the cages in the serpent room at the Zoological Gardens, London. The serpent was excited and bruised the man, who died in exactly 10 minutes. The wound was on his finger, and no one can say he might not have saved by the touch of a needle. The snake was killed—why I know not—and Mr. Frank Buckland, the naturalist, who had charge of the serpents, was dissecting it. While doing so he felt a strange sensation coming over him, and he went out of doors and fainted. He is nowhere near by, asking him to drag him to a chemist's shop, and just then he death rather than his last full relief. Mr. Buckland pumped immediately and drug him to an apothecary shop, where he gasped out "Ammonia!" They plied him with ammonia and water, and he recovered. He does not know how the poison was communicated, but thinks it might have been through a scratch on a knife he had used in dissection. It is a curious problem for an optimist to consider why such a mechanism of destruction as the cobra exists. Is it a server to drain off the poison of a whole tribe of other animals who are thereby rendered harmless? It is the favorite snake with the Eastern snake-charmers.

A specimen of the "Tasmanian devil" (Diabolus Ursinus) has recently arrived at the Cape per steamer by Wanwell's menagerie, also of London. Few animals have a more ugly look than this latter class of beasts. The innate and apparently incurable ferocity of the creature can hardly be overcome, even when it is born and has been in captivity. Its habits are solitary and purposeless anger is continually manifested. An animal of this kind is to recognize its keeper, and welcome the hand that supplies it with food, but this is apparently the result of a slavishly devotional gratitude, and attacks indiscriminately every one else. Its ferocious is to be the less cause it will fly at the bars of the cage, and endeavor, by a blind effort to get at the object of its rage, to reach the keeper, while it gives vent to its passionate feelings in the most horrible yells of rage.

The coat of the Tasmanian devil is very appropriately black, with a white spot on the breast. It is of a deep, dead black, and utterly devoid of that rich, silky appearance which belongs to the coats of animals also usual so pleasing an effect. The great power of the animal's jaws, which are of enormous strength, renders it extremely formidable when attacked.

In two cages, opposite to those the other, of a caravan at Mander's Menagerie, now exhibiting at Liverpool, is another Tasmanian devil, recently received—the former in the lower and the latter in the upper compartment. Every time the one sees the other, the hyena tore up the floor of its cage so as to be able to get at his enemy. It would then appear that the leopard beneath seized it by the throat, and a terrific struggle ensued. The noise was such that the watchman, and Mr. Manders and others came to the spot. When they arrived the leopard had dragged the hyena through the floor, and so tenacious was its hold that, although Mr. Manders freely used a newly-bolted riding-whip on his head and shoulders, the hyena was held down and at last the leopard was beaten off.

THE ALDEN TYPE-SETTING MACHINE.

For the last four or five years our readers have, doubtless, heard of this machine, but heard little of its progress. It is a fact that, while the law can see growing in strength, and emerging from infancy, the demand, instead of being on the increase, is clearly that scarce any but those vitally interested in its growth knew the fact. It has now reached that point when in the hands of skilful operators it can vie with rapidity and precision. The physical work is so multiplied by three and fingers of the hand that it almost persuades the looker-on that it is brain in action, and that human agency in the form of manipulation is unnecessary. Even the intensified public will understand the principle of such an invention, and its effect upon the education and intellect of the whole world. It will, by cheapening the price of literature in the number of printers, but will increase the quantity of printing. Authors will increase the size of the work they make them, and the result will be four times the quantity performed. We pray for the hastening of that day.

Victor Hugo's new work, "Les Travailleurs de la Mer," or the Workmen of the Sea, can be had at the office of The Round Table, 39 Nassau street, for a dime. It appears that a Paris newspaper proprietor offered the author half a million francs for the privilege of publishing the book serially—in the columns of his journal. The money is refused by Victor Hugo, because, on the ground that such a publication of his novel would injure the sale of the book. Victor Hugo does not exert strength on a man to resist a pecuniary temptation of such vast amount. We understand that the Harpers are publishing an excellent translation of the same work.

The March number of the Art Journal is a magnificent specimen of this elaborate and admirable publication, and is worthy of the work. Two of the three plates are exquisite, and their subjects of a most charming character. Indeed, in point of merit, each beautiful engravings could not be purchased for the usual price of the series of the year. The text, as the next numbers, among much valuable information, a very intelligent description of the Art exhibition, and selection on late surfaces, etc., etc., which certainly commands universal attention.

Loring, of Boston, has just published his second edition of "Broken to Harness," a story of English country life, by Edmund Kirke. It is a capital novel, and every class of readers will find in it a choice adapted to their peculiar tastes. Indeed, this book will be a sensitive ear. The sketches of club-life of Americans abroad, and the interesting sketches as a sporting sound about "Broken to Harness," nevertheless, too book will be relished by readers, for its unobtrusive recognition of feminine goodness.

"St. Mabyn's Summer," by Mrs. Anne H. M. Bradford, published by Loring, of Boston, is a charming book of Travels through Italy. The author's historical recollections are full of interest, and the descriptive interesting incidents of rest spice is eminently characteristic of the American lady. Mrs. Bradford's scholarly accomplishments are of a pre-eminent order, and her style is graceful and natural appreciation, and find its way in every library.

Loring, of Boston, has published his second edition of "Broken to Harness," a story of English country life, by Edmund Kirke. It is a capital novel, and every class of readers will find in it a choice adapted to their peculiar tastes. Indeed, this book will be a sensitive ear. The sketches of club-life of Americans abroad, and the interesting sketches as a sporting sound about "Broken to Harness," nevertheless, too book will be relished by readers, for its unobtrusive recognition of feminine goodness.

"St. Mabyn's Summer," by Mrs. Anne H. M. Bradford, published by Loring, of Boston, is a charming book of Travels through Italy. The author's historical recollections are full of interest, and the descriptive interesting incidents of rest spice is eminently characteristic of the American lady. Mrs. Bradford's scholarly accomplishments are of a pre-eminent order, and her style is graceful and natural appreciation, and find its way in every library.

D. Appleton & Co., have published the "Life of Abraham Lincoln," in Spanish. The appearance of this interesting work, expressly got up for the library, will be hailed with gratification throughout the American continent. The book is introduced to the reader by an elaborate preface, from the pen of Senor D. F. Sarmiento, whose talent and literary merit probably recommend the work. Dominie Mosen, Appleton's discriminate attention to the memory of the lamented President will be much appreciated by the Spanish people of America, and insure a rapid succession of orders from all parts.

SENOR DON DOMINCO DULCE,

Captain-General of Cuba.

DON DOMINGO DULCE y DAVILA, Lieutenant-General of the Spanish forces and Captain-General of the Island of Cuba, was born in the city of Soria, Spain, in the year 1808, and is consequently 58 years old. Descended from a titled family, he took up the career of arms, and took an active part against the Carlists in the Spanish Civil Wars. For personal bravery in defending the palace of the Queen, he was made Gentleman of Bed-Chamber in 1843, and Brigadier-General of Cavalry in 1847. For further services against the Carlists he was made Field-Marshal in 1848, holding subsequently the post of Commandant of the Provinces of Seville, Zaragoza, etc., together with other offices of trust and responsibility, until named to the distinguished position he now holds.

SENOR DON DOMINGO DULCE, MARQUES DE CASTELL FLORITE, CAPTAIN GENERAL OF CUBA.

PERUVIAN IRON-CLAD

Turret-Ship Huascar.

MESSRS. LAIRD BROS., of Birkenhead—whose names have a familiar sound to American ears—have lately completed for the Peruvian Government an armor-clad sea-going turret-ship, of 1,100 tons and 300 horse-power, with a speed of more than 12 knots an hour, on a draught of water of 16 feet, throwing a weight of broadside of 600lb from her turret, besides carrying two 40-pounder rifled guns on the quarter-deck. The dimensions are about 200 feet extreme length; 35 feet breadth; 20 feet deep; and 1,100 tons measurement. The hull is of iron of great strength, and is divided internally by bulkheads into water-tight compartments, so as to enclose her turret, engines, boilers—all, her vital points, in fact—in separate compartments. In addition to this provision for the ship's security, there is a double bottom under the engines, boilers, turrets and magazines, extending up to the lower deck. The armor-plating is 4½ inches thick, extending from her upper deck to 3½ feet below the load water-line, slightly tapering toward the bow and stern, to lessen the tendency to pitch in a seaway, and rests on teak backing 10 inches thick.

The accommodation for the officers and crew is of a very superior description; well ventilated, by means of skylights and side scuttles; and there is free communication from one end of the ship to the other by iron sliding-doors on all the water-tight bulkheads.

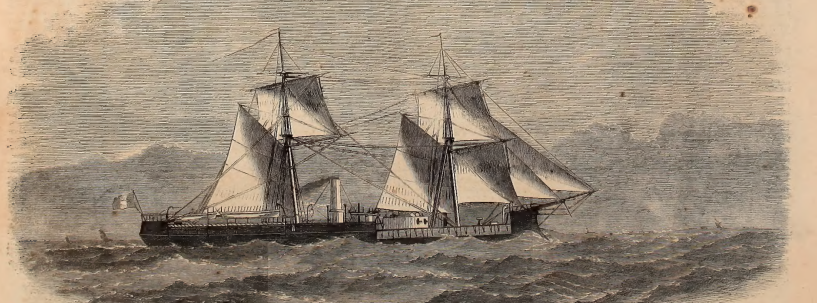
The spaces in the store-room and magazines are ample for the stowage of six months' provisions and ammunition. The turret is cylindrical in shape, covered with armor-plates 9½ inches thick, and is placed before the engine-room, and is fitted with slides and carriages for two 12½ ton 300-pounder guns, on the system of Captain Cowper P. Coles, R. N. The rig is that of a brig, the foremast being fitted as a tripod, on Captain Coles's patent, to give greater range of training to the guns in the turret.

The engines are 300 horse-power, nominal; having cylinders 64 inches in diameter, 3 feet stroke, driving a four-bladed screw-propeller 14 feet 9 inches in diameter, 17 feet 9 inches pitch. The cylinders have steam-jackets and improved expansion valves.

The trials of speed made at the measured mile gave as the result of four runs a speed of 12·27 knots an hour. At the time of these trials the vessel was completed in every way, except guns and sea-stores, and had 100 tons of coal in the bunkers. The mean draught of water was 14 feet 3 inches; the engines made 78 revolutions; pressure of steam 13lb, vacuum, 26 inches; indicated horse-power, 1,650. The engines worked very well, and the boilers gave an abundant supply of steam. The ship was quick in answering her helm, and her steering arrangements are "excellent, having one wheel in front of the poop, and the second under the pilot-tower, forward. The Huascar has since been sent to sea, with her guns and all stores, and has behaved very well.

MOSES;

Or, Israel in Egypt, at Barnum's.



IN accordance with our desire to give our readers illustrations of everything worthy of notice in the different theatres, we offer this week an excellent representation of a scene in Barnum's new play of "Moses; or Israel in Egypt."

We have been too long accustomed to associate the idea in our minds of lightness and want of care in the getting-up of plays for the Museum; but if ever it was deserved, and we are among the doubters, it certainly is so no longer.

The present play is elegantly done, and for scenery and costumes puts to shame the best efforts of our large theatres. The moving panoramas of the Nile is superb as a work of art, and truthful to the letter. The light is charmingly managed, and that dim, hazy atmosphere, which Nile travelers know so well, is produced beautifully.

Altogether the play has been a success, and among the crowds that go to see it, we are glad that we can count artists and amateurs of note, and a class that heretofore have chosen to think that the Museum was a very good place to send their children, but too childish for themselves.

In fact, "Moses; or, Israel in Egypt" has been a great success, and has rewarded the manager with interest. How long it will run it is impossible to say, judging by present appearances — perhaps for a year; but whenever it does run out, it is hoped that the Museum, having shown its capability of doing something great, in style, will follow it up. The scene we illustrate is in the last act, where Moses, denouncing Pharaoh and his idols, is set upon by the soldiers, putting a play upon the stage.

THE PERUVIAN IRON-CLAD TURRET SHIP HUASCAR, BUILT IN THE MERSEY, ENGLAND.

SCENE FROM "MOSES; OR ISRAEL IN EGYPT," THE NEW PLAY, NOW BEING PERFORMED AT BARNUM'S MUSEUM, BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

THE CLAQUE IN PARIS.—Every theatre in Paris has its own claque, and every claque has its own leader, who is practically as much a leader as the leader of the orchestra, and is professionally designated le chef de la claque. The management deals with the chef only, who employs his own assistants, and is responsible for them. These assistants are continually changed and badly paid, and vigorous measures are adopted to secure their diligence and punctuality. The chef, who is permanent, makes a large income, and his cachet at the stage-door indicates the position he has acquired in the theatre. His sources of income are numerous and elastic. He is paid a regular salary by the manager, and in addition he levies black mail on the artistes. Every artiste must pay him. No pay, no applause; and as the actor cannot live without applause, pay is inevitable. The usual mode is to enter into a contract for a month. The minimum fee for a month, from the poorest and most obscure person in the theatre, may be set down at 50 francs. The maximum has no limit. It mounts according to the ambition or the means of the actor. As much as 500 francs have been known to be paid for a single night's applause. The ordinary month's contract does not cover all occasions. When a new play is brought out, or a stock play is reproduced, each of the actors is personally waited upon for instructions as to the particular passages at which they desire applause, and fees are charged accordingly.

GIVING RELIEF TO DISABLED SOLDIERS AND THEIR FAMILIES, AT THE SOLDIERS' EMPLOYMENT AGENCY, NEW CANAL STREET, NEAR THE BOWERY, NEW YORK.

DEAF AND DUMB.

BY MISS R. V. ROBERTS.

I murmured sorely at my cross, it rent my heart to see
My darling's questioning, earnest eyes, so often fixed on me,
Watching the movement of my lips, the words she could not hear,
With such a wistful, eager look, was more than I could bear.
I yearned, with passionate desire, to see her sweet lips frame,
And hear a laughing, childish voice utter its mother's name;
But never yet my craving heart has heard that lisping tone—
Spell-bound the lips and sealed the ears—and she our only one!
Her face so fair; the violet eyes, the brow so full of mind,
And surely that soft, gentle smile tell heart and soul refined;
And sweet emotions, loving thoughts, her mute lips cannot speak,
Are told by dewy glance, or varying color in her cheek.
My heart was sad with longing vain, as I sat in thought one day,
Watching my little five-year girl at placid, silent play,
When to my soul some angel-voice spake words ne'er heard before,
And since I heard those spirit-tones I mourn my cross no more:

"Grieve not because she cannot hear
The melody of earth;
The unseen world to her is near,
The music of a better sphere,
Notes of a loftier mirth,
And angel messages to her are brought,
And angels guard her from each evil thought.

"Grieve not because she cannot hear:
For many an evil word
At which the pure soul shrinks, I fear
Would fall upon her startled ear
And grieve as soon as heard;
And make her wish again this silence sweet,
And long once more these Sabbath hours to greet.

"Grieve not because she cannot hear:
No inharmonious sound,
No cruel word can start the tear;
And is she not more fondly dear
To all who circle round?
And heart to heart, and soul to soul can speak,
Even though no voice the outward silence break.

"Grieve not because she cannot hear:
She hears the still small voice
That speaketh to the spirit's ear—
'If thou with me the cross wilt bear,
With me shalt thou rejoice.'
Oh, blessed! thus God's chastening to receive,
Who with it such sweet comforting doth give.

"Grieve not because she cannot hear:
The everlasting chime
Shall break upon her raptured ear—
Christ's 'Ephphatha' her heart shall cheer,
With heaven-harps keeping time;
Her well-tuned lips shall to that Saviour sing,
Who folds her evermore beneath his wing.

"Grieve not because she cannot hear:
Oh, heaven's choral strain—
That heaven which she dwells so near—
Will deeper sound, more sweet, more clear,
Her loss is her best gain;
'Unspotted from the world,' pure, undefiled.
God's jealous guard is round his favored child."

THAT KITTEN.

My name is Cressingham Cressingham, a name fit for an English baronet at least, but which, I regret to say, for years only had an opportunity of airing its splendor in cheap newspapers. I am a penny-a-liner, who, on his twenty-fifth birthday, found himself reduced to a fourth floor, back room, in a mechanics' boarding-house, and no change in his pocket to speak of.

To say that I was resigned to this state of affairs would be a slight exaggeration. On the contrary, I rebelled against it most energetically. I wrote heart-rending tales, wherein the talented hero became, through the justice of his fellow-men, a desperate criminal.

I had thoughts of becoming one myself; and to that end turned over in my mind a thousand projects for reclaiming my share of the world's goods from those who were the possessors of their own and mine, too. But as they all had a strong suspicion of the Tombs or Blackwell's Island about them, I abandoned them all in disgust.

I was handsome, and as stylish as a threadbare coat, antidiluvian hat, and heavy shoes, would admit.

"If some heiress would only become enamored of my charms," I groaned, in tribulation of spirit, one afternoon, as I walked down —— avenue. I should make a faultless spouse. What a pity I did not know some wealthy young lady who thought so, too. I had dropped all my acquaintances purposely, as I grew poorer and poorer, and could not now boast of one.

On I went, oblivious of everything except my own half comic, half gloomy fancies, down the avenue. It was growing rapidly dark, and as I was quite a distance from my own palatial abode, I was under the impression that I should be minus my supper if I loitered.

Suddenly a little white ball rolled, rather than ran, under my feet, a piteous, long-drawn "me-e-w" fell upon my ears, followed by an indignant exclamation in a female voice.

I looked up in bewilderment, and in a minute understood it all. I stood directly under the window of a handsome house; at that window, which was open, sat a gentleman and a young girl. Miss Pussy had made her advent from that particular portion of space, and, I rightly judged, through the active instrumentality of the aforesaid gentleman.

"Wretch!" cried the young lady, indignantly, and disappeared from the window.

I stooped and rescued Miss Pussy from her ignominious position. Truly she was a dainty little creature, white as a ball of new-fallen snow, and yet a kitten. With a mixture of real feeling and diplomatic acting, I pressed it to my cheek, muttering tenderly, "Poor kitty!—poor little pussy!" At that instant the door of the house opened, and a slender figure ran down the steps, pausing before Cressingham Cressingham, Esq.

"Give her to me, quick!" cried the young lady, imperiously; then, as I delivered the kitten into her arms, she went on:

"Thank you! thank you! that wretch threw her out of the window because she climbed upon his shoulder. I'll make him suffer for it!"

It was almost dark, but as she stood there before me, I could see that she was very pretty, with dark hair and a slight, delicate figure.

Calling the gods to my aid, I made a low bow, and said, coolly:

"No thanks! I am very happy to have been of any service. The man is a brute!" and passed on, leaving my young lady to her reflections, and the offending gentleman to his, as well. I did not cease congratulating myself on this incident for weeks afterward. I amused myself highly by picturing some future encounter, when the kitten episode should prove a foundation upon which to build an edifice of love. In fact, I dreamed of her night and day, and finally decided that none other than she should be my wife.

Two months went by. My coat was seedier than ever, and I was growing misanthropic.

One warm afternoon in September I sat at my open window surveying—not the landscape, for there wasn't any to survey—but gazing at the glowing sky and the back yards of my neighbors. The house wherein I abode was the second from the corner, and of course the backs of the houses fronting on the other street were at right angles with it. Nothing was easier than to look into those windows which were curtainless, and certainly very few of them were anything else.

For some reason, I know not why, my eyes were suddenly and mysteriously attracted to the fourth floor window of the second house opposite. At that window sat a young girl, so beautiful that I fairly started with amazement. A girl with an oval face, a low, broad forehead, crowned with hair blacker than midnight.

No flush of rose stained the dusky cheek, but the full lips were deepest crimson; and then her eyes! large, languid, velvet-dark and shaded by thick, long lashes. How came such a patrician face in such a street, in such a place? I was struck dumb with amazement as I saw the ugly calico dress, in which she was attired, the coarse brown cloth upon which she worked, the bare walls of the room in which she sat. She should have been in a palace; she no more belonged there than I.

At last she raised her eyes, not to meet mine, but to rest upon the roof over my head. Evidently she saw there an unwelcome sight, for she gave a little cry and started to her feet. I leaned out of the window and looked up, and a desire to laugh almost overcame me as I saw the smutched and blackened face of a forlorn-looking kitten peering over the edge of the roof at me. It was plainly that sight which had caused the cry.

For a moment I hesitated, regarding her evident distress, and also deliberating, was I to be a kitten knight-errant? So it seemed, at all events, and making a sign to her that I would rescue the little animal, I left the window and started for the scuttle. Once upon the roof, I found that it was no easy matter to capture my prize, who scampered hither and thither over the tin in terror at my advances. Half a dozen times I determined to leave the wretch to its fate, but the black eyes, watching so appealingly from below, animated my sinking courage. At last, by dint of coaxing and patience, I secured the creature, and descended with it. A moment after, I appeared at my own window, kitten in arms, and made signs to its fair owner that I would come to her with it if she would allow me.

Even at that distance I saw her blush deeply and hesitate, but it was only for a moment. The kitten conquered, and its mistress disappeared from the window. I snatched my hat, dashed down the stairs, out at the street door, round the corner, ran up the steps of the second house, pulled the bell, and was admitted to a shabby parlor and the presence of my beauty. Quietly she stood before me, much smaller than I had thought her, more beautiful and not at all discomposed. In one minute I was desperately, madly in love with this girl in an ugly calico dress, who lived in a cheap boarding-house, and was evidently as poor as myself. My voice even trembled as I presented the forlorn little cat, and received her earnest thanks.

"Poor pet!" she murmured, with tears in her eyes. "Did I almost lose you, my only friend? and how wretched you look, Kitty, dear. I must wash you, and make you pretty. I've got one ribbon left——"

She paused abruptly, biting her lip with vexation, glancing furtively at me from beneath those midnight lashes. But I had heard, observed nothing, apparently. Twenty minutes after I left her, having secured the blessed privilege of calling again. Never was mortal man more in love. I forgot my dreams of the avenue damsel, and all other heiresses in general.

Violet—that was her name—completely absorbed me. I lived in heaven; my desolate life suddenly became beautiful; she was my sun and my star. I saw her almost daily for weeks, but strange to say, I learned no more of her than in that first meeting, except, indeed, as regards mind, heart and inner life. I found that her name was Violet Wraxall; that she lived alone, and that she sewed for her daily bread. I never saw her go out in the street unless closely veiled, and even then not until dusk. In spite of all this mystery, my faith in her was implicit, my reverence unbounded.

Never before had I so madly longed for, not wealth, but enough money to lift me above abject poverty. How I hated my mean attire, since she saw it daily.

At last came a stroke of good luck. I secured a position on a city paper, as sub-editor, on a salary of fifteen dollars a week! Small! you say; to me it was princely, magnificent. I acted more like an inmate of a lunatic asylum, upon receiving the news, than a sensible individual. I laughed, and cried, and sung for an hour, then put on my hat, and called upon Violet.

She came down in wonder, for my call came at an unusual time—in the morning.

"What is it?" she questioned, wonderingly.

"This!" I cried; "that I have secured a position at fifteen dollars a week, and that I can now ask you to love me—to become my wife."

For a moment, my darling gazed earnestly in my face, a strange, bright color coming and going on her cheek.

"I love you now," she said.

"And will marry me—"

The beauteous face became visibly pale.

"I cannot even answer that question until to-morrow. Go now, dear—I want to be alone. Come in the morning at eleven, and I will give you your answer."

"If that answer is 'yes' will you be ready to go to the church with me then?"

"I will."

I was in the seventh heaven, and doubted not what that decision would be. That night I spent in picturing to myself the dear home where she should reign. I thought of that beautiful form, in velvets and satins, doubting not but some day I should be able to procure them for her.

I was very sanguine you see.

The next morning I sallied forth, arrayed in unwonted splendor—for I had received a month's salary in advance—and twenty dollars in my pocket. I had even been reckless enough to hire a carriage. How proudly I rang that bell. How anxiously I waited her coming. At last she came, lovely in a violet dress and a dainty hat, and radiant with delight.

"Yes, yes!" she cried, swiftly. "Come! let us go. You see that I am dressed. I pawned my mother's diamond ring to get it. Am I not lovely. Come!"

Through all my happiness I was amazed at her strange manner, but I could not stop to think of that. In fifteen minutes we were at the church, but my wife gave her name as Violet David, and when the last word of the ceremony was pronounced, she turned to me and said:

"Blessed be kitten!"

This was extraordinary language, to say the least, but Mrs. Cressingham Cressingham would give no explanation, and seated herself in the carriage with a triumphant little smile.

"Drive to No. 15 —— street," she said to the coachman.

No. 15 was her former abiding place. I could not get her to speak until she arrived there, when, stepping from the carriage she commanded me to remain.

In two minutes she had flown into the house and out again, bearing the kitten in her arms. I could but welcome the little creature, for had she not been the means of my knowing her. I didn't know yet, however, how much I owed to that kitten, bless it! Still Violet was mute. She would only kiss me, and laugh when I asked the very natural question of "where were we going?"

At last, obedient to her orders, the carriage drew up before that identical house in the —— avenue which I remembered so well.

"We stop here a few moments," said Mrs. Cressingham, with a delightful smile, and a servant ran down the marble steps.

"Is Mr. David at home?" asked Violet, eagerly.

"Yes, miss."

"Mrs., John!"

The servant stared, looked at me, smiled, and followed us up the steps, and into the magnificent parlors.

I stared at Violet in hopeless perplexity.

"What does this mean?" I faltered.

The slender figure at my side drew itself up with mock hauteur.

"That this is your future home. This was, until this morning, the property of my father; it is now yours. Voila tout!"

A very pretty ending to a very pretty farce. I drew myself up with real hauteur.

"And you mean——"

"That I love you."

"Violet, for God's sake, what does this mean?—who are you? Have you been deceiving me?"

Her arms were around me, her kisses stifling the angry words.

"Hush, impertinent! Read this," and she put a letter into my hands.

I stared for a moment stupidly, then read the following, in Violet's handwriting, and dated the preceding day:

"Father—A month ago I left home, vowing never to return, and leaving word that if you attempted to discover me I should destroy myself. You wisely desisted from so doing, for I believe that you love me. To-morrow I marry a man whom I love devotedly, an utter stranger to you, but one whom you may be proud to own as the husband of your only child. I now ask you if you will receive us? If so, the love of two devoted hearts shall reward you; if not, you will never see your daughter again. Violet."

"The other letter, Violet?"

For she held another. She gave it to me. It said:

"My Child—Come home, and bring your husband; you will meet a loving welcome. Come, my darling. Everything shall be yours and his.
"Your Father."

"And I have come," murmured my wife, and turning, she threw herself into the arms of a gray-headed old man, who had entered the room unperceived.

"You see," said my wife, laughingly, "you have married an heiress, after all, dear, as you used to tell me you intended to do, but forgot all about it when you saw me. It is all this blessed kitten's doing, though. Kiss her, you ungrateful man! I'll tell you all about it. Mamma died two years ago, and I was installed at the head of the household. But I was first as willful and pettish as when I was five years old. Papa has an awful temper—so passionate; but he forgets it all in an hour, and he made me very happy. Well, he was very proud of me, and wanted me to make a splendid match. In the end he singled out Gilbert Wrain, and told me that I must love and marry him, because he was a great catch. I didn't love anybody except papa, and this dear pussy, so I didn't mind very much what he said at first; but pretty soon I began to dislike Mr. Wrain. One evening, as I was sitting by this very window, and he was sitting beside me, Kitty came in and climbed up on his shoulder. It seems he hates cats; at any rate, he threw my poor little darling into the street. I was so angry, and rushed out to get her. A strange gentleman had picked her up, and was soothing her——"

"That was me, wifie."

"You!" and her black eyes opened incredulously; then the little witch broke into a peal of laughter, like joy-bells. "How comical! Dear me! Isn't it! What did you think of me?"

"I thought you were a darling."

"And to think we never recognized each other! But, to go on: I went back in the house, and spoke so sharply to him that he got very angry. After that, for about a month, we quarreled incessantly; and one day I told papa that I would never marry him. He got in such a passion, and said that I should either be that man's wife or leave the house. I left him without a word, went up-stairs, put on that purple dress I had on this morning, put my pocket-book in my pocket—it had twenty dollars in it—took Kitty, and left the house. That was a month ago. I got board in that house you found me in, found sewing to do, and should have staid there forever, if Kitty hadn't gone up on the roof to promenade."

I kissed my bride, blessed the cat, thanked Providence, and was happy.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH IN SESSION.

The new Board hold its sessions semi-weekly at No. 301 Mott street, and before it comes everything affecting the health of the great city of New York.

There can be no more interesting way of spending an hour, and understanding the herculean task they have taken on their shoulders, than attending one of these meetings. Every one comes in with his complaint, and each inspector makes his report. One speaks of the streets of Brooklyn, and suggests modes for their cleaning, another has something to say practically on the removal of night soil, while still another has been looking into the condition of the dumping-grounds or places where the street-cleaning is deposited. Then comes a report about Washington Market, especially concerning the stands which girdle the market, and of which so much complaint has recently been made, Inspector Emerson reports that they extend 13 feet beyond the curb on West street, bridging the gutter, preventing the flow of water, allowing the collection of filth of all sorts, and interfering with the proper cleaning of the streets, and for these reasons endanger the public health, and should be removed as nuisances. A report similar to this was made in regard to each stand—more than 70 in number; and upon these reports the Board determined to issue its orders for their removal, which it is earnestly hoped will be carried out.

Then comes a debate on stables, and a declaration that they will not be permitted to put straw or litter upon the pavement. Then comes the fat and bone-boiling establishments, those pestilent nuisances that should be swept at least a score of miles from the city.

Then came the rag shops, and several complaints were entered against places in different parts of the city, which have on hand European rags in a filthy condition, from which it was feared infectious diseases would arise.

Then comes a complaint against a brewery—that in Pacific street, Brooklyn—and the fiat went forth that it must be suspended and cleaned.

Then came a talk about ship fever, and typhus fever, and about filthy piers, and one about an offensive lime-kiln, which was ordered to be cleaned, and another about a tenement-house which was ordered to be cleaned, all at the expense of the owners thereof.

After which, to close the day's business, came a Committee to the office of the President of the Board, and had a long conference in regard to Fulton Market. Their business had a ventilation a few days before through the press, and has been improved. It has been discovered that three-fourths of all the lobsters eaten in the city are unfit for food. As this statement was made by a fishmonger, in the presence of a dozen of his confrères in business without dissent or denial, we presume it may be relied upon as substantially correct. The question of a removal of the fish-market to the foot of Gansevoort street, at which point Washington Market will doubtless eventually be located, was discussed at considerable length.

The fishermen say it will be ruinous to their business, because the water in that vicinity is too fresh and would destroy the fish. The slip they now use at the foot of Fulton street, East River, is in an exceedingly filthy condition and should be cleaned; but while the sewer disembogues its contents into the slip, it is also imperfect and broken, which makes the matter ineffably worse. They have made vast improvements in the manner of conducting their business during the past week, and contemplate further beneficial changes.

After all this, the Board adjourns to meet again and go over the same ground, all of which tends to that time when the warm weather shall scatter contagion among us, perhaps cholera. If they succeed in reaching the point of cleanliness, for which they are striving, they will deserve the thanks of all the community, and will do for New York more than has ever been done for her before.

THE MAIDEN TO THE SEA.

Wilt thou, wilt thou tell it me,
Gentle Sea?
Come, thy waves are soft to-day,
Tuned with all their wicked play—
Wilt thou, gentle Sea?
Ah! I know you know it well—
Has he told you not to tell?
Say, sweet Sea.
Don't pretend to be asleep,
Tell me, I'll the secret keep,
Love be me?
Does he love as I love him?
Nay, his not a foolish whim—
Do not tease me so.
What!—I do not understand;
Come again to where I stand;
Whisper soft and low;
Whisper up the silver sand,
But do not whisper "No."
That I could not bear, sweet Sea,
That I could not bear;
So, tell me what he says to thee,
And if he thinks me fair.
Here, I know he loves to walk—
Tell! Might, does he never talk,
Never name my name?
Or does he say he loves me more
Than mine o'er loved a maid before?
Loves me by night and day?
And that he'll ever love me still,
Though things go well or things go ill,
Together or away?
Let's see! no, sweet Sea?
Come, roll me up a tiny wave,
A little, harmless, willing wave,
To whisper "Yes" to me.

The Debt Paid.

No freeborn native citizens of the United States been accosted of making Canada their home, while laboring under pecuniary liabilities, that that country has grown to be considered an asylum for indigent Americans. In fact, it may be considered the counterpart of France, as far as that country bears its relations to English debtors. An illustration of this truth may be found in the following romantic story, which we do not precisely wish our readers to believe in all its details, though there is nothing very improbable in any part thereof.

Sir George Hanford was a young baronet of good English family, who arrived at Boulogne some years ago under very peculiar circumstances. He had lived a very merry life, consumed of a very good patrimonial estate, but had given way so far to the fashionable follies of the young in high life, as to allow nearly the whole of it to fly away on the turf as fast as race-horses could carry it.

He had still good expectations, however. A maternal grandfather, a merchant, and one of the richest in the metropolis, was likely, in due course of things, to leave Sir George his fortune, as his nearest heir. He was fond of the young man, who had been greatly and perilously alienated by the conduct and reverses of the latter. It was while meditating on this subject, and on his own shortly nearly ruined baronet. "How successful," thought he, "my uncle has been by his speculations, in his family! Might not I have a chance that way also? might not I cast in my poor remnant of means into that great lottery, and pull out a prize? I may as well try it; at that I have now is scarcely worth thinking twice about. I shall try, at least."

Poor Sir George! He forgot that though some sens may be deep, there are others which cannot be sounded at all; that however deep one may be in the mire, there is a chance of getting deeper. He did venture in all the shocks. He was successful once, and even twice. Getting imprinted by his good fortune, he thought he had to venture further and win more. Alas! he was a novice merely in the hands of veteran gamblers. Some of the very worst members of the body who operate in these matters, got him into their hands, and knowing well what his expectations were, and where they lay, they led him on by a million of ties, until, by a series of ruses, considered not infamous only on such a field of transactions, they at length got him placed under a load of debt which even all his uncle's wealth would with difficulty lighten. Holding him bound by signatures and bonds, then waited coolly for the old gentleman to his prospective inheritance, knowing well that the same prospect would keep their victim within reach of their grasp at any time.

Sir George wandered about town for some months after these mishaps, like a man with a rope around his neck. During that time he had many reasonings with himself on an important point. This point affected his whole prospective fortunes. The young baronet was naturally possessed of sense; he was well educated, and it may be said that his heart was good, and his intentions fair toward all, under ordinary circumstances; but his course of life, and the associations he had, relaxed his moral principles. This acquired defect came now into play. The point which he canvassed with himself was, whether or not, after having most distinctly ascertained that he had been the dupe of fraudulent, his engagements with them were binding upon him. His good sense said yes; for they had acted within the law; his sense of honor said the same, for they had his bonds: "But then," said other internal arguers, "they got these by base means, and they have not lost a shilling by me. The article experience was what my folly bought from them at the price of a fair fortune, and with it came not a penny out of their pockets. Besides, if I pay these harpies, I shall be beggared."

The end of the whole was, that the uncle of Sir George died; the young baronet was left heir; and within a few hours almost, after being put in possession of his fortune, which was the portable one of an old money-hoarder, the young baronet was on his way to Boulogne. The creditors stormed, and vowed revenge; but they at first knew not whither he would fly; and there are great difficulties attending the recovery of money from creditors on the continent in any case. Sir George fixed himself in a small countryseat near Boulogne. He had been able to carry hither a sufficiency for certain maintenance above £20,000, nearly the amount of his landed embarrassments, after what he called "fair debts" were privately settled. He lived for some time in great seclusion, only occasionally appearing in public. The society which he there met was not of a character to trouble itself much about what he had done, or was doing, or was about to do, so long as he maintained a fashionable appearance and a gentlemanly deportment. So Sir George led a very quiet and undisturbed existence for a time, always excepting some little twinges from a sense of violated honor, until love, the universal busy-body, came in the way to overthrow the runaway's peace. A lady and her daughter arrived in Boulogne, bearing the name and style of the Baroness d'Estaing. Report said that she was an Englishwoman married to a Frenchman of foreign noble; and she was young, beautiful, and reputed rich. Ere long, such attractions brought all the dangling of dangling London into subjection to the baroness, and among the rest, our baronet saw and admired the lady.

For a time, however, he was undistinguished by her, nor did he make any advance on his own part. An accident brought round an eclaircissement. By a succession of awkwardnesses, as it seemed, on the part of her servant, the calache of the baroness was nearly overturned near Sir George's door. The young woman sprang out, and the young lady appearing faint and terrified, he entreated her to alight for a few moments.

She complied. It was the hour of lunch, and they lunched together; he then begged her to view his gardens, and they walked together. When the lady was about to depart, Sir George begged leave to take the reins out of the hands of the awkward servant, and escort her home in person. The result of the whole was, that the baronet became an established visitant of the baroness, and having declared his passion, received for answer what left him no hope, while at the same time it promised him nothing positive.

Sir George could not help his conduct with the fair baroness without discovering that she had one remarkable and somewhat eccentric taste; she was vehemently fond of extremely perfect female Vulcan. She had hired for the season a large yacht, something between a fishing-boat and a hulk, and every morning, in all weather and in good, she rose with the sun to amuse herself off the coast with the rod.

"I really cannot comprehend the pleasure you take in this occupation," said Sir George to her one day.

"It is a charming recreation," answered she, gayly; "and besides, my physicians have recommended me to take as much air and exercise as I can as medicine. I should die early through this cause. It is sometimes dull, to be sure, for the sailors and my servants are no company. But if I have been present, the gallant pelican major and a certain warlike colonel to permit them to have an occasional day's fishing which was shown by the lady. The water was not favorable, she said, at one place, and then she declared that she had no fancy on this morning for exercise.

Sir George was rather pleased with this disinclination, which, however, was rather flattering to her being absorbed by his conversation, and she, on her part, seemed only to think of charming him by every discourse.

At length a slight shower fell, and the baroness asked her lover to enter a small cabin, where a glass of wine and cakes were served by him. Here they sat hour after hour, the lady enchanting her lover with talk that should him to forget all but her present self. At length she pulled out his watch and started up.

"What! Actually, this day is far advanced, and I don't think they have ever put about. The wind, too, was blowing directly from the coast. Come, madam, if you fish at all to-day, it is surely time to begin."

The answer startled the poor baronet.

"I have caught my penalty," and what is more, I have caught my fish."

"What do you mean?" cried Sir George; "what fish have you caught?"

"Twenty thousand pounds!" answered the lady with coolness.

Sir George stepped hurriedly on deck.

"Distraction!" cried he, as soon as he had looked around. Put about instantly, pilot. That is Margate in sight, I believe."

Exactly so, Sir George," said the lady at his back.

He turned round and looked at her.

"Your purpose, then, is to take me—"

"To London, Sir George," interrupted the lady with calmness, and she nodded flush was upon her cheek.

"Barbarous, treacherous woman!" cried the infuriated baronet, as he looked around with an eye that threatened peril to all, if he had but had the means to inflict it; but the baroness gave a signal, and in instant his arms were pinioned to his side by two pairs of brawny arms. The baronet struggled, but in vain; a cord was produced, and he was only saved from the ignominy of being bound, by giving his assurance that he would remain in quiet durance in the cabin. It seemed to him that he had nothing for it but to submit.

Sir George, reduced to this condition, looked with indignation at his captor.

She had clinched the matters for harshness in their usage of him, but otherwise she expressed no visible emotion.

"Betrayed by you!" said the captive; "you whom I loved so much!"

"You loved me?"

"You! what else knew it," answered Sir George. "Since you are an adventuress, cruel woman, would not my whole fortune, with my hand, have been paid upon the smallest invitation?"

The lady spoke not in reply, and Sir George held a scornful silence from that moment until he landed in the Thames. He was here put into the hands of the sailors, and conducted to a hotel, on giving his solemn promise that he would not attempt to escape.

Believing all to be lost in any case, he was glad to be released from the confinement of a jail, though it might be but till his creditors were warned of his capture.

It was night when his landing in the Thames took place. Sir George spent a wretched night, mourning over the fate which his conciseness told him was inevitable; and in the morning he drew up an oath, briefly giving up all to his creditors. He had scarcely finished this when a visitor was announced. It was the solicitor, the baroness had sent.

"Wretched woman! what seek you?" said he, sternly. "Is not your task done? I have now to do with others."

"With none but me," said the lady, in a low voice, and with a timidity of manner most unlike her previous demeanor.

"What do you mean, madam?" asked Sir George.

"I am your sole creditor," said the lady; and she placed in his hands some papers, which he at once saw to be his own redeemed bonds. He looked up in astonishment. "I had a design, Sir George?" said the lady, with her eyes on the floor,

"I had—Anne Fulton," said Sir George; "we were playmates in childhood."

"She went abroad when a mere child, with her family"—continued the lady.

"She did," said the baronet, "and I have heard was married to a very wealthy planter in the island of Jamaica, where she died. I have no more heard, since, than that she left a daughter."

"She wedded against her will," continued the lady, "for she, too, remembered old days. She is now a widow.

A light had been gradually breaking upon Sir George's mind, and he now forward and eagerly took hold of the lady's hand, almost throwing himself at her foot.

"You, you—"

"I am your cousin Anne," said the lady.

It is needless to carry our tale beyond the point where the baronet's explanation to the reader can do all that remains to be done.

The lady had returned to England a rich widow and learned the situation and embarrassments of her well-remembered cousin; had seen him at Boulogne; had received the overture at his door, and made his acquaintance. She had only thought of the fishing.

THE BUTCHERS CONSULTING WITH

The Board of Health.

About 2 o'clock, on the 12th of March, the "Trial Room" in the Metropolitan Police Building was crowded with butchers, who had assembled at the request of the Board of Health, to consult together for the purpose of having a conference with the Board, found a meeting ten times as large as that which appeared. Mr. Alderman S. Schultz, upon taking the chair, was thus addressed by Mr. George Shaw, Chairman of the previous meeting, and a member of the Committee:

"By an advertisement published in the daily papers, you butchers were called upon to attend this afternoon, for the purposes of consulting with you concerning the sanitary condition of the market in which you carry on the health, and they have responded to the call. I am happy to inform you and you to know, that you have no doubt you will find them a body of gentlemen who will be disposed to meet you in a fair and liberal manner. Gentlemen, I have the honor to introduce to you the Chairman of the Board of Health."

To which Mr. Schultz responded by saying, that the Board had been called by the butchers, that they might consult on the following questions:

"First—As a temporary expedient, can the premises now in process of erection for the purpose be modified, altered and cleansed, as to be unobjectionable, having sufficient accommodation for the trade?"

"Second—In removing from the present densely populated portions of the city, what is the best locality for the business?

"Third—What are the advantages and disadvantages of the French system of abattoirs? Can such a system be adopted here with advantage?

"Fourth—If abattoirs are to be constructed, should they be built by the Corporation, under the control of the public authorities, or should they be built by private enterprise?

From this arose a long discussion, in which the butchers were the principal speakers, and comprised in the remarks of Captain Phillips. He said:

"The butchers are willing to admit, if you please, that the market is bad. The mass of them are not anxious that their business should be conducted in a decent and cleanly manner. Slaughter-houses can be kept clean, and should be. There are some, however, I am sorry to say, that are actually filthy, that it is impossible for a man to pass them some mornings without the use of a handkerchief to his nose. Some should be abated. I am sorry that the Board has determined the butchers must be removed. I do not think they understor dresses; indeed, I am sure they do not; for I have had sick persons often come into my slaughter-house and sit over the beef while it was being drawn, that they might inhale the steam and so be cured. The mass of the butchers will go any length to keep their places clean, and will assist the Board in any reasonable manner in performing that duty. I repeat, there are many places, particularly in East Avenue, between Third and Fourth streets, that should be shut up as abominable nuisances to the neighborhood; but to make all the butchers suffer for the sins of a very small portion of their number, is to inflict the greatest injustice upon them that was ever contemplated in any community. We have the right to pursue our legitimate business in common with other citizens, and have no objection to the infliction of the penalty of the law when we violate it; but we will not submit to being driven from our property and our premises. In your removing cattle through the streets, if it were unlawful to drive more than twelve over a block, and the law enforced by putting a larger drove than that in the pound, that immense would very soon be stopped."

And that of the Board of Health in the remarks of Mr. Schultz. He said:

"Gentlemen—Mr. Dalton and myself are here merely as agents of the Board, for the purpose of conferring with you in relation to the manner in which your business affects the general health. It is useless to disguise the fact that many persons regard your occupation as the populous part of the city. The public health and public welfare require that a demand that change should be made, shall it be made in accordance with good sense, in a manner to cause the least injury. It will not state, as I had at first intended, a plan in regard to the location to which you might go, and the manner in which your business might be conducted with less detriment than now to the public health, for that that should come from you. I start from this point: the business must leave the populous part of the city. That conceded, it only remains to discuss the reasonableness as to when and where it shall go to."

A Committee of Butchers was formed, and after a statement from Mr. Eaton, the Attorney of the Board, and a remarks from Mr. Peter Cooper about the slaughters of Paris, the meeting adjourned, to meet again for positive action.

THE GREAT FIRE IN CINCINNATI.

At half-past 11 o'clock, on the evening of Thursday, the 22d March, the City of Cincinnati was startled from repose by an alarm of fire.

Fed on gas-pipes, oil, rosin, and "Uncle's Opera House burning," was the cry. It was half-past 11 or 5 or 10 minutes earlier. Fortunately, very fortunately, the immense audience gathered within to witness the various beauties of "Midsummer Night's Dream," had all dispersed some twenty-five minutes before.

The first spark of fire which presaged the terrible catastrophe we are about to chronicle, the first destructive particle that was witnessed in the city, was first communicated to the scenery back of the stage, the immediate cause of which, it seems, was the fall of a mass of flames in two or three minutes.

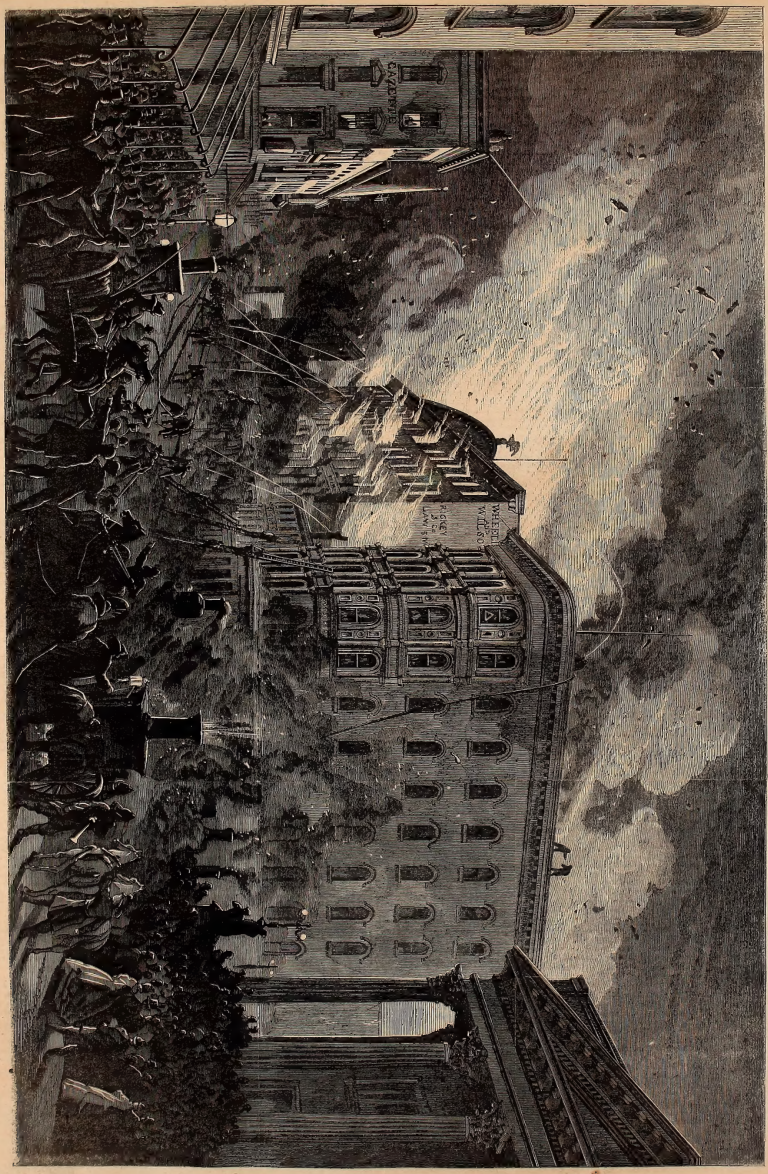
In five minutes the flames had wrapped the whole magnificent structure of stage and auditorium, and burst through the rear portion of the roof. On the wings of this death-dart they spread forward and up to a great height, and lapped over upon adjoining buildings. The night darkness was illuminated with the immense sheets of flame, and the bells hung over the first element of the city—the palatial seat of the drama and of music.

At a quarter of 12 the scene was exciting in the extreme. The hall square bounded by Fourth, Vine, Baker and Walnut streets, with a number of building of masses, through which columns of smoke shot up, and from which sparks of flame and bunches of flame floated upward, and then descended upon the burning mass below, and upon the brightly illuminated streets, ghare and red. Crowds were congregating, and rushing up and down the terrible work of the destroying element.

Shortly the entire roof of the building on the first floor of Fourth street, into the wealth of literature, the tens of thousands of volumes of books of Casserly's store, the wide stock of Sumner's sewing-machines, the fine music store of W. C. Peters, and Philip Phillips' jewelry store, and the printing establishment in the Adams Express rooms, the college rooms of Bryant, Stratton & Do Han's Commercial College, and the rooms of the Ohio Mutual Union. Harper's job printing establishment, with its valuable machinery, and all the down stairs rooms, fell a total part to the destruction was complete. The masses of flame had entirely replaced the noble edifice—all that remained of Uncle's Opera House was the grand front, or rather half of it, which stubbornly stood erect as of old, while the spirited fire wrestled and struggled to destroy its windows and hugged the stones as though grappling with them to wrench them from place. The entire block mentioned was enclosed by the wall, and through it could be seen immense piles of burning timbers and valuable goods.

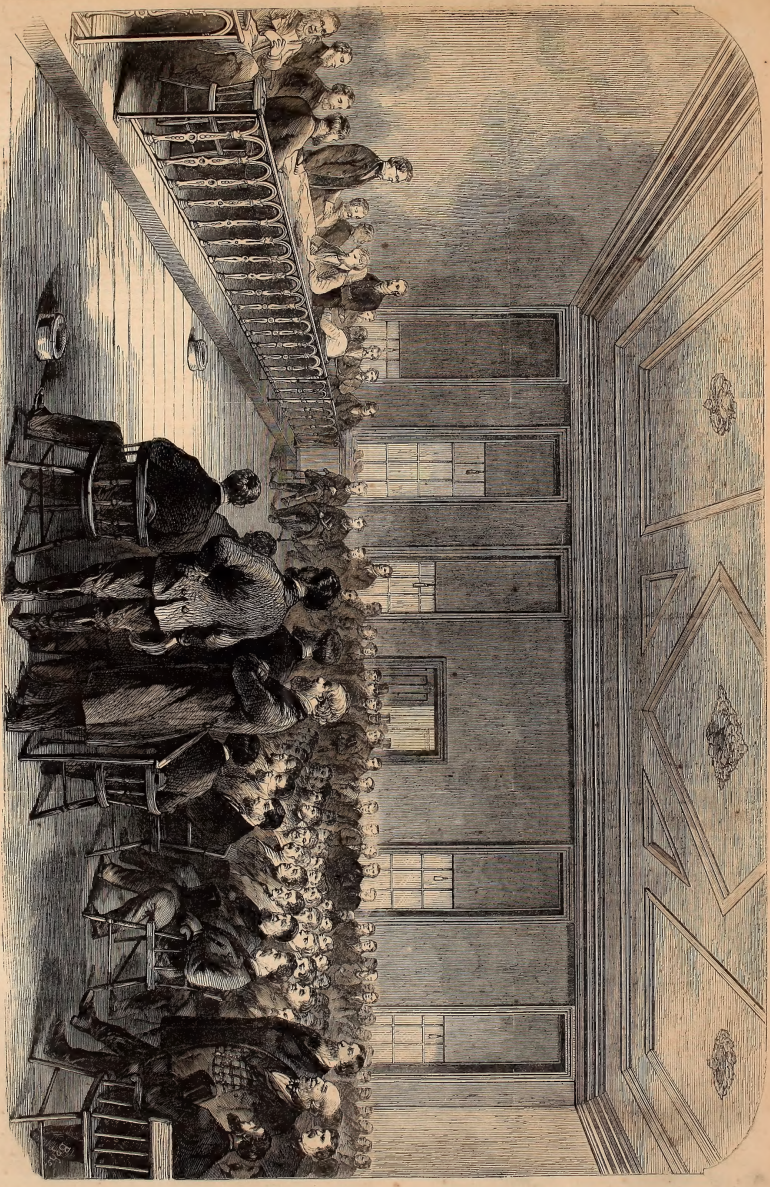
Many of a large mass of wall upon the rear of the Enquirer building insured its partial destruction, and the fire had communicated to the upper part of the first and second floors, and rushing onward, crept through the front windows, and told the story of their power to the fabrics, who crept up to grapple with them. But with the same power already so terribly felt, the flames rushed onward, and the interior of their embrace, and the work of destruction was soon far advanced through the job printing rooms of the second, 100,000 worth of cuts; through job presses, and composing rooms and editorial rooms; through the engraving rooms of Gazlay & Hart—all destroyed.

The men stopping in the office of the Adams Express Company were startled from sleep, and hurriedly aroused by the alarm, secured the treasure in the money packages and valuable papers. The books and papers in the safes of the same were also hurriedly. We are informed that, early in the course of the fire, a red hot bolt like that of lightning fell through the ceiling and struck the floor. This portion of the Opera House was the last to yield to complete destruction.



Mr. Peters loses in sewing machines, $30,000, there is insurance of not over $40,000. Nothing is left to him, of all that magnificent property, save the smoking ruins and his overwhelming grief.

When Mr. Pike heard the alarm, he was in his room in the Burnet House, reading of the War-cloud. Looking out, he saw the flames rush in a flood through the roof, in the neighborhood of the Adams Express office. In a few minutes, for a few minutes, some scoundrel picked his pocket, taking his watch. The Mr. Pike referred to was evidently meant to speak of the tremendous scene, in which a million of his property was vanishing, for it was not his watch, but the watch of numerous than the majority of the multitude of spectators.



Milton's Daughters.—After the poet was afflicted with blindness, he depended greatly on his daughters for assistance in literary pursuits. Two of these young ladies could read to their blind father in eight different languages, though they understood only their own, it being a usual saying with Milton that one tongue was enough for a woman.

"Pray, sir," said a judge angrily, to a blunt old Quaker from whom no direct answer could be obtained, "do you know what an oath is?"

"Yes, verily, I do," said the Quaker; "three of you for four colliers each day, and the fat one in the middle for four thousand a year."

BURNING OF PIKE'S OPERA HOUSE, AND OTHER BUILDINGS, AT CINCINNATI, OHIO, ON THE EVENING OF MARCH 22

THE BOARD OF HEALTH IN CONSULTATION WITH THE BUTCHERS, ON MONDAY, THE 12TH MARCH, AT POLICE HEADQUARTERS, MULBERRY STREET, NEW YORK.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

BY ELEANORE PERCY.

Rain! rain! rain
And my heart is as dark as the day;
For the love that came with the summer-time,
With the summer has died away.

O winds of the Southern lands,
Blow up from the battle-plain,
And tell me the place where in my darling lies
In the ghastly heaps of slain.

Rain! rain! rain
On the field and its thousand dead;
But drift, ye leaves, from the forest-paths,
And cover his golden head.

Oh! cover it from the light,
Lest the angel of dying die,
Should see the smile on his death-white face,
And bear it with her away.

I know that he called my name,
When he fell in the fragrant South,
For he left his ring on my willing hand,
And his kisses upon my mouth.

O stars of the purple skies,
Watch tenderly through the night!
My darling has gone from this lower world,
To your radiant homes of light.

Rain! rain! rain!
And my heart is as sad as the day;
For the rose that bloomed with the summer-time,
With the summer has died away.

Bound to the Wheel.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GUY WATERMAN'S MARE," "BEDDER'S WAY," ETC.

CHAPTER LXXVII.—ESAU'S FAREWELL.

Esau fled—fled from his own terrible thoughts, which every moment that he staid to see and think of his father, became more dangerous and uncontrollable.

But as he went on into the country, gradually he relapsed into the state in which he had been before the unexpected meeting with his father, and the change was such a change of torture, not a relief. He forgot Bob. He managed, for a time, to stunt out, as by a severe effort, the thought of Anthony and of the vague plan he had matured during the night, as involving action at all events, however hopeless. He got rid of those things by a powerful effort of the will, in order that he might dwell on a work to be done as a mere episode of the day, but an episode in which Esau's past and future seemed all bound up. Worse, even, in some senses, than his interview with Bob was the interview yet to come, because more full of real pain for him. To explain this, we must first recall to the reader's mind certain passages of conversation between Harris and Anthony, when they were last alone about Esau's conduct, and when they saw, as they thought, a new influence beginning to work upon him. Let us, then, go back, in point of time, to recall a couple of incidents, before we again deal with Esau and his doings of to-day.

Esau had not long been at the Harrises before he became a universal favorite. As to Mrs. Harris, she almost seemed to get fonder of him than of her own gawky, red-haired son, Tom, who stumbled every time he went up-stairs, as if he always forgot to allow for the last inch his legs had grown. Indeed, Tom often had Esau's virtues flung at him when he had offended his mother, and was told that the latter had once arms in his little finger than Tom had in all his long body and great head. Much of the affection the Harris family had begun to feel toward Anthony, and which they could not show him, was lavished upon Esau. All his little fancies in eating were studied by Mrs. Harris, and woe betide Tom if he cut Esau's side of the loaf, or sprawled his long legs in front of the fire if Esau were cold, or looked at the clock if Esau were late. Yet, though the boy occasionally had a round in the work-yards to keep their friendship warm, Esau and Tom agreed better than might have been expected. Esau made up to Tom for his mother's injustice by his cleverness in getting him out of the mire unseen. The children were all fond of him, and looked on him as a sort of magician, for he could turn a couch and six out of an old cop-cake, and erect invisible swings, and set the most successful bird-traps in the world.

There was but one face that did not brighten when Esau came in—that did not smile at the impudence of his make-believe apologies for his indolent and ire-gular habits. Sometimes, when they had all sat up for him, Anthony would begin a lecture when he came in, and was sure to be interrupted by the laughter Esau did not by his affectation of contrition or surprise, or by murmurs of pity for the look of wretchedness and depression which the lad's face occasionally wore. But Anthony always noticed that one voice was silent and one face serious at such times, and he thought Esau noticed it, too, and that he watched it furtively, with a strange expression, half-amused, half-satisfied. It was the impression Esau had cared for the dusty road-side one summer's day, belonging to a small, prim maiden, sitting on a box, and waiting patiently for the London coach. That day was longer ago than Harris had said, for it was full two years now since Mrs. Harris, in the absence of her husband and Anthony, had sent Esau to meet her daughter and come home with her by the London coach. A carrier's cart was to leave her and her box at the corner of a certain road, and there Esau, who ought to have been on the spot before her, found her waiting.

Kitty had been staying for the last two years or more as an attendant on two invalid ladies, who had been so loth to part with her that Harris wished to have her home, after the change in his circumstances, that they had promised, if she might stay with them, they would do their best to forward her education; in fulfilment of which promise, Miss Olivia had taught her her dancing steps, and to play two long pieces on the piano, and to say, "When will you take your gruel, ma'am?" in three languages; and Miss Frances had instructed her in needlework, and had just completed with her a portrait of the little Princess Charlotte in Berlin wool.

This was the little maiden who now met Esau's eyes, as she sat, unconscious of his neighborhood, on her box, with an enormous country nosegay, of triangular shape, held across her lap, and was dressed in the neatest, prim-est manner possible. Her fine brown merino dress was made in the fashion, with the short outside waist and skirt, beneath which appeared her slender little feet in snowy stockings and low, black shoes. Her bonnet —with its airy bows, grey ribbons, and great brim —turned back from the face—was trimmed with nothing but one ring-shaped curl of bright hair that, turn which way it would, appeared from under it.

The ugly crown was turned toward Esau as he approached; and not feeling inclined to introduce himself formally, he climbed over the orchard wall, at the corner of which she was sitting, picked a handful of hard green gooseberries, mounted the wall again, and prepared to attract her attention by degrees. He was amused with the demureness and primness of the little figure and its attire, and felt curious to see the face that still looked down the road, along which the coach was due to come. To make her turn, he aimed one of his smallest gooseberries at the centre of her bonnet. It missed aim, and only hit her shoulder, and fell on the foot. She turned, and looked down at her flowers and felt their fastening, as if she thought one had dropped.

"She's got white eye-lashes," said Esau to himself; "and I hate white eye-lashes."

But he did not cease to look at her, and found that the pale lashes, when they rose, revealed such pretty eyes—so blue, and humid, and bright and tender, that Esau felt as if he could not accurately pare and fresh, that he was fain to forget what a blemish they were. He looked still, and liked the face better and better. Finally, she elbows crushing down the snap-dragons on the old wall, and his chin in his hands, and the dry, rich rustling of the summer trees around, he gave himself up to the pleasure which, he thought, had come to him as a reward for patience and skill in watching the stare from his bed, in some quiet bay-field, or the daybreak on the hills.

The beauty of Kitty's face lay all in its sweet tints, none of which were more exquisite than the first pink-tipped buds of the hawthorn. Its very freckles—which lay so light and fresh on it as to be scarcely visible—had a look less flesh than the first pink-tipped buds of the hawthorn. Its very freckles—which lay so light and fresh on it as to be scarcely visible—had a look less flesh than the specks of gold-dust from a lily—were a charm. Esau, with a touch of country homeliness in him, Esau watched her, he could see that her eyes were lit with delicious thoughts of home, and that the sensitive, pretty little mouth twitched, as if pulled by invisible smiles.

Gentle and calm as she seemed by nature to be, her happiness knew no bounds whatever. She tapped her box with her heel, she pulled out the heads of small flowers, which had got hidden by the larger ones in your bosom, and when she dropped it once by a hasty movement of her arms, as if she were fancying she had reached home, and the time had come to throw them round her mother's neck.

Esau was in no hurry for the coach to come. It was so pleasant leaning there, and looking on with all the road, as far as he could see, to their two selves, and with that fair little freckled face opposite him, uncovered and unconscious. As yet no one had yet taught him, or he cared to learn—the meaning of the word, Home!

She smiled, and laid down on her flowers; she sighed; she fell into a listening attitude, as if she were hearing all the home news—and a charming picture she made then, Esau felt sure. Then, on one side, her lips set in sweet attentiveness, her eyes full of light and vivacity. She had tits of impatience sometimes, and jumped off the old box, to get a better view of the road she expected her father to come by, and of the road going down by her cottage, which she knew he would not come. Then she would take little walks round her box, and make efforts to stroke herself down and keep herself quiet. Those sweet thoughts that had not come before, falling into her already brimful little cup of happiness, caused its overflow, and she became quite excited. Finally, she gave a bright look through them, upward, and a smile and a half shake of the head, denying their apparent meaning to the Giver of her happiness, and then wiped them away, and grew quiet again.

A LONDON correspondent describes the manners and customs of fashionable society at the opera in London: "Dress and manners at the London Italian Opera prices are very much higher here than in America, and in the London season ladies in full dress would never robed in breadcloth, with a dress-coat and white neckcloth. This is supposed to be the dress of the male performers, like your correspondent, for instance, pose yet, considerable, whose love for music entirely counteracts his manners for gratifying that love. In the fall, however, where 'my lords' and 'ladies' are not attracted to the city, one may hear the opera in any respectable clothes he may happen to have on, and even in the full season, unless he is desirous of learning how inappropriate an educated Englishman can be. In all only hear one or two strange remarks, and be the conscious target of a score of eyes all the evening, but even that is unpleasant when one is supposed to be among gentlemen. In most parts of the theatre hats are not taken off until the curtain rises, and a people never will wear anything but stove-pipes, and they are modern to put their hats on the floor, or on the seats on every possible opportunity, and those in the back seats were often all the evening."

A Chapter on Shopping.

"He that goeth a shopping for a she, meeteth a mult of it."—CICERO.

I, ADOLPHUS SNIPP, JUN., can't swear that Cicero ever uttered the above quotation; but if he did, it was only because dry-goods stores were not in vogue in the early days when he perambulated this mundane sphere, or because his wife never asked him to go shopping for her. Reader, did your wife ever request you to go on a shopping expedition? If she did, and you consented, allow me to condole with you—allow me to sympathize with and for you.

One day last week—the day shall be nameless—my wife said to me, as I was about to depart from domicile:

"Dolly"—she always calls us "Dolly" when in good-humor—"I want you to do a little shopping for me."

"Well, what is it, my dear?"

"I wish you would go into Hogg, Brown & Taylor's."

"Oh, the devil!—has got into my corns," said I.

My wife looked hard at me at the mention of his Satanic majesty, evidently thought, after the completion of the sentence, that my words might have been put nearer together, or that the last part of it couldn't have been uttered only for that look of reproach. The mention of his sulphuric highness in connection with my corns, possibly would not, to the gentler look now word from her, but she no doubt thought it was uttered in a spirit of veneration at the mention of H. B. & T.'s. I have nothing to say as there is the sentence, and you can interpret it according to the best of your knowledge and belief.

Talk about the counsellors at Butler, Banks, and other heroes! why, they sink into insignificance when compared to a raid on a dry-goods establishment by a masculine, to accommodate a feminine.

"Well, my dear, what shall I procure for you?"

"You know I don't feel very well, and don't want to go out; and I should think you might just go in and get these few things I want."

Certainly we will, my dear," I replied; "I will get anything you wish. Now, what is it?"

"Well, you go into Hogg, Brown & Taylor's—" I inwardly repeated my previous exclamation, which, of course, was unheard by my better half—"and look over the list while I put on a shawl."

"What colors do you want the figures?" I inquired.

"Don't want any colors, you foolish man. Blue silk, figured, not plain. I shall leave it to your taste to select the pattern; and four yards of black lace trimming. Four inches wide; and six skeins of scarlet floss, and—let me see, is there anything else?—yes, get three yards of green ribbon, about three inches wide; and three skeins of blue and green silk—"

"Three skeins each?" I ventured to ask.

"Why, of course not. Let me see—that's all—oh, get me, while you are about it, two pairs of light kid gloves, number six and a half—that's all. Now do you think you can remember all these?"

Hadn't you better set them down? Now see if you can say over the things."

My memory is tolerable, so I "said over the things."

"That's right," was the approving remark from my wife. "Now you mustn't forget the floss. I'm so afraid you'll forget some of them—you better set them down."

"Oh, no; I shall remember," I said, and prepared to leave.

"Now remember—and don't forget," she said, as my hand was on the handle of the door. "Oh, Dolly, stop a minute—I forgot; just go into Tuttle's, and get me a pair of Jouvin-calf-skin boots, size two, number three and a half."

"All right," I said, and left.

"G' last," she sung out.

"Don't forget!" for about the seventy-fourth time came floating after me as I went along the street, "saying over the things," like the boy who was sent for salt, pepper and mustard, and who forgot pepper, but got to the store, where he sung out for "fur, pitch and rosin—tar, pitch and rosin." The "things" that I was to purchase were not so much varied, and I resolved to go in somewhere and make a memorandum of them, for I didn't want to make a "mull of it;" I was anxious to get it done and over—returned to write down the articles, but I never meant to tell my wife that I did so.

Over yard of lace trimming; four yards of black silk, figured, four inches wide; six yards scarlet ribbon, three inches wide; three skeins of green floss; three skeins of black and scarlet silk; one pair light colored gloves, number three and a half, and—let me see—oh, two pairs boots, patent leather, number six and a half—see the last. There, now I was all right, and I made for Hogg, Brown & Taylor's, whose store I passed and repassed seven times before I dared to attempt an entrance, on account of the crowd of ladies going in and coming out. Bless me, how they do like to go shopping!

At length a favorable opportunity occurred, and screwing my courage to the sticking point, I essayed the entrance, but not before three ladies got the lead on the steps. However, I went forward, but unfortunately stepped on one of the ladies' dresses, and something gave way—I heard a tear of dry-goods. The lady looked round—and such a look. She might possibly have been an "angel in disguise," but certainly her face was decidedly the reverse of the angelic at that moment. I don't generally apologize in such cases, as I think if the dresses were not too long they couldn't be stepped on; but in this case I thought I would, and raised my hat, and was about to make the apology in my best manner, when some one from behind—there were at least ten women in the rear of me at this time, and as many more in front, some of them trying to get out—stepped on my cane, which fell from my hand. In stooping to pick it up, I replaced my hat, and had just got hold of the cane, when a violent push from behind sent me to my knees, and my hat over my head. It was a happy situation for a moment, I assure you; but I got to my feet, and my hat was passed to me by a lady, with a smile—they were all smiling, and some giggling at my fawx pas. What a situation for a bashful, sensitive man, in a struggling crowd of women, hemmed in on all sides, and the laughing-stock of the crowd.

Inwardly I was profane, outwardly I was confused; I would have given seven dollars to have been out of the scrape. I felt that I was in a much worse position than A. Ward when surrounded by the seventeen widows, who asked him to marry "them." My face was burning, and I knew it was as red as a boiled lobster, while the perspiration cascaded over my brow, down my cheeks and nose, in streams.

But the writhing mass of female humanity, with myself in its midst dressed, finally passed the rubicon of the doorway by dint of struggling and pushing, and I took a breathing spell. I stood back out of the crowd gathered about the counters, and wiped my weeping face, and endeavored to get myself into a calm and was collected a state as possible before prescribing myself at the counter to make my purchases. I think I obtained two more or less pats on the job, but the thought of the disquisition my wife would favor me with in case of non-fulfillment of the commission she entrusted me with, made me firm to "do or die." Oh, if I had only known what I knew two hours afterward—but never mind—I won't anticipate. I at last found the counter I had got myself into pretty "good order and condition," as the bills of lading say, and made my way to a young man, and found a chance to sandwich in between two ladies.

The clerk was busy with lady customers, and I had time to notice one with a baby. I took out my memorandum, and asked the clerk, who happened at that moment to favor me with a look, if he had any of the articles mentioned.

He smiled slightly, and said:

"In a moment, sir."

I don't think he understood me. He knew I had asked for something, and so gave me this encouragement. I pulled my hand out of the woman's, the memorandum in it, and made up my mind to patiently wait my chance of being waited upon.

The woman, satisfied with goods, and I was considerably amused by the manner of a little old woman, on my right, who looked at this piece of stuff, and then another and another, comparing the price of everything she looked at this over and again, and would now talk to a young woman on her right—probably her daughter—and then to herself.

"Hannah, what do you think of this? Handsome, how do you like it? Rather high, I think it is too much, Hannah?" and a hundred other questions and remarks. She couldn't stand still, and was continually moving backward and forward at the counter. Finally, she asked the clerk to show her some kind of stuff or other, I don't know what, but I noticed the little dame's foot and ankle was silent, when all at once I was startled by an exclamation from her:

"Oh, don't! where is my portemonnaie? Oh, dear! somebody has picked my pocket! Oh, dear! it's you, sir. Oh, dear! I recollect now, I had pulled my purse out to look at some goods on the counter. I'm sure you've got it, sir!"

All this was uttered in a rapid and excited manner, and the shocked my meek and mild, as I unconscious a grasp as that of a drowning man catching at a straw.

"You've got it, sir! I'm sure you must have it!" she cried.

Well, here was a situation, most decidedly. All eyes were fixed upon me. I heard a lady's remarks, and I felt the perspiration again coursing over my face. For a moment I was thunderstruck and speechless; but at length my tongue found utterance.

"My dear madam—"

"I'm not your dear!" me, sir," said the woman, interrupting me, and still clinging to my coat-sleeve.

"Madam," said I, "I have not got your portemonnaie. I am no thief. Look among the goods on the counter."

"I'm not going to look; you can't get away from me in that manner."

At this moment a policeman came up who was passing by the store, and then the old lady told the story of her loss, and charged me with being the guilty party of the theft, but never let go her hold. A great crowd gathered round to gaze on a pickpocket, as they evidently set me down to be.

It was an interesting moment for me! cheerful to a high degree. The policeman tried to pacify the excited old lady in a manner of gentleness, while she was sure she had her money when she came in, and so forth, and advised her to be a little more calm, and look over her goods, and see if among the goods on the counter. Of course she was sure she had the money; sure it was on the counter, and sure she hadn't sure that I must have taken it. She hunted her dress all over, and the goods on the counter were overhauled, but no portemonnaie came to light.

"He's got it—I know he's got it. Why don't you make him give it up?" she said to the policeman.

He didn't hardly know what to do; he evidently didn't believe me a thief.

"I am willing to be searched," I said to him. "I am no pickpocket or thief."

"You don't look like one, that's a fact," said he; "but I fear we must search you."

All my pockets were turned inside out, but of course the old lady's portemonnaie didn't turn up.

"This is an awkward position," says I, "to be placed in. An intensely happy moment, to be charged with being a thief, and searched in presence of a hundred ladies."

I felt as though I could have looked calmly on and seen a band of constables manhandle that old woman. Imagine the position, my Christian friends, and pity me. I wished the earth would open and swallow me alive, with my merchandise, open and swallow me alive, with my merchandise, which was in my pocket, and which my wife often said I thought more of than I did of her. I wanted to be swallowed by something, I didn't care what. How I envied, at that moment, the position of Jonah. There he had room enough, and wasn't confronted by an old woman who called him a thief, nor stared at by a hundred others who probably believed it. It might have smelt a trifle fishy, but it had been somewhat dark, but if he had been a Yankee, he would have dipped his handkerchief in it and improvised a lamp. What was his position to mine?

I wished I was a sardine—yes, the centre sardine in a box—for there is oblivion. Here, I was a sort of exhibition to be sure, being packed in about as close as one of these diminutive specimens of fish; but I should have infinitely preferred being packed in a box to the pickle I was now in, being a dead sardine to the pickle I was now in. But if "wishes were horses, beggars might ride." Here I was, and must see the end of it. The policeman felt satisfied, I was sure, that I had not taken the money, and that I was no thief; no one else did; but the old lady was certain she felt my hand fumbling about on the counter, and nothing would satisfy her that I was innocent. All at once, she exclaimed:

"Oh, dear! where's Hannah? Hannah! Hannah!"

"Here I am, mother. Why, what's the matter?"

Her daughter had left her just before the loss of the money was discovered by the old lady, and gone to the further part of the store, and was returning when her name was called out by her mother.

"What is the matter, mother?"

"Oh, dear! my portemonnaie is gone, and I'm sure that man has got it," said the old lady, eyeing me in a savage manner.

"Why, no he hasn't, mother. I took the portemonnaie when I went to the other end of the store, and told you I'd take it; you probably did not hear me. Here it is?" and the daughter passed the missing article to her mother, who clutched at it as nervously as she had at my counterclever, will the exclamation:

"Oh, dear! well I declare, that's funny! I knew it was on the counter. Well, I declare!"

There was a laugh among the crowd of a sickening thing. I don't know what; perhaps they were gratified at my innocence being so clearly established, perhaps they were disappointed: I don't know. I felt better decidedly, but mad still. As for the old woman, she turned away as soon as she got the money, seeming afraid that I might yet get hold of it.

"You owe this gentleman an apology, mother," said her daughter.

"Oh, don't apologize," said I; "it was very pleasant;" and turned on my heel to the counter, and proceeded to the check of my memorandum, saying:

"Put those things up the best you can; I don't know anything about them."

He read it over, and said they didn't have any blue lace trimming, but had white.

"Well, take that, and put up the others, and never as you can."

"Boots we haven't got," said he, laughing.

"Oh, no, of course not," I said. I had forgotten all about the boots. He handed me a parcel in a few moments, and told me the amount of the bill was $3 50, I said, and left the store comparatively happy. "Now for Tuttle's," says I. I didn't anticipate much trouble in the purchase of the boots, as I went boldly in and called for ladies' boots, patent leather, size six and a half, and required no toe the last. The shopkeeper looked at me for a moment rather vacantly.

"I think you mean 'C' last—boots made on 'C' last," he said, and smiled.

"Pon, that's it, probably."

"Patent leather, did you say? We have no ladies' patent leather boots—have glove leather tipped with patent leather."

"I believe that is the kind after all," said I.

They were done up, and paying the bill, I left with increased happiness and a feeling of great relief, so much so, indeed, that I dropped into Tuttle's for a glass of lime, and imbibed glasses of lager, and became crapsal as a summer morn. On arriving at my domicile, I handed my bundle of hat and boots to the waiting wife, with an air of satisfaction, and she appeared pleased also, as she prepared to open them.

"I've been worrying so, Dolly—I didn't believe you would get them. Ain't you a real good Dolly?"

"What under the light of the sun and moon, have you got here?" she suddenly exclaimed, in a tone rather different from the first welcome.

"Well, what's broke now?" I asked.

"Broke! that's a pretty question!" she replied, in a rising voice.

There was a breeze coming, and I mistrusted from what quarter. Whenever she raved of a number of articles from the regular course of domestic felicity, her voice kept rising till it reached a very high pitch, and then culminated in a hysterical shower of eye-brine.

"Don't get into a fret, my dear," said I.

"Fret! Who wouldn't fret, I should like to know? I told these boots; big enough for old Zeph Spunt! Who did you buy them for—you or me? Who told you to get two pair? I declare you are the greatest numbskull I ever saw—just like all the men. You—

"Look here, my dear Angelina, if there is any mistake, it was made by the clerk; for let me tell you, what I did not intend to, that, as soon as I left the house, I made a memorandum of the things you wanted—"

"I don't care if you did; look at these boots! I suppose all the other things are just the same."

"I think it very likely," said I, coolly.

The other parcel was tore open in a jiffy—the things pulled over in what I call rather a spiteful manner.

"Oh, dear me! Look at these things, will you? Not a single thing in the lot that I told you to get! I declare, you are enough to wear out the patience of a stone; I believe you did it on purpose!"

She fairly screamed at me, and threw the mess of stuff into a chair. Then came the bursting of the briny fountains, as she flung herself into a rocking chair, and rocked violently backward and forward.

There was no me trying to pacify her—as well try to pacify a volcano in eruption—or the rage of an opera-ticket; so I quietly lit my pipe and sat down to await the subsiding of the waters and the return of the ebb tide.

I had evidently "made a mull of it"—though how, I couldn't imagine; it was no fault of mine, I felt convinced, for what fiend or fatal attraction I had been buoyed on my way home at the thoughts of how pleased my wife would be with the result of my anticipated shopping of my mishaps, over which I calculated we would have a merry laugh. Alas! all my pleasant dreams were to end in real; regular storm and hysterics, instead.

In about half an hour my wife began to show symptoms of an organization more sane than she had exhibited for the thirty minutes previous. She got up and once more examined the parcel of thirty-cent trash a word. At length she took up the gloves, and holding them out to me, said, quite calmly:

"Pon, for mercy's sake, did you suppose could wear these things? they are about a fit for a gal of fourteen. Oh, dear! what did I do to deserve this!" holding up some scarlet ribbon, green floss, and so forth. I kept mum. "Not a thing here I can use, single thing. Why, it's a complete joke, are." Her voice began to rise again, and was evidently pitched in the key of "C."

"Don't be excited, my dear," I again called me Snipp when ruffled, never Dolly—"you can just pack these things back, quick as your legs can carry them, back to the store. What did they cost, for pity's sake? Enough, I suppose, in all conscience. There, take them back, and don't excite yourself about it." At this juncture she subsided again to the rocking-chair.

Taking the things back was the last feather that broke the camel's back. I wouldn't have carried them back for ten times the cost.

"Mrs. Snipp," said I, "when I take those things back, you'll know it."

"You won't take them back?" she screamed.

"I will not," I replied, in the tone of a Senator. "I'd see them in Tophet first, and—"

"Oh, yes, Mr. Snipp, and me, too! and me, send you were in Tophet first, and me, too—just like all the men, to treat their poor wives in this manner."

Hysterics No. 2, with a copious, heavy wet now supervened, in the midst of which agonies exhibition I retired from her presence—from the house and its sweet influence—for the rest of the day.

Now, my dear readers, you have the experience of a Mr who went shopping for a she, and if Cicero didn't utter the adage, "He that goeth shopping for a she, maketh a mull of it," I claim the origin of it.

COLD BEATING.

A SINGLE grain of gold may be beaten by the hammer so as to cover 75 square inches, which would form it into leaves not more than 1-200,000 of an inch in thickness, or requiring more than 1,000,000 sheets of the leaf to make a pile three inches high. This would be a piece of gold-beating which would astonish the London printing-paper, and is owing to the extreme tenacity of gold. A single grain of gold may be drawn into a wire that would reach round the globe. A silver wire, coated with the thinnest wash of gold, may be drawn out so as to make a wire, whose thickness no coating so much that a defect could be discovered, even with a microscope. Forged notes have been detected by means of a slight wash with silver and copper, unless the leaf is to be exposed to the weather, when pure gold is used. In the finest gold-beating, a piece of gold scarcely, which, on being cooled, is passed through polished steel rollers, until it becomes a narrow ribbon, about 1-1000th part of an inch in thickness. It then passes into the hands of the "cutter," who, with shears, cuts it into square and oblong pieces, and 150 of these are placed between as many leaves of vellum, which are bound in a book, and given on with his heaviest hammer, beating the pile about an inch square. The "cutter" then takes the gold, shifting the hammer without any pause, and very deftly turning the leaves, which are now gold to gold. In this operation, by this time the pieces of gold will have expanded to the size of the vellum leaves, which are then cut and each one is again cut into four. They are again placed between four dozen vellum leaves, and beaten by means of the original piece, which are bebatered for another hour with a hammer weighing seven pounds in the first. The force of all the hammers are slightly convex, to cause the gold to spread.

When this beating is completed, the gold is found to be about 1-250,000 of an inch, and making 3,600 in all, and are put into thinner parts of the vellum, and carefully packed to another hammer, and finally submitted to the last and most extreme thinness of the metal. The hammer-man is worth eight or ten pounds per week. Beating lasts for five or six hours, at the close of which the edges of the leaves, which are always uneven, are cut with a sharp reed, as the gold adheres to a metal knife. The leaves are then put into a "shoder," or mould, in which it is sold, each leaf of gold being about three inches square, and 25 making a book. They are very seldom torn or cracked.

THE CAP.—The Romans went for many ages without any covering for the head, and their statues or busts of all the ancient statues appear bare. But at length, indeed, the cap was a symbol or liberty; and when the Romans gave it to their slaves, it entitled them to freedom. The cap was sometimes used as a mark of infamy; and in Italy the Jews were distinguished by a yellow cap; and in France, those to whom pardons or rapts were for ever after obliged to wear green caps. The general use of caps in these parts of the world being in 1440; the first seen in France was worn by the Duke of Alençon, who took the plaque of elegance or haste. He never they took the plaque of elegance or haste. He never cap was called sorte'n; the wool cap, bonnet. The clerical or university square cap was invented by Patrouillet.

THE WHITE ELEPHANT OF SIAM.

SIR JOHN BOWRING, in the Fortnightly Review, gives these elephantine items:

"Elephants, especially white elephants, are all important personages in Siam. In the multitudinous incarnations of Buddha, it is believed that the white elephant is one of his successive forms; and the possession of a specimen of a white elephant is the duty, the pride, the happiness of the fortunate potentate of state in the domicile of the white elephant. Once, when death, not long ago, filled the court and nation with mourning. The first king, in the early years of the reign of Chulalongkorn reward was paid to the fortunate discoverer, and the white elephant was shown, with much solemnity and ostentatious welcome and reverence, the newly-acquired treasure.

"In Siamese history there are many chapters giving magnificent and elaborate accounts of the wars waged solely for the acquisition of some white elephant in the possession of the neighboring princes. There are instances where two existed in the same capital, and the unsuccessful monarch on the acquisition of one by friendly surrender, the territory of the doubly-blessed monarch, in token of gratitude for the acquisition, immediately demanded et si avenit.

"The court of Siam had been for some time unhonored by the presence and patronage of a white elephant. Slightly brown in red with dark brown or pale black, with pendant ears of a lighter color and eyes of bright blue. Such a specimen of nature's prodigal and diviner race. These were adorned with rich jewels, and by lineal anticipation the heir-apparent to the throne when they left their stalls; but they became as nothing when the delighted and fortunate sovereign, or rather of celestial genealogy, appeared.

"The King of Siam, in announcement of his capture, wrote to me in terms of high satisfaction at the acquisition, and invited me to be present at his capital I was conducted to the palace of the heir-apparent, to say the least of it, a very splendid but copper; and there I found the white elephant, which looked like what a red Indian. His stable was palatial platform, of Persian design, covered with a roof of rich embroidery on whose adjacent walls handsome women were in attendance, and who, with fans and chowries, kept the sacred beast cool. who took care he should be supplied with his favorite food. The elephant was fed with sugar-cane. When the white elephant went to bathe, the procession was splendid. Every courtiers, and was received by the people with prostrations and reverence.

"On my departure from Bangkok, after the signature of the treaties, when the ratifications were delivered, engraved on golden slabs, to the great Queen of England, the King of Siam, in a letter inscribed with a gold key, though many handsome presents accompanied the royal missive. the most precious offering was the most precious of the assurance that it was of the invaluable offering was a gift to be conveyed by me to the white elephant's fat, tied together with a golden thread.

THE HEART AND BRAIN.

FOR the purpose of showing that the heart could continue to beat in the absence of the brain, Brodie employed artificial respiration on animals who had been decapitated. Another brain had by robed of the blood was destroyed. By the regular action of a pair of bellows attached to a tube introduced into the windpipe, air could be forced in or out of the chest in a way simulating ordinary respiration. When this was done, the heart continued to beat, the muscles of the limbs had tonical contract when stimulated, the blood to be changed from a venous to an arterial color in the passage through the lungs, except that there was no consciousness, no voluntary movement, and apparently no sensation. In other words, the heart and the lungs retained the same functions as during life. According to the theory of Brunn, Brodie explained the change of the blood from a venous to arterial character in the lungs, being due to the fact that the carbonic acid, which is formed in it, have been generated, and, consequently, the insufficient stimulus of the blood in the pulmonary capillaries was as long as artificial respiration was continued, to produce the change of color. Any more, when two pieces of bowels of ox, sheep, or calf were taken and the one left untouched, while the other was carefully stretched, the latter was found to be more easily digested by the fact that in its case a certain amount of cold air was at the same time brought in contact with the warm interior of the animal. He however obtained the same results when he had been mechanically destroying the brain, and merely substituting chloroform or narcotic poisons, with which a dog of Brande, he demonstrated that not only did the blood appear to the eye to undergo the change from dark crimson from the venous to the arterial condition, but also that the amount of carbonic acid evolved by the animal during the artificial respiration, to be actually greater than that proper to life and health. From his experiments the conclusion that animal heat is not dependent on the nervous system, but that by respiration no (be afterward changed into heat). Brodie found that when guinea-pigs, in a state of sole condition and source of the elevated temperature of warm-blooded animals, had been deprived of the functional activity of the brain and nervous system.

THE HAIRDRESSER'S DAUGHTER.—"Know then, fair sir," the barber's daughter, drawing a deep sigh, "that I am cursed with a luxuriant head of hair, wicked enough to drive a dozen others."

"Shame," I muttered, "would call it blessed to be thus endowed. Is it not beautiful, then?"

"Worse luck," said the maiden, in tones of despair. "It is the curse of my profession. The curse of my profession. My paternally kind but professionally cruel father has made me in the kind of sight and sense not by bald headed men."

"Say, sir, to dress my head à la something; a new form of coiffure, and I'll make your fortune while I sleep. When I have been coming to the most deeply interesting part of the story, he has actually fallen asleep. room and insisted on my trying on a elegant bonnet, which from my long hair, I could not possibly on me. When I am ready dressed to go to bed, he will not hear of it, and I am obliged to sit up with him all hours of the day and night I am liable to be disturbed and in health, in joy and in sorrow, I must yield my hair to the curling-irons of my father's customers. I have no rest. For months I have slept with my eyes open.

"With my eyes open," I said, the consequence of having to study that I could not shut them. It was very hard to study with them open, and that the muscles relaxed. Ah, sir, you know not what I have suffered—what I am sacrificed to."

THREE CENTURIES AND A HALF AGO.—"I have seen a man conversed with a man who fought at Flodden field," may be said by a venerable octogenarian gentleman to whom we are indebted for the following circumstance. The writer of this, when an infant, was carried in the arms of Mr. Ogle, of Eglingham, Northumberland, who died in the age of 116. Mr. Ogle, 70 years old, on a journey to London about the year 1670, in the capacity of page in the family of the Duke of Trompe, by become acquainted with the venerable Henry Jenkins, and heard him give evidence in a court of justice at York, that he "perfectly remembered being employed, when a boy, in carrying arrows on the hill at the battle of Flodden."

	A. D. 1513
Add Henry Jenkin's age	169
Less	114
Enter Garden	1738
Less his age when at York	12
	114
The writer on this in 1865, aged	80
	A. D. 1865

FEMALE CRIMINALS.

THE October number of the Edinburgh Review contains some interesting statistics relative to "Life in the Criminal Class." In regard to female criminals it says:

"In the report of last year's prisoners, we are told that women, when criminal, are worse than the men. For this, while female convicts are little more than a third of the whole number, 42 per cent. of the women in jail last year had been convicted before, to 32 per cent. of the men; and again, that of convicts who had been in prison above 10 times before, there were 3,778 women to 1,171 men. Nobody could be surprised at this who had learned anything of the life led in our female prisons, either by observation or from reports and books. One of the worst results of such mistakes as are at first sight most to their advantage is, that a general impression has been created, that women once bad, are utterly hopeless; and that the only alternative for them is to be shut up in prison with beasts in cages, incessantly terrifying their keepers, and to be turned loose among society, like escaped animals of prey, which are the curse of all who live within the range of their haunts. Much of this impression is due to those very weaknesses and wild acts of criminality which have been provoked by injudicious management in prisons; and when they are taken aside from before any judgment can be formed at all, it has come to be a fixed idea, that the fate of the reviewer and restoration of a hopeful woman to England, and of a very large proportion of women in England, is a thing only recognized, if at all, as the most remote chance of redemption. It must be acknowledged that the efforts made to rescue the fallen, and to restore them to society, absorb a large portion of our criminal funds. Many women are driven for the most part to crime, sometimes or ruined by betrayal, poverty, weakness, and perversion, and they are but bright and passionate animal and affectional; and with the exception of a few of the most perplexing combination, duplicity and power of intrigue beyond all fathoming. If we may generalize from the cases of inmates with us before their companions in crime and their selfish lovers, they are more tractable, decent women uncivilized than otherwise than by long and hard experience; and hence the difficulty of their case. Neither judge nor jury, neither chaplain nor matron, neither doctor nor warder, prison at all can understand and feel for a being who seems to be made up of the idiot and the intriguer, the infant and the woman, the helpless victim and the fiendish idolater, the bedlam empress and the victim under the wheels of the Juggernaut car."

FUN FOR THE FAMILY.

A YOUNG lady in Louisville, while on her way to be married, was run over and killed. A confirmed old maid accosted the remains: "She avoided a most lingering and horrible death."

An ancient maiden in Newark, after reading in a newspaper that a man in Anglesea had cruelly beaten his wife, exclaimed:

"Is there such a thing as a virgin?"

Her brother's wife, a woman of 22, overheard the remark, and replied:

"Oh, yes, 'a virgin' on 40, I think."

LILLE L——, with her little brother called at a house in Jersey City, and while her cold morning, to warm. Some doubts were expressed as to her brother being more than two years old.

"Oh, yes!" says Lille, "he is naix, and mother says he will be naix year, but he would have been as much as seven or eight!"

A CONTRIBUTOR says, "My name is Somerset. I am a miserable bachelor. I cannot marry—for how could I hope to prevent on a young lady's mind of the feathers were plucked, must have been Elite ducks.

On the edge of a small river, in the county of Cornwall, there is a stone with the following inscription: "N. B.—When this stone is cast of sight, it is not far off from the sea."

"FATHER," said a cobbler's boy, as he was peeping away at an old shoe, "they say the front bits new."

"Well, well," replied the old gentleman, "you stick to your work, and you won't like your trade."

FOND reply that of Quilp to his wife, who asked him what was an artificial eye.

"A new eyelash."

THERE is danger in being too neat. An old lady in Holland scrubbed her sitting-room floor until she fell through the hole she had made.

AN agricultural society recently offered a premium for the best method of thinning out a too crowded plantation by mistake; whereupon a wag sent his wife to claim the prize. He took care to be out of the way when she returned.

A SLEEPY fellow was reproved for lying in bed so late in the morning, when he replied he was obliged to do it to invent excuses for not getting up.

WHY is a man taking a nap like a read-reading paper? Because he is employed in dozing.

How does the hairdresser end his days? He curls up and dyes.

A bandbox man—letter did write.

The thanks belated word for world.

It was read by one who had his sight.

And deaf one who had listened and heard.

It was nought that the bandbox man did send.

It was nought that struck on the brain's drum;

It was nought that struck on the brain's drum;

And nought that struck on the man's ear;

As nought that struck on the man's ear.

For one and the same, as we all well know,

Is a sight, and sound, and the letter O.

WHY are the makers of the Parrott gun the greatest thieves in the world? Because they rifle all the guns, forge all the materials, and steal (steel) all the gun barrels.

WHY is a carriage there three objections to a glass of brandy?—There are three scruples to a dram.

WHY was Cranmer's death preferable to Charles the First's? Because it was less (stake) is better than a cold chop.

"I SAY, Brown, what a close shaver Jones is—why, he'll shave a dollar about a penny!"

"Well, what if he does?" said Brown; "the less one squanders about the better."

He the contented man desires:
The poor man has, the rich requires;
The miser spends, the spendthrift saves;
And all sum carry to their graves—nothing.

WHEN may a man be said to sit down to a melancholy dessert?—When he sits down to wine (whine) and pine.

WHAT are the degrees of comparison for a lawyer?—First he has to get on, then to get honor, then to get honest.

WHY should there be no free seats in a church?—Because you ought not to be made good for nothing.

A COMPETENCY.—A little more than you have.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—Justice without mercy.

HON. SOLOMON FOOT,

United States Senator from Vermont.

THIS distinguished man died on the 28th ult., at nine o'clock in the morning, in Washington City, D. C., in the midst of his family, and possessing consciousness to the last.

It is related that, taking leave of all in the room, including his wife, brother and nephew, and Dr. Baxter, of Vermont, Mr. Foot expressed a desire to take a last look at the Capitol, and requested to be raised in his bed that he might do so. His wishes were at once complied with, and just as they had raised him so that his eyes rested on the building he expired.

Both Houses of Congress adjourned to attend the funeral, after the funeral services which were held in the Senate Chamber. The body, in charge of friends, left Washington for Vermont next day. After the death of Senator Foot became known at the White House, the President and several members of the Cabinet called on Mrs. Foot, and offered condolence and sympathy in her affliction.

Senator Foot was born in Cornwall, Addison County, Vt., November 19, 1802. His father, Dr. Solomon Foot, was a practicing physician in the town of Cornwall, whence he removed to Rutland, in 1804, where he died. The son went through the usual preparatory studies at the academies at Shoreham and Castleton, and entered Middlebury College in August, 1822, whence he graduated with high honors in 1826. Having graduated, he immediately became the principal of the Castleton Academy, where his own preliminary studies had been pursued, which charge he resigned at the end of a year, to become tutor in the University of Vermont, at Burlington.

In 1826 he again became principal of the Castleton Academy, and held, in conjunction therewith, the post of professor of natural philosophy in the Vermont Academy of Medicine, then located at Castleton, which position, he held until 1831. While faithfully discharging the duties of these combined positions he had also been pursuing the study of law. In pursuance of his plan to pursue the practice of this profession, he removed to Rutland in April, 1831, and was admitted to the bar at the September term of that year, and immediately entered upon the practice of it in Rutland.

In 1833 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Vermont Legislature, and was again re-elected in 1836, '37, '38, and '47. He was not only a member of the House, but also held the responsible position of Speaker during the sessions of 1836, '38, and '47. He was also a delegate from Rutland to the Constitutional Assembly at Montpelier in 1836, as well as State Attorney from that year until 1842. He was elected to the House of Representatives in Congress, from the First Congressional District in Vermont in 1842, and again in 1844. Declining another election, he resumed the practice of his profession in 1847, and continued in it until 1851, in which year he took his seat in the Senate of the United States, having been elected thereto by the Legislature of Vermont, in October, 1850.

THE LATE HON. SOLOMON FOOT, U. S. SENATOR FROM VERMONT.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY & CO., WASHINGTON.

At the close of his term in 1856 he was re-elected in October of that year to the same position. During those two terms he served on the Committees on Foreign Affairs and the Pacific Railroad, and as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. During a part of the 36th, the whole of the 37th, and a part of the 38th Congresses, he was President (pro tem.) of the Senate. He was re-elected to the Senate in 863 for the term ending in 1869. By his death and that of his colleague (Jacob Collamer) Vermont has two vacancies to fill in the Senate.

Mr. Foot, was a large, handsome, intellectual-looking man, of about 50 years of age in appearance, though considerably older in fact.

SPRING FASHIONS FOR GENTLEMEN, FROM MODELS EXECUTED FOR THIS PAPER.

DESCRIPTION OF FASHIONS.

THE front view of the Chesterfield overcoat which is presented to our view on Fig. 1, has no features of a novel or striking character which call for particular observation or remark. Its form is somewhat inelegant, as it does not sufficiently define the figure for a rather close-fitting over-garment, and consequently produces that straight and meagre appearance which is contrary to good taste.

Fig. 2. This figure displays a frock coat with a broad turn, collar and lappels; it rolls well open, and has silk breast facings advancing to the back end of the button-holes; the vest buttons two holes higher than the turn of the coat. Although this is the prevailing style of Parisian costume, we do not consider it appropriate to the style of coat depicted on this figure.

Fig. 3 shows an ordinary morning coat with a rolling collar, and flaps on the hips. Our readers will no doubt have already observed the extreme degree of narrowness which characterizes the present style of trowsers. We are informed by a Parisian foreman that he cannot cut his trowsers sufficiently tight to gratify his clients. We are sorry to say that the desire to rush to the opposite extreme to the peg-top style seems here also to be the prevailing wish of the young dandies.

AN UNPLEASANT PREDICAMENT.

A SINGULAR fact mentioned in Mr. Gosse's charming work, "A Naturalist's Sojourn in Jamaica," illustrates the predaceous vehemence and lurking patience of the alligator. In Spanish Haiti, the large savanna rivers flow through wide, gently descending borders, carpeted with grass, having all the clean verdure of a lawn, and interspersed with clumps of beautiful flowering shrubs and trees. A Spanish priest, with three friends, had gone for a day's sporting to these grounds and had divided themselves. The three assembled at sunset, but the priest did not make his appearance. They sought him through the darkening thickets, and at last found him seated in a tree, into which he had been obliged to betake himself to escape an alligator that had pursued him by a succession of leaps. It had run in pursuit of him, as he said, jumping rapidly after him, with its back crooked like a frightened cat. He had taken refuge in the tree, whilst the reptile crouched in a thicket close by, quietly watching and waiting for his descent.

THE SLEICH PEDDLER.

OUR sketch was taken in the neighborhood of Bangor, Maine, and represents an actual character as well known through all that section of country, and as certain in his coming, as the snow.

As soon as the season opens, the sleigh peddler starts from Bangor with his long string of vans trailing behind him—Portland-made sleighs of every shape, size, hue and workmanship—and makes his way northward. As he goes, he trades, sells, exchanges, and sometimes rents out his properties, fetching up finally, if no nearer market is found, among the blue-noses in New Brunswick.

The sleigh peddler is generally a decided character; at home in every house, with a word for every one, he is hospitably hailed wherever he goes, and is a full type of American character.

AN ELEPHANT RIDE.

IN captivity elephants seldom lie down; indeed the keepers are accustomed to regard a beast found prostrate as one smitten with some disorder, and at once place him on the sick list, regulating his diet and putting him to no kind of labor for a while. An elephant that belonged to Louis XIV. never assumed any other position than a standing one through five years, though at the same time it was evident it was reduced to adopt that course from other than natural causes; for with the points of its tusks it had scooped two holes in the stone walls of its den, and into these holes it was accustomed to hitch its ivory appendages when inclined for a nap.

THE DEATH OF THE COMTE.

In one respect do the hind-legs of the elephant differ in their formation from those of any other quadruped. Instead of bringing them under him when he lies down, he extends them behind him, as does a human being. The struggle which horses and oxen experience in rising from the ground is, by this providential arrangement of the hind legs of the elephant avoided. He simply drawe his hind feet gradually under him, and his enormous weight is levered up without a perceptible effort.

AN ELEPHANT RIDE—GOING DOWN HILL.

Owing to this beautiful arrangement of the bones and muscles, the elephant is rendered one of the most sure-footed of animals. Carrying on his back a heavily-laden howdah, he will descend precipitous slopes with the most perfect ease. He manages it in this way: kneeling down at the commencement of the declivity, he puts out one fore-leg and feels cautiously for a safe footing; if he does not find it naturally, he sets about making it artificially by hammering in the soil an indentation with his broad and heavy foot. One foot thus accommodated, the other one is drawn out with equal care, and provided for in the same fashion as the first. Then one of the hind-legs is cautiously drawn forward, and one of the fore-feet being released from the foot-hole, it is inserted in its place. It might be imagined that, to afford time to the cunning elephant to go through these performances with the careful deliberation necessary to their perfection, travelling through a hilly country must be tedious work; this is, however, far from being the case: so rapidly does the sagacious animal perform the manœuvres above described, that in as little time as it has taken me to write this paragraph, the howdah and its occupants would have reached from the top to the bottom of a considerable hill.

MADRID STREET CHARACTERS.

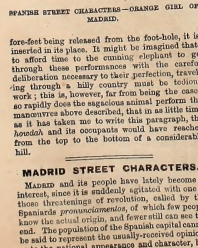
MADRID and its people have lately become of interest, since it is suddenly agitated with one of those threatenings of revolution, called by the Spaniards pronunciamentos, of which few people know the actual origin, and fewer still can see the end. The population of the Spanish capital cannot be said to represent the usually-received opinions as to the national appearance and character, but they are, perhaps, the most difficult to deal with of all Spaniards; they have, for the most part, abandoned the national costume, which is still retained in the provinces and in many of the principal towns. They have adopted semi-French manners, and even their physical appearance differs considerably from that of the true Spanish people of remoter cities. Even those lower orders of Madrid, the itinerant vendors, the water-carriers, the beggars, and the strange idlers who once made the streets so picturesque, are gradually abandoning those gaudy and often graceful costumes which made a visit to Madrid so suggestive and its pleasure so piquant. The manola, even, is fond of French fashions, instead of retaining that wonderful black silk mantilla, which fell so gracefully from the comb to the shoulders, and was both cloak and veil; her skirts have descended farther towards those well-turned ankles which were once so freely exhibited, and it may be doubted whether she now carries that concealed dagger (the navaja) which she was traditionally believed to be ready to use either for her own defense, or to avenge an injury to her friend of the circus and the bull-ring.

It is to the Puerta del Sol that the visitor must repair for almost everything he is likely to want, and here it is that he will see most of the people of Madrid, of which it is, in fact, the Alpha and the Omega. There are to be found the omnibusses, the hackney-coaches, the news-venders, the post-office; and even the time of the city is regulated by the clock there. If a Madrilenian is directing you to any part of the city, the chances are he will begin with: "Go to the Puerta del Sol, and turn so and so;" or if you lose yourself in Madrid, and find that you are in a broad, handsome street, be sure that it will conduct you to the famous gate of the sun, for all the principal avenues lead thither: the Calle Mayor, leading to the palace and the Royal Quarter; the Carrera de San Geronimo, leading to the museum; and the Calle de Alcala, which is the finest street in Madrid, the grand approach to the principal promenade, and which might almost be called the most beautiful in the world, the palaces and houses are so handsome, ending with the splendid building where Espartero once lived, now used for the artillery and the fashionable Prado.

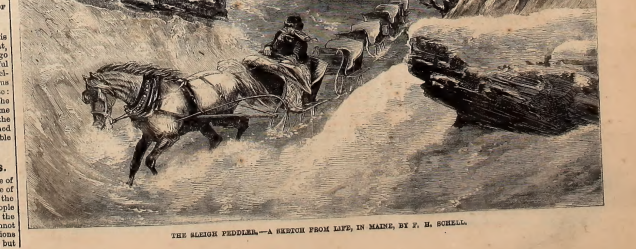
For those who care more for the people than the architecture, La Puerta del Sol is still more interesting. It is the resort of all the beggars in Madrid; of the picturesque Maragotos, and other strangers from the provinces; of all, indeed, who have found their way to the capital seeking for fortune, many of whom have little other clothing than the Spanish cloak, which they wear in all weathers. The eastern side of the square, or the one opposite the Gubernacion, is usually the most crowded part of this sunny locality, the favorite lounge of all the idlers about town.

SPANISH STREET CHARACTERS—THE FIEMAN OF MADRID.

SPANISH STREET CHARACTERS—ORANGE GIRL OF MADAID.



AN UNPLEASANT PREDICAMENT.



There the itinerant venders of all sorts of merchandise ply their trade; not, however, without a smoldering expression of gloomy interest in probable events. In regarding some of these people, one cannot help noticing, with surprise, the similarity of their features to those of the Irish; and, but for the extreme difference of climate and complexion, the resemblance would be still more remarkable. Notwithstanding the queer make of his foot and head gear, the former being something between a slipper and a cricketing-shoe, and the latter the sombrero over the usual silk handkerchief, the seller of hat-boxes, of whom we publish an engraving, has a face which might pubiish an engraving, has a face which might Spaniard, who regards his Paris silk hat with veneration and respect, could possibly submit to—one may see such occupying the luggage-vans of railway trains; and it is a certain conclusion that, wherever they are met with in such circumstances, there is a sallow, sententious, and yet keen-eyed gipsy countenance, and yet keen-eyed and lively group somewhere near, deftly making paper cigarettes, the smoke from which they blow through their nostrils in supreme enjoyment, or lunching amicably from roast pork, fruit, and some of that rich pastry of which they are mostly so fond.

The mention of pastry reminds one of the pastry-vender, be-capped, be-aproned, and carrying a whisk, with which to keep his sweet merchandise from the greedy flies of Madrid, which, like other insects in that favored capital, are a "caution." Custard and rataña are the great charms of all pastry to a Spaniard, but they have also a way of cooking fritters which is in itself a high art; and yet they have a proverb which says: "Never call a man a fritter-maker." They have also a saying that "eggs make a thousand dishes," and they have learned to put these most useful of all culinary adjuncts to capital account, as our pastry-vender of the Puerta del Sol well knows.

Oranges! There is nothing very picturesque in this poor drudge-like wench, who comes shambling past with her rich, sonorous cry and her heavy baskets; but the baskets themselves are laden with such ripe, luscious, golden fruit as might tempt a Greculander, to say nothing of a hot stranger gasping at the sun's own gate. Off with a strip of moist, pulpy rind, and then, with the great globe of wiry juice pressed to your lips, lean well back, and squeeze and suck in ecstasy. Or would you have green figs, some that granates, grapes of that rich dull-green hue that is so suggestive of food and drink at once, and both others? These you will eat out of a cool fruit-vendor; but you may look out for a melon, cool, fresh and fragrant, or the reverse; but it is to the real, melting, juicy melon that the Spaniards feel. It is a thing of beauty and a joy for three minutes. There is many a sturdy muleteer who carries his dinner from the neighborhood of the cathedral, dines from a coarse bread dipped in oil and vinegar, with perhaps a shred of garlic, makes a meal which, at all events, enables him to do more than most tourists could manage.

SPANISH STREET CHARACTERS—THE VENDER OF HAT BOXES OF MADRID.

THE SLEIGH PEDDLER.—A SKETCH FROM LIFE, IN MAINE, BY F. H. SCHELL.

THE DEATH OF THE CORILLA.

The capture of an infant gorilla is thus graphically described by Du Chaillu:

"On the 4th of May, I had one of the greatest pleasures of my whole life. Some hunters who had been out on the previous day returned to my camp and told me they had found a young gorilla. I cannot describe the emotions with which I saw the struggling little brute dragged into the village; all the hardships I had endured into the village; all the hardships I had endured in Africa were rewarded in that moment. It was a little fellow of between two and three years old, two feet six inches in length, and as fierce and stubborn as a grown animal could have been.

"By the hunters' account, they were going, five in number, to a village near the coast, and were walking very slowly through the forest, when they heard what they immediately recognized as the cry of a young gorilla for its mother. The cry of a young gorilla for its mother. The cry of a young gorilla for its mother. The forest was silent. It was about noon, and they immediately determined to follow the cry. They easily got heard it again. On hand, the brave fellows crept noiselessly toward a clump of wood, where the baby gorilla evidently was. They knew the mother would be near; and there was a likelihood that the male, the most dreaded of all, might be there, too. But they determined to get it, and, at all possible, to take the young one alive, knowing what a joy it would be for me. Presently they perceived the bush moving, and, crawling a little farther on in dead silence, scarce breathing with excitement, they beheld what has seldom been seen, even by the negroes, a young gorilla, seated on the ground, eating some berries that grew close to the earth. A few feet further on sat the mother, also eating of the same fruit.

"Instantly they made ready to fire; and none too soon, for the old female saw them as they raised their guns, and they had a very full discharge without effect. Happily, they wounded her mortally, and she fell. The young one, hearing the noise of the gun, ran to his mother, and clung to her, kissing her face, and embracing her body. The hunters immediately rushed toward the tree, hallooing with joy as they ran on. But the young gorilla, now, who instantly let go his mother, and ran to a small tree, which he climbed with agility, where he sat and roared at them savagely. They were now perplexed how to get at him; no one cared to run the chance of being bitten by the savage little beast, and shoot it they would not. At last they cut down the tree, and, as it fell, dexterously threw a cloth over the head of the young monster, and thus gained time to secure it while it was blinded. With all these precautions, one of the men received a severe bite on the hand, and another had a piece taken out of his leg.

"As the little brute, though so diminutive, and the merest baby for age, was astonishingly strong, and he had his brains good-tempered, they could not lead him. He constantly rushed at them, so they were obliged to get a forked stick, in which his neck was inserted in such a way that he could not escape, and yet could be kept at a safe distance. In this unmanageable way he was brought into the village, where the excitement was intense. As the animal was lifted out of the canoe in which he had come a little way down the river, he roared, and bellowed, and looked round wildly with his wicked little eyes, giving fair warning that if he could only get at some of us, he would take his revenge.

"I saw that the stick-hurt his neck, and I immediately set about having a cage made for him. In two hours we built a strong bamboo house, with the slats securely tied at such a distance apart that we could see the gorilla, and it could see out. Here the thing was immediately deposited; and now, for the first time, I had a fine chance to examine my prize. It was a youngmale gorilla, evidently not yet three years old, fully able to walk alone, and possessed, for its age, of great extraordinary strength and muscular development. Its greatest length proved afterward to be two feet six inches. Its face and hands were very black, and not much sunken as in the adult's. The hair began first at the eyebrows and rose to the crown, where it was a reddish-brown. It came down in a ridge of the face in lines to the lower jaw—such as our beards grow. The upper lip was covered with short, coarse hair; but the lower had none. The eyelids were very slight and thin; eyebrows straight, and three-quarters of an inch long."

Du Chaillu, having caged his prisoner, sought to make friends with it. This, however, the captive seemed to regard as adding insult to injury. It retreated sullenly, roaring, to the furthermost corner of its prison, and, when its amicable jailer approached to measure it, darted at his hand, and, despite a nimble retreat, succeeded in catching Du Chaillu's trowsers in his terrible grip, and tearing a piece out.

A cup of water and some forest berries were procured for the prisoner, and when the company had retired out of sight he condescended to take his dinner. On the second day, however, he was even more vindictive and outrageous than the first. No one could go near his cage without he roared, and leapt, and mounted, as though nothing short of rending his enemies to fatal bits would ever pacify him. Food was thrust between the bars of his cage to no purpose; he would neither eat nor drink, and met all advances with the most obstinate contempt.

On the fourth day he managed to gnaw his bars asunder, and the prison was discovered empty. The utmost consternation prevailed in the camp; the hunter were called together, and the whole expedition resolved on. However the cunning Joe (so Du Chaillu christened him) had not forgotten his tricks of escape. Instead of making a gun, a terrible, yet to the explorer's sore delicious, growling emanated from beneath the bolstered, and there was Master Joe Gorilla crouched down and regarding his master with an unmistakable "touch-me-if-you-dare" expression.

How to take him was a puzzling question. He had shown such strength and such rage already, that not even I cared to run the chance of being badly bitten in a handling match. Meantime Joe stood in the middle of the room, looking about for his enemies. I dispatched some fellows about for his enemies. I dispatched some fellows to the village, telling till he became quiet; opened the door quickly and threw the net over his head; fortunately we succeeded at the first throw in entangling the young monster, who roared frightfully, and struck and kicked in every direction, under the net. With a hold of the back of the neck, two men seized his arms and another the legs; and thus held by four men, this extraordinary little creature proved most troublesome scene. We carried him as quickly as we could to the cage, which had been repaired, and locked him in."

Poor Joe, however, died soon after, and this first attempt to bring a living gorilla to Europe or this country failed.

AMERICAN MACHINERY IN ENGLAND.

The London Times and the largest English newspapers of every class, Engineers, American reapers, and other agricultural implements, take the lead in England; and our Sewing-Machines are in use in every well-ordered English household. The Cunt Journal, in a recent issue, describes a handsome sewing-machine, which has just been sent to an English lady of high rank. We quote the paragraph:

"At the Sewing-Machine has been advanced gradually from the manufacturing stage to that of household furniture, and thence to an adjunct of the duties of a refined home, Messrs. Greene, Bacon & Baker, of England street, have wisely catered for the supply in a more elegant form, and the machines last week forwarded to them for the public present the appearance of cabinets and are fitted accordingly. The top of each is surmounted by a machine, designed and ornamented expressly for a style of work, which requires the greatest delicacy of the kind ever seen: The table and stand are of satin wood, inlaid with ebony, and finished in the most delicate style. The machine itself is silver-plated, inlaid with pearl, and most delicately chased. It is beautifully mounted, by all who have seen it, as perfection."

There is quite a controversy going on in the London Periodicals, with regard to the qualities and advantages of the different American Sewing Machines. A correspondent of the last-mentioned paper writes:

"I am happy to inform 'Perplexity' that I have been using one of Lever & Bacon's machines for the last six months. I cannot speak too highly of the beauty of the work, nor of the perfection of the stitch, which is quite as hard as the puckie of the harp; a child of two years can work it. Perhaps 'Perplexity' will write to the editress of The Queen, I will have much pleasure in letting her try my machine. GERALDINE."

GRIEVANCES OF AUTHORS.

The treaties recently concluded between France and several other countries for better protection of literary and dramatic property, has called forth several severe articles in the newspapers here complaining of the shameful state of the law and also of concerning dramatic copyright as exemplified by the dramatic authors of France and England, says our writer, is a mockery and a farce—a farce which the English playwright and author has a right to demand that we are compelled to sit still and be despoiled without the power of bridging ourselves." Even the popular French author, Dumas, asserts that his work has been produced in London with great success, writes to the foreign manager, pointing out that he is entitled to receive from the two countries, is it honest, asks a French writer, that such a thing as dramatic copyright should exist? Is there a single line in all the code. Some time ago, a piece was produced at the Adelphi, which created a most enormous success—so great a success, that a Persian Prince, with a determination to rival the magnificence of D'Ennery, one of the most eminent of French dramatic authors, immediately sent a special agent to the piece for a French audience, but with the understanding that the piece should be produced in a manner far more profound, ran the 50 nights or so, and was but moderately applauded. Everybody will remember the piece, and how the returns—complained that the piece had been spoilt by the D'Ennery. It was called Le Roi des Montagnes, or L'Opinion National, took up the cudgels, and M. D'Ennery wrote a letter, in which, among other things, he reminded the indignant author that he had paid for the piece as might have done any manager, and that the pieces which had been taken from him without such remuneration, and which had in every case created the reputation of the author by whom he was abused. Surely such facts as these should be an answer.

A QUIET HOAX.—A St. Petersburg letter, dated February 19, says: "The carnival is now brought to a close yesterday. Some ingenious native Russian performed a rather clever hoax. The notice outside its show in the fair held on the Admiralty square announced an 'Exhibition of the winter palace in its natural size.' The spectators on paying their three rouge were gravely taken to a rear-place at the further end of the wooden booth, and gratified with a sight of the building itself in the distance. Many seemed inclined to get angry, but the coolness, humor and originality of the exhibitor, as the showman soon restored it to equanimity, and on leaving into the open air they all pronounced those outside not to miss the sight for the world."

$1. BOOKS. $1.

Dollar Gift Book Sale.

100,000 VOLUMES!

Standard Works, Family Bibles, Photograph Albums, etc.,

WORTH $250,000!

All to be SOLD for ONE DOLLAR each, and a

SPLENDID GIFT,

Worth from 50 cents to $100, to be given with each Book. No Books to be paid for until you know what gift you are to get. The Gifts consist of Gold and Silver Watches, Silver Tea Sets, Sets of Jewelry, Solitaires, Breast-Studs, Chains, etc., etc.

PLAN OF SALE.

Certificates are prepared, describing each book and naming the gift that will accompany it. These certificates are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed, and each envelope, when sold, will contain a Certificate and a beautiful Card Photograph of any prominent person, English or American, or a Photograph of some one of the $1 eleven for $9; thirty for $25; sixty-five for $50; one hundred, with premium Silver Plated Ware, for $75.

Upon opening the envelope, you see what your Certificate calls for, and it is at your option to send $1 and take the Book and Gift or any other Book and Gift of the same value or not. You cannot get less than $1 worth, for less than $1 we do not sell any one Book or Album, worth $25 to $30, with a Gift worth much more.

Agents Wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered. Don't fail to send for circulars. Address BOWEN & CO., Publishers, 124 West 13th street, New York.

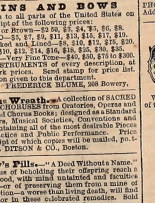
Magic Hide Buzy—130 Astounding Performances in Prestidigitation—10,000 sold. Only 30 cents, post-paid, by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. 549-52



Kate Vaugh—A Rich Story. Only 15 cents. Sent free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. 549-52

Rogues and Rogueries of New York—Price 25 cents. Sent free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. 549-52

Curious—If converted into $20, $50, $100, or $500. A secret that every man and real estate dealer should have. Address JAMES THOMPSON, 81 Nassau street, N. Y. 550-3

The Little Joker and A FINELY COLORED PHOTOGRAPH sent in a sealed envelop for 25 cents. Address, Box 5,057, P. O., New York.

FRANK LESLIE'S

With Number 41 commenced the Lives and Portraits of the Self-made Men of New England, beginning with

FRANKLIN HAVEN, ESQ.,
MAJOR JOHN A. HODGES,
ERASTUS B. BIGELOW, ESQ.,
JAMES T. FIELDS, ESQ.,
W. W. CLAPP, ESQ.,
CLINTON HOWARD, ESQ.,
ALVIN ADAMS, ESQ.,
HARRISON G. DYER, ESQ.,
HON. F. W. LINCOLN,
HON. WILLIAM CLAFLIN,
DONALD McKAY, ESQ.,
HORATIO HARRIS, ESQ.

Contents of No. 46.

VERONICA. A Story. Illustrated.
THE HOUSEHOLD ROMANCE. A Story. Illustrated.
THE CHEVALIER D'EON. With Portrait.
CINNAMON FIELDS OF CEYLON.
THE COCHINS AND THE COCHINS.
HOMES OF SOCIAL LEPIDOPTERA. Illustrated.
THE PRINCE OF WALES'S VISIT TO INDIA.
THRESHING GRAIN IN CHILE.
BRIGANDISM IN ROME.
CLOVER. A Poem.
ABDEYFORD: A ROMANCE OF THREE WOMEN. Illustrated.
PHILIP AND DORN'S CONFESSION. A Story. Illustrated.
SELF-MADE MEN.—HON. FREDERICK W. LINCOLN, JOHN A. HODGES, Mayor of Boston, Mass. With Portrait.
THE PUFFIN. Illustrated.
THE AFRICAN HORN. Illustrated.
MUSICAL FISHES.
A REFORMED HOUSEWARMAN.
A TRIP TO MARS.
A TRIP TO THE EARTH THROUGH THE TAIL OF A COMET.
CANNIBALISM IN AFRICA.
HAPPY FAMILIES. An Essay.
SOMETHING ABOUT SPIDERS.
A DODGE FOR YOUNG LADIES.
HOW SHE LOST A HUSBAND.
I AM HERE. A Poem.
DINNERS.
ONLY A CHILD.
OLDEN OLD MAID.
DAMARA COSTUME.
MARIANA WAS A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.
HINT TO HOUSEKEEPERS AND OTHERS.
A WEDDING IN JAVA. Illustrated.
A FUNERAL IN JAVA. Illustrated.
ELECTRICAL EXPERIMENTS. Illustrated.
MANNERS.—THE HERMIT OF FORT LAHAMIE. A Story. Illustrated.
THE BLUE FOX OF THE ARCTIC REGIONS. Illustrated.
THE STRATAGEMS OF THE LADY ISOLDA. A Story.
GRANDFATHER WHITEHEAD'S LECTURES.—THE GREAT CONFLAGRATION.
THE WATER OF LIFE AND STRENGTH. A Fairy Story.
BOYHOOD OF OLIVER CROMWELL.
FRIENDSHIP. A Poem.
LITTLE JACK HORNER.
ADOLPH "OF THE MILK-CAN."
FAMILY PASTIMES.—ENIGMAS, CHARADES, ETC.
MY HITTITES: DIFFICULTIES OF PHOTOGRAPHY.
Six Comic Illustrations.

And a great variety of Humorous and Miscellaneous Paragraphs. For sale by all News Agents. Price 10 cents. Annual subscription $4.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

To Book and Newsdealers.
Hilton's Dime Books.

No. 1. The Dead Boxer; or, Secret Blow. Price 10c.
No. 2. Married; or, Forbidden Love. By Mrs. E. F. Braddon. 10 cents.
No. 3. The Midnight Lamp, by Ned Buntline. 10 cents.
The most liberal terms to the trade. Address
HILTON & CO., 126 Nassau street, N. Y.

SUBSCRIBE!

For COUSIN CHARLIE'S MONTHLY, and get these Sparkling, Bright and Brilliant Stories. Subscribe now. Only 50 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid. Agents wanted. Club Rates: Club of 10, $9; Club of 20, $16. Address all orders to
COUSIN CHARLIE'S MONTHLY,
144 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

1,000 "He Haws," 500 "Te Hes,"

All in one day, by reading the laughable ADVENTURES OF MESSRS. BUNKER, BUNN AND JOHNSON; showing how they went, what they did, and how they did it; with many other Comic Engravings. Price only 50 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid. Agents wanted.
CRAIG & BERGH, Publishers,
144 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
5004

Published this Day,

WONDROUS STRANGE:

A Novel. By MRS. NEWBY, author of "Kate Kennedy," "Country Quarters," etc. Price 90 cents. Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price.
F. A. BRADY, Publisher,
No. 22 Ann street, N. Y.

To Consumptives.—You will get the Recipe for a sure Cure for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, and all lung complaints, by sending to D. ADEE, No. 381 Pearl Street, N. Y. He sends it free. Write for it. It has cured thousands.

300 per cent. profit for Agents—Three Genuine Articles every family needs, and sell at sight. All sent, with Jackfarlane, free, by mail for 33 cents. Address E. H. MARTIN Hinsdale, N. H.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELLERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELLERY, PENS, BRACELETS, CASTORS, GOBLETS, SPOONS, FORKS, NAPKIN RINGS, ETC., ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be sold for until you have seen what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you have for $1, and at the same time you our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

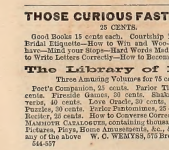
LADIES'
PAPER COLLARS
& CUFFS,
WHOLESALE & RETAIL.
WARD, 387 B'WAY, N.Y.

One Lady's Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Sample, 25 cents; French Transparent Cards (12 views), $1.25 per dozen; Fine Cards, also Marked Cards, Playing Cards, $1.50 per pack. All by mail on receipt of Price. Address
FORWARDING AGENCY, 58 Liberty street, N. Y.

Vieve Brower: or, Life in the Concert Saloons of New York. A rich book. Just published. Handsomely illustrated. Only 50 cents. Sent free. Address Post Office Box 78. HOLLAND, N. Y. 542-51

Sensology, Psychologic Fascination, Marriage Happily Attained, How to Become Rich, Wit the Opposite Sex, Marriage, &c. This query, useful, and spicy book, sent by mail for 25 cents. Address EVANS & CO., Box 1,816, Philadelphia.



EVERYBODY'S FRIEND
Contains the Lady's Guide to Beauty: Useful Recipes for the Housekeeper; Horse Taming—complete: Parlor Theatricals; the Parlor Magician: How to Make all kinds of Liquors without the use of poisonous articles; How to Detect Counterfeit Bills and Spurious Coin: the Devil's of Gamblers, Pocket-book Droppers and Peter Funks exposed; How to make all kinds of Powders, Soaps, Salts, Curling Fluids, Hair Dyes, etc; How to make the Whitest and Handsome grave; sublime and substantial Fortune Teller; Twelve Golden Maxims; over 40 Historical Facts; Recipes for all Manner of Confectionaries, Concentrums, etc., etc. Price 25 cents. Sent free by mail. Box 3416, Post Office, N. Y. tf

Over Fifty Secrets, numerous Jokes, Witty Sayings, &c., will be found in "THE LOUNGER." Sent free for Fifty Cents.
tf Address, P. O. Box, 5,057, New York.

JOB MILLER, JR.

A Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Poetry, &c., &c. Price 10 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 5,416, New York. tf

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry? Why every woman should marry? All may marry if they know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by DR. EARLE, M.D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelopes on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly. It is warranted to cure.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

THOSE CURIOUS FASTENERS
25 CENTS.
Good Books 15 cents each. Courtship Made Easy—Bridal Etiquette—How to Win and Woo—How to behave—Mind your Stops—Hard Words Made Easy—How to Write and Love Correctly—How to Become an Actor.

The Library of Love,
Three Amusing Volumes for 75 cents.
Poet's Corner Scrap Book, 25 cents. Parlor Theatricals, 30 cents. Fireside Games, 30 cents. Shakspeare's Proverbs, 25 cents. Love Oracle, 25 cents. Dream Book, 25 cents. Parlor Pantomimes, 25 cents. Comic Recitals, 25 cents. How to Converse Correctly, 25 cents. MAMMOTH CATALOGUES, containing thousands of Books, Pictures, Fancy Home Amusements, &c., &c., sent with any of the above W. C. WEMYSS, 376 Broadway, N. Y. 544-49

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cents; 50 photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Actors for 25 cents. Address 547-51 C. SEYMOUR, Box 48, Holland, N. Y.

500 Photographs of the most Prominent PEOPLE OF THE AGE, embracing Actors, Actresses, Opera Singers, Officers of the Army and Navy, Statesmen, Prominent Artists, Clergymen, Kings, Queens, &c., &c. Sent, post-paid, for 20 cents. Address Box 5,440, Post-Office, New York. tf

Ventriloquism Made Easy; and the Second Sight, Mind Reading as practised by Robert Heller and others, fully explained. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 5,416, P. O., New York. tf

Royal Havana Lottery.
Official Drawing of 33 March, 1866.

No. 3070	drew	$100,000
No. 8024	"	50,000
No. 8815	"	20,000
No. 30314	"	10,000
No. 17311	"	5,000
No. 13222	"	1,000

Being the six capital prizes.
Prizes paid in gold. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for doubloons and all kinds of gold and silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers, 16 Wall st., N. Y. tf

FIRST PREMIUM. IMPROVED
$5 SEWING $5
MACHINE
THE EMBODIMENT OF
PRACTICAL UTILITY AND
EXTREME SIMPLICITY.

Originally Patented May 13, 1862; improvement patented August 1, 1865. The only LOW PRICED SEWING MACHINE, with CENTRIFUGO attachment, a most Wonderful and Eminently Counterfeited Movement; is certain in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and works horizontal, sews with ANY STRENGTH THREAD OF SILK EITHER. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and reverse than by hand, and with unchanging rapidity, making 36 stitches to each evolution of the wheel. Will Gather, Hem, Baffle, Skirt, Tuck, Sew a Ruffle, &c., in the strongest machine made. Warranted not to get out of order for THREE YEARS. It has received the PREMIUM at New York and other STATE FAIRS, and received the GOLD MEDAL AWARD at the recent great Fair, and those who have USED THESE. The ONLY LOW PRICED Machine Patented, and that has received a PREMIUM. All others at the same price are INFRINGEMENTS.

"This beautiful Machine makes the Running Stitch of the rake (several yards per minute)."—Frank Leslie's.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child may use it."—The Independent.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand sewing."—Tribune.

Single Machines, all complete, sent to any part of the country, per Express, for $5. Each Machine printed instructions on receipt of price, $5. Safe delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted everywhere. Circular containing Liberal Inducements sent free.
Address all orders to
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
tf Office, 102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

"Psychonancy."—How either sex may fascinate and win the affections of any person they choose, instantly and good will of any person they choose, instantly and secure speedy marital happiness. Either sex possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail for 25 cents. Sold by wholesale and retail by the author, 189 Nassau street, New York. Also, a complete book of great interest. Price 25 cents. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address tf S. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Mustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin, FREE by mail—and I will forward to any address on receipt of an order.
D. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

THE DONKINO CIRCULAR!
For Gentlemen Only! Send stamp for address. Novel oddities and odd novelties. CLEMENT & CO., 64 John street, N. Y.

Beautiful False Mustaches, all colors. Cannot be told from nature. Sent by mail for 50 cents per pair. Address, BLACKIE & CO., 713 Broadway, N. Y. tf

The Beautiful Art of Enameling the SKIN! WHITE FRENCH ENAMEL, for whitening, beautifying and preserving the complexion, making it soft, fair, smooth, and transparent. It entirely removes tan, freckles, pimples, etc., without injuring the skin. Sent, by mail, in two sizes, 50 cents, and, dress HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 South 9th street, Philadelphia.

$1,500 PER YEAR! We want agents everywhere. Others are doing it. Why not you? Read. Warranted five years. Above salary, or large commissions paid. Address, with stamp, for particulars, SECOR & CO., Marion, N. Y.

Matrimony Made Easy!
Or Mysteries of Making Love Explained, with specimen Love Letters. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 3,410 P. O., N. Y. tf

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite, taken by Instantaneous Process. Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
tf H. A. CO., 37 Ann St., N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also contains the Author's Secret, by which Rats and Mice are kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Powders, Soaps, Hair Dyes; Curling Fluids proposed; Ventriloquism Made Easy; Information of Interest to Lovers; Secrets for Ladies only; Secrets, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents. Address Box 3,077 P. O., New York.

DON'T BE FOOLED.
You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine, an invention urgently needed by everybody. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50 cents. Rights for sale. Address, or call on, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.

518-51

A Sure Method of Winning at All the various games of Cards, Dice, &c., and trick. Marked Cards $1 per pack, or 40 per dozen. Address W. L. STRAWBRIDGE, Manufacturer of Playing Cards, No. 45 and 47 Nassau street, New York. tf

COLORED CARTES DE VISITE
SIXTY CENTS PER DOZEN.
I will send upon receipt of 60 cents 12 Cartes de Visite of French Cravettes in different positions, or the whole set of 90 different pictures, &c.
545-8 T. ALLUE, 94 Nassau street, New York.

$57 Something New. $57
For Agents and Dealers to sell. 20 Novel and Useful Articles; profits large. Send stamp for circular.
E. M. FIELD & CO.,
62 Nassau street, N. Y.

OUR PUBLICATIONS!

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE 10 CENTS, OR $4 A YEAR.

Frank Leslie's Ilustracion Americana,
OR SPANISH-AMERICAN NEWSPAPER,
Published Weekly.
Within the United States, $12 yearly, in currency.
Ready to be sent by mails for Cuba, Mexico, Central America, Brazils, Peru, Chile, and all the South-American Republics—$12 yearly, in gold.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,
Or German Illustrated Newspaper,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or $4 a year.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or yearly, $4.

The Great Magazine of Fashion.

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine,
Published Monthly—price $3 50, yearly.

Frank Leslie's New Monthly.
Price 15 cents, or $1 50 a year.

Frank Leslie's Children's Friend,
Published Monthly—price 10 cents, yearly $1.

Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun.
Published Monthly—$1 50 a year.

Cough No More
DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.
524-37t

Short-Hand Without a Master.
By which the method of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, &c., may be attained in a few hours. Fifty-first edition, WITH SUPPLEMENT. Price 25 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 5,416, New York. tf

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY, ST. NICHOLAS BLOCK,
Photographic Materials,
Stereoscopes, etc., etc.

War Views, Scenery, Groups, etc., etc.
Photo Albums, great assortment. Cartes de Visite of Generals, Statesmen, etc., etc. French, English and American novelties.

WONDERFULLY STRANGE!
MADAME M. H. PERREGAULT,
Who has astonished the scientific classes of Paris and London, has returned to this city and has opened at Albany, 57 Madame Perregault, by the aid of her wonderful powers, knows the Sex Revenge, guarantees to produce a life-like picture of the future husband or wife of the person, together with the date of marriage, leading traits of character, occupation, &c. This is no humbug. Thousands of testimonials can assert. She will send, when desired, a written guarantee that the picture is what it purports to be. By delineating height, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and inclosing 50 cents, and stating the month addressed to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail. Address
542-51o Madame M. H. PERREGAULT,
P. O. Drawer 292, Albany, N. Y.

A CURIOSITY!!
Free to All. A Rare Treat.
Gentlemen, do not fail to send a two cent stamp, and receive a GREAT PAPER, replete with the choicest literature and rare Illustrations. Send Gratis.
CHARLES E. MACKEY,
207 Broadway, New York.

MAGIC CARDS.
Magic Cards, with illustrated directions. Price 25 cents per pack. Marked Cards 50 cents per pack, any suit. Address C. WILLIS & CO., No. 147 Broadway, New York.

Fresh Garden and Flower Seeds, prepared by mail, at the Garden, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, 150,000 Fruit Stocks, Grape Vines, Strawberries, Rare Bulbs, Roses, Greenhouse Plants, Descriptive Catalogue, gratis, to any address. Wholesale Lists for the Trade. Agents wanted.
B. M. WATSON,
Old Colony Nurseries and Seed Establishment,
tf Plymouth, Mass.

Courtship Made Easy—A great work. Only 15 cents. Free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. 549-52

Rarey's System of Horse-Taming, 64 pp. 15 cents. Free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. 549-52

Books! Books! Books!—Buy your Books only of HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. Catalogues free gratis to all. 549-52

NOW READY—The New Number of the Great Dollar Paper of America, FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN, for May, 1866, has the most Humorous Cut ever published, illustrating the monster nuisance of the age, the Rush of House-Rents into the Air; or, Houses for All—John Bull and the Fenians—Caught in Their Own Trap—Bull Pest-ered by Fenian Mosquitoes—besides numerous other comic cuts by the best Artists of America and Europe, as well as 16 pages of the very finest comic reading matter ever published. For sale everywhere.
FRANK LESLIE, Publisher,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

THE NEW AND UNKNOWN REMEDY
DR. J. W. POLAND'S
WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

"It was early in the spring of 1855, that this compound was originated. A member of my family was afflicted with an irritation of the throat, attended with a distressable cough, and for months previous thought that a preparation, having for its basis the tinctic bark of white pine, would be accompanied with the very useful in the case of the throat and lungs. To test the value of it in the case mentioned, I compounded a small quantity of the medicine that I had been planning, and gave it in teaspoonful doses. The result was exceedingly gratifying. Within two days the irritation of the throat was relieved. The cough subsided, and in a very few days entirely ceased. Soon after they I sent some to a lady in Londonderry, N. H., who had been afflicted with a severe bowel complaint, accompanied by a sudden cold, and had raised much blood. In a few days she wrote me she was cured. I sent for more—took about 10 ounces of it, and got well. J. B. Clark, Esq., editor of the Manchester Daily and Weekly Mirror, gave a full of the same preparation in the case of a severe cold, and was cured immediately. He was so highly pleased with the results, and so confident of success attending the sales of placed before the public, that he finally persuaded me to give it a name, and assist it abroad to benefit the suffering. In November, 1856, I first advertised it under the name of White Pine Compound. In two years from that time there had been established in Manchester alone $150 worth, where it took the lead of all the cough remedies in the market, and it still maintained that position. There is good reason for all this; it is very pleasant to the taste, healing in its nature, yet acting to the stomach, and pleasant without to the taste, and is exceedingly cheap.

"As a remedy for kidney complaints, the White Pine Compound stands unrivaled. It was not originated for that purpose; but a person, to using it for a cough, was not only cured of the cough, but was also cured of a kidney difficulty of 10 years' standing. Since that accidental discovery many others have used it for the same complaint, and have been completely cured."

The above was written, in 1865, by Dr. Poland the. Since then, as in Manchester, the White Pine Compound has taken the lead in all kidney remedies, as well as preparations for the cure of Kidney difficulties, in every city, town, village and hamlet throughout the New England States.

The Proprietor has given great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the greatest effect. Many have called for the medicine, and the people where it is prepared are high in its praise.

One bottle of this Compound is generally sufficient to remove a bad cough or cold. Nearly half the entire population is a large dose. Sometimes put a little white sugar in the bottle after it is filled, to make it more pleasant.

The limit to which I purposely confine myself in this circular will not allow me that full expression which I would like to give in favor of the White Pine Compound. It is universally liked where it is used, and it has attained to such a popularity among those whose opinion is valuable to others, that it is rapidly spreading, in part, prompt me to record more here this hurried people will have proved to be worthy of it. I will only say that I so commending to all who need a Cough or Kidney remedy to test the virtues of the WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and, from all classes of society, speaking in the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

DR. NICOLS, of Northfield, Vt., says:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very effective in relieving the severe coughs and other affections, but also in affections of the kidneys, debility of the system, and in female weakness."

REV. J. K. CHASE, of Nunsery, N. H., writes:

"I have used and recommended your White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I regard it as the most valuable medicine I ever used. ever. I have just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

REV. H. D. DOBOR, of West Bindrdgh, Vt., who is a practising physician as well as minister, in a letter to Dr. J. W. Poland, May 31, 1865, says: "I find it an excellent medicine in kidney diseases."

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is not put forward as its name would lead to suppose, as a secret medicine. Dr. J. W. Poland, the inventor, has the formula of the mixture known to many physicians which he enjoyed while laboring soulfully many years as a Physician. Having had experience as a physician, led him to make experiments, which issued in his medical discovery. "A cough is a cough, and a cold a cold."

The editor of the Manchester Daily and Weekly Mirror, in a leader of the daily, thus speaks of the Compound:

"The White Pine Compound is advertised at much length in our columns, and we are happy to learn that the demand for it is rapidly increasing beyond the expectations. It is the very best medicine for coughs and colds we ever used in our family that has come, and it will ever be without it. We speak from our own knowledge; it is sure to kill a cold, and prevent a sore. The greater it remains over its accident, and it is singular that it is not more generally used for colds and coughs, should prove to be the greatest remedy for kidney difficulties. We have known Dr. Poland for years, and never knew a more conscientious man. Hundreds may, and we are glad to state that we believe whatever he says about his White Pine Compound."

Should you think favorably of this medicine, be careful in purchasing, for there is a FALSE PINE COMPOUND that is offered to you, as we know that other proprietors have been palmed off for it by unprincipled dealers.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND
is manufactured at the
NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT,
100 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON,
by
GEO. W. SWETT, M.D., Proprietor,
Assisted by
REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by wholesale and retail dealers in Medicines everywhere. Also, DEMAS BARNES, Park Row, New York; E. G. WELLS & CO., 115 Franklin street, New York; JOHN BUCH, HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia; BURR HAMS & VAN SCHAACK, Chicago; DUBOIS, PARK & CO., Cincinnati; COLLINS & SHOEMAKER, St. Louis Mo., General Agents for the West.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH.

If you want the best fitting, strongest, and most serviceable paper collar ever offered to the public, don't fail to purchase the

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR

The most Economical Collar ever Invented.

Showing the embossed or pricé stitch equally well on both sides.

The following styles are now made:

Patent REVERSIBLE Enameled PAPER COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Rank Note Paper COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Printed Rich PAPER COLLARS

To be obtained all Furnishing Goods Dealers throughout the country.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & Co., Agents, Winthrop Square, Boston.

541-53o

STAMMERING

cured by Bates's Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet &c., address SIMPSON & CO., 277 West 25d St., N. Y. 539o

ORTNER & HOULE,

3 St. James's Street, London, England, Practical Engravers, Designers and Jewelers by Special Appointment to His Queen and Prince of Wales.

MONOGRAMS AND HERALDIC DIES

for Note Paper, &c., in the most unequaled and artistic style. Orders executed on receipt of money order or reference in London. Three illuminated specimen sheets of Monograms, &c., &c., for Albums, 6s. each. 547-50o

100 Photographs OF FEMALE BEAUTIES sent, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address B. L. FOX, 24 Varick street, New York city. 548-51o

ART NOTICE.

WINDEROTH, TAYLOR & BROWN'S fine MINIATURES, from life, and Copied from other pictures. Sittings made by E. T. KELLEY & CO., 799 Broadway. Please examine specimens. 539-50

CEDAR CAMPHOR

For Moths. Use it early, and you gain money while you sleep, for you save by destroying swarms yet unborn. C. C. is sold by all Druggists. HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Boston. o

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block).

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods,

WAR VIEWS,

SCENERY, GROUPS, &C.

Photograph Albums, great assortment; Cartes de Visite of Noted Persons, &c., &c. French, English and American Novelties. tfo

Diptheria.

This dreaded disease is readily cured by gargling the throat with DAVIS'S PAIN-KILLER, mixed with water. In any case of sore throat it is a sure specific, and we advise every one to give it a trial when first attacked. o

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

A NEW PRACTICAL WORK, With 122 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost. Price $1.50, post-paid. GEO. E. & F. W. WOODWARD, Publishers, No. 37 Park Row, New York. o

Wanted! Agents!!

$150 per month, to sell the celebrated COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING-MACHINE. Price, $18. The greatest invention of the age. Send for descriptive Circulars. Address SECOMB & CO., Chicago, Ill., or Cleveland, O 547-50o

FLORENCE

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES.

Highest Premium Gold Medal

FAIR AMERICAN INSTITUTE, 1865.

The best in the World. They have the Reversible Feed Motion. They have a perfect Self-Adjusting Stitch Tension. They make four separate and distinct Stitches on one and the same machine. They have many advantages over all others.

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO., 537-49o 505 Broadway, New York.

A MODEL LANDLORD.

MR. O'SHAUGHNESSY.—Faix, I'm sorry I can't oblige ye. I was obliged yesterday to turn my pig out of his room in order to accommodate a gent from the Fifth Avenue.

$1. TIMEKEEPER. $1.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER and marvel of ingenuity. The European Pocket Timekeeper. "The most wonderful invention of modern times." "A perfect timekeeper." "The world correct. Needs no key or winding up. Price $1 each, in Gold or Silver Gilt case, sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Price. Address J. W. DELAMERE & CO., 296 Broadway, N. Y. tfo

Union Dime Savings Bank.

Canal Street, cor. of Varick. Deposits from 10 cents to $5,000 received. Six per cent. interest, free of tax. Deposits before April 21st draw interest from April 1. 547-50o Assets—$1,802,236.36.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newborne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 63 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

To Nervous Sufferers of both Sexes.

A Medical Gentleman living the past ten years cured a great many sufferers who had undergone the usual expensive modes of treatment without success, is still willing to relieve others by sending (free), on the receipt of a post-paid addressed envelope, a copy of the formula he employed. Address DR. JOHN M. DAGNALL, 9 Clinton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. tfo

5-20, 7-30, 10-40,

AND

GREENBACK

NATIONAL BANK PENS.

Secured by Patents and Copyrights. For sale by all Stationers. Manufactured by the

EMPIRE PEN CO.,

Office, 22 and 24 John Street, New York.

Every variety of superior American Steel Pens and Holders manufactured by this Company. 539-50

POLLAR & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 693 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $4 to $80 each.

6592-45

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Trade of sufficient power for $1. Address

500o F. D. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

$7 FINE WATCHES $7

AT OLD PRICES.

English Silver Watches -	$ 6, $8, $10
Fine Silver Hunting Lepines -	$12 Each.
Fine 18 Karat Gold-Plated Watches	$12, $15, $20.
Fancy Compass and Thermometer Watches -	$15, $20.
Silver Hunting Levers -	$20, $25.
Ladies' Gold Enameled Watches	$20, $25 to $75.
Gold Silver American Levers -	$30.

All kinds of Good Watches low.

CATELY BROTHERS, Importers, tfo 192 Nassau street, N. Y.

ITCH. (WRIGHTSON'S) ITCH.
Salt Rheum. OINTMENT Salt Rheum.

Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cure Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 Cents; by sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, Mass., will be forwarded free by mail. For sale by all Druggists. 541-66o

BEAUTY.—Ayer's HAIR VIGOR, Flagellum, and Silken CURLS produced by the use of Professor DE BERNI'S FRISEUR LE CHEVEUX. One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy, massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Sent to inquirers to the trade. Price, by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ, & CO., Chemists, 285 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 545-54o

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S

AGRAFFE PIANOS.

101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. tfo

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S

LABOR-SAVING SOAP.

This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, conscious no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the most delicate fabric, and can be especially used for washing flannels, as it will shrink after being washed with this Soap. It may be used in hard or soft water. It will remove grease, tar and stains of all kinds. One pound Warranted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons beautiful soft soap. Directions also sent for making Hard and Soft Soap in a circular containing full directions for use, also, the premium and gold certificate. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.

B. T. BABBITT,

Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP. Fifty per cent. saved BY using B. T. BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED LYE. READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier now in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 6 pounds, and 13 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 12 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,

Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS, "made from common salt." Bread made with this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt, water and flour. Nos. 64, 66, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington street, New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING B. T. BABBITT'S STAR YEAST POWDER. Light Biscuit or any kind of cake may be made with this "Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No saleratus required when yeast milk is used. Nos. 64 to 74 Washington street, New York. o

Employment for Both Sexes.—Energetic persons of either sex in want of safe, respectable and profitable employment can procure such by sending their address to J. M. D., Box 153, Brooklyn, N. Y. tfo

Dale's Tooth Powder.

Soft everywhere. Price 25 cents. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Proprietors. 549-51o

Children's Carriages—every variety. L. F. TIBBALS, 519 Broadway, opposite St. Nicholas. 540-52o Ivory

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE!

We are in want of a few respectable Agents in every Town and Village in the United States, to sell Certificates of Shares in the National Prize Distribution!

The Agency can be conducted without interfering with other business, or it will give any one permanent employment, with a large profit. Capital not requisite. Canvass for us are sure of being liberally compensated.

Enclose a stamp for full particulars and Special terms to Agents, and address

L. M. HARRIS & CO., Managers National Distribution, 547-50o Boston, Mass.

TO CURE

Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, SCROFULA, GRAVEL and Disorders arising from excesses, use

SMOLANDER'S

Extract Buchu.

Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & SON, New York; and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents. 543-63o

WHISKERS and MUSTACHES can now be produced in a beautiful manner by the use of PHALON'S CELEBRATED VITALIZER, PILLALIE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the elite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address BERGER, SHULTZ & CO., Chemists, 285 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 542-54o

$1. TIMEKEEPER. $1.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER and marvel of ingenuity. The European Pocket Timekeeper. "The most wonderful invention of modern times." "A perfect timekeeper." "The world correct. Needs no key or winding up. Price $1 each, in Gold or Silver Gilt case, sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Price. Address J. W. DELAMERE & CO., 296 Broadway, N. Y. tfo

Union Dime Savings Bank.

Canal Street, cor. of Varick. Deposits from 10 cents to $5,000 received. Six per cent. interest, free of tax. Deposits before April 21st draw interest from April 1. 547-50o Assets—$1,802,236.36.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at Baltimore, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newborne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 63 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 000o

To Nervous Sufferers of both Sexes.

A Medical Gentleman living the past ten years cured a great many sufferers who had undergone the usual expensive modes of treatment without success, is still willing to relieve others by sending (free), on the receipt of a post-paid addressed envelope, a copy of the formula he employed. Address DR. JOHN M. DAGNALL, 9 Clinton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. tfo

5-20, 7-30, 10-40,

AND

GREENBACK

NATIONAL BANK PENS.

Secured by Patents and Copyrights. For sale by all Stationers. Manufactured by the

EMPIRE PEN CO.,

Office, 22 and 24 John Street, New York.

Every variety of superior American Steel Pens and Holders manufactured by this Company. 539-50

POLLAR & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 693 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $4 to $80 each.

6592-45

THE BOWEN MICROSCOPE,

Magnifying 500 times, mailed to any address for 50 cts. Trade of sufficient power for $1. Address

500o F. D. BOWEN, Box 220, Boston, Mass.

UNITED STATES PRIZE CONCERT.

TO BE DRAWN AT

Crosby's Opera House, Chicago, Ill.,

MAY 30, 1866.

125,000 Valuable Prizes, valued at $402,565 25, will be presented to Ticket-Holders, including $100,000 in Greenbacks.

NUMBER OF TICKETS ISSUED, 500,000. PRICE, $2.

This is the greatest inducement ever offered to the public, one ticket out of every four drawing aprize. The following Prizes are a few among the many to be drawn (for full list see circulars):

1 Gift in Greenbacks	- - - - - - - -	$30,000
1 do. do.	- - - - - - - -	10,000
1 do. do.	- - - - - - - -	5,000
1 do. do.	- - - - - - - -	4,000
1 do. do.	- - - - - - - -	3,000
1 do. do.	- - - - - - - -	2,000
1 do. do.	- - - - - - - -	1,000
1 do. do.	$1,000 each - - - - - -	$1,000
99 do. do.	$500 each - - - - - -	50,000
99 do. do.	$100 each - - - - - -	9,900
99 do. do.	$50 each - - - - - -	4,950
1 do. Residence, No. 882 Wabash avenue	- - - -	10,000
1 do. do. No. 961 Lake street	- - - -	6,000
1 do. do. No. 87 Cranberry street	- - - -	5,000
1 do. Cottage, on 9th Avenue, near Pavilion street	- - - -	10,000
1 do. do. No. 16 Liberty and 317 W. Indiana streets	- - - -	6,000
1 do. do. in the locality	- - - -	3,000
10 do. City Lots, $500 each	- - - -	5,000

The Drawing will take place after the Concert, on the Stage of the Opera House, where 10,000 persons can witness it. A Committee will be appointed by the audience to superintend the same. All Purchasers and Agents will be furnished with correct Lists of Drawing as soon as published. Parties holding tickets will retain them until after the drawing, and, if their number appears in the list of drawn numbers, they will forward their ticket immediately, with full directions as to the shipping of goods or moneys. Tickets are for sale at the principal Hotels, Book and Music Stores in the city, and at our Office, 132 Dearborn street, price $1 each; sent by mail on receipt of price and stamp for return postage.

Good and Reliable Agents wanted in every city, town and village in the United States, to whom great inducements will be offered. References required.

SPECIAL TERMS, GB CLUB RATES.—Any party procuring a club of five or more names for tickets, and forwarding the money for the same, will be allowed the following commission viz.: We will send—

5 Tickets to one address for	- - $4 50	60 Tickets to one address for	- - $36 00
10 Tickets to one address for	- - 9 00	70 Tickets to one address for	- - 40 00
20 Tickets to one address for	- - 17 50	AND
30 Tickets to one address for	- - 25 00	100 Tickets to one address for	85 00

In every case send the Name and Post Office address of each Subscriber. Money by Draft, P. O. Order, Express, or Registered Letters, may be at your risk.

All communications should be addressed to

WIGGINS, BRADFORD & CO.,

123 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill. Post-office Drawer 5913.

The Proprietors will donate to the Lincoln and Douglas Monument Fund $2,000; also there will be $2,000 reserved from the person drawing the $30,000 prize for the same purpose.

REFERENCES.

Hon. M. S. Wilkinson, ex-Senator of Minnesota.	Hon. Wm. Lothgwell, Iowa.
Hon. Geo. V. Lawrence, M. C. of Pennsylvania.	Hon. Joseph Knox, of Chicago.
Hon. Alex. Randall, ex-Governor of Wisconsin.	Hon. C. Graves Smith, of Minnesota.
Hon. Wm. Montgomery, ex-M. C. of Pennsylvania.	Jacob Poverly, Agent, M. R. Chicago, Ill.
Hon. Major Dan Mace, ex-M. C. of Indiana.	M. Kronberg & Co., Importers of Watches, Chicago.
Hon. J. Laycock, of Kansas.	Bowen, Garter & Co., New Orleans, La.

N.B.—Editors of country papers are authorized to act as our Agents, and will be allowed full commission on all tickets ordered, either for themselves or other parties who may purchase through them. Proposals for inserting this advertisement requested.

Vineland Lands. To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. Present population, 7,000. The beauty with which this place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of EDSON ROBINSON, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune

"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, to an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1866, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 551—Vol. XXII.] NEW YORK, APRIL 21, 1866. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly. 13 Weeks $1 00

Slayers of Men.

A few days only have elapsed since a gentleman of high social and artistic position and reputation was shot instantly dead, in a place of public resort in this city, by a person who was described in the reports of the circumstance as "a sporting character," and as being "somewhat the worse for liquor." In his own examination he described himself as having "no occupation."

It seems this "sporting character," in a state of semi-intoxication (it was only ten o'clock in the forenoon), came into the room where the unfortunate gentleman to whom we have referred was sitting, engaged in reading, and producing a pistol, began to flourish it in a "promiscuous" manner, and finally suggested that he could put a bullet through the gentleman's hat—which he certainly did, and also through his brain. We believe it is not pretended there was any intent to wound or murder, and we have no doubt the report speaks true, and that the slayer was "overwhelmed with grief," notwithstanding he was "the worse for liquor." Technically and legally, we presume, he is not liable to a charge of murder, but the fact remains that a respected and widely-known citizen was killed in the very prime of manhood, by a man "without occupation" (we all know what that means in New York), who goes about in the morning "worse for liquor," and carrying fire-arms, contrary to law. To say that this man is not guilty of a crime and is not amenable to law, is to say that society does not protect its members and that our laws are burlesques—mere waste paper, failing to realize the very first purpose of their enactment, security to human life.

Of course the slayer in this case is proved, in the most startling and shocking manner, to have violated the statute against carrying concealed weapons, and it is possible that he may escape with only the trifling punishment set down against that offense. We are not prepared to say that, under existing laws, any other punishment could be inflicted. But we do say that the public sense of justice in this case would be very imperfectly met by such punishment. The example would fail to have a beneficial or restraining effect on that large class "without occupation," who are notoriously those who habitually carry concealed arms and get drunk in the morning.

In Scotland, if we remember rightly, the accidental killing of a man, in which carelessness or wantonness enters as a circumstance, is defined as a degree of murder, and severely punished by imprisonment and by a fine which inures to the heirs of the slain. The case under notice shows the importance of a similar enactment, in a striking manner. But it is far from being an exceptional or unfrequent case. Not a week before this affair, a mother was shot dead by her son, another playful rough; and since then, a gentleman was shot in the leg and seriously wounded while walking up Broadway at noon-tide.

The coroner's inquest has sent the case of the killing of Mr. Oddie by Mr. La Due to the Grand Jury, and meantime the latter is at large on bail of a thousand dollars. We cannot be supposed to attempt to dictate to the Grand Jury, but we hesitate not in saying that, if they find the laws bearing upon this case do not meet the first object and end of government—the protection of the public against the vagaries of drunken men carrying concealed weapons—that then it will be their clear duty to so represent the facts, and join in an application to the Legislature for further legislation. This is the least they can do. Of course La Due will be presented for his violation of the law, in carrying concealed arms; and, equally of course, it will be the duty of the Judge, before he will stand self-condemned, to visit on him the full penalty of the law.

POLICE COURT—EARLY MORNING.

Discharge of the Watch.

People come to New York, go to the theatres, opera, and concerts; walk Broadway and explore the Central Park, and return to their rural homes declaring that they have seen the town.

New York is not to be seen in a day, a week, or a month, but sight-seeing begets sight-seeing, and each new scene is suggestive of what can be seen when an effort is made to explore New York underground, or New York in its garrets and cellars, in its palace-homes and its hovels, its gambling-halls and its drinking-houses.

From a night's work of over 2,600 policemen in this great city, it is impossible to estimate the results in round numbers, for many arrests are made by many respectable citizens and disrespectable ones sleep in the station-house, because they were just a little foggy or out too late, it is impossible to say. The city is so divided into districts, each of which has its own separate jurisdiction, that the grand total is only known by the quarterly reports from the Police Headquarters in Mulberry street.

NEW YORK POLICE COURTS—THE TOMBS, EARLY MORNING—DISCHARGE OF THE WATCH.

Our business is with that regular old-standing establishment, "The Tombs," a legitimate business place, famous as the classic "Old Bailey" of London, and as redolent of story as any locality of the old world.

The Tombs Police Court serves as the point for the discharge of the watch, as it is professionally called, or a discharge of the prisoners gathered in by the police through the previous night from Precincts 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 14, 24, 25, 26 and 27.

These prisoners vary according to circumstances, running from 60 per night up to 130, and at the early hour of 6 A.M. are marched from the different station-houses to the Tombs, and there cooped in an enclosure made by an iron rail, until they are called forth by name to receive their committal for trial at the Sessions, their fine or their discharge. A fearful-looking heap of humanity they are—black spirits and white, blue spirits and gray; men, women and children; the flashy-dressed buck and belle, the poor woe-begone wretch who has just struggled into consciousness from an attack of bad whisky, or perhaps a young aspirant for the honors of spitting pockets.

Before Justices Dowling and Hogan the trembling wretches are brought one by one, these gentlemen taking it alternately, week by week, each attended by his own clerk; the first, Mr. Wm. J. A. McGraw, the last, by clerk Mr. Bell. Summer and winter, through storm and sunshine, these conservators of public peace have to turn out from their comfortable beds, and for several hours sit in judgment over the mass of rejected humanity that is brought before them, adjudicating over petitions pleas, where it seems as though something more was necessary than mere human reason and instinct to evolve the truth; and yet it is rarely they make a mistake, except for what anything else but equal and exact justice metes out to the hundreds who are thrown in his way at once for it.

The gross amount of business done at this tribunal averages 250 cases per day, or more than one case, from the mere case of drunkenness to the committal for murder. Every phase of character comes to its bar, and over the stylish, pickpocket or sporting man, the equally-dressed fallen woman, or the poor drunkard, the inevitable young grads slowly, but, like the mills of the gods, surely.

In all New York there is no place for the study of human character like the Police Court in the early morning, and the veriest sluggard cannot do better than turn out an hour before daylight, just for once, and spend an hour or two with Judges Dowling or Hogan.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, APRIL 21, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE.—We have no travelling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are impostors.

The War in the South Pacific.

THE accession of the republics of Ecuador and Bolivia to the alliance between Chile and Peru, in their contest with Spain, may not add much to the strength of the latter on the sea, where the war must be fought, but it will give them a strong moral and perhaps a considerable financial support. The whole power of Spain is totally inadequate to the blockade of any considerable part of the coast from Arequil to Chiloe, an extent of 4,000 miles, and her ability of aggression is really limited to a blockade. She could not expect, under any circumstances, to effect a lodgment on land, and if she were to do so, the incident would have no weight in deciding the issue of the war. A destruction of the Peruvian and Chilean ports might count for something, but this is no easy matter. Spain has already lost two of her vessels: the "Triunfo," flag-ship, and the most powerful of her frigates, by fire, and the "Covadonga," her fleetest ship in the Pacific, by capture. Late accounts represent that two more of her vessels, the "Villa de Madrid" and "Blanca," have been seriously if not fatally damaged in an encounter with some Peruvian and Chilean war vessels, in the Archipelago of Chiloe, in the extreme southern waters of Chile. The Spanish vessels carried 86 guns, the allied squadron, 57, and the former were compelled to give up the contest, victory, if not decisive, was nevertheless, in favor of the allies.

Among the Spanish vessels on the coast of Chile, the most formidable is the "Numancia," an iron-clad, built on the French system, in Toulon, carrying 40 guns. She seems to be regarded as the most powerful vessel in the Pacific, and the United States dockyard reported Monitor "Monadnock," which lately reached Callao, and is presumed to be a match for all the fleets to be found in that ocean. The "Numancia" has the distinction of being the first iron-clad that ever passed Cape Horn, and has been the principal reliance of the Spaniards in their attempt to intimidate Peru and Chile. But the Peruvian iron-clads sometime ago left England for the theatre of war, which, it is probable, will more than neutralize the "Numancia." One of these is the "Independencia," built on the English mode of the "Warrior" and others, carrying a heavy battery, and the other is the "Huascar," built substantially on the plan of our Monitors, and carrying two heavy guns in her turret. It seems not unlikely, therefore, that the first practical competitive trial of the various kinds of iron-clads—English, French and American—will be made off the coast of Chile. We ascertained something of the capacities of our Monitors in the fight with the "Merrimac" and "Atlanta," and in the attacks on the defenses of Charleston and Mobile, but the result of a deadly issue between the Monitors and the English or French iron-clads is still a matter of conjecture. We will, however, venture the prediction, that, in case of an encounter, if the "Huascar" be handled with ordinary skill, she will sink or disable the "Numancia" in 30 minutes. Such a result would demonstrate to the Emperor of France that the hundreds of millions of francs which he has expended in building up an immense iron-clad navy have been utterly wasted.

The Peruvian iron-clads left Brest a month and a half ago, and ought now to be not far from the theatre of action. They will give the allies a considerable preponderance of force, and if they strike swiftly, may annihilate the Spanish squadron before reinforcements can reach it. Much stirring news is to come forward from the South-Pacific within a very short period.

"Unfriendly Legislation."

A FEW weeks ago we published, with some comments of our own, two sections from the "New Revenue Law" of Alabama, as follows:

"SEC. 70. Every person who shall, for pay, at any one place, any pictorial or illustrated weekly, or any other illustrated periodical, or book containing obscene like kinds of this State, and not in a foreign country, and to vend the same on the streets, or in any one place, road cars, fifty dollars.

"SEC. 71. To the license depot for one year, in any city, town or village, for the sale of any newspaper, periodical or magazine, not including pictorials provided for in the preceding paragraph, ten dollars."

The animus of this legislation is obvious enough, and we do not need the information on this point furnished by the Mobile Montgomery Mail, which says: "There can be no doubt that the Legislature intended unfriendly legislation to the pictorial papers published in the North." It will no doubt please us to see and liberal (shall we add loyal?) legislators of Alabama to know how their enactments succeed, and we accordingly publish the following letter from Alabama, directed to the "American News Company," of this city:

"———, Ala., March 26, 1866.

"Gentlemen—You will please not send us no more periodicals of any kind. Our State Legislature has passed such laws in regard to them as amount to a prohibition. As I have received no magazines for April, I trust they will not be sent. Yours respectfully,

"———.

"———, Ala., March 26, 1866.

"American News Co.—Please to have the enclosed (extract from the laws of Alabama, etc.), and let me know if you and others are disposed to test the legality of these enactments, and oblige an old newsman."

Among all the classes of men who make profit out of periodicals, the newsdealers, in proportion to capital invested and labor employed, make by far the largest profits. The "unfriendly legislation" of Alabama, therefore, will be more unfriendly to this class of its citizens than to the publishers and vendors of periodicals on the coast. It will very effectually break up their business, for the sale of the very wretched periodical literature of Alabama would hardly keep a single newsdealer alive.

Besides, the class who have sufficient cultivation to desire to read something better than the vapid, snarling literature of the Southrons, unable to obtain their periodicals from the newsdealers, will obtain them, direct, through the mail, by subscription. We hardly think Alabama will long endure, for some months to come, to attempt to legislate on the contents of the mail-bags, and revive the good old practice of exercising censorship on what passengers may have in their trunks. We fancy ourselves "we have changed all that."

We have said nothing on the constitutionality of these enactments, although believing that the enactments to which we refer would be set aside by any competent tribunal. We regard them as principally damaging to the people of Alabama, and as very unlikely to sensibly affect the sale of Northern periodicals in the State. For, as we have said, the hitherto purchasers from dealers will be the supporters of the journals, and these, before went to the local newsdealers, will go direct into the pockets of the publishers.

In his speech on the veto of the Civil Rights bill, Mr. Trumbull, the framer of the bill, made the statement that it was prepared after consultation with Mr. Johnson, a copy of it was furnished him while it was pending, and he was solicited to make known his objections, if any he had, that the bill might be amended and made acceptable to him. "He never," says Mr. Trumbull, "indicated to me, nor, so far as I know, to any of his friends, the least objection to any of the provisions of the bill till after its passage."

THE subject of extension of the suffrage, as we have already had occasion to say, is up in the British Parliament. Among other propositions, is one of Mr. Clay, M.P. from Hull, proposing to confer the franchise on any man who could pass a brief and simple examination in writing, spelling, and the first four rules of arithmetic.

PROF. TAYLOR LEWIS, in a recent essay, thus vindicates and defines the right of suffrage:

"There is a miserable fallacy contained in the oft-repeated assertion that voting is not a natural right. Such a sophism is swept away immediately by the natural and the universal in the issue. No man has a natural right to be a voter without qualifications or conditions. But every man in a Republican State has a natural right to become a voter on the same terms by which all men, in every state, derive from the law of humanity. This is the true 'natural right' and the proposition, we may perceive, to defend against all Deniers. The conditions may be high, and a wise State will make them so; but the absolute exclusion in law, ever reaching the ballot, or any representation in the law of the State, of any one man not voting by reason of the family relations of marriage, sex and minority, is simply a shutting out from the community of human beings."

A YEAR ago the war against the Union was practically brought to a defeat and surrender of Lee. The rebellious States have, however, since remained, to a considerable extent, under military occupation, and the writ of habeas corpus has remained suspended in them. The President, having satisfied himself that the military arm of the State was well centered with regard to safety, has issued his Proclamation declaring the insurrection at an end, and the civil authority restored in the falsely rebel States. It is to be hoped their conduct will justify the President's judgment, and not confirm the fears of the more timid and less loyal of our statesmen.

THE "Opera Ball," at the Academy of Music, on the night of the 5th, was one of the most successful ever known in the metropolis. The request was made by the managers, that

> "Fancy dress alone for each one wishes scope:
> That the rapt millinor should be
> Let loose from all the fetters of gravity,
> The tailor in inventive trance,
> Up to the mark in every fine cue slandher,
> And all the region of romance
> Be ransacked for Dress-de-chambre."

Accordingly, the room was decked with hundreds arrayed in the most brilliant and becoming costumes, intermingled with others in military and naval uniforms:

> "Sultans, Turks, with gay Sultanas,
> Bedouins, Arnauts, Kurdistanas,
> Circassian sisters, whom Love would pay
> Half his ransom to purchase to-day,
> Young nuns, whose chief religion lay
> In looking most profanely handsome;
> Misses in muslin, pastoral maids,
> Dominos, hats from all trades,
> And fresh-as shades."

With these and other female groups, consisting of Polish dames, Mary Queen of Scots, the four seasons, Highland lassies, Swiss peasants, ladies of the Court of Louis XV., vivandières, Floras, were mixed the lords of the creation, equipped as Turks, Greek, Spaniards, Portuguese, South Americans, Malteze, and English of the day—time-in short,

> "The male exhibitors, all willing
> To look as fierce as real killing;
> Beau tyrants, smooth-faced braggadocios,
> And brigands, abominably romantic."

MR. LOWE, one of the editors of the London Times, is a member of the British House of Commons. In a recent speech on the Reform Bill, he says this country has a very flattering notice:

"Is it the result of our experience, looking at America and at the democratic institutions there, whatever merits they may have, that people are jealous of the moral character of their representatives? Did you ever hear of a man in public life in America? Public life in America in consequence of his having committed a murder, a larceny, or anything of that kind? (Hear, hear,' and laughter.) Things which would not be tolerated for an instant in England are passed over without notice in America. For however impetuous and impassioned the American politician may be of his acts of their members, in matters where their prejudices are affected, they are singularly loose in their conduct in other respects."

WASHINGTON seems to have thought it wise, in some cases, to try to regulate and control evil habits, when it was impossible to eradicate them. Thus, in a contract with his gardener, Philip Bater, made in 1787, who, it seems, had a tendency to get drunk, it was stipulated that Bater should "faithfully and industriously perform the business of a farmer in a garden, to the best of his knowledge and abilities, and that he will not at any time suffer himself to be disquieted with liquor, except on holidays hereinafter mentioned." His times were on Christmas, when he was to have four dollars, "with which he may get drunk three times and no more;" two dollars at Easter, to effect the same purpose; two dollars at Whitesuntide, to be drunk two days; a dram in the morning, and a drink of grog at dinner, at noon."

AMONG the features at the proposed Great World's Fair in Paris, is to be a grand restaurant, or rather series of restaurants, each one to represent the cuisine of a different nationality, and in which the servants shall have the distinct costume of the country represented. The Yankee will be expected to serve up "pork and beans, hoecake, wheat cakes and green corn;" the Englishman, his "roast beef and kale;" the Dutchman, his sauerkraut; the Spaniard, his olla, cocido and dulces; the Italian, his maccaroni; the Esquimaux his blubber, and the Chinaman, his rice and bird's nest soup, in a word, all that is rat or so. We are not informed if roast missionary is to be furnished to the deputation from Dahomey. That the American section will be well attended to, is certain, from the fact, that it will be under the direction of that eminent caterer and sound gastronomist, Col. J. M. Sanderson.

THE London Saturday Review is at last compelled to admit that, "Much as many English people dislike the idea, it is as well frankly to confess at once that America and American institutions exercise some little, and are likely yet to exercise a greater, influence on the manners and habits and tone of mind in this country. The Americans often pretend to imitate the French; the French, in some respects, imitate the English; and in order to complete the cycle of imitation, many Englishmen are inclined to imitate the Americans."

MR. BERNEBEITTE DARLING, of this city, has introduced a very important bill in Congress, regulating the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels. It prescribes the number of passengers which may be lawfully taken on board any such ship or vessel, exclusive of the crew, and fixes the cabin passenger space, allowing to each passenger in the upper between-decks, 110 cubic feet of space, in lower between-decks, 120 cubic feet. The cabin passenger assigned to a place, or brought therein, in excess of the proper number, the master or other person in command of the vessel, to be subject, on conviction, to the fines and penalties provided, viz: $50, and may, also, at the discretion of the Judge, be imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months.

A JURY in London has given a verdict for £22,500 to Rev. Mr. Bland and wife, who were severely injured in the recent railroad accident at Staplehurst. A jury of Long Island has also given a verdict of $5,000 to a gentleman who was lately injured in a collision on the Long Island road. The Christian is more respectful than we should be was standing outside the car, on the platform when the "accident" occurred, against the rules of the road. He should, however, know that he was compelled to stand there for want of room inside.

AN Anti-Slavery Society has been organized in Cuba, entitled an "Association Against the Slave Trade, under the sanction of the superior government of the Island of Cuba, dated the 30th of October, 1865."

A STORY is told of a rather loud applauder of the President's veto of Mr. Freedman's Bureau Bill, who, when asked for the reasons of his approval, replied:

"Cause Congress wanted to give every damn nigger down South a farm, one while half the white folks hasn't got none."

THE Times, in an article on "Restaurant Life in New York," estimates that one month short of 200,000 people (35 per cent. of them of the male sex) eat daily in our city dining-saloons—100,000 taking one meal each per day in these gregarious resorts, and 100,000 living (in this sense) in them entirely.

TOWN COSSIP.

LAST week we made some remarks upon the subject of street-beggars and crossing-sweepers. We are not aware that we then supposed that any could have said has brought forth the order, but it is certainly a remarkable coincidence that Mr. Kennedy has issued a most admirable order for the suppression of the annoyance. The police have received instructions to arrest all persons found begging, also children sweeping the crossings. At first glance this may seem hard, when the fact that there are times when these little crossing-sweepers are a real convenience; but when we take the whole matter, and really consider it, the result we arrive at is, that it is an annoyance of the worst kind, and that we would rather submit to dirty shoes than have them kept clean at the expense of being subject to effort of a horde of little blackists, who expect to tax us in all weathers and at all times, especially at the most inconvenient times, and from an amount of money, insignificant in itself, but important from the inconvenience of its giving, and from the fact that it is encouraging a class of people to be abuse and disgrace.

In these columns we have two or three times discussed the subject of high rents and the over-crowding of the city. It is an inexhaustible subject, and every hour there is something to turn up in connection with the matter. The first phase of it, is the great immigration now going on at this port. The city is being crowded with new people from the other side of the water. There is agitation going on in Ireland that drives out a large part of the population, and as a result, they come here; and this, coupled with the desire of the people of other countries to better themselves by the advantages of coming to this country, acts as a serious detriment to New York, by over-crowding it, and thereby assisting to produce something not at all desirable.

The immigration returns show that 15,010 immigrants landed at this port in the month of March, 1865, as against 7,105 in excess of the same time in 1864, when there was considerable delay in steam communication, and 8,698 more than arrived last year in March. The total for the three months of 1865 was 31,479; for the same months of 1866 it was 13,956, and for 1864, 25,478. And this is but a small portion of what may be expected during the ensuing spring and summer months, if the press reports from the other side of the water be correctly recredited. Of this number (15,010), 7,623, or more than one half, emanated in the city of Ireland, and the balance were distributed throughout the country, Germany alone sends 1,481; Holland, 1,134; Scandinavia, 1,076; and Ohio, 720, while Georgia sank only 8; Kentucky, the Carolinas, 12, and Louisiana, 17. Canada, South Carolina took two each, and of those—showing the utter prostrate condition of the Southern States—Maine sent 1,000 more than all.

The rich, as a matter of course, account for the fact of the city being over-crowded, by saying that the poor are to blame for the cupidity of those who own property and exact such exorbitant rents for it, but the poor have not much to say in the matter. They must have a home, and must pay the rent demanded, or be crowded out of it as the whole concern cost. There is no doubt but that the poor feel very much as a gross is heaped, but all without effect. We cut, from the daily Herald of the 21st, a little paragraph, simply showing in what way the wind blows:

"THE RAPACITY OF LANDLORDS.—There is no limit to the rapacity of the owners of the so-called model houses on this island. A person of the name of Walker bought the house No. 2 Cherry street, of which a gentleman well known to us has a lease, and in which he lives. Failing to obtain the rent demanded of the lessee, the new purchaser in question commenced on Tuesday to pull down the back kitchen to make room for a stable! We know nothing of Walker, but we do know that he woke up the wrong customer on that occasion."

And we have still another case to relate. In the Bowery, just alongside of the old "College," which, for half a century, has been a landmark, there is a bookstore, kept by the Burtons. For 27 years this store has gone steadily on, not making its proprietors rich, but giving them a decent living, and establishing its place as a necessity for the public. From a few hundred dollars, the rent has risen as much the store originally was taken, the rent has been advanced to $4,000 per annum.

This year, somebody who has, perhaps, made up his mind that a fortune is being made there, has decided to buy out the good-will of the business, not from Mr. Burnton, but from the landlord, and has offered him $3,300 per annum for five years, for the store, intending to carry on the same business there. The landlord, like a noble fellow, offers the place to the original tenants at the same rate, but they, feeling that they can't make it pay, are obliged to decline, and content themselves by taking a place half the size in the neighborhood, in the faint hope of being able to save some little part of the business they have been 27 years in building up.

All this is a fact, and simply shows our business men that when they establish a business, they do not do it for their own profit, but that of their landlord.

There is one thing for which we are thankful, in connection with this, which is, that people who own vacant lots are waking up, and, whatever may be the motive, are building houses rapidly; so that it may be possible before the 1st of May arrives, or certainly through the summer, what with new buildings and the egress from the city, there will be enough room to bring down exorbitant rents, and give the poorer part of our population breathing-room. All that we can say to our German population—who are just agitating the matter, and holding public meetings—is, that all agitation is useless, and time thrown away. The trouble is a want of buildings; and until that is rectified it will be useless to agitate or denounce landlords.

Though perhaps not a subject for discussion in this column, yet we are glad to congratulate all those who have been injured in our country's service on the framing of a bill, which will give all those who shall have lost the sight of both eyes, or who shall have lost both hands, or been permanently and totally disabled in the same, in the military or naval service, and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to a pension of $25 per month; and all persons who, under like circumstances, shall have lost both feet, or one hand and one foot, or been totally and permanently disabled in the same, shall be entitled to a pension of $20 a month; and all persons who, under like circumstances, shall have lost one hand, or one foot, or been totally and permanently disabled in the same, shall be entitled to a pension of $15 per month. This is only justice, and will be hailed by a good many thousand heroes through the land as a salvation.

Among the things we desire to notice this week are two balls, each a fancy dress and masquerade. The first —we give it only pre-eminence by courtesy—was the Opera Ball, held on the evening of Thursday, the 5th inst., at the Academy of Music. For a long time it was talked of and expected, and the gentle and genial Maretzek put names before the public to endorse (?) his efforts that were enough to frighten any one away from the slightest hopes of enjoyment—for how can anything be enjoyable when it is so confoundedly genteel?—a suspicion that was certainly carried out; for, as it turned out, it was only a gathering of fashionable people—ultra-fashionable—who came beautifully dressed, gorgeous in diamonds, silks and laces, but lacking the first element that makes the Arion or its fellow balls the jolly places they are. The tickets were said to be limited, and we believe were so, as the crowd was not uncomfortable, and there was moving room. The boxes were filled, but the floor gave room for dancing. The music was fine, the masks were few, the fun not few-rious, the costumes not original, but good; and last, though not least, the decorations, or caricatures, by Nast, were good. Altogether it was far from a failure; and saying that, after all the brilliant affairs of this season, is saying as much as the most unreasonable person can expect.

And then there is the masquerade and fancy ball given by Harrison to his friends, on the evening of the 2d inst., at Irving Hall. It is perhaps hardly necessary to speak of anything that Harrison would do in that way especially; we all know that his experience and taste must make a success, and a success it was unequivocally. There were just enough people there to comfortably fill the hall without crowding; and the regulations, as printed on the invitations, kept the affair from being a mere surplus of men who do not dance, but content themselves, as in the case of most balls, with coming, minus ladies, and standing about the rooms, taking out the value of their tickets in staring.

A third ball, though not a local one, worth mention, was at Baltimore, on Wednesday, the 4th. It was announced as "A Brilliant Carnival, imitative of a Bal Masque at the Grand Opera House in Paris," and was given at the Front Street Theatre. The thing was a novelty for Baltimore, and, as a matter of course, brought together all the elite, as well as the demi-monde, and was a decided success.

Among the places worth visiting just now, we desire to notice the Fair being held by the ladies of St. Ann's Church, at the Cooper Institute. It commenced on the 2d inst., and is to continue till the 15th. The management is under the direction of Mrs. Mortimer Livingstone.

As an art item worthy of mention, Constant Meyer has finished his two portraits of the Lieutenant-Generals, Scott and Grant, and they are open for exhibition at Gurney's Gallery, No. 707 Broadway. They are life-size, and, as works of art, highly commendable, though showing through that art, the unmistakable stamp of the photograph. That of Grant conveys the best idea of the man we have yet seen, though all portraits give but a cast-iron idea of the original.

At the theatres this week, there have been some novelties. At the Olympic, Dumas' "Three Guardsmen," has been very beautifully produced, with Madame Methua Scheller, a very charming lady and a good actress, as Anne of Austria, and Mrs. Wood as Constance, in which she sings a romanza composed by herself, entitled, "I loved him at First Sight."

At Lucy Rushton's, "Valiant Valentine" is making rather more of a success than it promised at first. The last scene is beautiful and worth going to see, even if the piece had no other merit.

This week we shall lose Lucille Western, who has so won her way to the favor of New York, that she will be really missed. She deserts Wood's Theatre on the 14th, and on the 16th appears at Boston in "East Lynne."

And last, though not least, we must speak of the Academy of Music and its presiding genius, Maretzek. So steadily has he gone on in his successes, that, like a well-dressed man, while there is everything to commend, there is nothing obtrusive to be noticed. Maretzek has shown by the success of this season, that he is dependent on no outside influences for his power to please, but depends solely on the merits of what he offers. The season closes with this week, and can be securely counted as the most satisfying ever known in New York—both to the public and the management. The week will close with "Norma" and "Martha," two operas that never grow old or pall upon the music-loving appetite.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The Wheeling (W. V.) Intelligencer relates a story of a young woman, who followed her betrayer all over the United States for nine years, only meeting him once, in California, when he escaped her. Believing her dead, the young man recently returned to his native place, where he was at once confronted with the supposed dead woman and a bright-eyed girl of nine years, and the strong arm of the law having been invoked, the betrayer was compelled to make restitution as much as possible by marrying the girl whom he had so terribly wronged, and who had followed him half across a continent.

—— The local of the Mississippi Index says he never had the spirit of the age more forcibly forced on his mind than the other day, when, walking along the street, waiting for something to turn up, a robustious little freedboy, of 12 or 13 summers, halted about 10 paces before him, and bawled out, at the top of his lungs; "B-a-(ba)-k-e-r-(ker) Baker!" The attitude—the tone of voice—the expression of the eye, with which the thing was done, was too ridiculous to make it a matter of offense so, responding with an admiring smile, we passed on—in wonderment over the change of times, and the revolution of events!

—— There was quite an angry discussion in the Pennsylvania lower House on Wednesday, on a bill disfranchising deserters. One member calls another member "a liar!" and the other member calls him, in return, "a scoundrel!" Another cries out, "You can't better it!" and this produced yells for "Order! order!" The Speaker raps and raps, until, finally, order is partially restored. "Nobody hurt."

—— A young girl, in returning home, on horseback, from a St. Louis (Mo.) church, lately, was halted by four ruffians, a mile out of Belleville road, one of whom caught hold of the horse's bits. The girl whipped up her horse, and he broke away from her captors with the speed of lightning. She, having got out of the clutches of the fiends, informed the inhabitants, who immediately armed themselves with guns, and, coming to the place described, captured the whole party, and jugged them in the East St. Louis calaboose.

—— A newspaper correspondent says that in Georgia, where Sherman's army made a sweep of all the carriages, the ladies now go visiting in carts. They call them cartes de visite, and console themselves with the thought that they are in the height of fashion.

—— The Grand Rapids (Mich.) Gazette reports that 18 lumbermen were recently poisoned to death in the town of Lisbon, by their cook mistaking a paper of strychnine for saleratus, and mixing up some bread with it, of which they ate, and were killed. The strychnine was brought to their camp by a trapper, who designed it to poison the meat with which he baited his traps for wild animals. It had been carelessly placed upon a shelf.

—— The hospital records just footed up, show the enormous aggregate of 253,000 Union soldiers to have died on battle-fields and in hospitals, during the war to suppress the rebellion, not including those who died at their homes of lingering disease contracted in the service. Add the rebels killed, and the amount would more than double those figures.

—— A remarkable tree was brought to New York in the month of January, 1866, from a Western State. It was a black walnut, 70 feet long, measuring 4,500 feet, board measure; but when cut into veneers, it would be thirty times that, making 135,000 feet, which at 20 cents would be worth $27,000. The cost of cutting and placing it in store for sale, would be about $700. Black walnut for the last six years has been gradually taking the lead of mahogany, and is worth as much now as mahogany was formerly.

—— The Provincetown (Mass.) fishermen are hesitating about refitting for the next season. They held their last season's catch of codfish over the winter, and have now $100,000 worth of fish in store. With the repeal of the reciprocity treaty, and the probable loss of the bounty, they find their business seriously crippled.

—— A gentleman from the oil regions reports that such was the abundance of the paper of the defunct banks in that locality that five out of every six men had nothing else. The result is that everybody is a loser, from the lucky oil man to the poorer teamster and common laborer. The feeling of indignation is general, and threats of mischief are uttered freely.

—— A band of 100 gipsies, with a regularly appointed queen, who was appointed two years ago to serve for seven years, are located on the dividing line between East Cambridge and Somerville, Mass. They get their living by horse-trading and fortune-telling. They came from Canada six months ago. The queen has a beautiful chariot for traveling, with apartments for her husband and child as well as for herself.

—— The New Orleans Star describes a ball given in that city by the milliners and modistes, during which the dress of one of the dancers caught fire. The Star adds: "Some idea of her style of dancing may be gathered, when it is further stated that the dress caught fire from one of the chandeliers overhead."

—— A wretch belonging to a circus in Richmond, Va., last Thursday stuck a needle in a little boy's eye who was peeping in, depriving him of sight and causing intense suffering.

—— A Philadelphia writer says that Mr. J. Cooke's new house "will contain fifty bed-chambers, a chapel, a gymnasium, a library, and all the accessories to the palatial home of a Christian banker."

—— The Auburn (N. Y.) Advertiser says that a son of Brigham Young, formerly a resident of that village, was in town last week, looking up sundry debts of his father which he was anxious to liquidate, with the interest which had accrued during 35 years.

—— The great Sangerbund—German musical festival —for New England, New York, New Jersey and Philadelphia, will take place this year at Providence, R. I., June 26—28th. The orchestra will comprise the best New York and Boston talent, and the number of singers will be legion.

—— Two little children, a boy and a girl, belonging to Henry Bishop, a resident of Chicago, Ill., while playing with photographs, recently, were seen to have them in their mouths. By sucking poison from the cards they were so injured that the boy died, and the girl's life is despaired of.

—— The North Carolina papers are full of statements going to show that plantations in that section are being rapidly bought up by Northerners. A Jersey-man recently purchased 1,200 acres in Wadesboro', N. C., at $11 per acre. A New York company are on the point of taking 10,000 acres in the same State, on which they will settle English Emigrants.

—— There are 1,100 blacks attending school in Richmond, and in the largest the teacher reads the proceedings of Congress every night, thus keeping the school fully informed on the news of the day.

—— The Cincinnati Price Current foots up the pork packing in the West for the season at 1,830,474 hogs, being 768,145 less than last year. The hogs this year average 36 pounds heavier than last, reducing the deficit 301,236 hogs.

—— Emigration is largely on the increase. The number of arrivals at this port for March was 31,673, being an increase of 17,717 over the corresponding month of last year.

Foreign.—English engineers have recently been in Paris to obtain the authorization of the French Government to have soundings and measurements made on the French coast, with reference to the construction of a tunnel from Calais to Dover. The distance would be at least 30 miles. It appears to be an impossible engineering problem; but the Mont Cenis tunnel is cited in support of the feasibility of the scheme.

—— In the cafés and other houses of entertainment in Paris there are 27,711 public billiard-tables, some single houses having as many as 30 tables. The estimated annual receipts from these is $20,000,000.

—— The Swiss Government has just decided that throughout the whole federation the free exercise of their religion shall be granted to all Chrisitian bodies.

—— Late foreign advices give the information that the Pope of Rome is about to appoint two cardinals for the New World, the first, we believe ever given to America. As these officers are princes in the temporal Government of the Pope, as well as bishops of the church, great importance is attached to the transaction, and many are looking to see to what it will tend. One of the two is understood to be Bishop Lynch, of Charleston, who went to Europe to aid in securing a national recognition for the late Confederacy. The other is the Archbishop of Mexico, on whose application the French invasion was undertaken, and Maximilian was chosen Emperor.

—— In time, Paris will be the most beautiful city in the world; but its adornment is a heavy expense. The improvements made by Napoleon in the Rue de Rivoli cost, up to the year 1863, $20,000,000; that of the Boulevard Sebastopol, $11,000,000; and those of the Halles Centrales, or great market, $6,000,000—while the total return was but little over one-half the amount expended. Other great works have been in progress during the past year, and others still are projected, each adding to the beauties of the capital, or obliterating some of the old and shabby quarters.

—— A blacksmith in London lately performed a perilous feat. A child, aged seven years, while playing with his brother, aged 12 months, placed over his head an iron band similar to that used for the hubs of cart-wheels. The child's neck began to swell, and when the parents discovered it, they were horrified to find that it was impossible to remove the band, and that suffocation was imminent. A blacksmith named Coles was called in, and suggested the desperate idea of hammering off the iron with a sledge, and he successfully completed his task. While one person held the legs and another the head of the little one, as it lay upon its back, with the lower portion of the iron band resting upon a log, Coles fearlessly struck at the ring, from the front, and severed it. A false blow of half an inch would have caused instant death.

—— A grand excursion on the ice in sledges took place recently at Uhiksdal, in Sweden, the cortege, being led by the King and Queen in person. The royal sledge was followed by 50 other sledges, occupied by gentlemen and ladies of the court, diplomatists and high functionaries.

—— The candle fish—a most curious specimen of the finny tribe—is caught on the coast of British Columbia. It is of marvelous fatness, and the natives use it as a lamp by drawing a rush pith through it, when it will burn steadily until consumed, and give a good clear light for reading or other purposes.

NEW MUSIC.

The latest "novelty" in music is a "Fenian Song," modelled on the late rebel caucion, "My Maryland," and entitled "Ireland, my Ireland." The music, we take it, is the same, but what the country parsons call "the words of the psalm" are not all the same. They run in this wise:

I.

"Thy sons arise to break thy chain,
Ireland, my Ireland!
To free thee from the tyrant's claim,
Ireland, my Ireland!
Avenge proud England's selfish aim,
To add thy hist'ry to her fame,
Oh, Liberty this land reclaim,
Ireland, my Ireland!

II.

"Go drive the lion to his lair!
Ireland, my Ireland!
Crouched long upon thy breast most fair
Ireland, my Ireland!
Behold! the Eagle cleaves the air
With Liberty, that thou shouldst share;
Take courage now! God hears thy prayer!
Ireland, my Ireland!

III.

"No more shall foes thy shamrock tread,
Ireland, my Ireland!
Thy Harp shall wake her tones now dead,
Ireland, my Ireland!
Thy sons will own the land they tread,
Or else be numbered with the dead—
Oh! Erin, now lift up thy head!
Ireland, my Ireland!

The music, with the rhymes, such as they are, is published by Pond, 547 Broadway, and ought to be in the hands of the wearers of "the Green."

MEXICAN AND FRENCH GUERRILLAS.

A Mexican correspondent of the Tribune tells us the following stirring story, which proves horribly the deadly animosity of the Mexican masses against their French invaders, and, if it proves anything, proves the utter hopelessness of the attempt to impose a foreign and detested government on the Mexican people. The Mexican guerrillas are no more brutal or cruel than the savage Turcos who form part of the French forces in Mexico, and this is to be said in their favor, they have under their barbarism, if we so choose to call it, the redeeming element of patriotism. The murderers of Artiaga and open violators of the rules of civilized war will get little sympathy when their own inventions return to plague them.

"Among my newly formed acquaintances, the one I appreciated most was a rich baker, called Camaro, living between Medellin and Vera Cruz, and supplying both cities with bread and crackers. He had four daughters, Rosita, Pepita, Josephine, and Almancia, highly renowned for their beauty and graces. A man of refined tastes might have objected to some of their habits, such as smoking cigarettos in company of men, drinking aguardiente, and abstaining from wearing stockings, which are superceded among the people of the middle classes by a sort of loose pantaloon, tied above the ankle, and not always very graceful. But aside from these little eccentricities, Rosita, Pepita, Josephine and Almancia were really attractive. They danced, sang, quoted verses, played on the guitar, and did a thousand little things highly appreciated by men of taste, and especially by the French, whose proverbial gallantry found there a noble field. Camaro, the baker, proud of seeing his daughters thus admired and courted, sacrificed himself to his pride. Contrary to the general conduct of his countrymen, exceedingly distrustful and intensely hostile to the people of that nation, he received them with open arms, invited them to his house, and showed himself as Frenchy in his feelings as the French themselves.

"In the minds of the enemies of the Empire, the Mexican partisans of that system of government are hated more deeply than its foreign supporters. This feeling is peculiarly noticeable in the low classes, among politicians and partisans, and above all, among those who make professed banditti. No hate so strong or so durable has existed since the Middle Ages, when Italian families, arrayed against one another, never met without attacking each other.

"Camaro had everything in the world a man could desire—good health, family, a large fortune, the esteem of the French. Marshal Forey had written him a flattering letter. A French officer of distinction had respectfully asked the hand of one of his daughters; he possessed all that could flatter the sentiments of a father and the ambition of a man, when suddenly he was struck down in the midst of his prosperity. It was certainly a curious sight, at the balls which my friend gave, to see the Mexicans of both sexes—the men with calzoneras and a kind of black astrakan plaid on their shoulders; the women in short petticoats, floating trowsers, and the national rebozo or silk scarf around their neck—carried away by the impetuous music of a dance unknown to our frost-bitten land, and comprehensible only in the country of volcanoes and earthquakes. Here and there were seen the red jackets of the French, many of which were sparkling with medals and crosses—honorably won, no doubt, in the rude and perilous trade of war.

"On one evening the dance was more animated than usual. It seemed to me as if the eyes of the ladies were brighter and their lips of a deeper purple; their long black hair, falling upon their shoulders, seemed impregnated with intoxicating perfume; the magic prestige of their beauty appeared to fascinate all the strangers present in the room; in short, we were all under an inexpressible seduction. However, among this array of Mexican beauties, none shone with a brighter lustre than the four daughters of the wealthy baker. They had come to the ball leaving their father at home with his assistants, consisting of four men and a boy.

"It seemed also to me as if the faces of the natives wore an unusually perfidious look. Many times I saw indignation and hatred flash through their most pleasant smile. Most surprising still, I detected my correspondent in the act of exchanging mysterious signs with other persons in the room.

"The clock had just struck twelve when a new comer, a man apparently unknown to all, entered the room. He shook hands with my correspondent, and then going to a lady, he politely invited her to dance. He had made only a few turns, when every French officer began to shy away silently, one after the other. The new-comer had nothing remarkable on his person; he was dressed as a civilian, in a black suit, and wore at his button-hole the cross of the Legion of Honor. The dance being over, he politely led the lady back to her place. But his appearance had chilled the pleasures of the night. Many guests withdrew, but the stranger, seemingly unmoved at the sensation he had produced, remarked with a smile that they would soon come back. They came indeed, but with changed countenances, and with fear in their eyes. The French, however, did not return, which seemed to increase the anxiety of all, even of my host.

"Seeing in my face that I was largely interested—that I was, perhaps, the only person in the room to be trusted—the stranger came to me, and after a polite bow, said, in a low voice:

"'I have not the honor of knowing you, sir; but your manners and accent show me that you are a stranger in this country—an American, perhaps?' I nodded. 'Well, sir, I then require of you,' said he, 'a small service. You know Camaro's daughters; you are also acquainted, I learn, with their aunt, an old lady, living in this town. Now please go to her house, awake her, and beg her to come in all haste and take her nieces; come with her, if you can; I shall need you the whole evening,' added he, with an air of authority he had not yet assumed. 'Ask no questions until I see you again; on your return you will know everything.'

"The air and manners of this man were altogether so distinguished and so impressive, there was such an earnestness in his language and look, that I was about to leave the room, when he added: 'Take this with you, or you will be arrested,' (putting in my hand a small card, written with red ink, but perfectly unintelligible to me); 'show this to the men who will ask you questions, for you will need it, I am sure.'

"Hardly had I stepped into the street before a man, hidden behind a tree, arrested me. 'No one is allowed to go out from this house without an order,' said he. 'Very well,' said I, 'here is mine.' The sentinel looked at the card by the light of the moon, which in this country is as bright as the sun in ours, and, handing me back my card, said, politely: 'You can go on, sir.' I hurried to the house of the lady, and in half an hour came back with her.

"The ball was at an end. The four girls, duly warned, were waiting in a corner. 'Madam,' said the stranger, 'take along your nieces, and keep them in your house till I see you again.' Then turning toward the other persons in the room, he said: 'The ball is at an end, ladies and gentlemen; you are at liberty to go if you like. This gentleman' (pointing to my correspondent), 'authorizes me to put an end to the festivities of the evening; at the same time he advises the men to remain until a certain business, implicating the life of several persons, be unraveled.' Ten minutes after all the ladies had left, the men remaining in the room, guarded by a sentinel placed at the door.

"We went down into the street. Two horses, held by two French chasseurs were in readiness for us. 'Now, sir,' said the stranger, 'do me the favor to take one of these horses and ride with me down to Camaro's bakery. I desire you to be the witness of a spectacle so shocking, so atrociously cruel, so extraordinary in its cruelty that I did not believe men could be capable of such abominations. The invitation, I know, is not pleasant. But you are here, you told me, for your instruction. You wish to know the manners, habits and civilization of this people. Here is an admirable opportunity for you to satisfy your taste. Beside, I am a little egotistical, I confess, in asking you. I am a Frenchman, and as such, I labor under the disadvantage of seeing all my reports distrusted by the native Mexicans. You, as an American and a friend, have a double right to their confidence. Please, then, favor me with your company; I will detain you but a couple of hours, after which you will be free to go where you please.'

"We galloped off, attended by the two chasseurs, over the embankment, along which the railroad is constructed. So luxuriant is the vegetation in this country, that the road is covered over with foliage, and looks like an immense bower. Nothing would have been easier than to fire unseen through the dense shade of green which concealed us from the light of the world. I communicated this apprehension to my new acquaintance, who told me that there was no danger of that kind for the present. 'The colorado,' said he, 'are around watching the road and protecting us.' As we were galloping at all speed, we saw sliding gently along the edges, or gliding through the branches, huge shadows, which I judged to be these colorado. An hour afterward, during which we exchanged but a few words, we reached the baker's establishment, a large square building, newly whitewashed, and occupying a conspicuous position upon the road.

"When we alighted, the room was full of men, whom, from their costume, I recognized as soldiers of the counter-guerrillas, commanded by Col. Dupin. Some of them I had met a couple of hours ago in the ball-room; others were unknown to me. They had all gathered around a large bread-pan, to which, on my entrance, I was hurried by my companion, who was holding me by the arm. But by what horror I was struck when approaching nearer, I saw, lying on the floor, the headless bodies of the baker and his four assistants and boy. 'This is not all,' said my companion; and taking me to the pan, he showed me the blood of the victims mixed with flour into four loaves, with the name of Rosita, Pepita, Josephine and Almanica, written on each one with the point of a knife. The heads were hung up in the rooms by the hair, and most horrible to look at.

"Abhorrence, indignation and anger seized me at this fearful spectacle. I immediately offered my services to help to capture the assassins. Leading me to the door, my companion showed me, dangling from the next tree, the bodies of three fellows, accomplices of the crime, who had just been caught. 'The guerrillas,' said he, 'were at least 50 strong; but my men came too late, and 47 of them have escaped. Neither were we unprepared for their coming. True, I was ignorant of the way they would take this evening, but I knew enough to convince me that the baker was exposed to their hate. I would never have, however, imagined them capable of so brutal a cruelty, of so monstrous a crime. The sentinel who occupies the post near this building was stabbed by the guerrillas before he could give the alarm, a fatality which allowed these scoundrels to come in and perpetrate leisurely their atrocities. When you saw me enter in the ball-room, I had just been informed of this by a servant who had hidden himself behind a pile of kindling wood, and who rushed over to Medellin as soon as the banditti had left. He told me also that he heard them say they had received information, forwarded from the house of your host and correspondent, that the officers of the colorados were then dancing, and that the opportunity to strike a blow had come. This is the reason why you saw me come to the ball-room and forbid every man to go out; this is also the reason why I begged to have Camaro's daughters brought to their aunts. Now, sir, you have seen what kind of warfare these men are waging; they not only kill us when they can—a right which I do not contest—but kill also any man showing us the least favor, and degrade themselves in the sight of the civilized world by deeds such as you have just witnessed. To talk of humanity to such men and such a race is like preaching the Gospel to the Turks. They will laugh in your face; will grow bolder and more impudent at every token of kindness, which they will construe as weakness, and persevere more than ever in their daring adventures and atrocious deeds. My name is Col. Dupin, known in this country under the soubriquet of red man; you will, no doubt, hear Mexicans represent me as a butcher, a monster of cruelty, reeking with blood, and implacable in his vengeance. I have no answer to give to such calumnies. I hang men only when I know them to be really guilty, and if I burn ranches and villages, it is in self-defense, and because I do not want my enemies too near me. We are, remember, only 300 in number, half on foot, half on horseback, and we have to exercise the greatest vigilance to avoid surprises and to free the highways of robbers and assassins."

Poetry, Lyrical, Narrative and Satirical of the Civil War, by Richard Grant White, is just published by the American News Company. This is an admirable collection, in which every home will find leisure to gleam some favorite recollection. It is full of life, and characteristic of the excitement of the times, and is, moreover, a book which stands as an interesting monument by itself.

HOBOKEN RIDING CLUB, RIDING THE "JEU DE BARRE," OR CATCH PLAY, AT THEIR ANNUAL EXHIBITION, MARCH 24.

RIDING THE "JEU DE BARRE"

At the Hoboken Riding Club.

SATURDAY, the 24th of March, was the anniversary of the Hoboken Riding Club, an association formed from the elite of our German society about 16 years since, and composed of about 30 members.

This club is the parent of all—or nearly all—the riding clubs in this vicinity, and has done more to disseminate and cultivate the taste equestrian than all the schools of the country. Their place of meeting is at the riding-school of Hermann A Walter, in Hoboken, who are celebrated not only as teachers of riding, but as trainers and keepers of saddle-horses.

The point we illustrate is the "Jeu de Barre;" or, properly translated, "Catch Play." It is ridden by three gentlemen, each having a bow of ribbon on his left shoulder. The point is for two of the riders to capture the bow from the shoulder of the third, after an understood signal is given. This must be done only with the right hand reaching to the left. For the accomplishment of this end two minutes is allowed; and if, at the end of that time, it is not done, the rider that still possesses his bow is proclaimed victor.

To ride this successfully requires an amount of equestrian dexterity that cannot be well understood until tried.

The festival of the 24th was ridden by 16 members, dressed in dark frock coats, white buckskin pants, and cavalier boots. They went through all the exercises of the menage, quadrilles, waltzes, gallops, jumping hurdles, etc.; the crowning act being that of the "Jeu de Barre," that being the first time of its doing in this country. In it the good rider, as in the jousts of old, shows his nerve, his youth and his skill. It was well done.

These clubs should be extended; and we can only recommend our readers to see the riding of the Hoboken Riding Club, and build on its model.

MISS LUCILLE WESTERN.

AMONG the most notable instances of self-made women, we know of none who have a more legitimate claim to the title than Miss Lucille Western, the popular actress—of whom we present our readers a fine portrait—now on the topmost wave of popular favor, and whose career has been marked, in a wonderful degree, by those qualities, which command, as well as deserve success.

She has risen to her present position by dint of her own exertion. Without powerful friends; with little or no encouragement in her early career; blessed with no fostering and guiding hand to direct her steps, and unaided, even, by what has ever been considered an essential prerequisite to the difficult and arduous profession she has followed—a thorough education—she has gone on, step by step—her motto, "Excelsior!"—until to-day she finds herself a recognized artiste, a popular favorite, and a woman of large intellectuality, capable of grasping the most difficult characters in dramatic art, and of comprehending with subtle instinct, and portraying with wondrous power, every passion which can move the human soul.

LUCILLE WESTERN, IN HER GREAT CHARACTER OF CYNTHIA, IN "THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST."

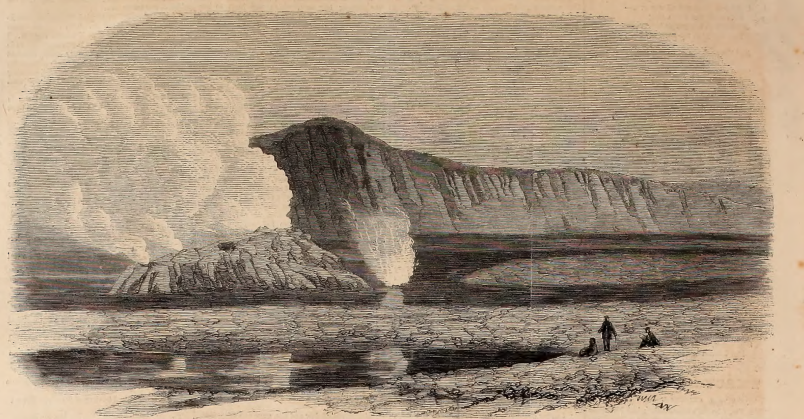
Miss Western was born in the city of New Orleans, La., on the "glorious" 8th of January, 1845, so that she is at this time about 23 years of age.

Her father was a well-known comedian, Mr. George Western, a capital delineator of "Yankee" and eccentric characters, and who was at one time exceedingly popular with the habitués of Barnum's Museum, in this city. He died several years ago, while still a young man, and in the height of his popularity, leaving his children to the care of their mother, who was also an actress of considerable celebrity—Mrs. Jane Western—and who still lives, and is now one of the favorites of the Boston Museum, where she has been engaged since the death of her second husband, Mr. Wm. B. English.

The subject of our sketch, Lucille, faced the footlights early in life as Cora's Child, in "Pizarro," and occasionally played children's parts at the Boston Museum. Her first regular engagement was with the Ravels, as a dancer and singer; and her first essay in more important business was made at the National Theatre, in Boston, at the time when her stepfather, Wm. B. English, became manager of that establishment. Here she remained for two seasons, playing a succession of highly "sensational" parts; and, through the attractions of her youth, beauty, nerve and dash, and the strong evidences she gave of that latent talent, which has since been so remarkably developed, became a great local favorite.



When the National Theatre passed into other hands, Mr. English made a tour through the principal cities of the United States, accompanied by Lucille, who played the same "sensational" parts which had made her so great a favorite in Boston. The tour was eminently successful; the youthful comedienne became the pet of the public wherever she appeared. But she soon began to display a marked degree of dissatisfaction with the line of parts and the character of the pieces in which she had till then exclusively appeared.

About this time Mr. English died, and in 1861 Lucille was engaged for a short period at the Holliday Street Theatre, in Baltimore. Here, for the first time, her talents had full scope. No longer trammelled by the light and frivolous parts in which she had been compelled to appear, her remarkable genius took a higher flight.

She made her first appearance as Cynthia, in Buckstone's melo-drama of the "Flowers of the Forest," and created a decided sensation by her forcible and artistic representation of the wild, loving, yet revengeful gipsy girl. Those who had seen her as the gay, frolicsome, and thoughtless soubrette, or romp, were surprised to see her evince the power of portraying the deepest emotions of the heart: and those to whom she had proved but a pretty toy in her lighter rôles, now gazed upon her with admiration, and found that she could make them weep as well as wreathe their cheeks with smiles.

To follow Miss Western through her different triumphs in each character, as she has taken it up, would be simply repeating a history that all the world knows. It is enough to say that upon each she has stamped her individuality, and that thousands every night endorse her great talent.

SCENES IN ICELAND.

ISLAND OF BOILING SPRINGS IN THE RIVER HVITA, NEAR REYKHOLT, ICELAND.

Lucille Western is at present performing "East Lynne" at Wood's New Theatre in Broadway, and will shortly appear at another west-side house in a new piece, written expressly for her by John Brougham, which is said to be the master-piece of that popular dramatist, the dresses and decorations of which are now being manufactured in Paris.

A HISTORICAL MYSTERY.

We translate the following from the French of Mumier Deschessaux, editor of the "Memoirs of the Count de Real":

Not long after the peace of Tilsit, Caulaincourt, Duke of Vicenza, was dispatched as the French Ambassador to the court of Russia. The Emperor Napoleon, who lost no means of rendering the establishments of his diplomatic corps as complete as possible, gave Mlle. Bourgoin, one of the most handsome and talented actresses of the Paris stage, a year's leave of absence, with permission to go to St. Petersburg and play at the French theatre built there by the Emperor Paul.

Mlle. Bourgoin left France with warm recommendations to several of the Russian nobility, and an especial introduction to the French Ambassador.

She made her debut at the court theatre; her beauty attracted the notice of the Emperor Alexander, who already knew of her by hearsay. She wished nothing better. She was sent for to the palace, but before going thither she had a private conversation with Caulaincourt, who gave her an idea of the part she was to enact before Alexander; but it is seldom that a pretty woman, and, above all, when she is going to have an interview with a prince, can understand her part, and the sequel will prove that the Duke of Vicenza had not foreseen all that might occur.

After a few words of commonplace, the Emperor continued, in a more serious tone:

"Is the Emperor Napoleon popular in France?" said he.

BASIN OF THE GREAT GEYSER, THE PRINCIPAL ONE IN ICELAND.

"Oh, yes! but there is one thing which has cost him the good-will of a number, and that was the assassination of the Duc d'Enghien."

The word assassination always produced an ill effect upon Alexander. Mademoiselle Bourgoin noticed him change color suddenly, and then frown, and wishing to repair her error, she continued:

"But it was not his fault, but the work of a lot of wretches who continually surrounded him, and from whose influence he is every day endeavoring to free himself."

The uneasiness of the Emperor could no longer be concealed; his bad humor showed itself so forcibly, that the young lady could do no more than bow herself out of the presence.

The Duke of Vicenza had stipulated that she should call upon him immediately after her visit to Alexander, and there she went.

"How did the Emperor receive you?" asked the Duke.

"Very kindly at first, afterward not so well," she replied.

"Ah! What did you say to him?"

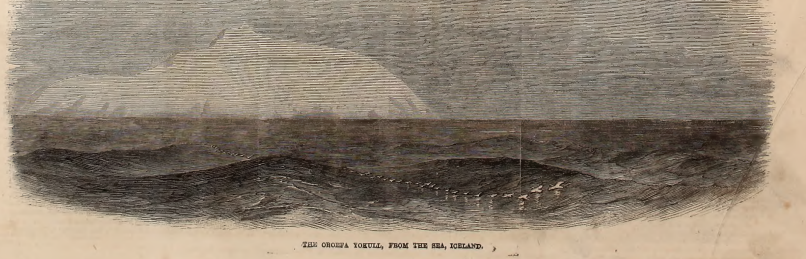
"He wanted to know if the Emperor Napoleon was well liked in France."

"And you answered affirmatively?"

"Oh, yes! I said that they liked the Emperor Napoleon very much, but that the assassination of the Duc d'Enghien had alienated the good-will of many people."

"You said that when—?"

"Oh, yes! and right away he changed color, but I fixed it all right."



"And how?"

"I said it was not the Emperor's fault, but that of a lot of scoundrels who continually surrounded him."

Caulaincourt reflected. Then he replied:

"Mademoiselle Bourgoin, your stay here will not be as long as you had supposed; your leave of absence is revoked, and you will arrange matters for your departure, which takes place to-morrow. You may go."

Mademoiselle Bourgoin waited a long time for an explanation of the affair, as she dared not relate the circumstances to any one. Alexander saw her again at Paris in 1814, and perhaps he gave her the solution of the mystery.

THE ORCHFA YOKULL, FROM THE SEA, ICELAND.

AFTER.

BY ELEANOR PERCY.

Ope knee pang and all was over—
Just hear that robin sing
Out there in the purple clover—
Yes, she gave me back my ring,

And the package of my letters,
While her lip put on a sneer,
"She was weary of her fetters,"
And the rest I did not hear.

Well—'tis better I should know it—
I have dreamed but idle dreams,
For the years to come would show it,
And she is not what she seems.

Stranger! the sunlight is as shaded,
And its life and warmth are gone;
But the flowers are still unfaded,
And the summer birds sing on.

And what is it that I miss so?
I can scarcely understand.
Why weep over that I kiss so,
Lying golden in my hand?

And what is it that is paining
All my being through and through,
As if autumn rains were raining,
Where should fall the summer dew?

I shall miss her sweet voice ringing
In the ballads quaint and gay,
That she was so fond of singing,
When the gloaming folded gray.

Well—the thrush may deep but rapid,
And the keenest pain is past.
She is fair, and false, and vapid—
But I loved her to the last.

THROUGH A VEIL.

CHAPTER I.

"No, Em, I haven't a headache; but I suppose I am tired out, and that makes me a little low-spirited."

"Sophie Daniels staid too long."

"She had so much to say. Ours are gossiping times just now. The tableaux have brought so many people together, that it seems like living in one house. I must say I shall be glad when it is all over, and we can go back to our quiet way of life."

Here the trembled, lovely face was hidden, and it seemed as if Daisy had begun to cry. Em did not ask a question, but busied herself with folding up pasts of a festal dress, scattered about the room, and while passing Daisy, to put them in the basket waiting to receive them, stooped and kissed her.

"That isn't all, I'm sure; is it?"

"Oh, Em," said Daisy, raising her head, "you will have it. Sophie told me she had seen Basil Cousin in New York. He has returned to America, and is about to enter the service. Isn't it silly in me to care?" exclaimed Daisy, with a clumsy change in her tone. "Shouldn't you think these two silent years would have conquered away regret, if not remembrance? Of what wonderful stuff are we made, Em!"

"We live by admiration, hope and love," answered the other. "I never rightly understood this matter—of courses I could never ask you; but, now you have spoken of it, will it be too hard?"

"It will cure you what a baby I am, Em, to care about anybody who cares plainly nothing for me. And why know he did care for me once, or else the past would not have such power over me. But it was only an emotion in him. Before you came here, we were constantly together. I thought of nothing else then; but he had not declared himself a lover in those terms accepted by the world. We were kept to each other, and events hastened. He used to seem under a spell—so was I, but managed to hide my feelings better than he. It was just before tea-time, one night—I was going to a party, where I expected to meet him—and was sitting in a dressing-gown for convenience. And Basil was just then receiving the attentions of Dr. Lodlow—who didn't propose after all, as it proved—and was in the drawing-room, entertaining her admirer. She told my visitor that I was engaged, when he sent up his card by the servant, to be at home in half-an-hour's time. Then Darrow, give me a moment; I cannot go away for months and not see you. My father died last night. Daisy! I went down. He met me there, and as trembled as possible. He seemed to think and act as if in great pain. He would not sit down, but told me a few words of his father.

"'I believe,' said he, slowly letting his eyes rest on me in a dreamy sort of way, 'that I have been to the last of the lotus-eaters with you. As soon as I can write, you will hear from me. Trust me till then, Daisy.'

"He had never called me 'Daisy' before—he seemed to forget himself now. He said 'Good-by!' in the same dreamy way, then turned back to ask for the geranium-leaf I twisted in my fingers. That was two years ago. After his father's funeral was over and the affairs arranged, he went abroad. Now he is home."

"And you never had a letter from him?"

"I never received the least sign. I used to think and think, until every feeling died out in me. Then the occupations of this war-time came between my useless fancies out of sight. It was nothing I could help, you know. To-night—just to-night—I feel indeed like 'taking the veil,' but I shall get over it."

Here Daisy took the comb from her beautiful hair, bring the heavy braids fall, and began to thread them with her fingers.

Aunt Deborah highly disapproved of this slow of young and pretty girls in tableaux. Daisy, her namesake, whose grace and dimples seemed to shake off the stiff title, and who as a baby called herself by the flowery name, defended her corps.

They were well chaperoned, and in most excellent company, working for an excellent cause.

"A great deal better to give the money directly, without all this fuss."

"Few people are, like you, Aunt Deborah, willing to give, without getting anything in return, but the consciousness of a good action. We are basely appealing to lower motives, but we are going to get a pocket-full of money for the soldiers."

Aunt Deb never gave a penny in charity if she could help it, and never had on old clothes. She was going to the tableaux because she had a deal of curiosity. She had been presented with a ticket by Mr. Blanchard, and it was likely that a ponderous railroad president would accompany the party. Railroad president had come from New York in order to be present at this exhibition. Daisy had teased him. Mr. Blanchard was a bachelor; Miss Deborah never saw a bachelor but she began to contemplate the possibility of his offering himself to her. Many a courtship had she evolved, while the unsuspecting victim of prospect was reading the paper and thinking of stocks. Her fertile fancy had imagined every species of declaration, but the most amusing device was the wedding outfit. Miss Deborah often spent weeks of reverie, arranging the various points of costume. The showing of pin-quancy, and her walks an object. The clerks would pull down, by her direction, pale lavenders, silvery grays, delicate fawn tints in rich silks, and Miss Deborah Darrow would play she was going to buy them for reception dresses. Of course this sort of thing could be prolonged indefinitely. Just now Miss Deborah was mentally deciding on the pattern of lace for the edging of a pocket-handkerchief.

Mr. Blanchard startled her by saying:

"Come, Miss Daisy, are you ready?"

"Dear me, sir," exclaimed Aunt Deborah, "is it time to go?"

"Not for us, I hope," answered Mr. Blanchard, waving his paper contemptuously. "It's but half-past six; but the carriage has come for the little nun."

"I never could conceive," murmured the lady, subsiding, vexed at having made a mistake, "why a good-natured person like Blanchard must be nicknamed Daisy, which is no name at all."

CHAPTER II.

A KNIGHT in armor of silver paper came out from the side door under the stage boxes, and threaded his way through the crowded aisles of the densely packed hall. He stopped two or three times to exchange compliments with some fair friends, but at last reached a young man, whose total shaven face formed a fine contrast to the mustached and bearded men around him.

"Champion, look here, I want you!"

"What's going on?" answered the lazily turning a pair of magnificent eyes on the Saxon countenance of his friend; "you look like a knight of the Round Table. A Guy you've made of yourself, Don Quixote."

"We are in an ocean of difficulty," whispered his friend. "Come out here, where I can explain—there's a good fellow."

Champion followed the narrow waiting-room, crowded with kings, beggars and imps, to a great under-room, on common days the guard-room of the regiment, but now, what? it would puzzle any one to say.

There stood a row of beings enveloped in white cloth, with faces painted to the color of chalk, and no statuary. Here were eight of Blue-Beard's dead wives, with their hair done in tails, ready to be dragged by the long, flowing gash in their throats. One horrible young woman had managed to cover herself with blue mold.

The knight was making the unfeeling manager of the sixth tableau, surrounded by her company. She was almost in tears; her fat face quite wasted with vexation, and the red bows on her fine cap standing straight up, like the tuft of a Polish rooster.

"Don't feel so cut up, Mrs. Tweed," said the consoling knight, bringing his face to the floor; "it's only a matter of explanation. Champion, the priest, but he's got a sudden fit of indigestion. They are giving him brandy up-stairs. The whole scene is upset, and it's one of the very prettiest."

"Taking the Veil,"—you've seen it on the bills. How those girls have worked, embroidering the white satin! Champion, you're a sensible man. Where, I'll settle this with you, considerate young man," and turned to Mrs. Tweed with a bewitching smile.

"You must give me full instructions, madam, for I haven't the most remote idea what it is all about. I haven't been in America but two days."

"Oh, Mr. Champion, you know a priest's dress—you've been in Italy, I'm sure."

Champion pressed himself in the garments, submitted to have a tonsure, and was presently ushered on the glittering stage, where the black-robed nuns were standing, and the censer-boy was burning bits of incense to pass away the time. He stood where he was told, held his book open, then watched the ranging of the nuns—six on each side. Some dove-like faces, but all their virgin eyes bent on him, the splendid young stranger who had dropped at their need from the skies.

The Lady Abbess stood in rigid calmness; the Bride of Heaven was kneeling before her, dressed in her shimmering satin, with tissued fall of costly lace hiding her face, which was bent to her breast. Something in the air of this exquisite recumbent figure gave Champion a curious twinge. The sun's prayer swelled as the curtain rose. He knew the thousand up-turned faces within the darkened amphitheatre, the stage light bisely shining on them, and thought of condemned spirits in a bottomless pit. Such wild, sad faces—such expressions of horror, and crime and care, as Champion thought he saw by the weird reflex. Then the thrilling applause drowned the chant and his thought. The curtain fell on the first scene. Now the attendant nuns removed the veil, the vestal clasps her crucifix, and as the abbess lifts a tress of the superb black hair, she raises her eyes and meets those of the priest full in her face. Flushed before from excitement, she was now pale as snow.

"Are you faint, Daisy?" whispered the Lady Abbess. "Don't spoil all now, for pity's sake; let me give you a pinch. That is perfect—don't move on any account—only don't faint till the curtain drops, or there'll be a scene truly."

"Beautiful! beautiful!" was the cry. A dead silence for a second or two followed the chant, and then the house shook from floor to ceiling. "Nothing could be better than her expression. She is agonized, yet how lovely."

"She is magnificent," said the young men; for all eyes sought the novice, the chief figure in the scene. The knight in armor fell at that moment in love. The priest put down his book, when the curtain shut them in, and coming to the trembling girl, who, gathering up her dress, is trying to look composed, says:

"How do you do, Miss Darrow?"

She smiled faintly, and held out her hand. The stage was almost cleared; Daisy moved slowly to a side scene, and the priest as slowly kept pace with her.

"Will Miss Darrow allow me a fair question?"

Daisy turned her face to him; the curved, dark lashes veiled her eyes.

"Two years ago, I wrote you an earnest and honorable letter."

Daisy's eyes all dew and fire, gave one surprised, sorrowful, loving glance, and met his own.

His compound character dropped like a mask. "You never got it, Daisy?" was hardly the question he intended.

"I never did, Mr. Champion."

"May I write it over again? I have never changed, except to grow stronger in the old feeling for you."

There was such a pretty shyness about Daisy, as she half turned away, and said, in a low, crooning voice:

"How long you have been away?"

"It has been long, Daisy," answered he.

"Look!" said one of Bluebeard's wives, from a distance, "there's a priest making love to a nun; isn't it disgraceful?"

"But natural."

The statuary began to come on—a long sepulchral procession, headed after them lengths of white sheeting. A fairy, with a harp and spangled wings, was looking in anxiously to note their arrangement.

Bo-hooded and be-cloaked, little Daisy found a happy man with an umbrella waiting by the door of a carriage, which she made her exit. He put her in the carriage and jumped in after her.

"How early will you admit me to-morrow?" said he, as he drew her cloak carefully under the swinging globe in the hall. "You know I have two years to make up." He drew an envelope, well worn, from his pocket-book, took out one of the enclosures and gave it to his companion.

"Read that to-night, Daisy; to-morrow will give me and take explanations."

Sober-faced Em was sitting by the fire in Daisy's room. She had a hot cup of tea ready for her when she came, opened and a sparkling face showed itself.

"You dear old thing, are you waiting for me?"

"Of course I am. Daisy, is it possible! What has happened to you?"

"Daisy kissed her, and sat down in a low chair, and cry in her voice. "Guess."

"He has come?"

"He has come."

When Daisy met Champion the next day, it was with a curious feeling of baseful dread, born since last night.

"Shall we begin with explanations?" asked the young gentleman, after a few preliminaries. "How can you answer my letter? I am not a sympathetic, Daisy?"

"Silence, now," said she, turning away the face that was answer completely.

Champion laughed a low, happy laugh.

"Let me show you the answer I did get," putting a note in her hand, and Daisy read:

"Miss Darrow encloses his note to Mr. Champion, feeling sure that, on mature consideration, he would wish to see the production in his own possession. With many thanks for the compliments opinion the writer has expressed of her, Miss Darrow must beg leave to decline his overtures."

Daisy's eyes were as big as they could be.

"You didn't write that, it is evident."

"Oh," she exclaimed, in a pitying, caressing, sorrowful way, that brought Champion close to her.

"Think what I've been enduring. Trying to forget you, and always being able to get those strange words out of my brain. I always thought of your sweet face, as I say it last. I remember you were going out that night, and wore a white woolen dressing-gown, and your hair tumbled in rings. Oh, if I had spoken then!"

They were fast growing sentimental, when Daisy, giving another glance at the mysterious note, began to laugh violently.

"Oh, dear! oh, dear!"

"You hard-hearted little thing. It is cruel to laugh at such a severe letting down. Who did write it, Daisy? What is it?"

"Oh, Aunt Deborah!" exclaimed Daisy, in the midst of her paroxysm.

"Aunt Deborah?" reiterated Champion, snatching the note from the floor. "To be sure—what a stupid blockhead I am. Aunt Deborah Darrow. I never thought—I never have thought of but one in the world. And your auntie very kindly rejected me. Well, that I can endure."

"That accounts for the compassionate, knowing way in which she has always spoken of you," said Daisy, out of the window.

"I'll tell you what," said Champion, "she is your nearest relation, isn't she? let us go and ask her blessing."

"So we will," said Daisy.

JOY OF THE NIGHT.

BY EMMA ALICE HUNT.

AH, the sweet night that is faded and gone,
From the blush of the eve till the break of the dawn,
In a garden, with odors, and blossoms divine,
We met in a vision, lost Angel of mine!

Around us the night lay, starry and lone,
With the breath of the sorrowful Autumn o'er-blown—
But, Love, in our hearts bloomed a beautiful May,
No wind of the Autumn could wither away!

Softly the Dream-Beauty covered thy face,
As I leaned on thy breast in a thrilling embrace,
And my own bosom blushed, like a dawn-tinted snow,
In the flame of the wild heart that trembled below!

Ah! the sweet light in thy sweetest of eyes!
Ah! the wild blisses, and kisses, and sighs!
And the red lips that blazed, like the hues of the wine,
In a rose-wreathed beaker of Bacchus divine!

The starlight is faded—the garden o'erblown,
With the wind of the morning—and I am alone;
But thy kisses are burned on my heart and my brain,
And I drink their wild rapture again—and again!

BLIND FOR LIFE.

BY S. EVELYN HUNT.

"Ir is then wholly incurable;" I said the words over slowly after Dr. Willis, half-doubting if I had heard aright.

"Wholly incurable," repeated the oculist, the undisguised pity in his tone making the knowledge seem heavier and harder to bear.

There was no need for further talking; indeed I had no heart even to thank my friend for his patient and kindness in examination of my sightless eyes.

Groping for my brother's arm, I took it, and went out upon the street. I knew the sun was shining, for I felt its warmth upon my face; and I knew the month was June, for I caught the smell of roses as I brushed past them at my house-door. Even to this day the peculiar perfumes of fresh roses will recall that darkest day of all my life with a vividness most distinct.

As I entered the familiar porch, it seemed as if I were returning to a prison; for the bars of memory could I look out again upon the glad and beautiful earth. I bent a moment for my mother's kiss, and then groped my way fast for the staircase, and guided myself through the well-known passage to my own room.

That night, the bright summer day wore on, and I heeded not its beauty; and the night came down, but it was all the same to me whether it was dark or bright.

Every life has its dark hour, passing which, it goes on, heeping for ever one sad and bitter memory. I am sure that day from the fierce struggle I went on to my new life, my blind life, a saddened, silent man.

That day's struggle and rarer than light of sun passed from my heart, and left a midnight gloom. For how exceedingly, it may be, I was made the love of all my life, my promised bride, sweet Ona Miller.

Ona was a romantic story. Two children growing side by side; living the same life, with its miniature joys and sorrows; studying from the same books; reciting in the same society—companions always; and learning life's one sweet lesson as the years went on with no shadow of shame to mar the same society.

Then came my brief absence from home, and the accident causing a partial blindness, which had grown deeper and deeper, until from the most hopeful lost courage, and finally the decision of the most skilful oculist whom I could consult. So was blind for life.

It seemed to me that day that death would be the greatest boon which heaven could grant me. The strong young life which coursed through all my veins was hateful to me, and every beautiful heart-throb sounded defiance to my pain, and kept up its pitiless beat, its measured dirge of "life"—"life." Ay, life—a miserable existence that I must drag out to the end, and then, at last, release. Does this all seem cowardly? Afterward by bitter experience I learned that cowardice brings its sure punishment.

But my first agony seemed past, and a dull torpor of indifference setting on heart and mind, when a low sob stole upward to my window, so low, another could scarce hear it; but loud enough for my quick ear, powerful enough to bring me back to a full consciousness of all my suffering. I knew the time had come when I must make my decision, and I crept down into the little parlor, chiding the weakness which at the last made the strong limbs totter and the voice to fail. I should have found her in my blindness, my poor darling; I should have known the soft rustle of her garments among a thousand others; but she did not wait to see me groping toward her, for with a quick spring, her arms were around my neck, and her wet face was lying on my shoulder. For a moment I held her there, and then I put her from me with a sternness which frightened her more than the knowledge of my blindness had done.

"Ona," I said, and my voice grew strong again, "I release you from your engagement with me. I dare not keep your love, now that my life has grown so dark. I cannot make you happy. My mother has told you all, I know. Forget me, and when one asks you to gladden another home than mine, love him and be happy."

For a moment she did not speak; then came a timid remonstrance, just betraying a sudden woe:

"But, Walter, I love you!"

"Then I would save you from yourself," I said; and, oh, how hard my words were. I've wondered since, my tongue did not refuse to utter them; but they rang out clearly in the night, and Ona waited for no others.

Swiftly she stepped out upon the path, and I heard the gate swing lightly behind her as she passed through. I knew then that it would open to her touch no more, and that I need never listen again for her soft footfall on my garden-walk.

But it was over now—I had done my duty. I said that over and over again, as if it were something hard to be believed. I tried to think I had not saddened my darling's life; that her laugh was as merry, her songs as gladsome, as in the old days before my trouble. I knew that Will Harding loved her almost as well as I had, and I tried to picture the two together. Will was a brave, great-hearted fellow, working hard in the profession which he had adopted. We had been lads together, and friends always, but I had not known his attachment to the good clergyman's pretty daughter, until that happy day when, flushed with success, I had hastened to inform him how sure I was of that love, which, indeed, I had hardly ever doubted was my own. Now all was changed—the field was clear to him; and by-and-by I felt quite sure Ona would listen to his pleading, and crown his patient waiting as it well deserved.

To me there was nothing left but memory, and all the days were reminders of others brighter and happier—of careless strolling through lanes and fields—anywhere that we two might be under the sunny sky and with each other. And when I slept, my dreams framed just one picture—a merry face, whose great blue eyes and dainty mouth were set off by a crown of the softest, brightest hair. Little Ona was very lovely and very childlike, and I reasoned that her sorrow, like the grief of a child, would soon be over.

But after that sad night, when I shut her out from me, she might have been dead, for all the sign she gave me of her life. Her father came, with earnest voice and patient teaching, to guide me to a light which could lessen my darkness and gild even my future with hope. But I listened so indifferently that I must have grieved the faithful minister sorely, for after a while his visits ceased altogether. How selfish I was in those days. Fortunately I possessed sufficient wealth to prevent my ever becoming a burden to my friends in a pecuniary way; so, without thinking much further, I settled down into my own life, neither seeking amusement or even accepting such variety as was proffered by my surroundings. Slowly the weeks rolled into months, the months to years, and to our little household came no change, save when my brothers married and made themselves other homes. But they still kept close to the old house where we had grown to manhood, and where the mother yet lived, but moving quietly, though surely, to her old age.

My talent for music had been thoroughly cultivated before my misfortune, and even after my blindness the little congregation were glad to retain my voluntary services as organist in the little village church. Little Ona had once been accustomed to sit in the choir, and her voice had added not a little to the singing, but she had long since given up her place, and it was only at rare intervals that I could now distinguish her voice among the others in the body of the church. And even when she did sing, one almost wished she had not, for the sweet notes left an echo, which sounded sadly in the heart long after the voice was silent. At least it was so with me, and why, I who was so sure of being right and dealing honestly, never cared to question. But I question now whether any dealing can be honorable which results from the judgment of only one view. But then I never stopped to think I should have given poor Ona a hearing, before I disposed so arbitrarily of her future.

By-and-by the rumors grew how Ona Miller's cheeks were growing paler and thinner; but, then, it might be only her keeping so closely at home with her invalid mother.

Will Harding's spinster aunt grew particularly spiteful, and said, "The girl wouldn't have much beauty left in a year, if she kept on like that; and there was poor Will, as fine a lad as ever walked, who loved her to distraction, and she wouldn't even look at him!" Was this true? I wondered, but kept my wonder to myself. And as the months dragged on, the wonder grew to fear, the fear to torture. Was it possible I had wronged her when I sought to do her good? She was so young, so much a child in those years, I was sure she could not love as I did, and that, after a while she would thank me for what I did. I had a memory now—fool that I did not keep it then—of something about her, even in her lightest, gayest moments, which told of hidden strength, of undeveloped power, setting my judgment entirely wrong. Had I made her suffer all these years as I had suffered? No, no; that was impossible. And yet what was it that made her so changed—so old beyond her years? Then I heard again that one surprised remonstrance:

"But, Walter, I love you."

Stung by my fear, tortured by my doubt, I had wandered one afternoon out into the garden, and thrown myself down upon the grass, to sleep, if it were possible. Again the month was June, and again that hateful scent of fresh roses. Memory—my one persistent companion—clung closely to me on that June day, and carried me back, whether I would or no, over all the years of my life. How long I lay there, half-dreaming, I cannot tell, but I was roused at length by an old servant bringing a message from Will Harding. He had been thrown from a carriage a few days since, and so seriously injured that his physician despaired of his life, and to-day they thought him dying. Would I go to him at once? I rose up quickly, and suffered the old man to lead me down the street, and up into the room where the sick man lay.

As I entered, Will spoke my name, and asked the attendant to leave us for awhile. As soon as we were alone, he asked me to come nearer him, for he was failing, and what he did do, he must do quickly.

"Walter," he began, "we have both been wrong; it has been our fate to love one woman, and neither of us have been brave enough or unselfish enough to make her happy."

He faltered here, but gaining strength went on:

"You were wrong to break off your engagement with Ona Miller; I have been wrong in suffering you to suppose her love for you was dead, and that, as the wife of a blind man, she could not be happy. But Ona loves you still—would forgive you all. Bring her to me, and let my dying blessing atone for my lack of friendship while I lived."

There was no time to lose; the last words had been broken and imperfect, spoken only by a strong effort. Quickly I found my guide, and before many minutes passed I was at the door of the quiet parsonage. It was Ona's step along the passage, and my heart smote me remorsefully as I noticed it was slower and less buoyant than when I had heard it before. I did not notice her apparent surprise and confusion upon ascertaining who her visitor was, but as quickly as I could control my voice gave her Will Harding's message. Hastily tying on hat and cloak, she joined me at the door, and we went out together on our strange errand.

A few simple words told all the story, and happier than we had been for years, but awed by the strange occasion of our reunion, we reached the chamber of death.

We were none too soon; the dying man was too far gone to speak, but Ona told how a quiet, contented look came over his face when we laid our hands in his. Then quietly as he had blessed us, he died, and we went out again into the open air, with our new-found joy hushed and tempered by this communion with the last mysterious visitant.

Need I write any more, save that shortly afterward my darling came to take her old place, her rightful place, in all our hearts, and at my hearthstone; and that, cheered by her love, so tender and brave, I scarcely can regret that I am blind for life—no need; but I must tell how, when the flowers are in bloom, Ona will tie a garland and lead her little child—our child—to lay it reverently on the grave of that dear, noble friend who brought our hearts to understand each other, as the crowning work of his own unhappy life.

ICELAND.

The strange and romantic scenery of this singular island possesses great attractions for the genuine lovers of the picturesque, and might be deemed worth a special visit by some one of our leading professional artists. We are indebted to Capt. J. R. Campbell for the opportunity of engraving a few sketches, selected from his portfolio, illustrative of some of the remarkable sights of Iceland.

One of our engravings is a view of Orœfa Yökull, from the sea. This is the first view of Iceland, as we approach from the south-east. Orœfa Yökull is the highest mountain in the island, having an elevation of between 6,000 feet and 7,000 feet. It is characterized by the term "Yökull," owing to the upper portion being perpetually clothed with fields of snow and ice, from which glaciers descend. As it first rises into sight, on a clear day, its appearance is that of a crisp white cloud resting on the horizon.

We will next direct attention to a view of the Basin of the Great Geyser. The principal Geyser in Iceland has the form of a truncated cone, reared against the slope of a hill, overlooking a large tract of bog land, with a river at its base. On the hillside, the height of this mound may be 15 feet or 20 feet, the sides having a slope of some 20 degrees with the horizon. It is formed of silicious incrustation of a dirty white color, resulting from the deposit from the water. Hence it is probably constantly increasing in size. If we examine it, we find it built up of horizontal laminæ, rather reminding one of those of an oyster-shell magnified. The basin forms the top, and in its normal state—i.e., between eruptions—resembles simply a boiling pond, of circular shape, about 56 paces in circumference, and 6½ feet deep in the middle. The interior is as smooth as asphalt, and singularly regular in shape. A circular well descends vertically from the centre of the basin; and it is from this well or pipe that the water is supplied, keeping the basin full to the lip (which has a fretted appearance, resembling coral), over which a small steaming rill continually flows. In the depths of this well is, doubtless, seated the motive power, producing an eruption, when the water is projected from the surface of the basin in the form of a column, more or less defined, sometimes to the height of 90 feet or 100 feet. The action continues for several minutes, probably seldom exceeding six or eight. The intervals elapsing between eruptions vary from hours to days; the eruptions being most frequent, and also grandest, after heavy rains. The sketch was taken just after an eruption, during a short time succeeding which the basin remained empty, and could be explored. The Great Geyser forms one of a group of boiling springs, the others being much less remarkable both in size and character.

The island of boiling springs, in the river Hvitá, near Reykholt, is probably one of the most curious things in a land of wonders. Let the reader picture to himself a river 80 yards wide, somewhat shallow in summer, and divided by sandbanks, having an island rising from the water, in the shape of an oblong mound, 6 feet high, above the stream, and having on its ridge three fountains of boiling water. The island, which is dappled in color, with various tints of reddish brown, black, and white, etc., has probably been formed from the deposits of the water ejected. The wells are, as usual in Iceland, circular basins, supplied from a hole, or pipe, in the centre; and the force of the blast sends the water up in a constant succession of "jerks," to the height of 2 feet or more, from the surface immediately over the hole.

There is a line of little boiling springs, whose orifices lie in the bed of the river, extending some 70 yards from this island. These send up streams of hot water through the cold, heating that of the river in their neighborhood.

The wonders of Iceland have been heretofore only given us in a disconnected way, and the strange natural beauties of this island have almost been a sealed book. We shall endeavor, in a series of engravings, from the same source, which we shall give from time to time, to unlock some of these treasures.

HOWARD MISSION AND HOME FOR LITTLE WANDERERS.

New York City is not only the metropolis of the continent, but is in a peculiar sense the "Almshouse for the poor of all nations."

At least two-thirds of its population are of foreign birth, or of foreign parentage, who furnish quite 75 per cent. of its paupers and criminals.

The tenant-house population of this city would make a city almost as large as Philadelphia, or two larger than Baltimore and Washington, or Boston and Chicago.

It has been ascertained by those who have searched out this matter, that over four-fifths of the poverty and crime in the city are due to drunkenness.

Were the victims of this vice—the ruined in fortune and character—the ill-clad, cold, hungry, sick, crushed wives and children—the friendless widows and orphans—the homeless and perishing young girls—to come down from their garrets, or up from their basements and cellars, and out of their burrowing places where a ray of sunlight never enters—where pure air is never breathed—the sad procession would reach from the Battery to Harlem. Whose sympathy would not be moved to its depths at such a sight? yet these unfortunate creatures are here all around us, packed in their miserable abodes in a manner which surpasses belief.

There are blocks not over 400 feet square that contain about twice as many people as the whole of Fifth avenue. The Fourth Ward, in which this Mission is located, contains only about 50 acres (35 to 40 small blocks), yet its population would make a larger city than Utica, N. Y., or three such cities as Saratoga Springs.

One tenant-house in it (Gotham Court) often contains over 1,000 of these poor creatures. On one little spot near the Mission, 240 feet by 150, there are 20 tenant-houses, 111 families, 5 stables, a soap and candle factory, and a tan-yard. There are less than two dwelling-houses in the ward for each rum-hole.

In the very midst of this "valley and shadow of death" stands the Howard Mission and Home for Little Wanderers, whose workings are illustrated in this paper.

It was opened June 10th, 1861, by the Rev. W. C. Van Meter, who, for 10 or 12 years, has been engaged in rescuing the "children of the street" and placing them in carefully selected homes, chiefly in the country. As, in the prosecution of his beneficent work, he walked through the purlieus of the city, he met with children who were homeless, or who needed temporary shelter and protection—"cinder wenches," "gutter snipes," "wharf rats," and beggars of cold victuals—others whose parents were worthy but very poor. Many were sick and dying from want and neglect. Many mothers who would gladly earn their living were compelled to remain at home without employment because there was no place where they could leave their little children during the day while they should go out to work. He found others who would gladly work if they could obtain employment; feeling that it was degrading to them to be supported wholly by charity when they might earn at least a portion of their subsistence. The greater part of these unfortunate people were indifferent to, or deprived of religious privileges. This was a sad state of things, and Mr. Van Meter resolved to try to remedy it.

He knew from long experience in the work that the task would be a heavy one, but his experience had also taught him the best method to grapple with it. He had learned that when the perishing stretch out their hands for the "bread" of help, it will not do to turn them off with the "stone" of advice. To the hungry, bread first, then preaching; or rather, let both go together, or in Mr. Van Meter's words: "My object was to the utmost of my ability to do good to the souls and bodies of these sorrowing and perishing ones, and as I thought it not necessary to 'stamp a particular creed upon a loaf of bread,' I invited to an earnest co-operation with me all who sympathized in such a work."

His plan, though so comprehensive as to meet all these wants, was very simple. For the homeless, shelter, food, clothes, and kind, intelligent, Christian homes, were to be provided. In their new homes they were to have a seat at the table with the family, and move in the same social circle. They were to be tenderly cared for in sickness and in health, receive at least an ordinary common school education, go to Sunday-school and church, and be trained to habits of active industry; and that he might not lose his power to protect them, he would not bind them, but retained the power to remove them if they were not properly treated.

Another class of children who needed a temporary shelter, but whom Mr. Van Meter was not authorized to provide with homes, were to be kept in the Mission until their friends should provide for them. A third, and by far the most numerous class, who attended no school, and were not engaged in any employment, might come in the morning, enjoy the benefits of the bath, wardrobe, dining and school-rooms, and return to their places or homes in the evening. The schools were to be conducted by the best and kindest teachers he could obtain.

The sick were to be visited, encouraged, and according to his means supplied with food, clothes, medicine and medical attendance.

A Day Nursery was to be provided, in which mothers could leave their small children while they should be out at work, and employment was to be sought for those who wished to earn their living as far as possible.

In addition to these, families whose children should be connected with the Mission, and who on personal visitation and investigation were found to be deserving of assistance, were to be supplied, according to the necessities of the case, with bread, shoes and coal, at less than cost, the price being varied according to their abilities to pay. Mr. Van Meter's theory being that true charity consists in helping a man to do only what he cannot do without assistance.

This was his plan, and he at once put it into execution, and the unprecedented success which has attended his work, shows the wisdom of it. The Rev. R. G. Toles, now Superintendent of the House for Little Wanderers in Boston, said: "I will stand by you and assist you;" which he did, until he took charge of the institution in Boston.

The premises No. 37 New Bowery were rented and fitted up, and the day the Mission was opened 183 children were received. Last year the number received was 1,543. During the last four years over 5,000 children have been received, hundreds of whom have been placed in good homes all over the country. The last four months 1,237 of these little wanderers have come under the protecting roof of this Home. Daily 400 to 550 are at its table. Frequently more than 100 baskets of provisions a day are distributed among the sick and destitute.

Though the cost of this work is about $25,000 a year, it has neither asked nor received an appropriation of a dollar from the School Fund, City nor State. It has not turned from its door a homeless child nor gone in debt a dollar. It is sustained entirely by the free-will offerings of those who take pleasure in placing their benefactions for the poor in its hands.

It is regularly incorporated, and is conducted by a Board of well-known, successful business gentlemen, of whom Hon. Joseph Hoxie is President. The building now occupied for the wants of the Mission being too small to meet the demands upon them, these gentlemen are taking steps to purchase ground and erect a building adapted to their work, at a cost of $150,000. It will be as complete in all its parts as modern architectural skill can make it. It will furnish good lodging for at least 200 girls, who, though homeless and unprotected, are trying to earn their living in shops and factories. It will have a large Day Nursery, besides accommodations for the hundreds of others placed under its care. School-rooms will be provided for 1,000 children. In short, the Board is determined to make it a model institution of its kind and an honor to the city and country. To what nobler purpose can some wealthy gentleman put his money than the erection of such a building?

ENGLAND IN QUEEN ELIZABETH'S DAY.

So rapidly were the English growing in the luxuries and vices of other lands, while they retained their native vigor and coarse habits, that the playwrights constantly alluded to the incongruity of the fashions displayed in the dress of dandies, to their language, mixed of all the dialects in Europe, to their aptitude for every kind of dissipation, to their skill in the sports of all nations, and to the decay of antique severity. "We have robbed Greece of gluttony," says Stephen Gasson, "Spain of pride, France of deceit, and Dutchland of quaffing." But these affections were only a kind of varnish on the surface of society. The incidents of court gossip show how savage was the life beneath. Queen Elizabeth spat one day, in the midst of her nobles, at a gentleman who displeased her. She struck Lord Essex on the cheek. Burleigh often cried at her ill-treatment. The lords wrangled and even drew swords in her presence. Once Leicester took her handkerchief from her lap to wipe his face, at tennis. Lady Jane Grey was starved and beaten by her parents, and exposed to such indignities that she wearied of life; yet they made her one of the best Greek scholars of the day. Heretics were burned in every town. Sir Henry Sidney, as we learn from a paper recently published by Mr. Froude, when sent to quell the Irish rebels, first proclaimed the Queen's sovereignty and then allowed no mercy to the recusants. He "put man, woman and child to the sword," while his sergeant-majors balanced the advantages of pillaging or "having some killing," with a preference for the latter when they felt themselves in humor for the chase.

The belief in witches everywhere prevailed, nor was it an uncommon village sport to drown old women in the ponds, and to rack suspected wizards till for very anguish they confessed fictitious crimes. Country-folks conducted their revels with a license that would shock our modern ears. The lord of misrule led out his motley train, and ladies went a-maying with their lovers to the woods. The feasts of asses and fools profaned the sanctuaries; nor were the sports of Christmas so well suited to celebrate a Christian festival as to recall the rites of Woden and Freya. Men and women who read Plato and discussed the beauties of Petrarch's poetry, allowed the coarsest practical jokes and used the grossest language. They sold farms and forests, and wore their acres in the form of gems and gold lace on their backs. But their splendid clothes and jewels did not prevent them from indulging in the most untidy habits. They would lie upon the rushes which concealed the fragments of old feasts; and they burned perfumes to sweeten chambers musty with bad air. The church itself was not respected. The nave of St. Paul's became a rendezvous of thieves and prostitutes. Fine gentlemen paid sums of money for the privilege of clanking up and down its aisles in service time; dancers and masquers crowded from the square outside in all their finery, often took the sacrament, and then ran out to recommence their sports. Men were Papists and Protestants according to the time of day; hearing mass in the morning and sermon in the afternoon.

There was no end to the extravagance and incongruity of elements which then prevailed in England. Yet in the midst of this confusion rose cavaliers like Sidney, philosophers like Bacon, poets like Spenser; in whom all that is pure, elevated, subtle, tender, wise, delicate and learned in our modern civilization displayed itself.

The Bourbons of France.—The history of these Bourbons show that they had but little claim to any of the glorious additions to their baptismal names. If he only is great who can conquer himself, then the Bearnais has no claim to the suffix to his Christian name. Louis the Just was the betrayer of some of his best friends. Louis Le Grand lived to see himself stripped of all acquisitions that had purchased for him the distinction; and Louis the Well-beloved was execrated by every man and woman in France who respected morality, decency and truth. Taken altogether, these Bourbons are not of sweet odor. The ambition, reckless extravagance and horrible vices of the worst among them were visited upon the heads of perhaps the best, though not the strongest in intellect. The family has not only lost its "coign of vantage" in France, but a younger branch has been driven from Naples, and another sits uneasily on a rocking throne in old Iberia. For more than a generation the childless "Henri the Fifth" has been waiting the good pleasure of the French to call him to the throne of his grandsire and his cousin of Orleans, the not childless "Duc de Chartres," waits the same caprice, or any advantage he may derive from being the next heir to the crownless Henri. The Bourbons are politically dead, but their hopes are not unlively. Their expectations would seem to be of the gloomiest, but for that proverbial and perhaps politically mischievous phrase, "Tout arrive en France." (All things come round in France.)

Something New—An Ink Mine.—The San Francisco Mining Press says a party has recently arrived at Los Angelos, from the vicinity of Buena Vista Lake and the oil springs there, having in his possession a bottle containing "a mineral substance very much resembling crude petroleum, but without any smell, and possessing all the qualities of fine writing fluid. Several experiments were made by different persons, and all pronounced it as a good quality of ink, or fluid for writing. We dipped our pen in the fluid and wrote several lines, and could not distinguish the difference between it and the best writing fluid now in use. When first used, the color is a deep, rich black, but after exposure to the air, the color moderates a little, still retaining a good, and to all appearances, durable color. A company is being formed for the purpose of testing the above discovery.

Uses of Glycerin.—The uses of glycerin are daily extending; and as it is now a commercial article, as easily obtained as alcohol, there is one application which ought to become popularly known. This is the property it possesses of dissolving out the odorous principles of flowers. The leaves of roses, of hyacinth, jasamin, geranium, &c., are to be put into a stoppered bottle and glycerin left in contact with them for three or four weeks. All of the perfume will be extracted, and as the glycerin will mix readily with water, a scented wash can be prepared for the hands, as well as an extract made for use in the preparation of perfumery. If the glycerin be left in contact with red pepper balls, it will extract a principle very strengthening to the hair, and less dangerous than the preparations of cantharides now often used.

1. Outside View of the House. 2. Receiving the Children. 3. The Cleansing Operation. 4. Clothing the New Comers. 5. Combing and Polishing. 6. Putting to Bed. 7. The Dining Hall. 8. Stove for Outsiders. 9. The Kitchen—Cutting Bread. 10. The School-room—Singing. 11. Mother Reclaiming her Children.

HOME FOR LITTLE WANDERERS—THE HOWARD MISSION HOUSE, 37 NEW BOWERY, NEW YORK.

o Bed. 7. The Dining Hall. 8. Stove for Outsiders. 9. The Kitchen—Cutting Bread. 10. The School-room—Singing. 11. Mother Reclaiming her Children.

MISSION HOUSE, 37 NEW BOWERY, NEW YORK.

FORTUNE-TELLING.

BY R. V. ROBERTS.

I had such a pleasant dream, sister,
Such a pleasant dream last night;
So take your work and sit by my side,
And patiently listen to what did befall,
In this vision glad and bright.

I dreamed 'twas the sunset time,
The close of a summer day,
And the cool west wind was blowing free
Over my hated face as I stood 'neath a tree,
To wait for the sun's last ray.

'Twas a pleasant scene around,
A pleasant, home-like scene:
With its white walls bathed in golden light,
A farm-house stood, half hid from sight
By trees and creepers green.

And everywhere around
Waved fields of half-grown grain,
And the fragrant scent of new-made hay,
Was borne on the wings of the breeze away
From a home-bound, loaded wain.

And sparkling in the distance,
With white sails studded o'er,
The waves of a noble river rolled,
And shone in the setting sun like gold,
As they laved the pebbly shore.

In circles wheeling low,
A wild bird sought its nest,
The lowing kine in the barn-yard stood,
And o'er field and meadow, stream and wood,
Dwelt a peaceful air of rest.

Within the farm-house porch,
'Neath the clustering leaves of the vine,
Sat a form I knew and loved right well,
And whom at a scarce need tell;
(Ah! you're blushing, sister mine.)

The maiden's bashful air
Had not yet given place—
For the honest farmer was scarcely o'er,
And the bridal blush her cheek still wore—
To the matron's sober grace.

And ever and anon,
With her needle in her hand,
And shading her eyes from the dazzling rays,
Watching the road with an eager gaze,
She would take her patient stand.

Soon her eye and cheek grew bright;
She watched not long in vain,
For the well-known farmer's stalwart form,
His brow with the honest toil still warm,
Came driving his loaded wain.

My eyes with glad tears filled,
But the tears with smiles were blent,
As I looked on my young wife's happy face,
And knew that her heart was the dwelling-place
Of peace and deep content.

And a prayer rose to my lips,
A prayer from my heart's warm core,
For a long, long life of days like this,
Of calm content, and quiet bliss;
Then I woke—my dream was o'er.

But what do you think of it all, sister?
Is meaning you see?
But I will not ask you to interpret,
For I hope to wake some bright day yet,
And find it—reality.

Bound to the Wheel.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GUY WATERMAN'S MAZE," "BEURNE'S WAR," ETC.

CHAPTER LXXIX.—KITTY'S SORROW.

KITTY had been standing directly on her hot for some time after that—how long Esau could not tell, for the trees, with their deep mysterious murmur, kept no count of seconds or minutes—but long enough for the idling butterflies and bees to have got scent of her flowers and come brooding over her, and for her brown frock and shining shoes to be covered with dust, when the coach was heard.

By the time Esau had dropped from the wall and introduced himself, it seemed to him that another being stood there. The great bonnet was quite awful in its power, and the little face inside so shy and prim, he dazed look at it only out of the corners of his eyes. Only three words—two Noes and one Yes—had got during the journey, and those were aimed straight down at the mangy coach-mat rather than at him. Of his little dusty eyed companions the caravans and roads, the boldest and wittiest had always been his favorites. For these he had made willow wands, and gathered rushes, or flogged lethargic donkeys. Yet Kitty's shyness took his attention, and amused him, and made him wonder.

But if Kitty were prim and shy that day, how much more so was she when she had heard all about him! Even the partial account her mother gave her of him made her feel perfectly horrified at the idea of his living with them, and contaminating the children with his vagabond notions. On the whole, Esau's life at the Harrices had not been happier since Kitty's arrival. Anthony, who liked her very much, and used to promise her she should be Clarissa's bridesmaid, was often unjust to his kinsman on her account, taking Tom's part in all their quarrels, and abusing Esau for his indolence in worms the lad would laugh at good humorously when they were spoken, but ponder over bitterly long afterward. Harris was kind always, but weakly indulgent, and Esau felt that he was so. He had sudden fits of impatience with himself. Once he took it into his head that it was impossible for him to be what Anthony wished him, and that he was more fitted for a workman's life; and one fine frosty morning Harris was awakened early by unusual sounds in the yard, snatches of part-singing and bursts of laughter, and looking out, beheld Esau among the carpenters, in a white fresco jacket and paper cap, looking ruddy and handsome and full of triumphant happiness, as if he had for a certainty discovered his true calling at last. The fit lasted three days, then ended, and so it was with the shipping he attempted. This was the state of things for some time, during which Esau made fewer efforts to work, and had tried desperately to forget Anthony's anger, Kitty's silent contempt, and Harris's unanswering disapprobation, in the amusements of the play-houses and tavern music-rooms.

That exception was noticeable. One night he came home in one of his miserable moods. He had walked from London through the snow, and as he reached Harris's house, the sound of the church-clock telling one came to him on the wind like a reproachful sigh of time. The sleepy servant maid, who had been sitting up to let him in, yawned wearily in his face as she opened the door. He staggered into the quiet house, his head burning, his teeth chattering with the cold, and laid his hand on the banisters, intending to steal up to the room he shared with Anthony; but-but he set his foot on the first step, saw a light under the door of the long parlor. Was it Anthony or Harris sitting up for him? he wondered, in some alarm, and then went to the door, opened it, and looked in, fearing, yet hoping to see one of them.

It was Kitty. Esau stared, scarcely believing his eyes.

She was wrapped in a great shawl, as if she had got up hurriedly, and was before the fire, her fire with her little sister (the queen) on her lap. Her majesty had been with the boys to the sliding, and was well home with the cold and wet of snow and her fat fingers dead, and in the night Kitty was awakened by her butting at her with her head, that seemed like fire. She had been downstairs nursing and soothing her for more than an hour, and by this time the round eyes and cheeks had lost some of their fierce heat. Kitty looked round as the door opened, and saw Esau standing there, shivering, and looking at her with a surprised and stupefied gaze.

"The child is ailing," she said; "she's got snow in her shoes at the sliding, and has been in a sort of fever. She's asleep now, and I'm going to lay her down again, and you can come to the fire."

She rose slowly, for the child was a great weight in her little arms.

"Let me carry her up the stairs for you, Kitty."

The tired arms seemed half inclined to yield their burden to him, but as he stooped down to take it, his breath smelt strong of wine, and Kitty suddenly tightened her hold of the child, and drew back, looking at him with her eyes full of disgust and pain.

"No, thank you, Esau; I can carry her," she said.

Esau burst out laughing.

"Has it come to that, Kitty?" he asked, half bantteringly, half sadly. "Have I grown too bad to touch her little majesty?"

Kitty turned away, and went to the flight of stairs that led from this room to the upper floor. As the light of her candle went into the little recess where the stairs were, and the room was left in partial darkness, Esau called after her by her name.

He could have bitten his lip through with vexation the moment after. The light flickered and came back. He knew she stood there, touched by his cry of her name, and was ready to laugh again at her gentle pity. He stood looking into the fire with wet eyes, and leaning his head on his arm against the mantelpiece.

"What is the matter with you?" asked the child's voice, sad and sufficient.

"I am hungry," said Esau. "Hungry and cold, Kitty. The snow got into my shoes, and my head burns, and I am as sick of myself as ever you are of me."

He could not help glancing at her, hiding his admiration by sullen looks at the great misery.

She had not set down her candle, and resting her burdened arms on the table-edge by the chair she had left, looked at him, looking straight at him—a pure, grave look, that had no manner of coquetry in it; but she had much ado to keep her mouth from quivering with joy at finding whom her eyes evidently regarded as so great a young stranger. What with her mother's anxiety and sweet pity, the face was irresistible. Esau went and knelt in the chair by which she stood, with one of those sudden impulses of affection and yearning which had taken possession of him once or twice before in his strange life, threw his arms round her and the child, and laid his head on her shoulder.

She did not throw him off at once—Kitty was not so severe in her ways as you such things as you do before them all, and to tell you I say, not have them said any more—those things you said once."

"You won't, Kitty?"

"I will not."

"Then once you shall," said Esau—"this once, and never any more, if you like. I will tell you I care for you more than any one in the world. Kitty, you should be very, very good to bear it, if you won't be a little kinder to me, and perhaps love me, too, a little—a very little."

He listened as he stood outside, leaning in at the door toward her. It was too dark to see her face; he could only listen. And not a single word came.

"Kitty, I am going away on a strange journey—I don't know how it may end, or where. I may never come back, if—even if you were a little kind to me to-night; but if you are not, I never shall. Won't you speak to me, Kitty—won't you speak a word?"

Not a word came.

"Kitty, dear, I am holding out my hand. I want to be gentle and not frighten you, as I have before; so if you feel you ever wish to see me again, put your hand in it."

He leaned against the lintel of the door, growing sick of the silence and the darkness.

"Kitty, one minute more and I am going."

But nearly three passed before the hand closed—still empty—and was withdrawn; and in two more Harris came, and found Kitty with her head on the porch-seat, crying as if her heart would break.

CHAPTER LXXX.—TOO LATE.

LET us for a brief space go back to Bob, who was returning to his lone lodging in a very savage temper—savage with Esau, savage with Dr. Pompeus, savage with Mr. Stamp, and wonderful to say, most savage of all with himself—when he was suddenly touched in a manner more familiar than respectful by some hands, which caused Bob to turn in angry alarm, and meet the cool looks of two men, who did not stop to mention their names, and who hastily condescended to explain they had a warrant for his apprehension, but took advantage of his sudden collapse at their appearance to clap a pair of handcuffs on his struggling wrists; and by the time he had recovered voice and spirit enough to remonstrate, were hurrying him along through the streets of Hengston, once more a spectacle to gods and men, in their most pitiless of moods.

To all his cries of fury and vengeance, his imprecations, his inarticulate rage, his gushing appeals for mercy, his undisguised agonies of fear, they answered not a word, but let him run through the whole diapason of human emotion, from cowardly pitiful at the bottom of the scale, through many and differing varieties, till they reached to correctly affright again, at heaven knows how many octaves higher.

But their silence was better than their speech, when at last they did speak.

"Now, just you be quiet quietly, and without raising the whole town about our ears? If they fall foul of you again, wish yourself good-by, for they'll finish the job. Whereas, if you go as a decent man should, quietly into prison, you'll be put on your trial to-morrow, the judge'll be very glad to see you, and no doubt will get out of hand, and before you know where you are, you'll be dancing on the broad seas; but not, old fellow, as you might have been dancing, if you'd played at their rights, without a bit of timber below your feet."

Bob began then vehemently to suspect that Mr. Stamp had not been jesting with him, but really giving him a chance, which he had been too great a fool to take.

And with that comforting thought, Bob found himself that night in Hengston Jail—where the governor accordingly informed about his appearance, and where Bob's fond dreams of the future were brought to their end at last.

Let us leave him to study, like a good many more of his class, that most interesting of problems—how a man may manage to set himself and his fortunes to rights after he whisper in his ear has been heard of—"Too late!"

CHAPTER LXXXI.—CLARISSA'S PURSUITS.

A CARRIAGE, with two gray horses, has stopped at a little roadside public-house, situated at the point where the one road the carriage has traversed divides into two branches; and the footman in plain, dark clothes, has run round to speak to the landlord; while the horses, almost enveloped in their own dense sides, are shaking foam from their mouths and rattling their harness, in the hope of relief to the skin from the profuse sweat, and from the gallop of particular pains during the severe run they have had—fifteen miles without a single stoppage, and done in less than an hour and a half.

The seeming footman—who is, in fact, no other than our old acquaintance, the discreet butler—first asks what is the two ways lead to the London and Dover Road, six miles distant, and finds it is the right-hand one; then he gets a boy sent out to give the horses water; and lastly asks for a glass of the best ale, which he soon discovers is home-brewed, and so good that the landlord and his wife are quite pleased with his commendation of it, and altogether with his behavior, on unlike some of the other gentlemen-servants who occasionally call there. Presently he gets interesting as to the lady and gentleman outside. In low and confidential tones, he proceeds then to understand that the affair is one of love, and of running away to be married, and that though there is not really objection to the match, there are people—one of them a young and handsome lady, who ought to know better—people who are likely to use compulsion if they have over the lady in the carriage to prevent the marriage, if they can overtake them.

"And if so, what good? They are both determined not to go back. They can only make bad blood in the future. So, though I haven't the smallest interest in the business, I do hope they won't overtake us."

"I hope so too," said the landlady, as she looked at her husband. Then added, "Which way are you going?"

"The London road."

"Well," said the landlady, with a laugh, "don't say I told you, but if you go to the left, we'll say you went to the left; and then about a mile and a half off—the second turning, mind, not the first one, on the right—you'll see a sort of lane, grown all over with grass. It's a road as nobody would suspect, but you go down there, and it'll take you a good many odd turns, but you'll come out at last into the very road you want."

"Capital! capital! Let a woman alone for the wit to help another woman out of difficulty—eh, landlord? By George, it's capital, I declare!"

A word whispered at the opened carriage-door

—for the windows were up, and the blinds were down—was followed by the order to proceed, and off went the carriage at the old pace.

They found the lane, and, on their way to it, did not meet a single person with the exception of a young farmer on horseback, who seemed to wonder about the closed blinds. Sleuth, as they turned the corner, looked through the little window at the back, and observed the horseman stopping, as if still more puzzled to guess why they should choose that road. As soon as the carriage was beyond the scope of the spectator's eye, Sleuth stopped the vehicle, called the butler, and they held counsel whether it would not be better to pursue the road they had just quitted, and so go by some lengthened route into the road they sought, than venture by the road they were on, now that there was one person who had seen their exact course, and who would, if asked, guide the pursuit. On the whole, they agreed it was most likely, first, that Clarissa and the farmer would never meet, or that, if they did, it would be supposed that they had turned down that unlikely-looking lane in ignorance of its connection with the other road, and merely as a feint to throw the farmer off the scent; consequently she would follow the road indicated to her at the public-house—the left one—thus leaving Sleuth exactly what he wanted—the other and nearer route open and free. So on they went, jolting over the grassy track, and losing much time, to Sleuth's intense vexation, who dreaded the sight of Clarissa almost as much as he dreaded some possible minister of justice, venturing beyond the law to arrest him, and take him back before the termination of Anthony's trial.

At last they got into the road, and the horses were put to their utmost speed, and for a few minutes there was deep silence, for neither Sleuth nor Phillis had ventured to hold any conversation beyond that relating to their place of destination—Paris—and their object—immediate marriage. That was enough for Phillis for the present moment, and she dwelt on it with as much of satisfaction as she could.

Suddenly the carriage stopped. The butler came to the door—

"Beg pardon, sir, there's a carriage in advance; I saw it only a moment, then it turned out of sight."

"Going our way?" said Sleuth.

"Yes, sir."

"Go on, first to the spot where it disappeared, then move cautiously. There! break this window at the back—it won't open. We must communicate without losing all this time for stoppage."

The butler got inside, smashed the window clean away with blows of his elbow, jumped out, and they were off. Presently he put down his head to the broken window, and said:

"It's the doctor's carriage, sir, I am almost sure; and—yes! they have stopped! They are waiting for us!"

A pause—and then Sleuth said, savagely:

"No matter. Go on!" And then to Phillis he added: "She'd better be cautious. I'm in no mood to——" His voice died away.

In two or three minutes the carriages were side by side, Sleuth stopping, for the servants on the doctor's carriage had both been signaling for some time with vigorous personal demonstration for the new comer to stop.

In an instant Clarissa descended from the already open doorway of her own carriage, and seeing her do so, Sleuth also descended, hat in hand, and with a show of a smile on his face.

Sleuth stood, hat in hand, between the two carriages, confronting Clarissa, as if it could only be him she wished to address. But she said, hastily:

"Mr. Sleuth, I will speak to you presently; it is your companion—it is Phillis—I wish to speak to first."

"Phillis, Miss Pompess, as you call her, will be my wife, and——"

"I am glad to hear it. Do not be offended at my familiarity. I have treated her as a friend. I intend still to do so, if she will let me."

Then, seeing Sleuth never offered to get out of the way, and that Phillis, who sat trembling within, did not attempt to second her efforts, Clarissa said:

"Mr. Sleuth, I will pass—will speak to your future wife. I leave you, as a gentleman, to determine how."

Sleuth found it impossible to determine the how, by suddenly sacrificing all the character he had so long and laboriously built up—of being a true gentleman in externals—by offering violence. Perhaps, even, he found it impossible to resist the moral influence Clarissa's face, tones and attitude exercised over him. Sleuth had two affections—one of his heart, so far as he had a really human heart at all, for Phillis; one of his fancy, for Clarissa.

"I wish only to spare you and Miss Conyngham unnecessary pain; but be it as you will."

He then, with a low bow, made room for her to pass, and seemed as if he would, in his great courtesy, give them speech with each other, unheard by him. But if he thought the thought, he took care not to act upon it, but stood just within ear-shot.

"Phillis, do you intentionally betray me?"

"No," was the slow and hesitating answer; then, after a pause, she drew from her breast the paper which Sleuth had sent to her while she was at the hotel, and which began by calling her his wife; this she put into Clarissa's hand, with a glance toward Sleuth that seemed to imply he was not to know.

Clarissa read it through, and, it may be said, deliberately, considering how full of hurry and excitement was her position. Then she said:

"Yes, I understand. I could almost pity and sympathize with you—that is, if you are not utterly different from all I have esteemed you."

"You have—you have thought too well of me," murmured Phillis, who seemed moved by some internal cause of agitation, even stronger than those which affected her from without.

"Do you mean to say you can literally murder me, through him, in return for all I have done for, or professed toward you?"

"Murder! You!"

"It is that, and nothing less. If Anthony dies, it is you who kill him; if he dies, you kill me, too."

"I cannot—cannot now answer you," said Phillis, catching hold of Clarissa's hand, and looking, with an unmistakable expression of alarm toward the listening Sleuth, who stood with his back toward them, apparently contemplating the landscape.

"Phillis, if there be one grain of true honesty—true womanhood in you—if you ever meant that I should have faith in you, and in your professions——"

"I did! I do! Ay, even now!"

"You say so?" asked Clarissa, sinking her tones, as she noticed how full of alarm were Phillis's glances and broken, abrupt, low speech, and releasing her own hand from Phillis, only that she might herself clutch the loosened fingers.

"I do! As I may be judged at my last hour, I do!" This was said with so much of tremulous earnestness and desire for secrecy, that Sleuth was hardly able to hear her, and so he moved nearer.

"What do you wish me to do, if I put myself again into your hands?" demanded Clarissa, whose eager, brilliant eyes, never for an instant relaxed their powerful sway over Phillis's eyes, or their incessant query, "Can I—can I trust you?"

Phillis pointed, after a significant look at Sleuth's back, at that line in his note which said, "Bring any friend with you you please."

"You wish me to be that friend?"

"If you could, I would, indeed, repay you—ay, at any cost!"

"Phillis, I am mad, I think, or bewitched. But there is no time to hesitate. You ought not thus to go alone with him. If you now swear to me you will guard me while I stay with you, and send me back, should Anthony be found guilty, in a condition to save him—"

"I will! On my knees I swear it to you. I desire—I mean no other!"

Phillis had, in fact, dropped to the bottom of the carriage, half unintentionally, on her knees, and the unconsciously taken attitude had suggested the words.

"Then I trust all in your hands."

"Ah, you did not do so before. You wished to do it, I know, but you did not. You were my jailer—a kind one, but still my jailer. Now—"

"You are mine! I understand! Phillis, I thank you. Your last words give me fresh hope. If I see you married, will you, till then, let me share your bed, as you shared mine?"

Phillis threw her arms about her neck, kissed Clarissa, with streaming eyes, and then murmured:

"How strange! I dreamed all this, but only as a thing impossible to be. Quick! Go to him. Say I have asked you, and you have promised. Say, if necessary, some one ought to be with me. Trust all the rest to me."

What could Sleuth do or say in answer to such a proposition—so exactly what he had himself suggested, and coming from such a woman as Clarissa, so difficult to set aside—but consent? He consented, cursing in his heart the very woman whose beauty and fascination never seemed stronger to him than now, when she was going to be their companion for at least a day or two.

Clarissa lost no time in dismissing her own carriage and servants with the words:

"Tell my father I think it right to go with Mr. Sleuth and his affianced bride. They both"—here she smiled a little, with a wistful, pathetic, yet penetrating look at Sleuth, as if to put him, as far as she could, in the mood to accept some honorable and manly responsibility—"they both promise to be very careful of me, and to let me return very speedily. Ask him instantly to see Mr. Maude in the prison, and tell him the same—I shall soon be back."

A curious glance on Clarissa's part at this moment struck Sleuth. It was a glance that, in one rapid sweep, took in himself, his two servants, and her two servants, and the fancy crossed his mind:

"Is she wild enough to meditate force of any kind?"

The doctor's carriage drove off, both the men looking a good deal alarmed over the whole business; but seeing no opportunity to remonstrate, as their young mistress was so decided. And then, while Clarissa watched the retreating vehicle and the dubious, half-sidelong looks of her servants, she wiped hastily a tear or two from her face, and stifled in her throat an hysterical cry of alarm and anguish, that threatened her with a sudden break-down if she gave way at all; and then she turned, and Sleuth having got in to snatch a hurried bit of talk with Phillis, she was politely handed in to the seat beside Phillis by the discreet butler. That worthy person had not even a look on his face to express his secret wonder and misgiving, as he shut the door.

The O'Mahony Bonds Sold in Ireland.—We understand that a considerable quantity of the Fenian bonds of the Irish republic have been transmitted to Ireland on speculation. There is a curious peculiarity about many of these bonds. The estates of the nobility and gentry form the security, and the names of parks, demesnes, and townlands figure in the body of the bonds. The ordnance maps of Ireland have been carefully studied, and the various properties have been divided, on paper, to head centres and others, except those portions which were supposed to be reserved for the necessities of the Irish republic. It is not improbable that agents have been sent to Ireland well acquainted with the different localities, and that the bonds intrusted to each are prepared for the district in which he is to carry on his scheme. The object is to extract from the small farmer as much money as possible, under the idea that after "the rising" takes place he will be the owner of that portion of his landlord's estate to which the bond refers.

A LEGEND OF ICELAND.

As an accompaniment to the views of Iceland we have given on another page of this paper, we now give one of the numerous legends of these singular people, entitled "Túngustapi."

In the olden times, many years ago, a rich farmer lived at Sœlingsdalstúnga. Of his children, two were sons, by name Arnór and Sveinn. These brothers were both full of promise, though as different in character from one another as day and night. Arnór was a brave, stirring, and active youth; Sveinn, a quiet, gentle, and timid one.

Arnór, who was full of life and spirits, spent all his time in out-door sports and games, in company with the other young men who lived in that valley, and who used to meet together at a rocky hill standing near the farm Túnga, which was called Túngustapi. Their favorite amusement in the winter was to slide in sleighs down the snowy sides of the hill, and in the evenings the rocks used to echo again with their shouts and merriment, Arnór always being ringleader.

Sveinn scarcely ever took part in their sports, but was wont generally to pass his time in the church, and to wander alone about the foot of the hill, when the rest were not playing there. People used to point at him, and to say that he had to do with the elves who dwelt in the mountain.

Certain it was that, without fail, every new year's night, he used to disappear, and nobody knew where he went to. He often warned his brother not to make such riot on the hill, but Arnór always laughed at him for his pains, and said that "no doubt the elves were none the worse for it. As for stopping their sports on the hill, he saw no fun in that, and go on he would." And go on he did, just the same as ever, though Sveinn assured him, over and over again, that harm would come of his folly.

One new year's night Sveinn had disappeared as usual, but staid much longer away from home than was his custom. Arnór offered to go and look for him, saying in a joke:

"He is certainly enjoying the company of his friends the elves."

So starting out, he took his way to the mountain.

The night was dark and stormy. When he had arrived at that side of the hill which faced the farm, the rock opened suddenly before him of its own accord, and he saw, within, endless rows of the brightest lamps. At the same time he heard the sound of music, and bethought himself that this must surely be the time for the elves' public worship. And drawing nearer, he came to an open door, through which he looked, and saw vast crowds of people assembled within. One, who seemed to be a priest, stood dressed in splendid robes, by an altar, round which were placed numberless burning candles. Arnór then went further in still, and saw his brother Sveinn kneeling before the altar, while the priest, laying his hands on his head, was speaking some words over him. Round about him stood many others, all in sacred robes, so that Arnór guessed at once that they were making his brother an elfin-priest.

Then he cried aloud:

"Sveinn! Come! Come with me! You are running the risk of death!"

Whereupon Sveinn started up, and turning toward the door near which his brother stood, made as if he would hurry to him. But the priest, who stood before the altar, said:

"Shut instantly the door! and let us wreak vengeance upon the man who has dared to place his feet within our holy place. But thou, Sveinn, must go from among us for thy brother's fault; and, inasmuch as thou wert willing to go to him, and loved more his shameless call than these our sacred rites, thou shalt fall down dead whenever thine eyes again see me standing in my robes before this altar."

Arnór now saw those who had been standing round the altar lift his brother in their arms and vanish with him through a distant arch of rock. At the same moment the sound of a bell rang out above him, and all the assembled crowd rushed with one accord to the doorway. He himself ran through it first, back into the outer night, and sped toward his home. But soon he heard behind him the sound of following feet, and the weird tramp of fleet elfin horses. And one of the foremost riders cried with a loud voice:

> "Ride! Ride! Ride on!
> For the slopes are dark and the path is dim;
> He flees before, ride after him!
> Let us, with fell enchantment, spread
> Confusion o'er his feet and head,
> In order that he
> May never see
> To-morrow's sun! Ride! Ride! Ride on!"

Then the whole troop rode between Arnór and the farm and drove him back. On they went over hill and rock and morass, Arnór whose dread clogged his feet, knowing not whither he fled. At last he came to some slopes far east of his home, and there, his strength forsaking him, he fell down fainting, and the whole elfin-troop rode over him, bruising him with hoofs of their goblin-horses, till he was more dead than alive.

As to Sveinn, he came home, just when the household, tired of waiting, were going to bed. He did not utter a word about himself or his own long absence, but bade them at once make search for his brother Arnór. All the servants, therefore, went out and spent the rest of the night in vainly trying to find him. But he was found at last by a farmer who lived to the eastward, and who, as he rode to early worship, at Túnga, next morning, stumbled across him, lying at the foot of the slopes. Arnór was sensible, but dying, and so weak that he only found strength and words to tell the farmer what had happened, and to beg him not to take him home again, but leave him, before he fell back dead.

Ever since that those mounds have been called "the slopes of death!"

Sveinn was never himself again, but became more sullen, silent, and strange than he had been before. And it was noticed from that time forth he neither went near nor looked toward the rocky mountain, Túngustapi. He seemed to care no more for worldly things, and at last gave them up with their interests for ever, by becoming a monk, and shutting himself up in the monastery of Helgafell. He was so learned that none of the brethren were by any means a match for him, and he sang the mass so sweetly that the like of it—they said—had never been heard before. So they looked on him with awe, and as on one who is not of this world, and he was, as it were, head over them all.

Now, after a while, his father, at Túnga, being far on in years, fell sick for the last time, and yearning to see his son before he died, sent for Sveinn to come to him. Sveinn at once obeyed the bidding, but, as he departed, said sadly to the monks who had assembled to wish him God-speed:

"May it fare well with you all for ever, for perchance I may never come back with life again."

He arrived at Túnga the Saturday before Easter, and found his father so void of strength as to be scarcely able to speak. But the old man made it understood that he wished his son to sing the mass on Easter day in the church, whither he himself would be carried to die. Sveinn, strangely loth, consented, but only on condition that the church door should be kept firmly shut during the whole service, for upon the fulfillment of this something told him that his life depended.

Easter morning has arrived, and the dying man is borne by his servants into the church. Then Sveinn, attired in his priestly robes, stands upon the steps of the altar and sweetly sings the mass. So sweetly, that all there present think that never before have they heard a voice like this, and they kneel with the very breath hushed upon their lips to listen to him the better.

But when, at the close of the service, the priest turns from the altar, and with outstretched hands pronounces solemnly the blessing, suddenly a strong wind from the west strikes the church, and the door, bursting from its fastenings, falls heavily inward. All turn to look, and they see through the empty frame that the rocky hill near at hand yawns open, and that within it gleam countless rows of burning lamps. And when they turn again toward the altar, Sveinn has fallen down and lies dead where he has just pronounced the blessing. And his father has fallen also from his couch, his face likewise white with death.

Then the people knew whence the west wind came, and how Sveinn has been slain by the revengeful elves.

For the farmer, who had found Arnór at the foot of the slopes, has long ago told them the story; and they whisper to one another that Sveinn has seen the elfin-priest standing robed at his altar.

So the father and son were buried on the same day.

But the church at Túnga now stands elsewhere, that it may be out of sight of the elfin temple, whose altar is to the west and whose door to the east.

BLANCHING OF THE HAIR.

In speaking of unusual occurrences, it is interesting to mention the instance of sudden blanching of the hair from violent emotional changes. There can be no questioning the fact of such an occurrence; it is supposed to be due to an alteration in the electrical condition of the hair. Many instances of this kind are recorded as having occurred during the French revolution. Bichat mentions five or six cases (and his authority is perfectly trustworthy) in which the grayness came on within eight days—in one of the cases in a single night. Every one remembers the hackneyed lines of Byron;

> My hair is gray, though not with years,
> Nor grew it white
> In a single night,
> As men's have grown from sudden fears.
> Prisoner of Chillon.

A Spanish noble, being in love with one of the fair ones of the Court of Spain, had made an engagement to meet within the precincts of the Royal Palace, and the motto, "Faint heart never won fair lady," seemed not unlikely to miscarry for the nonce, for a little dog by his barking discovered the rendezvous to the guards. The young fellow was seized for what was a capital offense, and, of course, condemned to die. On hearing his sentence, the terror inspired in him was so awful, that in one night alone he was completely altered from a young to an old man, with pure white hair. This fact astonished the jailer, who related the matter to King Ferdinand, who pardoned the noble, remarking that he had been sufficiently punished already for his fault, and the truthful motto was abundantly vindicated. Cæsar pardoned a man under similar circumstances. Mary, Queen of Scots, and Marie Antoinette, with Sir Thomas Moore, exhibited the same occurrence in different degrees of intensity. Medical men in practice constantly see examples of a less decided kind. Trouble and sorrow work out their effects too surely, and no one can look around amid his friends without noticing how quickly some heads are tinting gray before their time. The struggle for existence in this age of driving competition tells tremendously upon us all. This change from a darker to a grayer aspect is often quite a normal and healthy but temporary occurrence in some animals. In northern climates the hares get quite white, and the foxes, too, alter their color very much.

Riches of Victoria.—It is believed that the Queen is one of the richest sovereigns in Europe. The Duchess of Kent, who had saved no inconsiderable sum, bequeathed property to Her Majesty. The Prince Consort, who had been saving from the day of his marriage, died worth a very large amount, all of which, it is believed, he willed to the Queen; and a wealthy old man, who thought more of loyalty than his poor relations, left her nearly half a million. As the Queen cannot be accused of any very lavish expenditure in her Court arrangements, there can be no doubt that she must have a very respectable balance at her banker's. Her Majesty banks with Coutts, as did also the Prince Consort. A separate set of books is kept in that establishment for the Royal accounts, and these are written by clerks specially appointed for the purpose. The property purchased by the Prince Consort at Kensington is sure to become more and more valuable every year, though up to this time the fine houses built upon portions of it have scarcely let so well as had been expected. They are very large, and the rents put them beyond the reach of any but the "upper ten."

SCENE IN THE FRESNO GROVE OF MAMMOTH TREES, CALIFORNIA.

DESCENDING TO THE YO-SEMITE VALLEY, CALIFORNIA.

THE YO-SEMITE VALLEY, CALIFORNIA.

As a subject of always abiding interest, we give this week five illustrations of this wonderful spot, and at the same time we know that we are only skimming the surface of the wonders of this lately opened world.

The Yo-Semite was first brought to the notice of the civilized world by a party of explorers, in the summer of 1850, under a Captain Boling and Lieutenant Chandler, who penetrated that region not only for purposes of discovery, but to put an end to Indian outrages upon the whites, who were anxious to settle thereabout. We shall take a few points of illustration from it, without attempting to follow out any succint description of its beauties, commencing with a description of the descent into the valley from the mountain. The traveler says:

"About a mile farther on, we reached that point where the descent of the mountain commences, and where our guide requires us to dismount, while he arranges the saddle-blankets and cruppers, and tightens the saddle-girths. Some persons, perhaps, are for walking down this precipitous trail to the valley, but the guide informs us that it is nearly seven miles to the foot of the mountain; when such a desire, for the time being, is overcome.

"Yet, in some of the steepest places of the trail, one or two of the most timid of the party will be disposed to dismount and walk, as at some points the descent is certainly very trying to the nerves.

"We will here remark that there are but three localities by which this valley can be safely entered—two at the lower or western end, on which the Coulterville and Mariposa trails are laid; and one at the upper or eastern end, by a tributary of the river which makes in from the main ridge of the Sierras, and which is traveled mostly by persons going and returning to and from the Walker's River mines."

The next remarkable spot is the South Dome, and our engraving represents it as seen from the cañon of the South Fork. This Dome is known by the Indian name of Tis-sa-sack, and from that point of view presents a most singular, conical shape, unlike any other mountain in the world.

The South Dome is so named to distinguish it from the To-coy-as, or North Dome, a still more remarkable mountain, the ascent of which we illustrate. Our traveler says:

"On, on, we march, in Indian file, until we are nearly on the margin of the river. When we reach it, we find that a small yet tall tree has fallen across to form a bridge, over which we walk, while the thundering water splashes, and surges, and eddies, as it sweeps against the rocks, much to the discomposure of the nervous system of some, knowing that we have to follow suit or stay behind.

"This accomplished, we soon begin the ascent of the mountain, over loose fragments of debris and among huge masses of fallen rocks, lying at the side of the mountain, and in the bed of a small but very deep cañon; but these are soon left behind, and we have to commence climbing around and over points of rocks, walking on narrow edges, or feeling our way past some projecting point, or tree, or shrub; steadying ourselves by a twig, or crevice, or jutting rock; or holding on with our feet, as well as our hands, knowing that a slip will send us down several hundred feet into the deep abyss that yawns beneath.

"In some places, where the ledges of rock are high and smooth, broken branches of trees have been placed, so as to enable the Indians to climb above them; and then, by removing the means of their ascent, cut off the pursuit of any advancing foe. These, although risky places to travel over, and in no way invited by a nervous man, are of considerable assistance in the accomplishment of our task.

"After an exciting and fatiguing exercise of about three hours, we reach a large projecting rock, that forms a cave. Here we take a rest of a few minutes, and then renew our efforts to reach the top of the mountain. A little before noon this is accomplished.

"To our great comfort and satisfaction, a cool and refreshing breeze is blowing upon us as soon as we reach the summit; and this is especially welcome, as the heat, on the sheltered side, by which we have ascended, has been very oppressive, pouring down upon us from a hot sun, without the slightest breeze to fan, or shadow to shelter us, as we climbed.

"The reader must not anticipate our narrative, by supposing that the difficult task of ascending the Great Dome is now accomplished; far from it; for, although we have reached the top of the elevated plateau, or mountain ridge, to the height of about 3,700 feet above the valley, the great, bald-headed object of our aspirations is still lifting its proud summit more than a thousand feet above us.

"An abundance of good water being found issuing from a crevice in the rock, a short distance down the mountain, we repair thither to finish our repast, and take a good, hearty draught, before attempting the ascent. Here we find several new varieties of flowering shrubs, in addition to some bulbous roots, and very pretty grasses.

"The inner man being satisfied, the rapidly descending sun admonishes us to make the best of daylight to accomplish the task we have set ourselves. Accordingly, we repair to the Lower Dome, which is one immense spur of granite, belonging to the Great Dome; and, as its surface, by time and the elements, is made tolerably rough, there is found comparatively but little difficulty in climbing it, especially with a little assistance.

"In some of the fissures or seams of this rock, some low, stunted shrubs are growing. When we reach the top of the Lower Dome, which is, perhaps, about 450 feet above the average level of the main ridge, to our dismay and disappointment we find that not only is the gently rounding surface of the Great Dome itself at an angle of about 68 or 70 degrees, but it is overlaid and overlapped, so to speak, with vast circular granite slumps—as smooth as glass—about 18 inches in thickness, and extending around the Dome as far as our eyes can reach. These put every hope to flight, of our feet, or those of any other visitors, ever treading upon the lofty crown of this Dome, without extensive artificial adjuncts to aid in its accomplishment. On the top of this immense mountain of smooth rock, one solitary pine is growing; and although it is barely discernible from the valley (and not at all from the Lower Dome, where we are standing), by the aid of the telescope, it is seen to be a tree of goodly size.

ASCENDING THE LOWER DOME OF THE YO-SEMITE.

"Much disappointed at the failure of the principal object of the enterprise, we will place our national banner upon the highest point attainable, in the hope that the day is not far distant when the number of visitors who shall annually come to worship at this sublime temple of nature, may create the necessity for the construction of a strong iron staircase to the very summit of Mount Tis-sa-sack; and, that from the top-most crown of her noble head, the Stars and Stripes may wave triumphantly—as from this elevation the whole surrounding country can be seen afar off—and a thousand times fully reward the perseverance and fatigue of the ascent."

From the valley of the Yo-Semite we will transport our traveler to the Fresno Grove, that

THE SOUTH DOME OF THE YO-SEMITE, AS SEEN FROM THE CANON OF THE SOUTH FORK.

AMONG THE TARTARS—THE WOLVES ATTACKING A CHIEF.

famous place of giant trees, of which we shall have more to say in a future number of this paper.

"About six P.M., we arrived at some of the mammoth trees, that stood on the ridge, like sentinel guards to the grove. These were from 50 to 60 feet, only, in circumference.

SPANISH CHARACTER—GAME SELLER OF MADRID.

"As the sun was fast sinking, we deemed it the most prudent course to look out for a good camping-ground. Fortunately, we discovered at first the only patch of grass to be found for several miles; and, as we were making our way through the forest, feeling that most probably we were the first whites who had ever broken its profound solitudes, we heard a splashing sound, proceeding from the direction of the bright green we had seen. This, with the rustling of bushes, reminded us that we were invading the secluded home of the grizzly bear, and that good sport, or danger would soon give variety to our employments.

THE COMPASSIONATE RAVEN.

"Hastily dismounting, and unsaddling our animals, we picketed them in the swampy grass-plat, still wet with the recent spirtings of several bears' feet that had hurriedly left it; then kindling a fire, to indicate by its smoke the direction of our camp, we started quietly out on a bear-hunt.

"Cautiously peering over a low ridge but a few yards from camp, we saw two large bears slowly moving away, when a slight sound from us arrested their attention and progress. Mr. Clark was about raising his rifle to fire, when we whispered: 'Hold, Mr. C., if you please—let us have the first shot at that immense fellow there.' 'With pleasure,' was the prompt response, and at a distance of 25 yards, a heavy charge of pistol-balls, from an excellent shot-gun, was poured into his body just behind the shoulder, when he made a plunge a few feet, and, wheeling round, stood for a few moments as though debating in his own mind whether he should return the attack or retreat; but a ball from the unerring rifle of our obliging guide determined him upon the latter course. The other had preceded him.

"We immediately started in pursuit; and although their course could readily be followed by blood dropping from the wounds, a dense mass of chaparal prevented us from getting sight of either again, although we walked around upon the look-out until the darkness compelled us to return to camp, where, after supper, we were soon soundly sleeping. Early the next morning we followed up the divertisement, for a few hours; but meeting with no game larger than grouse, we commenced the exploration of the grove."

THE KAFFIR CHIEF ATTACK D BY WOLVES.

IN a journey on the borders of the Himalayas, Captain Desmond, a British officer, his son Hector, a sergeant, and Jack, his servant, were taken prisoners by a troop of Kaffirs, who suspecting that the former carried with them much treasure, prepared to march them over the mountains. Their chief, Nasrilah, who was a man of wavering and fickle disposition, had promised from the outset to take them to Bokhara, where a ransom would have been paid him. But, influenced by the suggestions of his followers, he forfeited his word, and led them on in a different direction.

MONUMENT TO JOHN M'DONOUGH, ERECTED AT BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY WEAVER AND BACHARACH.

One morning an early snow-storm detained them half the day in their comfortless shelter, and when the snow ceased, and they set out to proceed on the tedious ascent, they found their way doubly perilous, from the sun having melted the fallen snow, and thus rendered the rocky path slippery and difficult for the horses.

They toiled upward till night fell on them in a narrow defile, beyond which lay the caves in which they had proposed to rest; and in his rage and disappointment Nasrilah cursed alike the vexatious storm, the wearied animals, and his discontented followers. Although the prisoners were placed next to him in the line, they kept at some distance, to avoid his angry and offensive abuse, till Desmond was startled by a loud cry and howlings; while, by the dim light in the narrow path, he saw, to his horror, a pack of wolves surrounding the chief, some of them already fastening on the frantic horse, which reared in its agony and terror, and, Desmond momentarily expected, would fling its rider into the midst of the hungry animals.

A LEGEND OF ICELAND.

Crying out aloud for the Kaffirs to follow him, Desmond drew a pistol and galloped up, not daring to fire at a distance lest his shot should unhappily strike the unfortunate man. By this time one fierce brute had sprung to the shoulder of Nasrulah, and at this animal he aimed. Unluckily his pistol missed fire; but Hector, urging his own trembling horse past that of his father into the very midst of the pack, plunged his dagger to the hilt into the fierce wolf, which fell down amidst its companions.

In the meantime, some of the wolves turned to assail new victims; but the sergeant and Jack, who carried the loaded muskets, fired amongst them, and at once put the pack to flight, leaving two of their number dead or dying, the horse of Nasrulah in the agonies of death, and he himself fearfully torn by the beast. Hector's horse was likewise wounded; but at that moment the chief was the first care, and all dismounted to raise and assist him.

The man felt he was dying; he muttered:

"Brave boy! he would have saved me: I cannot save him."

Then, sending off his men to collect the horses, he whispered to Hector, who supported him:

"Try to escape; they hate you; they will slay you or sell you for slaves. Tell them not of your treasure: they know not that you have it. Avoid Bokhara; flee among the mountains to the northeast. I will see you no more."

The two prayed and wept; and Desmond endeavored to turn the mind of the unhappy man from worldly cares to the consideration of eternity, that he might snatch in the brief moment left to him a hope in the mercy of the God of all created.

Brief indeed was the moment; the dying man turned his eyes wistfully and gratefully on his prisoners, muttered some inarticulate words, and passed to the judgment-seat of God, and Desmond bent over him and devoutly said:

"May He whose justice is ever mingled with mercy extend that gracious mercy to this ignorant and unfortunate man! for we are taught that where little is given much will not be required."

On the following night the prisoners were enabled to make their escape.

THE GAME-SELLER OF MADRID.

Among the most picturesque of Spanish street characters—some of which we have already given in former numbers—is the game-seller, or itinerant vender of partridges, quail, rabbits, etc.

This peripatetic genius comes from the provinces with his edibles, and carries his provender, consisting of grapes, brown bread, salt fish and cigarettes, in the rim of his round black hat, a head-covering constructed on the principle of the pork-pie hat. From beneath this hat depends a dirty wisp of a handkerchief, intended to act as a havelock in protecting the back of his neck from the sun.

Wonderful are the partridges, the wild-ducks and pheasants of a Spanish dinner at a first-class hotel; more wonderful still the intensity of that divet flavor which distinguishes the more debatable composition in which the hare and the rabbit is steeped.

There is a strong question whether this flavor does not arise from the effect of a Spanish sun, combined with the futile efforts of the game-seller to dispose of his wares.

THE COMPASSIONATE RAVEN;

Or, Sympathy of Suffering.

This feeling, so highly characteristic of benevolence and of kindness of heart in the human race, is most powerfully felt in the animal world. It is less surprising when extended from one to another by those of the same species, but is particularly so when exercised between those of different habits and orders. There must exist a fellow-feeling, a knowledge of the suffering felt, and a desire to alleviate it—faculties so far exceeding the highest degrees of intelligence ordinarily ascribed to the brute creation, that it must be acknowledged that they are endowed with powers in which instinct takes no share. A wounded crow, left in a field, is soon surrounded by its fellows, seeking to assist it; a swallow entangled in its nest by a bit of thread, was immediately aided by many other swallows, which flew violently against the thread with a view of breaking it.

There is an anecdote told at the Red Lion Inn, Hungerford, England, of a circumstance which occurred there some years ago. A traveler, coming into the inn-yard with his chaise, ran over and bruised the leg of a Newfoundland dog, and while the injury was being examined, a raven stood by as a concerned spectator; for as soon as the dog was tied up under the manger, the raven not only visited him, but brought him bones, and attended him with particular and repeated marks of kindness. Besides the sympathy in the bird, there was also a remarkable instance of recollection and of association of ideas, for the bird had been brought up with a dog, between whom the affection was mutual; and this dog having broken its leg, the raven attended it constantly while it was confined, waiting on it, carrying it provisions, and never scarcely leaving it. On one occasion, when the stable-door had been shut, and the raven had been deprived of the company of its friend all night, the hostler found in the morning the door so pecked away, that, had it not been opened, the raven would have made its entrance in another hour. Several other acts of kindness to dogs had been noticed, and particularly to maimed or wounded ones.

We illustrate this fact to show that there is something a little more than instinct in beasts and birds, and that reason is as definite in the higher order of animal as in the lower order of the human.

THE MCDONOUGH MONUMENT AT BALTIMORE.

The dedication of the McDonough monument and statue, which took place in Greenmount Cemetery, at Baltimore, lately, was an event of great interest to the citizens of Baltimore and New Orleans, and of pleasure to those who witnessed it.

The location (a gift from the Cemetery Company) is surrounded by a thick grove, on a commanding eminence, in the south-eastern part of the cemetery. The beautiful monument and statue, of which we present an engraving, are, both in design and execution, the production of Baltimore skill, the architect being Mr. E. G. Lind; Mr. D. Maxwell is the constructor of the monument, and J. T. Randolph the sculptor of the statue.

The monument is of white marble, on a granite base, the whole being 14 feet 4 inches high, exclusive of the statue, which is 7 feet 8 inches, and contains the following inscription:

"Erected by the Constituted Authorities of the Cities of Baltimore and New Orleans,
In Memory
of
John McDonough, and as a Testimonial of their Appreciation of his Character, and his Munificent Liberality for the Promotion of a Great Public Enterprise, the Education of Orphans.
Here lieth his Remains.
Committee.
John Lee Chapman, Mayor.
James Young, President First Branch.
Samuel Duer, President Second Branch."

And numerous others, written, with the exception of the dates, by himself; containing salutary advice, the places and time of his birth and death, the rules which guided his life, and the conclusions to which he had arrived, viz.: That without temperance was no health; without virtue, no order; without religion, no happiness.

It may be proper to state here, that the likeness of Mr. McDonough, which is highly spoken of by many who have often seen him, was taken from a painting on ivory, in possession of his relatives, and which he preserved, perhaps to guard against the caricaturing which his age, exclusive habits, and efforts for the freedom of blacks had begun to subject him.

Mr. McDonough was born at Baltimore, in August, 1779, and died at his residence, opposite New Orleans, October 26, 1850, in his seventy-first year.

He came to New Orleans soon after its cession in 1803, and engaged successfully in mercantile business, which he abandoned for a season to take part in the defense of his country. The war being ended, he resumed his former business. He represents himself truly as a man devoted to his country and its institutions, and who ardently desired to do good, much good, great good, to his fellow men.

The Supreme Court of Louisiana, with the consent of parties, distributed his assets, and after paying the Colonization Society nearly $99,000, and an equal sum to the Society for the Relief of Indigent Orphans, the share of the city of Baltimore is $500,000, which is in the hands of the Trustees of the McDonough Educational Fund.

A Nut for Burglars to Crack.—A strong room recently constructed for a London bank is thus described: The walls, two feet thick, are formed of hard bricks laid in cement, and with hoop iron worked in. The room is lined throughout with wrought iron half an inch thick. There are two doors, the outer a strong iron one with two locks, and the inner one of combined steel and iron of extraordinary strength, with two locks throwing 10 bolts. A safe placed inside, weighing eight tuns and throwing 20 bolts, contains the cash and securities. An alarum in the resident clerk's bed-room is attached to the inside of the strong room, so that if the outer door is opened a gong is set going. A porter sleeps on a bed in front of the outer door, and by pulling a handle he can set the alarum off if necessary, and there is a watchman always on duty.

The artificial production of gems is a subject of fascinating interest. A new method of making rubies has been discovered. A mixture of fluorid of aluminum with a little fluorid of chromium is placed in a Hessian crucible lined with calcined alumina. In the midst of the mixture of fluorids is placed a small platinum crucible containing boracic acid. The outer crucible is well covered, and the whole exposed to a temperature sufficiently high to volatilize both the boracic acid and the fluorids. The vapor of the acid decomposes that of the fluorids, fluorid of boron is formed, and crystals of the mixed oxyds of aluminum and chromium are deposited. If the mixture of the fluorids be made in the right proportions, these crystals will have exactly the same composition, specific color, lustre and other properties as the most perfect natural rubies.

THE ILLUSTRATED PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL for APRIL contains: Thomas Cook, the Excursionist; Dr. Nott; W. V. Wallace; J. Carhart; Alex. Campbell; Miss Carmichael; with Portraits, Character and Biography. Causes of Suicide—Temperament—Marriage—Idiocy; Mirthfulness, Modesty, Order; Signs of Character—How to Observe; Physiognomy—Primary Rules; Inquisitive Nose. Our Social Relations—To the Girls, by Mrs. Wyllys; Teaching by Love; How to be Happy; a Dead Man. Visiting America—How to See It. A Negro Baptizing; Music as a Moral and Physical Agent; Frogs, Fish and Roads. Religious—a Discourse by Rev. H. W. Beecher, on Self-Esteem; Faith; Self-Improvement; Benevolence; Ethnology, Physiology, etc.; only 20 cents, or $2 a year. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.
550-1

300 per cent. Profit for Agents.—Three Genteel Articles everywhere needed, and sell at sight. All sent, with particulars, free, by mail for 35 cents. Address E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

The Little Joker and A FINELY COLORED PHOTOGRAPH sent in a sealed envelope for 25 cents. Address, Box 5,057, P. O., New York.

Female Complaints should be cured, as they surely can be, by a few doses of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA.

Barnum's New American Museum, Broadway, between Spring and Prince streets. This establishment does not advertise in the New York Herald. Unapproachable combination of attractions. Every Afternoon at 2; Evening at 7¾. Positively the last week of the Scriptural Historical Drama, MOSES; or, ISRAEL IN EGYPT. Magnificent Scenery, Costumes and Appointments. Moving Panorama of the Nile. Previous to which, a startling wonder, THE SPHINX, a remarkable and unexplained mystery. First appearance of the renowned HERR HASELMEYER, from Vienna, who will perform on his wonderful TRONDUENMIPHILIPENOTRASCOMOMENTO. At all hours, the great AUSTRALIAN LIVING BIRD SHOW, comprising a splendid collection of the rarest species. Great Living Curiosities; TWO WILD AUSTRALIAN CHILDREN, supposed to have belonged to a race of Cannibals; Giant and Giantess; Three Dwarfs; Two Circassian Girls; Glass Blowers; Three-Horned Bull; Persian Sheep; Cosmoramas, Learned Seal, Happy Family, Grand Aquaria, 100,000 curiosities. Admission, 30 cents, children under ten, 15 cents.

$3 MAGIC TIME Observers $3

AT REDUCED PRICES.

A Superior Solid Silver Composite Timepiece, with a beautiful and Accurate Compass Sunk in the Dial, Elegant in style and finish, and very Durable. Warranted to keep Correct Time for five years. Two Sizes, in Handsome Cases, Small Size for Ladies; Large Size for Gentlemen. Price each size, $3. Carefully packed and forwarded (with full warantee) by mail, free, on receipt of price. Wholesale to agents only, $12 per Case of Six. Address orders to

M. A. NEILE & CO., Importers of Watches, &c., 208 Broadway, New York.

$1. BOOKS. $1.

Dollar Gift Book Sale.

100,000 VOLUMES!

Standard Works, Family Bibles, Photograph Albums, etc.,

WORTH $250,000!

All to be SOLD for ONE DOLLAR each, and a

SPLENDID GIFT,

Worth from 50 cents to $100, to be given with each Book. No Book to be paid for until you know what gift you are to get. The Gifts consist of Gold and Silver Watches, Silver Ware, Sets of Jewelry, Sleeve-Buttons, Bosom-Studs, Chains, etc., etc.

PLAN OF SALE.

Certificates are prepared, describing each book and naming the gift that will accompany it, with its value. These certificates are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed, and sent, regardless of choice, one to each purchaser of a beautiful Card Photograph of any prominent personage, in itself worth all we charge—25 cents each; or five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty f r $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred, with Premium Silver Hunting-Watch, $15.

On opening the envelope, you see what your Certificate calls for, and it is at your option to send $1 and take the Book and Gift (or any other Book and Gift of the same value) or not. You cannot get less than $1 worth, for there are no blanks; and you may get a Bible or Album, worth $25 to $50, with a Gift worth much more.

Agents Wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered. Don't fail to send for circulars. Address BOWEN & CO., Publishers, 124 West 5th street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

FIRST PREMIUM.

IMPROVED

$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5

THE EMBODIMENT OF PRACTICAL UTILITY AND EXTREME SIMPLICITY.

Originally Patented May 13, 1862; improvement patented June 9, 1863. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with Crimping attachment, a most Wonderful and Elegantly Constructed Novelty; is noiseless in operation, uses the straight needle, and works horizontal, sews with Double or Single Thread of all kinds. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making 16 stitches to each evolution of the wheel. Will Gather, Hem, Ruffle, Shirr, Tuck, Run up Breadths, &c.; the strongest machine made. Warranted not to get out of order for three years. It has taken the Premiums at New York and other State Fairs, and received the Full Approval of All the principal Journals, and of those who have used them. The only Low Price Machine Patented, and that has received a Premium. All others at the same price are infringements.

"This beautiful Machine makes the Running Stitch at the rate of several yards per minute."—Frank Leslie's.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand sewing."—N. Y. Tribune.

Single Machines, all complete, sent to any part of the country per Express, packed in box with printed instructions on receipt of price, $5. Safe delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted everywhere. Circular containing Liberal Inducements sent free.

Address all orders to FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO., Office, 102 Nassau Street, N. Y.
tf

SUBSCRIBE!

For COUSIN CHARLIE'S MONTHLY, and get those Sparkling, Bright and Brilliant Stories. Subscribe early, and secure the first Number. Terms, $1 per year. Club Rates: Club of 10, $9; Club of 20, $16. Address all orders plainly to COUSIN CHARLIE'S MONTHLY, 144 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

550-3

VIOLINS AND BOWS

Sent by express to all parts of the United States on receipt of the following prices:
GERMAN—Red or Brown—$2 50, $3, $4, $5, $6, $8.
DOUBLE-LINED—$5, $7, $9, $11, $13, $15, $17, $19.
FRENCH—Blocked and Lined—$8, $10, $12, $15, $20.
ITALIAN—$6, $10, $12, $14, $16, $18, $25, $30, $35.
OLD MASTERS—Very Fine Tone—$40, $50, $75 to $300.
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description, at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for price list. Especial attention given to this department.
o FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery,

Every Man his Own Printer.

CHEAPEST AND BEST. Price of Presses, $10, $16, $23 and $30. Price of an Office, with Press, $15, $28, $40, $48, and $71. Send for a Circular to the LOWE PRESS COMPANY, 23 Water street, Boston. tf

GIFT SALE.

The Days of Brass Jewelry are Over.

SEND TO THE COSMOPOLITAN JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION.

Gold Gift Sale

Under the management of Messrs. CALKINS & CO., well-known as the conductors of this, the most extensive enterprise of the times, having branches in nearly 100 cities and towns. Every article of jewelry in the mammoth stock of over $2,500,000 is WARRANTED GOLD, or NO SALE. All to be disposed of at the one average price of Two Dollars each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES, ALL TO BE SOLD FOR TWO DOLLARS EACH!

5	Superior Grand Piano Fortes	$800 to	$1,200
50	Splendid Seven-Octave Pianos	400 to	800
150	Melodeons, the Best Makers	100 to	200
175	First-Class Sewing Machines	50 to	150
200	Rosewood Musical Boxes, 32 airs	75 to	250
250	Mahogany " " 24 airs	50 to	200
250	Diamond Rings	50 to	200
500	Gold Hunting-Case Watches	75 to	200
500	Gold Ladies' Enameled Watches	50 to	300
1,000	Silver Hunting-Case Watches	35 to	100
1,000	Silver Open-Faced Watches	15 to	50
250	Silver Dining Sets—Splendid	75 to	300
500	Silver Salvers and Urns	50 to	250
500	Silver Tea-Sets—Complete	50 to	300
2,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains	18 to	50
3,000	Gold-Chased Bracelets	15 to	30
2,000	Gold Chatelain and Guard Chains	18 to	40
2,000	Gold Brooches, Lava and Coral	8 to	15
5,000	Gold Brooches, Opal and Emerald	15 to	40
5,000	Gold Ear-Drops, Jet, Lava, Coral, Mosaic, Opal and Emerald Set	8 to	46
5,000	Gold California Diamond Breastpins	6 to	20
3,000	Gold Sets Soltaire Buttons and Studs	12 to	25
3,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, &c.	6 to	15
10,000	Gold Lockets, double glasses	8 to	25
10,000	Gold Lockets for Miniatures	6 to	20
3,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, &c.	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Plain Rings	6 to	10
5,000	Gold Chased or Engraved Rings	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Shield and Signet Rings	8 to	25
10,000	Gold California Diamond Rings	6 to	20
10,000	Gold Pearl, and Fancy Stone Rings	8 to	25
7,500	Gold Sets Ladies' Jewelry, Jet	15 to	25
10,000	Sets of Ladies' Gold Jewelry, Cameo, Pearl, Opal and Emerald	15 to	50
10,000	Gold Pens, with Silver Holders	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Pens, with Gold Holders	10 to	25
5,000	Silver Goblets and Cups, all styles	6 to	12
3,000	Silver Castors and Wine Holders	15 to	50
2,000	Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 to	30
1,000	Silver Card Cases	15 to	25
3,000	Silver Egg Stands	18 to	40
2,000	Silver Ice Pitchers	20 to	50
6,000	Silver Cake, Pie, and Fruit Knives	8 to	25
20,000	Dozen Silver Teaspoons	8 to	15
10,000	Dozen Silver Tablespoons	15 to	25
10,000	Dozen Silver Forks and Knives	15 to	40
1,000	Dozen Silver Nut Picks	12 to	20
5,000	Sets Silver Napkin Rings	8 to
10,000	Engravings in Rosewood Frames	6 to	15
5,000	Engravings in Gilt Frames	6 to	15
1,000	Fine Oil Paintings	25 to	100
6,000	Pearl Pocket Knives—six blades	6 to	15
3,000	Ivory and Pearl Back Combs	10 to	25
5,000	Pearl and Gold-Headed Canes	15 to	25
15,000	Photograph Albums, all styles	6 to	30
1,000	Opera Glasses	10 to	30

THE COSMOPOLITAN ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURING JEWELERS.

CALKINS & CO., Managers,

169 and 171 BROADWAY, N. Y.

☞ Has been organized with the special object of doing away with the enormous profits paid by the people to jobbers and wholesale and retail dealers in their goods, making articles for which the manufacturers receive on the average but $2 cost the customer at retail from $8 to $12, after passing through three or four hands. This splendid stock of the leading and most fashionable styles of Solid Gold Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware, worth $2,500,000 at retail prices, will all be sold, for $500,000, or at $2 for each and every article [the exact average manufacturer's cost].

Remember this is emphatically a Gold Gift Sale, including no brass, or so-called Plated Jewelry; and every article is sold at the one average price of Two Dollars each, including Gold and Silver Watches, Splendid Pianos, &c. The Plan, Sealed advertisements, describing each prize, are well mixed, and sent regardless of choice to every customer—insuring $10 worth for $2. The proof ☞ We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the least article drawn, for $2, a Splendid Engraved Silver Butter Dish valued at $10, or a Photograph Album valued at $6, and you have the possibility of getting a

FINE GOLD WATCH OR PIANO.

Price of Envelopes 25 cents each.
2 for 50 cts., with a beautiful Card Photograph.

5 for $ 1.00	"	Silver Butter Knife, worth	$	1.00
11 for 2.00	"	Silver Napkin Ring	"	2.00
17 for 3.00	"	Silver Salt Spoons	"	3.00
30 for 5.00	"	Set Silver Tea Spoons	"	6.00
65 for 10.00	"	Set Silver Forks	"	12.09
100 for 15.00	"	Silver Hunting Watch	"	25.00
200 for 30.00	"	Ladies' Gold Watch	"	50.00
400 for 60.00	"	Gents' Gold Watch	"	100.00

In all cases upon receipt of the money the premiums as above will be sent with the Envelopes.

Agents will be allowed 10 cents on every Envelope, provided their remittance amounts to over $1. Agents will collect 25 cents for each Envelope, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or stamps.

Address CALKINS & CO., 169 and 171 Broadway, N. Y.

Kate Vaugh.—A Rich Story. Only 15 cents. Sent free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Rogues and Rogueries of New York.—Price 30 cents. Sent free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Curious.—$1 converted into $20, $30, $50, or $100. A sample given. Send red stamp to pay postage. Address JAMES THOMPSON, 81 Nassau street, N. Y.
550-3

SENT SOMETHING EVERYBODY SHOULD READ AND KEEP SEND FOR IT FREE
W. C. WEMYSS 575 BROADWAY NEW YORK

THOSE CURIOUS FASTENERS

25 CENTS.

Good Books, 15 cents each. Courtship Made Easy—Bridal Etiquette—How to Win and Woo—How to Behave—Mind your Stops—Hard Words Made Easy—How to Write Letters Correctly—How to Become an Actor.

The Library of Love,

Three Amusing Volumes for 75 cents.

Poet's Companion, 25 cents. Parlor Theatricals, 30 cents. Fireside Games, 30 cents. Shakspeare's Proverbs, 40 cents. Love Oracle, 30 cents. 500 Curious Puzzles, 30 cents. Parlor Pantomimes, 25 cents. Comic Reciter, 25 cents. How to Converse Correctly, 25 cents. Address letters, W. C. WEMYSS, 575 Broadway, N. Y.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELERY, PENS, BRACELETS, CASTORS, GOBLETS, SPOONS, FORKS, NAPKIN RINGS, ETC., ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
320 Broadway, New York.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen—Sample, 36 cents; French Transparent Cards (24 views), $1 25 per gross. Stereoscopic Views Marked Playing Cards, $1 50 per pack. All by mail on receipt of Price. Address

FORWARDING AGENCY, 58 Liberty street, N. Y.
tf

1,000 "Ha Hes," 500 "Te Hes,"

All in one day, by reading the laughable ADVENTURES OF MESSRS. BROWN, JONES AND ROBINSON; showing where they went, what they did, and how they did it. With nearly 100 most thrilling Comic Engravings. Price only 50 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid. Agents Wanted. CHAS. B. ROBERTS, Publisher,
559-3 144 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Magic Made Easy—100 Astounding Performances in "Prestidigitation." 10,000 sold. Only 20 cents, post-paid, by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Vieve Brower; or, Life in the Concert Saloons of New York. A rich book. Just published. Handsomely illustrated. Only 25 cents. Mailed free. Address Post Office Box 76. HOLLAND, N. Y. 545-51

LOVE! LOVE! LOVE!

How to win the undying love of the fair sex. Sent by mail for Five cents. Address

F. F. IAGGENS, Calhoun, Ill.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment—Pale and Feeble—Consolation for the Afflicted—Sufferers from Debility, Dissipation or abstinence will find speedy relief by a few applications of this popular ointment. A few perseverances in its use will, with the aid of the Pills, effect a radical cure without recourse to laborious and tedious Mercurious operations or the dark ages of science. The Pills are a most valuable specific for indigestion; and by their spirituous action on the bowels, they exterminate the primary cause of piles, etc. Sold by all Druggists.

FRANK LESLIE'S Chimney Corner.

Contents of No. 47.

THE WIFE'S REVENGE. A Story. Illustrated.
THE FETE AT DEAUVILLE—WHO THEY WERE AND WHAT THEY DID. Illustrated.
THE UNPROTECTED FEMALE'S ASCENT OF MOUNT TYRRE.
CATS AT CAIRO.
THE WHITE ELEPHANT OF SIAM.
AN AWAKENED CONSCIENCE. Illustrated.
HOW THE RHINOCEROS IS HUNTED. Illustrated.
THE GOSSIPERS. Illustrated.
THE PEA-NUT CULTURE.
DEBBIE.
EVER ALONE. A Poem.
ABBEYFORD: A ROMANCE OF THREE WOMEN. Illustrated.
TWO PICTURES. A Poem.
VERONICA. A Story. Continued.
SELF-MADE MEN—ALVIN ADAMS, ESQ., Founder of the Adams Express Company. With Portrait.
THE BEARCOOTE, OR BLACK EAGLE OF MONTANA. Illustrated.
A WEDDING PROCESSION AT TETTE. Illustrated.
CROSSING THE ROTHERHALSATTEL. Illustrated.
LAUING AND BECOMING. An Essay.
NATURAL HISTORY OF CRIMINAL LIFE.
THE BLACKS OF FIJI.
COURAGE IN WOMEN.
BRIDAL GIFTS.
WHAT AN ENGLISHWOMAN THOUGHT OF AMERICAN LADIES.
STANZAS.
CLARA'S OPINION.
A GIPSY DANCE.
MARRIAGE CEREMONIES IN TRANSYLVANIA.
LITERARY QUEENS.
HOW TO MAKE A MUFFLE.
A PLEASANT PASTIME.
HOUSEKEEPER'S MANUAL.
THE KINGSTON BABCOCK, HIS FAMILY AND MINISTREL. Illustrated.
A RING OF GLORIA. Illustrated.
A FINLAND FARM-HOUSE. Illustrated.
CAPTAIN MANBY'S MORTAR LIFE LINES. Illustrated.
THE SNAKE GODS OF WYDAH.
AN EXHIBITION. Illustrated.
GUTTA PERCHA.
GRANDFATHER WHITEHEAD'S LECTURES—A WALK IN THE GARDEN AFTER A SHOWER.
GUDGBAND OF THE MOUNTAIN SIDE. A Story.
DEAR LITTLE CORNER." A Poem.
THE OLD WOMAN IN CUBEN." A Fairy Story.
FAMILY PRESENTS—ENIGMAS, CHARADES, ETC.
OUR CHILDREN. Six Comic Illustrations.

And a great variety of Humorous and Miscellaneous Paragraphs. For sale by all News Agents. Price 10 cents. Annual subscription, $4.

FRANK LESLIE,
537 Pearl Street, N. Y.

Royal Havana Lottery.

Official Drawing of 30th March, 1866.

No. 19863.....	drew.....	$100,000
No. 12965.....	"	50,000
No. 4379.....	"	20,000
No. 23125.....	"	10,000
No. 21522.....	"	5,000
No. 8723.....	"	5,000

Being the six capital prizes.

Prizes paid in gold. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for doubloons and all kinds of gold and silver.

TAYLOR & CO., Bankers, 16 Wall st., N. Y.

Pile Remedy.

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it fairly. It is warranted to do so. For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cents; 50 Generals for 50 cents; 100 for 75 cents: 100 photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Actors for 25 cents. Address C. SEYMOUR, Box 48, Holland, N. Y.
547-51

Over Fifty Secrets, numerous Jokes, Witty Sayings, &c., will be found in "THE LOUNGER." and Free for Stamp. Address, tf Address, P. O. Box, 5,057, New York.

JOB MILLER, JR.

A Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Jokes, Anecdotes, Love Communications, Humorous Poetry, &c., &c. Price 10 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York.
tf

Matrimony,—Why cry? man should marry Why cry? woman should marry. And may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by W. H. RAND, M.D. 100 pages. Mailed in sealed envelopes on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White street, New York.
tf

Sensesology, Psychologic Fascination, Marriage Happily Attained, How to Become Rich, Wit at the Opposite Sex, Marriage, &c. This queer, useful, and spicy book, sent by mail for 25 cents. Address PUBLISHER & CO., Box 1,816, Philadelphia.

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, and become perfect masters in the art, by reading, by mail for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
tf T. WILLIAM & Co., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily a six weeks' growth upon the smooth cheek or chin or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of price.

R. G. GRAHAM, 169 Nassau St., N. Y.

THE DOMINO CIRCULAR!

For Sporting Gentlemen. Send stamp, with address. Novel oddities and novelties. CLEMENT & CO., 64 John street, N. Y.

Beautiful False Mustaches, all colors. Cannot be told from natural ones. Mailed for $1 per pair. Address BLACKIE & CO., 715 Broadway, N. Y.
tf

The Beautiful Art of Enameling the Skin! WHITE FRENCH SKIN ENAMEL, for whitening, beautifying and preserving the complexion, making it soft, fair, smooth, and transparent. It quickly removes tan, freckles, &c., without injuring the skin. Warranted. Sent by mail for 50 cents. Address HALL & CO., Portsmouth, 135 South 7th street, Philadelphia.

$1,500 PER YEAR! We want agents everywhere to sell our Celebrated Lock-Stitch Family Sewing Machines. Three new kinds. Under and upper feed. Warranted five years. Above sent free. Illustrated circular mailed. The only machines sold in United States for less than $50, which are fully licensed by Howe, Wheeler & Wilson, Grover & Baker, Singer & Co., and Bachelder. All other cheap machines are infringements. Circulars free. Address, or call upon SHAW & CLARKE, Bedford, Maine.

Beauty—Hunt's Bloom of Roses. A charming, natural, and permanent color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains perfect in any climate. Sent by mail, free. Price $1 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation.
133 South Seventh street, Philadelphia.

Matrimony Made Easy:

Or Mysteries of Making Love fully explained, with specimen Love Letters. Price 10 cents. Send orders to Box 3,410 P. O., N. Y.
tf

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite of Actresses, Ballet Girls, Nudes and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
PIERRE BIDON, 27 Ann St., N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or fruit; how to tan hides; explains the Hunter's Secret, how to catch Fish and all kinds of animals; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Computers and Curling Fluids; Gambling Exposed; Vaccinization Made Easy; Information of Importance to Ladies; how to gain the Love of any one, &c., &c. Price 25 cents, postpaid, for 25 cents. Address Box 5,057 P. O., New York.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine, an invention urgently needed by everybody. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50 cents, that retails easily for $6, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York.
527tf

MUJAVARO
THE MOST DELICIOUS PERFUME
SOLD EVERYWHERE.

A Sure Method of Winning at All the various games of Cards, Dice, &c., sent free. Marked Cards, Dice, Packs, for $5 per dozen. Address W. C. CRAWFORD, Manufacturer of Playing Cards, Nos. 63 and 65 Nassau street, New York.

COLORED CARTES DE VISITE

SIXTY CENTS PER DOZEN.

I will send upon receipt of 60 cents 12 Cartes de Visite of French Gravities in different positions, or the whole set of 50 different pictures, $2.

547-8 T. ALLIE, 56 Nassau street, New York.

$57 Something New. $57

For Agents and Dealers to sell, 20 Novel and Useful Articles; profits large. Send stamp for circular.
S. W. RICE & CO.,
tf 81 Nassau street, N. Y.

OUR PUBLICATIONS!

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE 10 CENTS, OR $4 A YEAR.

Frank Leslie's Ilustracion Americana,
OR SPANISH-AMERICAN NEWSPAPER.
Published Weekly.
Within the United States, $11 yearly, in currency.
Ready to be sent by mails for Cuba, Mexico, Central America, Brasils, Peru, Chile, and all the South-American Republics—$13 yearly, in gold.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,
Or German Illustrated Newspaper,
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or $4 a year.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner.
Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or yearly, $4.

The Great Magazine of Fashion—Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine,
Published Monthly—price $3 50, yearly.

Frank Leslie's New Monthly.
Price 15 cents, or $1 50 a year.

Frank Leslie's Children's Friend,
Published Monthly—price 10 cents, yearly $1.

Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun.
Published Monthly—$1 50 a year.

Cough No More

DR. STRICKLAND'S MILLIFLEUR'S COUGH BALSAM is Warranted to Cure Colds, Coughs, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.
tf

Short-Hand Without a Master.

By which the method of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, Trials, etc., may be attained in a few hours. Fifty-first edition, WITH SUPPLEMENT. Price 25 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York.
tf

500 Photographs of the most Prominent PERSONS OF THE AGE, embracing Actors, Actresses, Opera Singers, Leaders of the Ton and Nymphs, Statesmen, Authors, Artists, Clergymen, Kings, Queens, &c., &c., sent, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address Box 3,410, Post-Office, New York.

Ventriloquism Made Easy, and the Second Sight Mystery, as practiced by Dexter Hexlam and others, fully explained. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 3,410, P. O., New York.

WONDERFULLY STRANGE!

MADAME M. H. PERREGAULT,

Who has astonished the scientific classes of Paris and London by her wonderful Gifts, locates herself at Albany, N. Y. Madame Perregault, by the aid of her wonderful picturenal, knows as the Horoscope, guarantees to produce a life-like picture of the future, husband or wife of the future, together with the date of marriage, leading features of character, occupation, &c. This is no humbug. Hundreds of testimonials can assert. She will send, when desired, a written guarantee that the picture is what it claims to be. By stating age, height, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and inclosing 50 cents, and stamped envelope, addressed to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail. Address

Madame M. H. PERREGAULT,
542-510 P. O. Drawer 592, Albany, N. Y.

A CURIOSITY!!

Free to All. A Rare Treat.

Gentlemen, do not fail to send a two cent stamp, and receive a GEM OF PAPER, replete with the choicest literature and rare Illustrations. Sent Gratis.

CHARLES E. MACKEY,
tf 367 Broadway, New York.

MAGIC CARDS.

Magic Cards, with illustrated directions. Price 25 cents per pack. Marked Cards of same pack, any style. Address C. WILLIS & CO., No. 167 Broadway, New York.
tf

Fresh Garden and Flower Seeds, prepaid by mail, of the choicest sorts. Also, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, Shrubs, Roses, Grape Vines, Strawberries, &c., of the best kinds. Priced Descriptive Catalogues, to any address. Wholesale Lists for the Trade. Agents wanted.

WATSON, Oil Colony Nurseries and Seed Establishment, Plymouth, Mass.

Courtship Made Easy—A great work. Only 15 cents. Free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Barry's System of Horse-Taming,—64 pp. 15 cents. Free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Books! Books! Books!—Buy your Books only of HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. Catalogues free gratis to all.
549-52

NOW READY—The New Number of the Great Comic Paper of America, FRANK LESLIE'S BUDGET OF FUN, for May, 1866, has the most Humorous Cut ever published, illustrating the monster nuisance of the age, the Rash of Home-Grants into the Air; or, Homes for All—John Bull and the Feniens—Caught in Their Own Trap—Bull Pest-ered by Fenian Musquitoes—besides numerous other comic cuts by the best Artists of America and Europe, as well as 16 pages of the very finest comic reading matter ever published. For sale everywhere.

FRANK LESLIE, Publisher,
537 Pearl Street, New York.

THE GREAT NEW ENGLAND REMEDY

DR. J. W. POLAND'S

WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

"It was early in the spring of 1855, that this compound was originated. A member of my family was afflicted with an accident, and followed, attended with a dangerous cough. I had for months previous thought that a preparation, having for its basis the inside bark of white pine, might be so compounded as to be very useful in the case of the throat and lungs. To test the value of it in the case alluded to, I compounded a small quantity of the medicine that I had been planning, and gave it in teaspoonful doses. The result was exceedingly gratifying. Within two days the irritation of the throat was removed, the cough subsided, and a speedy cure was effected. Soon after this I sent some to a lady in Londonderry, N. H., who had been suffering for some weeks with a bad cough, occasioned by a severe cold, and had raised mucus shreaded with blood. She soon found relief, and sent for more. She has about 10 ounces of it, and got well. J. B. Clark, Esq., editor of the Manufacturer Gazette, Lowell, was one of the same preparation in the case of a severe cold, and was cured immediately. He was so highly pleased with the results, and so confident of success attending its sales if placed before the public, that he kindly persuaded me to give it a name, and send it abroad to benefit the suffering. In November, 1855, I first advertised it under the name of White Pine Compound. In two years from that time from 1,000 to 2,000 bottles were being disposed of monthly, when it took the lead of all the cough remedies in the market, and it still maintains that position. There is good reason for all this; it is very soothing and healing to the parts affected by the stomach, and pleasant withal to the taste, and is exceedingly safe to use.

As a remedy for all throat complaints, the White Pine Compound stands unrivaled. I was not a little pleased that people had put a person to using it for a cough was not only confined to the throat, but even to a kidney disease of 10 years' standing. I mention that accidental discovery many thousands have used it for the same complaint with entire success since then.

The above was written by Dr. Poland in 1860. Since that time, in November, the White Pine Compound has taken the lead of all Cough remedies, as well as preparations for the blood, and is now known in every city, town, village and hamlet throughout the New England States.

The past year has given great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the medicine, that the demand for it is increasing and high in its praise.

One bottle of this Compound is generally sufficient to remove a bad cough, and frequently I have known persons to have a bad cough entirely removed by the use of using less than half a bottle. From one to two teaspoonfuls is a large dose. Sometimes just a little white sugar and hot water with it, when taken on going to bed.

The facts to which I have referred to above in this circular will not allow of that full expression which I would like to give to the power of the White Pine Compound. It is universally admired by all who use it; it has attained the very highest position among those whose opinion is valuable indeed, that VANITY may possibly, in part, prompt me to receive. I am sure here that many people will have patience to read; so I will stop, by merely recommending a trial of Dr. Poland's White Pine Compound to test the virtues of the WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, &c., &c., and from all classes of society, speaking in the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Nichols, of Northfield, Vt., says:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very effectual for all coughs not only in coughs and other pulmonic affections, but also in affections of the kidneys, debility of the stomach, and other kindred organs."

Rev. J. R. Chase, of Nunnery, N. H., writes:

"I have for some time regarded your White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I regard it as the most valuable of testimonials can assert. I have just taken the Compound for a cold, and with a quick cure."

Rev. H. D. Dodge,

of West Randolph, Vt., a well-known leading physician, as well as preacher, in a letter to Dr. F., dated May 31, 1865, says: "I find it an excellent medicine in kidney disease."

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is now offered to its many friends, and it is a highly approved medicine. Dr. J. W. Poland, the inventor, has given confidence to the many who know him, a confidence which he enjoyed while laboring usefully several years as a Baptist minister. His experience as a sufferer led him to make experiments, which issued in his medical discovery, the White Pine Compound.—Exchange.

The editor of the Manchester Daily and Weekly Mirror, is a leader of the Young Blue spears of the Granite State.

"The White Pine Compound is advertised at much length in our columns, and we are happy to learn that the demand for it is increasing beyond all previous expectations. It is the very best medicine for coughs and colds we know of, and so family that has once used it will ever be without it. We speak from many years' knowledge; it is sure to kill a cold, and pleasant as sure. The greatest testimonial we can have by accident, and it is singular that the White Pine Compound, made for colds and coughs, should prove to be the greatest remedy for kidney difficulties known. But so it is. We cannot doubt it, as many testimonials come to us from well-known men. Besides, the character of Dr. Poland is such that we know he will not recommend what is not reliable. For years a Baptist clergyman, studying medicine to himself, and practicing in his family, with a delicate, sensitive look, standing with one foot upon the grave, he made the discovery which has saved hundreds, and called from hundreds of others the strongest testimonials possible. We have known Dr. Poland for years, and never knew a more conscientious, honest, upright man, and we are glad to state that we believe all never he says about his White Pine Compound."

Should you think favorably of this medicine, be careful, when purchasing, to see that the WHITE PINE COMPOUND that is offered to you, or you know that other preparations have been palmed off for it by unprincipled dealers.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND

is manufactured at the

NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT,

106 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON,

GEO. W. POLAND, Proprietor,

under the supervision of

REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by wholesale and retail dealers in Medicines everywhere. DEMAS BARNES, Dr. 1. ROW, New York; F. O. WELLS & CO., 115 Washington street, New York; JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia; BURNHAMS & VAN SCHAACK, Chicago, Ill.; JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio; COLLINS & BROTHERS, St. Louis, Mo., General Agents for the West.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH.

If you want the best fitting, strongest, and most serviceable paper collar ever offered to the public, don't fail to purchase the

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR

The most Economical Collar ever Invented.

S howing the embossed or prist stitch equally well on both sides.

The following styles are now made:

Patent REVERSIBLE Enameled PAPER COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Bank Note Paper COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Printed Stitch PAPER COLLARS.

To be obtained all Furnishing Goods Dealers throughout the country.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & Co., Agents, 641-535 Winthrop Square, Boston.

CEDAR CAMPHOR

For Clothes Moths. Sold by druggists everywhere. HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Boston. o

ART NOTICE.

WENDEROTH, TAYLOR & BROWN'S fine MINIATURES, Life, and Copied from other pictures. Sittings made by E. T. KELLEY & Co., 799 Broadway. Please examine specimens. 595-3o

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block).

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods, WAR VIEWS,

SCENERY, GROUPS, &C.

Photograph Albums, great assortment; Caries de Visite of Noted Persons, &c., &c.

French, English and American Novelties. tfo

Diptheria.

This dreaded disease is readily cured by gargling the throat with DAVIS'S PAIN KILLER, mixed with water. In any case of sore throat it is a sure specific, and we advise every one to give it a trial when first attacked. o

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

A NEW PRACTICAL WORK, With 125 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost. Price $1 50, post-paid. GEO. E. & F. W. WOODWARD, Publishers, No. 37 Park Row, New York. o

ROGERS' FRAGRANT ODONTOLINE FOR THE TEETH.

For Sale by Druggists, Fancy Goods Dealers and Perfumers.

ceow

Old Eyes Made New, without Spectacles, Doctor or Medicine. Pamphlet mailed free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Comfort and Cure for the Ruptured.—Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Croup.—How it may be easily Prevented; also Cause and Cure. Sent free. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Confidential Information for the Married—Sent free in sealed envelope. Address E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y.

Medical Common Sense.—400 pages—100 Illustrations; $1 50. Sent by mail everywhere, postpaid. Pamphlet Table sent free. Address the Author, E. B. FOOTE, M. D., 1,130 Broadway, N. Y. ecow

FLORENCE

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES.

Highest Premium Gold Medal.

FAIR AMERICAN INSTITUTE, 1865.

The best in the World. They have the Reversible Feed Motion. They have a perfect Self-Adjusting Stitch-tie Tension. They make four separate and distinct Stitches on one and the same machine. They have many advantages over all others.

"FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO., 597-490 509 Broadway, New York.

A BLACK PROSPECT FOR THE GREATEST OF "THE ANDY'S."

1st COLORED PERSON.—"Dat's perfectly orful, Sambo. Don't say so?"
2ND DITTO.—"Yes, Gufee, de President, by vetoing dat bill, has lost my good opinion!"

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY. tfo

$1. TIMEKEEPER. $1.

A SCIENTIFIC WONDER and marvel of ingenuity. The European Pocket Chronometer. The most wonderful invention of modern time." "Chronicle" warranted correct. Needs no key or winding up. Price $1 each in Gold or Silver Gilt Cases. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of Price. Address J. W. DELAMERE & CO., 206 Broadway, N. Y.

Union Dime Savings Bank—Canal Street, cor. of Varick. Deposits from 10 cents to $5,000 received. Six per cent. interest, free of tax. Deposits before April 21st draw interest from April 1. Assets—$1,602,126.26.

FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS!

All articles for Soldiers at BALTIMORE, Washington, Fortress Monroe, Harper's Ferry, Newberne, Port Royal, and all other places, should be sent at half rates, by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, No. 62 Broadway. Sutlers charged low rates. 0000

To Nervous Sufferers of both Sexes.—A Medical Gentleman having the past ten years cured a great many sufferers who had been given up by other expensive modes of treatment without success, is still willing to assist others, by sending (free, on the receipt of a post-paid addressed envelope, a copy of the formula of cure employed. Direct to DR. JOHN B. DAGNALL, 9 Clinton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. tfo

LADIES PAPER COLLARS & CUFFS.
WHOLESALE & RETAIL.
WARD, 387 B'WAY, N.Y.

One Lady's Collar sent free to the Trade, with list of prices and drawings of different styles. o

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND

Contains the Lady's Guide to Beauty; Useful Recipes for the Housekeeper; Horse Taming—complete; Parlor Entertainer; Book of Fortune Telling; How to Make all kinds of Liquors without the use of poisonous articles; How to Detect Counterfeit Bills and Spurious Coin; the Tricks of Gamblers, Pocket-book Droppers and Peter Funks Exposed; How to make all kinds of Powders, Rouges, Balls, Curling Fluids, Hair Dyes, etc; How to make the Magic Lantern and Stereoscope; all kinds of Sabbaths; Fortune Teller; Twelve Golden Maxims; over 400 Household Facts, Proverbs of all Nations, Poetical Quotations, Anecdotes, Conundrums, etc., etc. Price 25 cents. Send orders to Box 3610, Post Office, N. Y. 538-5

Wanted, Agents and Canvassers for every county in the United States, to whom exclusive right of territory will be given for one year. Salary to competent men. Large commissions to everybody. A rare opportunity for energetic parties. Inclose stamp for circulars, or call in person. DUVAL, SWANDER & CO., Publishers and Purchasers, Nos. 22 and 24 South 5th street, Philadelphia. o

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $15 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. Pressent population, 7,000. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. R. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune
"It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, in an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of the side of the Western prairies."

5-20, 7-30, 10-40
AND GREENBACK
NATIONAL BANK PENS.

Secured by Patents and Copyrights. For sale by all Stationers. Manufactured by the

EMPIRE PEN CO.,
Office, 21 and 24 John Street, New York.

Every variety of superior American Steel Pens and Holders manufactured by this Company. 535-5o

DOLLAR & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 50 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $50 each. o539-45

BEAUTY! BEAUTY!

Would you render yourself irresistably beautiful? Then send at once for "THE PARISIAN LADIES' SECRET OF PERPETUAL BEAUTY." Thousands of testimonials from leading Star Actresses and Ladies of Fashion in every part of the United States. Price $1. Mailed to any address. Address Box 3,288, W. S. LEMOINE & CO., Agents, Chicago, Illinois. o

$200 PER MONTH and Expenses Paid. Agents Wanted, Male and Female, to introduce a new and useful Patented Invention. For further information, address, with stamp,
L. S. MATHER & CO., Manufacturers,
tfo Cleveland, Ohio.

Ladies & Gentlemen

OUT OF THE CITY,
TAKE YOUR OWN MEASURE AND SEND TO
E. A. BROOKS,
Importer and Manufacturer of
BOOTS, SHOES, &c.
575 Broadway, New York.

Directions for Measuring the Foot.

First. Place the foot upon a piece of paper and trace the outlines of same with a pencil, which will give the length and spread of the foot, as shown in figure A.

Second. Make the following measurements, in inches and fractions, with tape measure, as shown, in figure B, viz:

1st—The Ball of the foot.
2d—The Instep.
3d—The Heel Sweep.
4th—The Heel.
5th—The Ankle.
6th—The Calf.

100 Photographs OF FEMALE BEAUTIES sent, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address B. L. FOX, 24 Varick street, New York city. 548-51o

Magic Lantern and Stereoscope.

We are now receiving the most comprehensive and finest Importation of GLASS VIEWS ever made in America, representing scenes and objects in nearly all European cities and countries. These Views are of the special selection of our Mr. EDWARD ANTHONY, now abroad, and are adapted for the uses of either the Stereopticon or stereoscope.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 BROADWAY,
Three doors south of the St. Nicholas Hotel.
535-5o

To all wanting Farms.

Tens, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $15 to $35 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. Present population, 7,000. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. R. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

$7 FINE WATCHES $7
AT OLD PRICES.

English Silver Watches	$ 6, $8, $10
Pure Silver Hunting Lepines	$15 Each.
Fine 18 Karat Gold-Plated Watches	$12, $15, $20.
Fancy Compass and Thermometer Watches	$15, $20.
Silver Hunting Levers	$20, $25.
Ladies' Gold Enamelled Watches	$20, $25 to $75.
Gold Silver American Levers	$30.
All kinds of Good Watches, low.

CATELY BROTHERS, Importers,
tfo 103 Nassau street, N. Y.

ITCH. Salt Rheum. (WHEATON'S OINTMENT.) ITCH. Salt Rheum.

Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cure Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 Cents, by sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, Mass., will be forwarded free by mail. For Sale by all Druggists. 541-66o

BEAUTY.—Auburn, Golden, Flaxen, and Silken CURLS produced by the use of Professor DE BREVE'S FRENCH CREPONETTE. One application warranted to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy, massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Sent by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address DEBRIDE, BUTTS, & CO., Chemists, 393 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 543-54o

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S AGRAFFE PIANOS.

101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. 548-60

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S LABOR-SAVING SOAP.

This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the most delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for woolens, which will not shrink after being washed with this Soap. It may be used in hard or salt water. It will remove paint, grease, tar and stains of all kinds. One pound warranted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons handsome soft soap from one pound of this Soap. Each bar is wrapped in a circular containing full directions for using, printed in English and German. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP. Fifty per cent. saved by using B. T. BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH OR READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 3 pounds, 5 pounds, 6 pounds, and 13 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS, Arch Street, Philadelphia." Every box of this Saleratus contains, when baked, nothing but common salt. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington street, New York.

50 PER CENT. SAVED BY USING B. T. BABBITT'S BEST CREAM YEAST POWDER. Light Biscuit or any kind of Cake may be made with this "Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes. No saleratus or cream of tartar required when yeast cake is used. Nos. 64 to 74 Washington street, New York. o

WHEELER & WILSON'S
HIGHEST PREMIUM

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES,

625 Broadway, New York. o

Employment for Both Sexes.—Energetic persons of either sex can engage in a pleasant and profitable employment, can procure such by sending their address to M. D., No. 210 Bridge, Brooklyn, N. Y. 0

Dale's Tooth Powder.

Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., Proprietors. 543-61o

Children's Carriages—every variety. L. P. KENDALL, 110 Broadway, opposite St. Nicholas. 549-52ow

TO CURE

Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GRAVEL, GENERAL and Disorders arising from excesses, use

HOLANDER'S Extract Buchu.

Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York; and WM. WEND & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents. 548-60o

WHISKERS and MUSTACHES forced in 30 days by a smoothest face in from Cures to five weeks by using DR. BEVIGNE'S BEAUTIFIER. Or PILLAIRE, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, for raising upon the Beard and Hair by an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the élite of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address BEVIGNE, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists, 393 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 543-56o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 186– by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 552 VOL. XXII.] NEW YORK APRIL 28, 1866. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4 00 YEARLY. 13 WEEKS $1 00.

The Civil Rights Law.

THE President, in the exercise of his Constitutional prerogative, some time ago vetoed a bill known as "The Freedman's Bureau Bill," which had passed both Houses of Congress by very heavy majorities. On the question in the Senate, "Shall the bill pass, the President's objections notwithstanding?" it did not receive the vote of two-thirds of the Senators, as required by the Constitution, and consequently failed to become a law.

More recently the President vetoed "The Civil Rights Bill," which had also passed both Houses of Congress by very heavy majorities; but on the question arising, "Shall the bill become a law, nothwithstanding the objections of the President?" it was so passed by the Constitutional vote of two-thirds in both Houses—that is to say, by 33 to 15 in the Senate, and 122 to 41 in the House—and is consequently the law of the land.

Regarded in every light, this law is one of the most important that ever received the sanction of the National Legislature. It was framed to conform to the general conviction among loyal men, that the abolition of slavery would be little more than nominal, and the freedmen would be debarred from all civil rights, unless the legislation of the States was overruled by the legislative of Congress, which predicates its authority in the case on that clause of the last Constitutional Amendment which conveys it the power to give effect to the provision abolishing slavery, by all necessary legislation. Congress, also, claims the right to guarantee to the people of all the States a republican form of government, and affirms that no government is republican, in form or essence, which deprives any portion of its people of civil rights.

The opponents of the law have mainly objected to it as supererogatory, or, at least, unnecessary, since some of the States have made concessions in the direction required, and that all would ultimately do so. The answer to this has been, that the expectations of the country have not been met by the temper and scope of Southern legislation, and that it would be unsafe to trust to its reformation, and that the whole matter should be set at rest by national laws.

The details of the law are various, to our mind needlessly complex, and perhaps, in some respects, unwise. If so found in practice, they may easily be altered. But the purpose and essential object of the law must meet the approval of every loyal American and of the civilized world. This is set forth with sufficient clearness in the first section. Leaving out the technical phraseology, we may epitomize the law as follows:

SEC. 1 provides, that all persons born in the United States, not subjects of foreign powers, or untaxed Indians, "shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, to be sued, be parties and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as are enjoyed by white citizens; and shall be subject to like punishment, pains and penalties, and to none other; any law, statute, ordinance, regulation or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

SEC. 2 prescribes punishment by fine and imprisonment against any one who shall deprive any citizen of the United States, as defined in Section 1, of his rights therein set forth, or who shall prescribe any special or exceptional punishment on account of color or previous condition.

SECS. 3, 4, 5, and 6 prescribe what courts and officers shall have cognizance of cases of violation of the enactments of the law, and their duties.

SEC. 7 prescribes the nature and extent of punishment for such persons as may "knowingly and wrongfully" resist, or aid and abet in resisting the officers acting under the law.

SEC. 8 provides for the payment of officers appointed or acting under the law.

SEC. 9 authorizes the President to direct certain officers in special cases, for the more speedy arrest and punishment of offenders against the law.

SEC. 10 is textually as follows: "That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, or such persons as he may empower for that purpose, to employ such part of the land or naval forces of the United States, or of the militia, as shall be necessary to prevent the violation and enforce the due execution of this act.

SEC. 11 provides for appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States on all questions of law arising under the act.

It has been suggested that the President will decline to enforce the law, and we are sorry to see, in some directions, advice to him to nullify it by non-action. Such advice is insulting, and the suggestion is not to be entertained. We have yet to discover in the conduct or policy of the President any disposition to set up his single judgment against that of the people with whom he has struggled, through four years of conflict, in sustaining the Government and in eradicating the cancer that was consuming the vitals of the Republic A wanton disregard of his obligations to execute the laws of the country would not alone be a violation of his oath, but lay him open to impeachment.

BATTLE DRIVING IN THE STREETS—WHO CARES FOR OLD WOMEN AND SMALL CHILDREN?

If, as it is said, the lately rebellious States intend action equivalent in purport to the provisions of the bill, then the most that can be said against it is, that it is anticipatory—a very trivial objection. If, on the other hand, they did not intend such action, it was time for the country to take the inactive, through its representatives. If, as also alleged, the law is crude, let it be amended. The principle it embodies is logically born of the war, and its adoption a necessary consequence of the great Constitutional Amendment.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, APRIL 28, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE—We have no travelling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are impostors.

Drifting.

THE steady yet unseen flow of the currents of the ocean has, of late years, been closely studied by the votaries of science. From the North and South Poles Arctic and Antarctic explorers found a constant "set" of water toward the equator, and near the equator itself the meetings of these immense aqueous masses cause other and minor currents, flowing some toward the east, others toward the west. These movements are independent of the tides, and superior to storms, which may indeed ruffle their surface, but cannot affect their depths. Their existence comes from time to time before the public in a startling manner. A ship, deserted by her crew and left imbedded in the ice in Polar solitudes, is floated on the bosom of this drift for thousands of miles, into the easy grasp of civilization, and is made an olive branch of peace from one family of nations to another. Bottles cast into the ocean in one hemisphere, float and are picked up in another, and their contents are the sole evidences of disaster or death. Mariners, when their ship is becalmed in low latitudes, apparently motionless is find by their observations that the surface which bears them, has a motion of its own, imperceptible, though not slow, and are happy to escape the shipwreck toward which they were borne.

"A speck upon a painted ocean"—

Such phenomena are not without parallel or analogy in our body politic, and it is often useful to abstract our minds from the storms which surround us, and from the perils of daily occurrence, which ordinary vigilance enables us to meet and overcome, and taking, sailor-like, our compass and observations from principles which are as immutable as the heavenly bodies themselves, ascertain if we are really proceeding in the direction we think we are, or whether some secret and unseen influence be not bearing us out of our course; in short, if we are drifting, and if so, whither?

The drift may be said to embrace the entire social organization, and municipal liberties those of the State itself. Our form of government is republican, and our institutions are democratic, and to fulfil both in the ability of these to promote "the greatest happiness of the greater number," and having a practically unlimited extent of country in which to prove the truth of these theories, our fathers fought, and we carry on the Government of the country. The same forms and principles that were used for the latter were applied essentially to the parts, and the general features of the Federal administration at Washington repeated themselves in the municipalities of the cities. Time rolled on, and, independently of its government, this city grew and prospered, till it became the second commercial centre of the world. The enjoyment of wealth and the enjoyment of the power it conferred, our intelligence grew indifferent to the way in which laws were made and the mode in which they were administered, leaving such matters to those who chose to make politics their trade and the spoils of office their reward. It is an old story—nearly threadbare, and not worth repetition—that one knows how all departments of our city government were tainted with corruption; and though every one longed for a change, none knew what was best to do, or how to do it. It came, however, at length—slowly, like all great movements. The Central Park Commission first showed how an enormous sum of the public money might be spent honestly, and the purpose for which it was laid out be successfully achieved.

The Police Commission followed next; and by its means a department, notorious for its subserviency to party politics and party uses, became at once, when cut loose from such associations, a model of efficiency.

Then came the reorganization of the Fire Department—degraded, as the police had been, by its association with professional politicians. It was handed over to Fire Commissioners, and the approbation of the public ratifies the change that has been made.

The most recent reform has been in substituting a Health Commission for the proved incapable city officials. The public was tired and disgusted with the constant squabbles of inspectors, deputy inspectors, supervisors, and the whole tribe of officials whose chief aim seemed to be depleting the treasury and doing as little work as possible, and seen with the greatest gratification that the whole was to be set aside, and the inauguration of a system which gives us clean streets, suppresses nuisances, and, in short, does the work well it is paid for doing.

A Board of Revision and a Board of Public Works are next promised us; and, if these Commissions work well, as they doubtless will, it is probable that, before long, we may see the entire of the city government, including the administration of justice, carried on by such means.

The public satisfaction with the changes hitherto made is unmistakable. While the city is emboldened, property and life more fully secured, the law more rigidly enforced, our citizens cannot but applaud the means by which these changes are wrought; and if the city municipality was, by reason of its political corruption, unable to make these reforms, they do not repine at the State Government taking its place, and the Legislature at Albany appointing Commissioners to rule this city.

This general public satisfaction we cannot but agree, and nothing is further from our wishes than to express the faintest dissent from it. But, dismissing for a moment consideration of the means of these reforms, their pleasure, let us see where we have drifted to—where this mighty wave of popular sentiment is gradually floating us. Till within a recent period, every one of our citizens had a say in the election of our municipal rulers. Now, as regards many of the most important offices, our voice is not asked for, simply because there are no elections. We are ruled by the nominees of the Governor and the Senate, and it is not improbable that before long an election will consist of the choice of two candidates in civic affairs, to distract the attention of our citizens from their engrossing and more weighty personal matters. We may be quite content with this; but what becomes of our municipal liberties? We may be satisfied to receive our rulers by the divine right at Albany: but where are the democratic institutions which were formerly our boast? We accept a pure, honest and capable city government in exchange for privileges theoretically most dear to us. Abstract principles are glad to be exchanged for the practical and appreciable benefits. We have got our mess of pottage, but where is our birthright?

So far as we can read the law, there is nothing to hinder the appointment of the same Commissioners to act on different Boards at the same time. The Mayor is ex-officio, member of all. This may be a wise change in store for us, at no very distant time, a consolidation of the various Commissions. An united commission would be no violation of the principle that the people rule, and it may be found in practice much more efficient. The name of this form of government would sound ugly to American ears, and we leave it unwritten, because, while we have adopted the substance, we would not quarrel with the sound, nor refuse to worship a new idol, because at other times, and in other countries, its votaries have debased themselves.

But beyond and above these shifting, surface changes, we see a mighty principle at work, which will, we are confident, be found right in the end. Our citizens will learn that in the proper equilibrium of a State, there are more sacred duties than the mere pursuit of wealth: That if rights are to be preserved, they must be exercised. That the franchise of a city like this, is not a privilege to be used or not, at the caprice of the owner, but a duty to be performed on all occasions. If the practical deprivation of it for a while can teach us its inestimable value—if the punishment we suffer for our political sins of omission can instruct us to place hereafter a higher value on the privileges we have lost, the lessons of the age will not have been taught in vain.

Extraordinary Collocations.

THE general observer of matters and things cannot fail to be struck by the "extraordinary collocations" that are going on in the political world. We have had sent to us the prospectus of the "Southern Vindicator," to be published at Pine Bluff, Arkansas. We cannot print it entire, but will insert two paragraphs, which are not conspicuous, but in which is very nearly realized the difficult feat of "carrying water on both shoulders:"

"It will strenuously oppose all attempts made to impose negro suffrage upon the State; will defend the people against attempts made by that God-forsaken set of fanatics called 'Radicals,' who are now trampling the Constitution under their impious feet, and by their insane acts endangering the present security of the land. * * * Now is the time to have the country properly represented by fine journals that will, by their eloquence at the bar, and by the weight of that section that the 'rebellion' has created, the 'gurt' that have left their hands in the woods are peaceful pursuits in the cotton-field, and the country, generally, has been relieved from the state of 'civilization.' No danger' need be apprehended by those who wish to leave their Northern homes to locate in our sunny clime."

A correspondent of the Daily Times, writing from Mobile, gives a still more remarkable illustration of the effects we have alluded to, and in which the bad sailor's alternative adjuration, "Good Lord!—Good Devil!" is very well emphasized. It was at the grand anniversary celebration of the Fire Department of Mobile, on the 9th of April. According to the Times, the following were among the toasts drunk on the occasion:

"The President of the United States—the first fearless patriot; the friend of those who support his policy, the enemy of those who oppose it.

"Jefferson Davis—soldier, statesman, patriot, prisoner; our tongues may be mute, but our hearts are with him."

Comment is unnecessary. We have only to say that this meeting was held in the State, on the narrow and malignant legislation of which we had last week occasion to remark. We cannot expect doves from buzzards'

S.

Swill Milk.—The Board of Health.

THE Board of Health, in wholesome dread of a possible pestilence, is active up to this summer, and in pursuance of their duties, have taken cognizance, among other nuisances, of that frightful evil, the swill milk traffic, which desolate and corrupt the neighborhoods where they exist, spreading disease and death among thousands of our helpless, innocent children yearly.

Eight years ago we took this matter in hand, and thoroughly exposed it. Before we spread the sickening details before the public, we instituted close and searching inquiries. Accompanied by our artists, we went personally, some of the worst dens of filth and disease, and gathered together sufficient data and ample sketches to warrant us in publishing the hydra-headed monster of corruption and inhumanity, which dealt out liquid poison through every avenue of our city.

It must not be supposed that we gained this information easily and without risk. On the contrary, we were beset with danger, threatened with terrible consequences, obstructed at every step, even before our designs were known or our intentions suspected. But we were undeterred by trouble, and pursued the matter with our first project against the further existence of the evil in our ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER of May 8th, 1858. The facts we furnished were practically placed before the public eye, both by narrative and pictorial illustrations, created a profound sensation, from the details which we gave, fairly staggered the public belief, and raised up a host of assailants, who maligned our motives, traduced our character, and proclaimed the whole a sensation swindle, got up to sell our paper and increase our circulation. Thus, in our endeavor to achieve a great public reform, we raised about our heads a nest of hornets, ready to sting us to the death. Conscious of the integrity of our motives and of our singleness of purpose, we concluded to meet and overwhelm these deadly aspersions was to vindicate the truth of our assertions by corroborative evidence, and the fullest and most complete exposure of the nefarious traffic in the breadth of its villainy and in the minutest details of its horrors.

To do this, we were obliged to storm the strongholds of a wily and wealthy enemy, now fully prepared and on the defensive. Regardless of personal risk or danger, we penetrated, disguised, into their rotten, pestiferous premises; our artists mingled with their employés, and gathered the most startling facts; we organized a corps of detectives, who tracked the swill milk wagons from the depots of the poisonous stuff to the stables of the manufacturers, published the names of the drivers and the numbers of the houses where the fetid milk was delivered; we hired men to go through the streets of the city, Brooklyn and its surroundings, to hunt up the smaller dens of filth, and make minute memoranda, describing the locations, and branding them before the public. We procured specimens of the milk, and spent large sums in having them thoroughly analyzed, giving the startling results to the public, and reproduced the painted evidence of former investigations, which were published in every particular the truth of our charges and the unexaggerated facts of our illustrations. Had the Press of the city been unanimous in its aid at that time, we should have crushed out the infamous traffic, and have left nothing in that line for the Board of Health to do now. But we were, with few exceptions, reluctant to follow the movement which we led, and the opposition made by corruption, sustained by illegal wealth, involved the fight so unequal and desperate, that, despite of almost super-human exertions, our battle, in results, was but half gained.

Still we persisted in our exposure, although our detectives were discovered, shot at, maltreated and their wagons broken, which we had to replace; our artists were stoned, and threatened with summary punishment, while we, ourself, constantly received messages and letters, threatening our life if the matter was pushed to an extremity. Having thoroughly aroused the public mind, and at last gained full credence, we demanded an inquiry from the municipal authorities. There we found the interest not most determined opposition. At the examinations, we were told, and not the wholesale dealers in poisoned milk and murder. No such infamous transactions ever disgraced a municipal body before. All that could be, was devised to shield the criminals, to shelter them under the cloak of respectability which their ill-gotten blood-money was supposed to confer, and to whitewash them instead of the swill-milk stables. But the damning facts, unwillingly elicited, compelled the Aldermen, in deference to public indignation, to some show of action. The Street Inspectors were compelled to examine and report, and a day was appointed for the corrupt Aldermen to visit the reeking cow-stables.

But neither the Street Inspectors nor the Aldermen saw what we saw. Before the appointed day, which was known to public hawks, many of wretched animals, with stump tails, rotten horns and hoofs, and poisoned udders, were driven from the pest-houses into the by-ways of the country, and were seen, by the hundred, on the roads of Westchester and Long Island, grazing, in wondering astonishment, upon the wholesome food that the poor wretches had tasted for years. The stables were white-washed and pretty thoroughly cleansed; some of the empirics were washed until their foul smell was nearly obliterated, but bequeathing their ill-odor to the investigating Aldermen; fresh and healthy cows replaced the dying of their kind; and the Committee really found but very little to complain of.

The City Inspector's report substantially confirmed all that we had asserted, and the testimony of the most eminent physicians corroborated it—not only by facts occurring in their daily practice, but by careful analyses and thorough test. But what the Aldermen had to see seen, they did not believe—for the reasons why they did not see were sufficiently weighty and substantial to blunt their perception; so, after pocketing some ahem estimates for the future regulation of these pious distilleries, the public terror was quieted, and the matter was dropped, to the infinite delight of the Aldermen and their clients; the diseased cows returned to their stables, and the work that we strove to accomplish was left unperformed, to be consummated, we trust, by the present Board of Health.

For our honest and earnest endeavor to do a public good, in suppressing a most monstrous public evil, we were dragged through civil and criminal courts—insulted and bullied by hired ruffian perjury, maligned, assailed by libel suits and practice, by corrupt elective justices—our life and property endangered—our character blackened and our motives basely misjudged. But by this must be added the sacrifice of our time and health, and the expenditure of many thousands of dollars, necessitated by the complicated and extensive machinery we had to put in motion, to gather together the mass of facts to support our charges, and to defend the suits instituted against us.

Still we had the proud satisfaction of feeling that we had done our duty; that we had, at least, partially achieved a reform, and had thereby saved the country from a sense of fatal security to a state of searching inquiry and active suppression. The great public interest which we had originally aroused ourselves and endeavors, and acknowledged the justice and disinterestedness of our course.

The Board of Health, if they desire to effect anything, must make a clean sweep of these pestiferous nuisances. They must not allow the respectability (?) of the wealthy owners of the swill cow-stables to defeat the ends of justice. These depots of poisoned food should be extirpated root and branch, and not merely removed from one locality to corrupt another. They should be suppressed utterly and forever. The sentiment of the people demands it—the health of the city demands it; and the Board of Health will be held responsible if this act of solemn performance and simple justice is not fully accomplished, and at once.

TWO WEEKS ago we had occasion to make some observations on "The Loan Bill," which had previously passed the House, and was then pending in the Senate. It has now become a law. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to fund the various obligations of the Government as they fall due, at such rates as he may deem advisable. This is a novelty, but the great feature of the law is the limitation which it imposes on the Secretary, in providing that he shall not retire over $10,000,000 of "greenbacks" within six months, nor more than $4,000,000 a month thereafter. Under the law, therefore, only $18,000,000 can be retired before the meeting of Congress in December—less than 2½ per cent. of the whole amount. The government bonds, however, can only be indicating the acceptance of the policy of contraction of the currency. This limited contraction, which will, of course, be made, will, probably, and unhappily, be more than made up by increased issues of paper money under the National Banking Law. Still, considered as a signal, although somewhat fettered, is nevertheless vindicated, and the probabilities are strong that Congress, at its next session, will take the Sherman-Sedulloh matter, and reduce the outstanding "greenbacks" à la direction. As the colored divine is reported to have said, "Be patient it is."

Meantime we have to note that Senator Sherman has introduced a bill to equalize the amount of currency authorized to be issued by the National Banks, so that each State, North and South, shall have a just proportion. Only $300,000,000 can be issued, which not far from $250,000,000 are already absorbed.

THE rumors of coming war between Prussia and Austria grow every day more alarming, so much so, that trade in Vienna has received a serious check. On the one hand, it appears certain that the Austrian Emperor, whether to indicate his resolution or really to fight, has put his army in motion northward, has withdrawn furloughs, rescinded leaves, and made just those preparations on which Governments not in earnest are unwilling to waste money. On the other hand, the Prussian Government, though aware that Austria is armed, still threatens, and the peace party of which the Queen and the Prince Royal were the heads, have, it is said, given way. The Italian Government evidently believes that war is at hand. The Prussian Court has given a grand reception to General Govone, the Italian Military Envoy, and has named Prince Frederick Charles Commander of the Army. The main hope of peace in both countries is the extreme uncertainty of the course which the Emperor of the French would see fit to take when hostilities had once commenced.

The New York Times announced, about a week ago, as a new mode of treatment of the cattle-plague, the vigorous rubbing of the skin of the infected animals, and the covering of their bodies with clothes dipped in cold water, over which dry clothes be spread. Of 22 cases treated in this manner, only one was lost. But already in 1838 George Kalmar, of Oldenburg, described the successful treatment which had been recommended by Prussians. The infected animals were at once to be covered with clothes wetted in cold water and then wrung out; these, compressed, were to be closely covered by dry cloths, and to be renewed about every half hour. At the same time cold water injections were repeatedly applied; the stables kept scrupulously clean, pure much, but pure food given; three times a day a large quantity of water was poured into their mouths, and the hair of every sick animal thoroughly brushed and rubbed with cold water morning and evening. The cold water was spread upon the back and belly of the animal, and then thickly covered with dry woolen cloths. This generally produced a strong perspiration, and the animal soon recovered. In some very bad cases, injections of water of a very low temperature were added to the eye, ears, nose, and into the mouth and throat, with great effect.

The London Times, which was inclined to discredit the reported atrocities of the Fenian troops in Jamaica, is at last compelled to admit that "There is no longer any reasonable doubt that cruelties, of which it is impossible to think without shuddering, were perpetrated in the suppression of the Jamaica insurrection. It is now certain that scores, and perhaps hundreds of persons, were dragged before being hung, and often before being tried."

The passage of the Civil Rights Bill is the sixth instance in the history of our government wherein a bill, after being vetoed by the President, has become a law. The following is a list of vetoes issued since the formation of the government:

By George Washington	2
By James Madison	6
By James Monroe	1
By Andrew Jackson	9
By John Tyler	6
By James K. Polk	3
By James Buchanan	2
By Andrew Johnson	2

Con chivalrous friends in Dixie have unhappy feelings among themselves, and are prone to criminations and recriminations. The latest, and by no means small, illustration is of the manner in which they love each other, is afforded by Ex-Governor Allen, of Louisiana, who disavows of Pollard, the author of the "Southern History of the War," in the following pungent strain. He says, and answers:

"Why is it that A. Pollard? He is a Virginian, the editor of the Richmond Examiner, and the author of the "Southern History of the War." We have grief for the first, bruises for the second, and contempt for the last."

The proximate cause of this criticism is that "Mr. Pollard denounces Ex-President Davis, General Beauregard, and Beauregard, and declares "The Southern people disgraced themselves for ever when the refused to fight to exterminate; that the latter is courage and endurance—statesmanship and intelligence."

WOOD-PAPER.

Application on Important Invention.

The demand for paper seems to be increasing in to a geometrical rather than an arithmetical ratio. In conjunction with the heavy taxes imposed on many of the materials that enter into its manufacture, it has been found that the supply of rags, Manilla rope, and such other articles of fabric gathered into the old composition, is by no means adequate to meet the requirements of the manufacturers. For some years the producers, as a substitute of paper, have directed much attention to the discovery of new and cheaper paper stock, and to meet increased consumption, and to keep down prices. Without this, it became obvious that printing and publishing would be checked, and the cost of books and newspapers greatly enhanced to the public. The question thus became one not alone of class or professional interest, but of general and popular concern.

It has long been known that a great variety of materials can be converted into paper. Straw has been used for coarser varieties for many years, and within a few years has been extensively made into very fair printing paper. Corn husks and leaves have also been very successfully converted into paper in Austria. But even these new sources of supply proved inadequate to fill the widening channel of demand. It still continued a great desideratum to find a still cheaper and greater, as well as if possible, authentication supply of raw material. To this end, enterprising, patient, and capable men have long directed their exertions, and we have now to record their triumph.

Paper has been made before now, in small quantities, through tedious and costly processes, from wood; but it was reserved for an American company to perfect, cheapen, and extend the process, so as to make it of real manufacturing and commercial importance. This company has built most extensive works at Manayunk, on the Schuylkill, a few miles from Philadelphia, where the manufacture of wood into paper pulp is carried on, on a large scale. The works cover nearly 10 acres of ground, and are provided with extensive water and steam power, powerful machinery, and all the substantial adjuncts for carrying on the manufacture—the whole costing little less than a million of dollars. It would be impossible to convey any adequate idea of the works and machinery, without the aid of a series of plans and sketches, the production of which we must defer to a future day.

The first thing that strikes the attention of the visitor is a vast store of timber, poplar, hemlock and pine logs —15,000 cords—which is constantly kept up by wagons, cars and canal boats. These logs are thrown into the cutters, which slice and chip them up as readily and rapidly as if they were radishes. The chips are thence carried to the reducing vats, where they are boiled with strong alkalies, until reduced to pulp, and subsequently washed and bleached, and run off in the form of great sheets of paper, ready for market. It is found best to use the pulp in a damp state, which runs to 50 or 60 per cent. of rag stock, in the production of paper for printing. It can be, and has been, kept and, however, without intermixture. Nearly 600 reams of the were sent by this establishment for printing our great gift picture of "Grand Review."

The formal opening of these works, which are capable of producing 90,000 lbs of pulp daily, took place on the 15th of April, in the presence of an invited gathering of about 500 gentlemen from all parts of the Union, directly or indirectly connected with the press and publication of paper. There were papermakers and printers, lawyers and editors, authors and engravers, and quite an assemblage which, in public reputation, established capacity, and copyright would, may have been equaled, but never surpassed in this or any other country.

The inspection of the works in the afternoon was pleasantly conducted by Mr. Charles Ellet, engineer at the Continental Hotel, of Philadelphia, in the evening; and the company then sat down to speeches some of the latter of which were sufficiently interactive to be wholly appropriate to the occasion. Mayor McMichael presided, supported by Mr. Ellet, Mr. Rice, Jr., of Boston, Rev. Mr. Jencken, of Rhode Island, President of the "American Wood Paper Company."

Among the guests were the well-known political economist, H. C. Carey, and Messrs. Bayard Taylor, Baker, and Squire, editors, etc., and many of the great paper manufacturers and dealers—Messrs. Hall, Buchanan, Smith, Kilmer, and scores of others.

The whole affair was originated and carried out by Messrs. Jessup & Moore, the lessees of the great works who have established them, and who have been the first to discover, appreciate and adopt the great and useful invention of "Alexander Mitscherlich's Pulp Company," which owes its existence and the perfection of its processes mainly to Mr. Hugh Burgess.

FOR CHILDREN.

The second number of "Frank Leslie's Children's Friend," for May, is just issued, and is a great improvement on the first. It has not less than 16 more pages, engravings, etc., etc. It is called "Taking it Easy," being alone worth the cost of a number. We have also a pleasant and very instructive story for children than that of "Peter and his Goose." There is only one of three, besides Anecdotes and Adventures, Facetiæ, etc. Parents will thank us for calling attention to this novel and beautiful publication. It is only 10 cents a month, or $1 a year.

TOWN GOSSIP.

Ir is strange how small a thing will agitate a great city. The breaking down of a milk-train, by which half a million of people are deprived of their morning milk is one of the most trifling events of more than once, and is of the most vital importance. The stoppage of omnibus fares from 6 to 10 cents, brought all New York in arms, and evoked unanimity of the stages, though they afterward gained their point instantly. Now we have a new excitement, and one affecting over a period of several days, in the strike of the city car-drivers, and the consequent stopping of those necessary articles of locomotion.

The story is simply in a nut-shell. These drivers get $2 50 per day, and have had for some time the impression as $1 would have been five years ago. They naturally think, and with reason, that a rise in existence on this pittance, to say nothing of keeping a family, and, consequently, ask for more, which the poor railroad directors have refused; if they did, their only method of paying 75 per cent. per annum, as it now does, would be poor hoop-poles indeed. The driver has to find his own food for the directors, who are all to be pitied, as rich men should be, and want to make all the money they can.

Now, it is within the memory of men—and women, for the latter have been conductors on the cars—that our railroads did raise their fares, illegally, one cent on every passenger. By the average, which is taken of the passage of each car, this would amount to 50 or 60 passengers, at 6 cents each, the amount would be $24,16, and the conductor, who had to account for no less than seven at present given to conductor and driver. Now, the conductor has this advantage over the driver: he receives the money, and, if he is not a conscientious man, can stick to his fingers, but the poor driver has no such opportunity, and, if he were to do so, he would be obliged to starve. They ask an advance of 50 cents per day, which is refused, and they have gone legally to work to obtain it, by stopping the cars and underdriving who have not a license, and having them fined. This appears to be the only way they can get at it, short of the police, and some of the principal officers have expressed their sympathy by personally driving the cars, for which they have been arrested, and fined. As the matter now stands, it is a mighty pretty quarrel; for no one can say that the public is in the right, for it is to the company, it is death to the public and to them the consequences of a refusal to accede to their just demands. These companies know well, long before this strike occurred, that it was to happen, and they knew that it would stop their cars. Why is it that they did not provide against it by consultation with their workmen? and if they knew that their claim was just, accede to it? If not, to provide, at whatever cost, for their safety, and that the public, who have borne their petty swindles and outrages, should not have their business thus interrupted? Where is the starting the past few days? There is a time of retribution coming for these railroad men, and they will get it sooner or later. The people is a patient donkey, but there is a limit to the load it will bear.

Coupled with car matters, we are desirous of denouncing the infamous manner in which the care of the Fulton Ferry and Brooklyn street line dash down and up the Fulton Ferry and Wall Street Roads at each. On the Fulton Ferry Road street, just beneath our office windows, within the past week, there has been one of these cars, filled to the very brim, and are striving daily to kill more with every hope of success. They dash down the slope with the horses at full gallop, so that they may rise the hill by their impetus, and which is done frequently to the danger of the lives of those who are waiting in the hollow to assist in dragging the overloaded car to the top. What is the use of this? Human life compared to the time of one man and a horse?

The Legislature has at least the bill concerning the safety of policemen has passed both Houses of the Legislature, and that by a majority of two-thirds, and because we think the men deserve it, and we favor the increase for a like reason to either of the police or the individual.

Having alluded to this column the subject of homesteads in every phase, we are happy to announce anything that looks like the accomplishment of the evil. The Common Council has initiated a plan for erecting temporary buildings on the public ground, to accommodate poor families who will be ejected on the 1st of May. The project will be in lieu of some one had it here. The buildings are to be of the most simple and inexpensive character, and will be erected in rear of the Governor's mansion. If the Common Council really means what it says it will have taken other ways of doing it than waiting to petition the Legislature, and making a job—for a job it would be—of house-building by contract.

Of the theatres this week we have little to say. They have offered nothing new.

Maggie Mitchell has closed at Niblo's, and we are happy to announce the retirement of Miss Bateman.

At Winter Garden, the Williams' in their regular round of Irish characters, will be the only novelty for a day. They fill the house every night.

Mr. Jarrett has had a success of the "Three Guardsmen."

At Wood's Theatre Miss Western has closed, and during this week we have Mr. Chas. Barras, with his specialty, of the "Forty Thieves," and Burlesque, in which he manages to keep his audience on the continual grin. Next week, Mr. Barras will come his Wood's Museum, three charming girls, who sing, dance, play, and, in fact, do everything except talk. The programme is a great success.

Nothing is done—the opera is begun. Under Maretzek, it departed on the 14th; and under Leonard Grover, the first grand concert occurred in the Academy on the 17th, with "Faust." We have only to say, as to efficiency of the company's rendering of "Faust," that we like it better than the Italian. There is a freshness and vigor in the singing and performance of the realities of the story and the music. In all the principal parts, the company is essentially superior, and in all orchestral matter, equal. The season will continue for a month, and we become popular among us, as well as some to which we are almost strangers. Mr. Wallace's new opera, from Bernard Shaw's "William Tell," which has been a stranger to New York for a year, is announced.

At Wallack's, we have had a sensation, and a consequent crowd, in the appearance of Lester Wallack, after his return from the stage of a year. Mr. Wallack should be good, and he is good. But it was admitted by all that he was not in vigor, and the recipient showed his appreciation by giving us a taste of his quality. He will have no great comedian on the stage of this country who surpasses Lester Wallack.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic—There is a peculiar people at Wallingford, Conn., who call themselves Consecrated Communists. They ignore rum, tobacco, tea, coffee, pork, swearing, backbiting, and quarreling. Their motto appears to be "Love one another," being as far as it goes. Unlike the Mormons, they have but one husband or wife. Their leader, with whom they "live" so long as both can agree—when they are married, which is not by a minister, but by mutual consent.

—Gov. Evans, of Colorado, has written a letter to Chief Justice Hall, which appears in the Auburn Advertiser. He says that the Territory is in a prosperous way, being "perpetually obscured by infusions of old Europe—people of all nations, Germany and many, exiles, races, colors, luxuries, vices and manners."

—Miss Jenny Lind and John Bell are really both alive. The former appeared in the Park as a Democratic meeting in the Academy of Music Tuesday evening, though not to speak, on naval affairs, and the latter has written a letter to the London Journal, to prove that slavery has been a blessing to the negro. We heard that slavery is abolished in Tennessee.

—The origin of the name Fenian, which has puzzled the savans, has at last been discovered. In a note to his "Tale of a Tub," Swift says: "Fenian was a race of Kings in France, whom they called les rois Fainéans," or the Kings Do-Nothing. We will keep quiet for a little while longer, they will fully vindicate their claim to the name of Fenian. We have no doubt that Swift forgot them as a legitimate counterpart to the Know-Nothings, says the London Saturday Review.

—A descent was made on a body of smugglers at Bristol, England, who had a pack-mules in a barn, where the officers found 28 barrels of spirits, 1,000 pounds of tobacco, 500 pounds of sugar, 50 dozens about the size of a sugar-box, and 16 demijohns of liquor.

—Brigham Young raised in his garden of two and half acres, last year, 1,200 bushels of potatoes, 1,000 bushels apples, 22 dollar plums, 25 dollar strawberries, 4 dollar pears, 25 gooseberries, 10 dollar bushels of grapes, with peaches, raspberries, and currants in abundance.

—The Boston Commercial Bulletin says the bakers of that city have reduced the number of bread so much that a loaf is now only 12 ounces for 10 cents each check, and a 10 cent loaf in the intervening days. Many bakers have also reduced the size of their loaves. Last month, he can whistle "Yankee Doodle" with thrilling effect to the tune.

—An infant was found in a street car in Utica, N. Y., on the 16th inst. The mother was gone, but gave birth to a dress: "My name is Emma Holmes; my mother is too poor to support me, and I have no kind friends to take care of some charitable friend, hoping that I may be taken care of." Emma is a fine, healthy, and pretty child.

—The Methodist revival reports from all parts of the country show an average list of conversions of between 5,000 and 6,000 per week. The Rev. Dr. Newman, who is now at the Missionary—which have thus for been taken up in the Methodist Episcopal Church, some $600,000 per cent. over previous years.

—Capt. Smith, of Lowell, Mass., has accidentally dropped a coal of fire into a package of damp powder in the hold of his vessel, and, in order to blow the coal away, lost the sight of both his eyes by the explosion.

—The Fenian Brotherhood has broken up in Texas, for a magnificent opera-house. It is to be built of blue limestone, quarried from the basement of the building. When completed it will be a first-class opera-house in all its appointments.

—A cavalry regiment for Fenian service is being recruited at Boston. The enlistment is for one year, and privates will be paid at the rate of $100 per month, and officers two.

—Lincoln, Mass., has no poor-house, liquor shop, or lawyer's office, and has no war debt, having paid each year's expenses as they occurred.

—Postmaster-General Dennison, the Postmaster-General caused the following Post-Offices to be reopened: In Alabama, 1; in Georgia, 2; in Florida, 1; in Mississippi, 8; in Georgia, 20; in Tennessee, 22; in Mississippi, 6; in Louisiana, 1; in Arkansas, 11; in Texas, 26; in South Carolina, 4; and in Louisiana, 9; total, 247.

—The Providence musical people are preparing for the great "Sangerbund" of the New England States and the States of New York and New Jersey, and city of Philadelphia, which is to take place in the capital of Rhode Island on the 30th, 31st and 2nd of June next. Some 800 singers will take part in the festival. The Providence Lockwood have engaged an orchestra of about 50 of the best performers in New York and Boston.

—The New Jersey mint bed comprehends a belt running across the State from north-east to south-west, a distance of 100 miles long and embracing some 500,000 acres. The quality is inexhaustible, and the yield per acre is very much greater than the quality is unequaled. It is spread under the soil, at a moderate depth, and cannot be killed out by the most severe and the expense of transporting it to various places. The annual consumption of this valuable plant 500,000 tons, which might easily be increased 10 or 50 fold, and no diffused to meet the demand. Of the crop of 1865, the majority of New Jersey only had a system of railroads devised and planned for the transportation of the meat of the people.

—The Chinese, when brought into court as witnesses, are sworn by breaking a saucer, or some article to their own country. An oath, written in Chinese characters, upon tissue paper, is subscribed, with their names, and burned to ashes. The purport of the oath is, that if the witness does not tell the truth his house that his soul may be burned and destroyed, as is the paper which he holds in his hands.

—The following statement exhibits the amount of tax paid by the United States Government below, under the act of August 2, 1861, for the quarter ending the 1st of January of the present year:

Virginia	$22,272 17
North Carolina	37,110 65
South Carolina	16,197 46
Tennessee	28,859 60
Arkansas	15,336 00
Total	$119,776 62

—Mr. Rice, who has just lost $1,000,000 by fire in Cincinnati, will, it is said, devote to new buildings a million, which will exceed in elegance the opera-house just destroyed.

—Postmaster-General Dennison is having printed a postage-stamp of the denomination of 15 cents, which will soon be ready for issue. A stamp of this price, it is said, has long been needed for the payment of postage on quarter-ounce letters for France. On the face of the stamp will be the profile head of Abraham Lincoln.

—The excavation of the lake tunnel at Chicago has been pushed to a distance of 2,802 feet from shore and, since March 1st, has been at the rate of about 1,416 feet, and leaving 4,113 yet to be run. The work is going forward with the two recess cutters and the tunnel is but temporary; and the clay is in as good condition as ever.

—Capt. Raphael Semmes was released on his original parole under the Johnson-Sherman Convention, under an order issued by the Attorney-General.

—The Legislature of California, on the 16th of February last, passed a resolution almost unanimously calling on the United States Government to interfere and overthrow the Imperial power of the French forces in Mexico.

Foreign—A genuine case of trance is reported from Guilford, England. An old lady, after being for a long time in a state of insensibility, was supposed dead and was pronounced by a surgeon to be dead. The coffin was procured and the body put into it, but it is said that just as the undertakers were about to screw down the lid, the supposed corpse started up and gave such a great terror of the bystanders, and getting out of the coffin walked quietly into the room. It added that the "old lady is now hale and strong."

—There is to be a gigantic squarium among the wonders of the International Exhibition. The front alone is to measure 100 feet; every sort of fish is to be collected from the rivers and seas of the world, and even sharks, cod and porpoises are to exhibit their peculiar habits and customs in portions of the caves, which are to be excavated in the floor of the building, and filled with water.

—Miss Torrone, an American young lady, at one of the masked balls given in honor of the Greek American Indian princess in a fashion dress, with a train a yard long, which she wore in the style which was drawn up in genuine Indian style, and a great ring of which her dress.

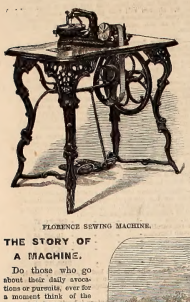
—Out of 300,000 persons married in England in 1865, only 1,400 were able to sign their names.

—A coal bed has been found in the classic shade of Mount Olympus, in Greece. There are three beds yielding coal which contains 70 per cent. of it. A railroad has been constructed to the mines, and the Mediterranean will soon draw its supply of fuel from them.

—Two scientific gentlemen of Prague recently analyzed a green dress, and discovered no less than seven ounces of arsenic in it. It follows, then, that green dresses, which are now becoming "all the rage," are absolutely poisonous.

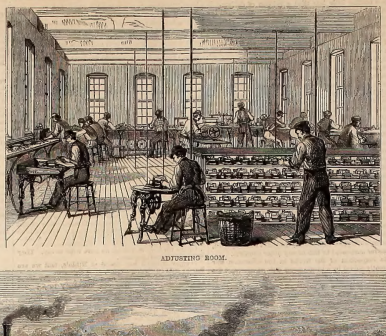
—A murderer named Philippe has just been tried in Paris. Before he came to have been a mesmerizer with him, and inquiry has brought to light not less than 10 persons mesmerized by him. Among these, five were in Algeria, three in Italy and eight in Sweden, and all in a state that their breath is a razor. He displayed a remarkable cynicism, and on entering the office of the examining judge he made a present to each sent that he should not be permitted to smoke there.

—According to official returns the total length of railways in France on the 31st of December, 1865, was 8,471 miles, against 8,151 miles at the end of 1864. The total income for the year 1865 amounted to 267,000,000 francs, against 240,000,000 francs in 1864, an increase of 26,415,398 francs. The average profit per mile in 1865 was 31,500 francs, against 29,400 francs.



—Austria and Prussia are arming, and a war in Germany is deemed most imminent. Prussia has appealed to the Diet, and Austria, Bavaria, Saxony to abandon the idea of neutrality, and pending to the inefficiency of the Diet to the Federal Diet, the result of settling the question. The London Times deplores the war idea, and expresses the hope that England will hold aloof from the contest.

—A correspondent of the London Examiner writes that an interactive discovery has just been made in an ancient and long-neglected Library in Cambridge, England. It is a fragmentary manuscript of great age, and contains a few lines or nonsense verses, which prove that on the occasion of some early and destructive inundation, a man, with his domestic animals, took refuge in a boat, and, in the midst of the flood, sang a song, which proves that the plague was not the punishment for national sins, many attributed it especially to the sin of free quality.



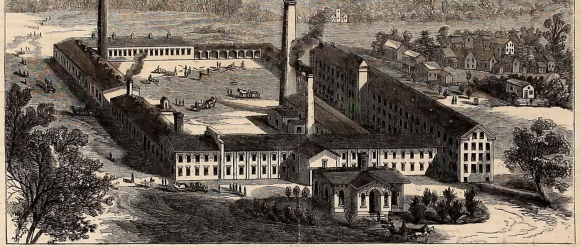
TICKNOR & FIELDS have just published two highly attractive books by the author of the celebrated "Leighton Court," by Henry Ringgley, in a style to correspond with the better reputation earned for the author's name. "Honor May," the other volume of these popular writers, proves the correctness of the opinion without name of author, but to very likely to make a name for herself.

The Home Journal of last week announces the departure of Mr. Wm. Jay Barker, the celebrated coiffeur of New York. Mr. Barker has been recently married, and his trip across the ocean combines the bridal with the commercial. As a fashionable contemporary observes, Mr. Barker will embrace the opportunity, during his visits in Europe, of noticing all that is new and beautiful in his special business, and will return laden with the latest Parisian and London modes, and the head that prevail in the court and other fashionable circles of the Old World. Success to you, Mr. Barker, and do on the qui vive for Mr. Barker's return.

THE GREAT WORKSHOPS OF AMERICA—THE FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE COMPANY'S WORKS.

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE.

ADJUSTING ROOM.

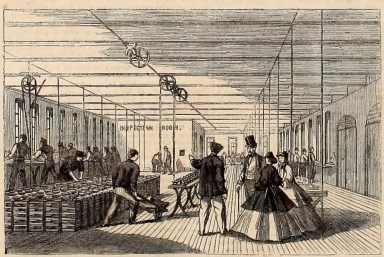


WORKMAN FINISHING MACHINE.

THE STORY OF A MACHINE.

Do those who go about their daily avocations or pursuits, ever for a moment think of the brain-work that has been necessary to enable them to more effectually do what they do?

Are we not every day passing through a world where the meanest object we see should remind us of the great mechanical skill of the age? Every hour of the day we are indebted to a pin for aid, and yet how few of us know anything about a pin! How little do we think of the great minds that have been brought to bear upon the making of that simple bit of pointed brass—of the brains that have plodded over the machine—of the skillful men who have worked beside it, year after year, bringing forth daily new thoughts, all of which should tend to its perfection.



All this went through our head as we stood and viewed the almost human working of a machine—a of excellence claimed for the machine, and the points wherein it differs from all other sewing machines; and having stated these, we will give a short history of the machine itself, and the place of its manufacture.

BIRDSEYE VIEW OF FACTORY, FLORENCE, MASS.

The original idea of the Florence Sewing Machine came from Leander W. Langdon, an inventive genius, who was always about machine shops, and always making something after his own ideas. Finally, after a variety of singular mechanical successes, he took it into his head to make a sewing machine, and did so. This was in Rochester, and the same machine is now in the possession of the present Florence Company. After various efforts to bring his machine into notice, he came to Florence, Massachusetts, a village within a short distance of Northampton, Hampshire county, so near as almost to be considered a suburb, and brought it before Mr. S. L. Hill, then a manufacturer of sewing machines, and Mr. D. G. Littlefield. They saw its ASSEMBLY ROOM.

SECOND FLOOR.

sewing machine. We remember the day, not so many years ago, when the idea of a machine to sew would have been scouted; but at last came a whisper, and then a rumor, and, finally, an announcement that something of the kind was upon the tapis, and at last the machine of Howe was announced. This was barely 20 years ago, and from that time till now we do not intend to follow the improvements, but simply to speak of the march of the sewing machine as one of those wonderful things that are occuring about us every day, which we do not stop to wonder at until our attention is absolutely arrested.

We select the Florence Sewing Machine for our illustration, for the simple reason that we cannot help endorsing it as the greatest of all machines calculated to do that style of labor. What it claims for itself is, that it makes four different stitches—the lock, knot, double-lock, and double-knot, each stitch being alike on both sides of the fabric—and that each machine has the reversible feed motion, enabling the operator, by turning a screw, to run the work either to the left or right. The next point is the self-adjusting tension, that tension being always in proportion to the size of the bobbin. These are the main points merit, and the final result was the formation of a company, with a capital of $200,000, to manufacture. The fame of the machine spread rapidly, and it became necessary to increase its production. This increase will be understood when it is known that in 1861 only 80 machines were sold; in 1863, 1,100; in 1865, 3,000; and in 1866, 6,000; while now, with a sale of 1,500 per month, the company are putting $300,000 more capital, and the facilities will be so increased that the production will be doubled.

SALES ROOM, NO. 505 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The buildings of the company cover three acres of ground, and the work employs 250 men. In the increase of manufacture, it will not be necessary to increase the number of men in the same ratio as the manufactured machines come out, the present machinery being capable of doing twice the work, with a small addition of force; and yet the company are just about to embark the sum of $300,000 more for the purpose of extending their manufacture, from the fact that they are not able now to supply the demand.

The process of manufacture is simply this: Upon the first, or ground-floor of this immense factory, is the foundry. There all the castings are made, and the finishing and on the same floor the japanning is done. This is a most important branch of the manufacture, and, though apparently the rough part only, by comparison, is capable of the highest degree of attention.

SCENE OF THE RECENT MURDER OF EIGHT PERSONS IN PHILADELPHIA, ON THE 11TH OF APRIL.—THE HOUSE OF MR. DEEKING, ON JAMES'S LANE.—FROM A SKETCH BY C. BAUM.

From the finishing and japanning rooms of the first floor we go to those of the second, where all the small parts of the machine are made. There is a nicety of workmanship necessary here, that must be seen to be understood. Every part of this beautiful machine must be accurate as those of a watch; and to see that this end is reached, and no machine goes from the factory without this accuracy and finish, is the especial labor of the company. Every one of these many parts, upon being finished, goes to the Assembly-room upon the third floor, where it is put together and set running by power. It runs for one or two days, until the fact of its workmanship is made satisfactory and all is smooth, after which it is removed to the Adjusting-room, on the same floor. In this room it is tried in every way upon both cotton and silk, from No. 11 to No. 300, and if found to work with accuracy and decision, is re-moved to the Inspecting-room. Here it undergoes another thorough examination in all its parts, and if finally pronounced fit and a perfect machine, it is lowered to the first floor and there receives its table.

These tables are made of different material—walnut, mahogany or rosewood, according to the taste of those who will become the owners, and are not made in the main building, but form a separate manufacture in another place.

We have here endeavored to give a clear and unvarnished account of what we must term a wonderful machine. That it has been appreciated quietly by the public is manifest from the steady increase in its sales. It has not been forced on the public, but has worked its own way. It is not a cheap machine in the common acceptation of the word, but it is still a cheap machine in fact. The cheapest of the Florence Machines costs $50, while the same grade of other first-class machines costs $55; but at the same time, the Florence Machine charges nothing for all the extras, while the others do. This is the secret of its cheapness, to say nothing of its capability to do work of every kind. We are not disposed in this summary to over-commend anything placed before the public for its suffrage, but when we know an article to be good, we think we are only doing our duty as public journalists to say so emphatically.

A PETRIFIED AUSTRALIAN.—The London Daily News says that a petrified Australian male aboriginal has just arrived in England. This singular specimen of petrification was found in one of the stone caverns which abound at Murquilo Falns, South Australia. It was lying in a natural position, as if having fallen asleep; and a Mr. Craig, who was in the colony at the time in search of curiosities, got possession of the "black fellow" for the purpose of adding him to his collection. Traveling with this singular burden wrapped in a blanket, for nearly 100 miles, he reached Mount Cambia, where his movements attracted suspicion; and the Crown Lands Ranger ascertaining that his bargain was a human being, sought the advice of a higher power, and relieved him of his prize. An action of trover was immediately commenced, and Mr. Craig succeeded in obtaining a verdict, with damages one farthing. The government, however, refused to give up the "stone or other material," which was again placed in the cave. Mr. Craig, however, again went to work, and despite the heavy iron bars with which it was guarded and the hardships he endured, he managed to regain it, and brought it in safety to England.

VIEW OF EASTPORT BAY AND CAMPOBELLO ISLAND, THE SCENE OF THE LATE FENIAN DEMONSTRATION, FROM THE FORT AT EASTPORT, MAINE.—FROM A SKETCH BY A. C. WARREN.

WHAT THEN?

BY MARYELE CONO.

WHAT if it had been different?—what then?
If now, instead of bare, dead land, untilled,
My little field had yielded golden grain?—
My cup, with blessings had been filled?—
If sunlight sifted through the leafless trees,
And gilded all my weary, dusty road,
Instead of deadness and this chilling breeze,
Instead of grayness and a heavy load?

What if my soul had been the one that found
Its wealth of happiness in love, God-given—
Instead of this bleak, barren waste of ground,
And this distracted heart, grief-riven?
What if my eyes were radiant still for me?
My children those that cluster round his knees?
And he the refuge where my heart might flee?—
What if my soul had known such joys as these?

What if the love I now must trample down
And so destroy, in me, but was not denied?
And that his fame had been, in part, my crown—
His heart, the pillow for my aching head?
What if in loving him I'd cease to feel
The aching longing of a buried past?
What if in meeting him my lips I seal,
Lest they should say, "I love you," to the last?

What if I said, "My husband!"—saw him gaze
With eyes whose depths I fathom—I alone?
And living for him, bless his later days,
And die if need be, all my love unknown?
I can but wonder—would this had been my lot!
My sack, the Benjamin's of all the rest!
What then? Alas! it sure is well for me
I'll bear it meekly—tis God's trial test!

If this had been, no fullness then would spring
From knowing God to be the only true:
Then I'd not known my humble offering
Was blessed by Him—by Him was accepted, too.
Now, I have strength to patient bear my pain,
My God has sent it, and I ask not why;
He'll join the broken links of this life's chain,
I'll bear the burden calmly till I die!

I'll feel what love can be that Jesus gives,
I'll prove Him as the truest friend of all,
And stronger grown for knowing Him, I'll live
Content, since He doth note a sparrow's fall!
So, from this life-long disappointing woe
I'll rise more purified, more heavenly blest,
Since oft in sorrow, in pathways rough we know,
He leadeth back again to quiet rest!

I shall not mourn—the sending He has given
Shall be with very willingness my own,
Since that the path that seemed best to me to leave
Is offensive to one we tread alone!
So, I can see him happy, and not burn
With hopes that fade but to come back again,
And calmly from these broken idols turn,
And say, If this had been not—what then?

NEW YORK, April 5th, 1865.

Then and Now.

BY HAL JONES.

CHAPTER I.

MISS LAURA WELLS,

AT HOME.

Thursday Evening, 9 o'clock.

FRANK RUTLEDGE sat twirling the card in his fingers. Memory was roaming down the avenue of the past, as our feet sometimes tread old familiar walks with lingering steps. Five years before he had loved Laura Wells—had sworn to love her through life, and this maiden in her girlish pride had listened and believed. But he had laid aside that love, as we all sometimes lay aside an affection which is wholly their own. Through the misty shadows of five years he now looked, and saw the rich curls and amber tresses that profiled the young face of his first love. He saw, too, that fair face, pale in its tearless agony, when, with sworn vows, they parted; and where he turned from Widow Wells's cottage in the gay sunlight of that summer morning, he thought their ways were destined to lie widely apart, and the promised friendship would only be a memory laid up in closed walls to be opened never more. But circumstances had changed the thread of their lives, and they now ran nearer than either had deemed they would. She had been left an orphan, and adopted by an aunt, a childless widow. Recently they had moved to the city to obtain medical attention for the aunt. They had taken one of the handsomest houses in the most fashionable neighborhoods, but had hitherto preserved the strictest seclusion, until encouraging hopes of the restoration of Mrs. Fairleigh's health admitted the propriety of receiving company. This much was known in fashionable society, for it was rumored that the widow was rich and Miss Wells to be her heiress.

For several weeks Frank Rutledge had intended calling, but he feared—shall I write it?—absolutely feared to meet the woman he had slighted, lest her pale face would reproach him. He was even now hesitating about accepting the invitation to her first general reception; for the very act of her soliciting his attendance proved he was not forgotten. There is a vanity within us which pleases the fancy by making us believe we are tenderly remembered, and Frank Rutledge smiled as he thought, after the embarrassment of the first meeting was over, all would be well. Just then he heard heavy footsteps approaching the door, and he threw down the card before Mark Webster entered.

"Going to the Fairleigh's to-night, Rutledge? I only called to inquire; I have an engagement, and can't sit down. I got you an invitation, notwithstanding you haven't called." He picked up the card, and curved his handsome mouth mischievously as he went on: "Miss Wells—ha! Mrs. Fairleigh's compliments were on mine. Gotten up expressly for you, I suppose. I was sounding your praises in a high key when Miss Wells told me very quietly you were old friends, and she was not aware you were in town. Now, boy, I want you to keep that handsome face of yours out of the way, for I intend to carry off the prize myself. She is positively charming! La belle Laura will undoubtedly be the agony this season. Don't presume on your old acquaintance, for I tell you I was never more in earnest in my life. You don't believe me, I see, by that smile; but time will prove it;" and laughing lightly, the young man left the apartment as he entered.

Left alone again, Frank Rutledge fell to musing. So, after all, it was owing to Mark Webster the invitation was sent. A slender thread to one, might she not have let him pass from her memory? No; he had heard woman never forgets her first love; and then she had put her own name on that card; that was a reminder of the past. He would go; that was settled; and if possible he would again regain a place in the heart of Laura Wells. He would be in earnest this time. Her position was equal to his own now; she adopted daughter of the rich Mrs. Fairleigh, and not the shy, simple-hearted little girl in Widow Wells's cottage. Nine o'clock sounded, and it was only when he heard the hall door close that he sighed as he sprang up from his reverie and began his toilet.

"Do be quick," began Webster, as he threw himself indolently on a luxurious sofa. "The queen will be surrounded before the Honorables Rutledge and Webster do homage to her majesty." After a few minutes silence, he added, carelessly regarding his friend: "Rutledge, you used to know Miss Wells, I believe; have you left page in her history? I don't know that the thought would have occurred to me if Harry Beaufort had not called my attention to a 'beautiful auburn in the face,' as he calls it. I was thinking of this after I left you this evening, and, somehow, I thought I caught the expression when she spoke of you; and by this chain of sequence, I brought myself to interpreting your visage from it. Am I right? Do you know any sad era in her life?"

His companion turned almost fiercely upon him, as he responded:

"You must be silly, man! I knew Miss Wells when she was seventeen; not an age to wear sorrow, I think."

What pang was it that struck him as he spoke? What voice said, "Beware of a slighted woman?" Was it presentiment? Was it the first or the first time since the card was laid on his table. Frank Rutledge thought all might not be well.

CHAPTER II.—THE MEETING.

MRS. FAIRLEIGH'S parlors were filled with the élite of the city. Laura Wells was beautiful as a dream in her festive robe of white tulle, sprayed with violets; and in the cluster that bound her amber braids sparkled a single diamond, the only gem she wore. She was absorbed listening to a group gathered around her, when Mr. Rutledge came forward, and was presented by Mr. Webster. Extending her hand, with frank cordiality, she said:

"We parted as friends years ago, Mr. Rutledge; I trust we meet as such now."

"Years need not sever the links of friendship, Miss Wells."

He bent a searching look upon her. She was arranging a bud in her bouquet, and a slight smile quivered her lips. Lifting her eyes, she met his look steadily, and replied:

"Years bring many changes, sir."

"Yes; but more in your sex than mine. You do change much more than we do, Laura."

He was probing her heart keenly, and with a skilful hand.

"How? for better or worse?" and she smiled.

"For better; you are more beautiful than then."

"Thank you; but I was not seeking flattery. I believe I am changed, Mr. Rutledge, in heart as well as person."

She answered safely; it stung the man's vanity.

"Does she mean to let me know, in the beginning, that she has forgotten?" flashed through his mind.

"I once thought you needed no change of heart."

It was a bold stroke, but she did not flinch under it.

"Oh, that was because you did not know me. I was a silly child then, sir. Reminiscences of girlhood are fraught with regretful memories, and we profit by them in later years."

She answered safely; it stung the man's vanity.

"Does she mean to let me know, in the beginning, that she has forgotten?" flashed through his mind.

"I once thought you needed no change of heart."

It was a bold stroke, but she did not flinch under it.

"Oh, that was because you did not know me. I was a silly child then, sir. Reminiscences of girlhood are fraught with regretful memories, and we profit by them in later years."

She laughed now a low, listless, musical bubble of sound, pleasing to the listener, and radiating the lovely face with rippling waves of animation.

"I do not think you have, Miss Wells?" said Harry Beaufort, who came up in time to catch the remark, addressed to Mr. Rutledge. "I do not often acknowledge the experience of years."

"I am an exception, then. I number two and twenty, my Mr. Rutledge has added to it some me five years ago. I was just telling him that, by the light of the present, the past seems very fanciful. As my mother used to remember to read, and we laugh over the follies of seventeen."

"But isn't the experience of seventeen the brightest? Isn't the fanciful more pleasant than the real?" asked Mr. Beauford, innocently.

"By no means, sir. Give me the awakening, with all its dull realities; it is better for us, in the working-day world. We all must, at some period of our lives, find cares and disappointments, and it is better for us if they fall in our early days, when our elastic spirits rebound from the pressure, and grow stronger by the exertion of relieving ourselves from the burden."

"Must we infer that you know sorrow early?" asked Mr. Beauford.

"Yes, sir; a child's sorrows. I shed bitter tears over a dead dove, that I had nurtured for months; I stamped in a passion of grief when I awoke one morning to find a doll's house, which I had erected, demolished by some mischievous hands; and, later, I bent in agony over a lost lover, and believed, for a season, I was the most miserable of beings. These seem foolish sorrows now, but they were bitter then, and they were the strengthening hands to lift my nature from its weakness. I suppose my history is akin to most others. That is more enlivening than our conversation," she added, as the music from the drawing-room was borne in, and her head swayed lightly to the time.

"I came to ask the fulfillment of your promise, Miss Wells," said Mr. Beauford.

As she took his arm, Mr. Rutledge spoke:

"Will you honor me in the next set?"

"With pleasure," and the dance once to-night. I have transgressed etiquette by the request of my guests to go through a new figure with Mr. Beauford."

As she passed on, Frank Rutledge watched her lend her ear in pleased attention to her partner, and her soft laugh came back to where he stood, pensive and alone. Ah! how we reach out after the unattainable. How eagerly we hover around the honeysuckle, as it attempts to catch the humming-bird which has just escaped from our fingers. How much more beautiful and attractive it is as it flits from flower to flower, in its gorgeous colors and winning motions; and we feel, if we could grasp it, the rarest prize were more dearly the little winning creature. Thus did Frank Rutledge feel, as he saw her go from him in her new beauty. He would give the best years of his life now to have the power over the heart of Laura Wells he once possessed.

Later in the evening, he found beside the piano, watching her white fingers moving over the ivory keys, speaking melody to the eye and ear.

Sing like a bird," he begged, as he placed a sheet of music before her. "It is a favorite of mine, and I think the pathetic strain will suit your voice."

She bowed, and began the "The Broken Spell." Her voice poured out the notes in thrilling pathos:

"There are feelings that no words cannot measure,
There are things which we cannot forget."

Her voice lingered, hovered tenderly over the concluding lines of the song, and more than one pair of eyes sought the instrument. Turning suddenly upon the petitioner, she said:

"I would not have supposed your selection so sentimental, Mr. Rutledge. Now listen to mine;" and she dashed into the "Conqueror's Triumph." Loud triumphal notes of a new joy, melting into the subdued thankfulness and steady purpose, thrilled the listeners. As the notes died away, Frank Rutledge turned and left the room. A pallor crept over his face as she saw her vacant place, but it passed as suddenly. This woman of strong will had played her part well.

CHAPTER III.—THE INTERVIEW.

THEY stood face to face in Mrs. Fairleigh's parlor—Frank Rutledge and Laura Wells. It was a spring morning; the sun shone bright in the open casements fluttered the pink muslin robe, and fingered the glittering braids which bounded the pale face of the woman. He was handsome in his manly dignity. His arms were folded across his breast, and a firm resolve was written on each feature. He was looking steadily upon the fair woman before him, and she was bearing the gaze with composed mein. At last he spoke low and plain:

"I came to you to-day, Laura Wells, as the penitent does to the presiding absolver—to confess, for the past. I was mad when I flung away your priceless love. Now I would give my all of life to know that I had it. I have sinned in the past, and let me hope that the future may be its atonement?"

"As I hope for forgiveness, Frank Rutledge, so I forgive you the wrong you did me. I was trusting and guileless, and I gave you the whole love of my soul. You spurned it, and gave it back to me. I then learned to know I had rested on a slender reed, and I turned to Him who never fails us, and found peace. Forgive me, if I pain you, but I can never again trust you as I once did. There would not be happiness without perfect confidence. In the future we can only be friends."

"Try me—try me by any test you desire, before you decide."

"Could I try you better than I have done? No, Frank, I could not risk my happiness again. God knows I would not willingly pass through the ordeal the second time!"

She paled, and he saw her shiver in the warm sunlight.

"One question more, Laura; do you love another?"

"I do not; henceforth my love is locked in my own soul, to go forth only to God and His suffering children."

"There is no hope, then?"

"None. We part now, Frank Rutledge. May God's blessing rest with you in the battle of life. Write 'Excelsior' on your banner, and bear it upward upon every breeze. Be a hero, and do not fail to strive for the land where all our frailties are laid down, and 'we will know, even as we are known.' If our paths ever cross, let me know that you have kept steadily in yours, as I hope to walk mine with fearless step."

"The way is dark—black as yonder coming cloud. Go out with me to meet the contest, and together we can lighten the future!"

"I may not—I cannot. Farewell!" She waved her hand as she spoke, and glided out. He looked after her. She faltered, turned, looked back upon him as an angel might upon a mortal's love, and then went on, and he was alone. Alone with his keen sorrow and hopeless despair, even as she was once in her humble cottage home. The cloud had spread, and heavy drops of rain and rumbling thunder proclaimed the coming summer. He passed out into the storm, reckless in his disappointed hopes.

And she sought her chamber, and falling on her knees, the woman of strong will melted into a helpless child. Throwing her white arms upward, she cried:

"My God! my God!"

No mortal could penetrate the hidden soul, and its burden was only cast on God.

CHAPTER IV.—THE FUTURE.

DEAD and dying were heaped upon the red sands of the Potomac's shores. The first great battle of 1861 was fought, and God's rain was washing up the human blood that had been spilled that day. A pale woman was moving among the suffering thousands, lending aid to many piteous sufferers, when the sound of music, borne of a Federal soldier arrested her steps. Stooping to put a canteen of water to his lips, she started back with a low exclamation.

"Water, for God's sake, or I die!" wailed out the pleader, and she gave it to him. Their paths had crossed. Frank Rutledge and Laura Wells were again face to face. Procuring an ambulance, she had him removed to the Confederate hospital, and through the days and nights she watched beside him until he was restored.

Seven years from their parting, the war-storm broke over the United States, and Frank Rutledge, brave and patriotic, joined the Federal army in defense of the Union he loved. He commanded a company from his native city, and none was more loved or honored than the young captain.

Laura Wells had gone to a Southern State with her aunt, who had been recommended by the physicians to try its balmy air. Two years Mrs. Fairleigh lingered there, and then died, leaving her niece, who had been her companion and nurse. Two years' residence had endeared the noble, warm-hearted Southern people to her, and Laura determined to make her home among them. When the war began, she espoused the Southern cause, and her whole heart was enlisted for its people. She gave the bulk of her fortune to arming and equipping the soldiers, and establishing hospitals for the sick and wounded. Her zeal, her patriotism became enthusiasm, and she went herself to the hospitals. When the storm of conflict thundered at Manassas, she went thither, and many a friend and foe learned to bless the palefaced woman, and none more gratefully than Captain Rutledge. When he was sufficiently recovered, she sought a parole for him, and the grateful parole was forthcoming. But all knew Miss Wells to be true to her espoused cause.

He called at her boarding-house a few evenings after his parole was granted, and found she had endeavored to break her resolution, once again sought the boon of her love.

"No, Captain Rutledge," she replied; "we are further apart than ever. While I can honor your patriotism, I am a rebel, and as such, cannot give you my heart, even when I otherwise inclined. Each of us believe we are right; we cannot say now which will be successful—the future will tell. God will give the victory to the right. He sees best. Go back to your duty, and I will as faithfully abide by mine. We need not be enemies, though we may differ in political sentiment."

"Enemies, Laura, never! I have no individual hatred, though I cannot love your section. If my cause be triumphant, as the Union will, at least, be indebted to a rebel woman for one brave soldier; for, God helping me, I mean to give arm, fortune, and soul to the cause of my country, and to you will be the honor, if any I achieve."

"Which God forbid. Do not wish your side success, Frank Rutledge, I honor your determination to do your duty in that you deem right. Though we be enemies to each other, you are the only son my country and its bleeding sufferers, that binds me here, and I can but rejoice in your personal success."

"If, when the contest is over, Laura, I come back to you with my name untarnished, and by my own efforts, have won such heads only they and you, will you accept the offering? Or, if I fall, will you believe the past was stoned?"

"Frank, I will not answer. Should you fall, perhaps, their last earthly meeting, send him forth hopeless again. It was a stern battle between duty and love that the human conscience fought.

"If, when it is over, Frank Rutledge, you come forth with firm principles and a true heart, I will be yours. And if you fall"—she shivered at the thought—"I hope we may meet in the hereafter."

He started to raise her hand to his lips, but she drew it from him.

"Not now. I cannot let your lips press my cold ones while you stand before me the recognized enemy of my country. When it is over, we will either be one or forgive each other; and then—Fare, thee well, we part here again over cross."

Year after year wore on, until four had passed—those four years of carnage that stain the memories of our country's fame, whose history was written in blood. Capt. Rutledge passed through unscathed. Honors were showered upon him for valor, and though he brought them out oftentimes lessened in numbers, yet it was with gallant tread. He was promoted to colonel, and all his earnest hope was to win the object of his love through devotion to his duty.

And when it was over, and the fate of war was decided in behalf of the Union; when the worn-out remnant of the Confederate army had surrendered, and Richmond was occupied, Colonel Rutledge, flushed with victory and fame, sought her, and found only a grave. Laura Wells was sleeping her last sleep in the city cemetery, surrounded by the mounds of her fallen countrymen. Standing over the grave, with bowed head and aching heart, Colonel Rutledge resolved anew to press onward in his noble career, and that grave, with its pale sleeper, should be his talisman.

A Confederate soldier, who was removing the remains of a comrade, turned to him and asked:

"Did you know the lady who lies there?"

The officer bowed.

"Well, sir, she did more for the Confederate cause than many a soldier. Had our boys all been as true as she was, you would not have been our conquerers."

He did not notice the boastful tone as he would have done on any other occasion, for it was a tribute to her, and the soldier went on:

"She contracted the fever, nursing in the hospitals after the battles around the city last summer. She labored day and night for our wounded boys, and it ended as we all feared—she was laid there."

"Though I fought on the other side, sir, I honor that woman's grave;" and he turned from it with bared head.

"WHY doesn't Colonel Rutledge propose to some of us?" laughingly asked one of a group of young ladies in a Northern city. "He is handsome and fascinating, and then, he was such a gallant officer."

"I can tell you," answered Mark, now Captain Webster. "A sorrow has fallen on his life; he will never marry. He loved and lost the noblest woman—pardon me, ladies—I ever knew. But for the knowledge that he loved her, I would have tried to induce her to become Mrs. Webster. She died in Richmond during the war, a rebel to the last."

"A rebel! Oh, horrors!" exclaimed each voice, "Colonel Rutledge love a rebel woman."

"Yes, with his whole soul, as only Rutledge can love with his brave heart; and what he is to-day is through her influence; for when he was a young man, he was the fairest sample of an indolent scamp I ever saw."

"And you think he will never love again?" questioned one.

"Never. He will go on unmoved in spite of your fascinations, ladies; rise to eminence, and, mayhaps one day will keep bachelor's hall in the White House; and I advise you, if you wish for peace of mind only to look and admire. He is not one to wear sorrow lightly."

Truly did Laura Wells say, "It is easier to bear grief at seventeen than later."

Reader, we are done. If Colonel Rutledge should ever keep bachelor's hall in the White House, you may see him.

A BOLD SPORTSMAN.

THERE was a bright light (the one that guided me) shining through the window, through which I ventured to look, and saw a fine, burly, King-Henry-the-Eighth-looking man, with an enormous red beard, and shaggy hair hanging over his shoulders, sitting at his ease in an Indian reclining chair, with his heels cocked up Yankee fashion. His solar topee was on the table beside him, as also several bottles of wine, or liquor apparently, and a goblet of water. He was smoking a hubbul-hubbul hookah, with great seeming gusto, and solacing himself with occasional draughts of brandy-pawnee. He wore the orthodox white hunting or jungle costume of India, and was a rough, but fine, gentlemanly-looking man withal. I could see at a glance he was an Englishman; and I knew my toils were over for that day. I rapped at the shutters.

"Holloa! Who the devil are you?" cried my red-bearded friend.

"I am a traveler, and a Yankee."

"Quite enough. Come in, old fellow."

I was welcomed with all the warmth of Indian hospitality. I found this gentleman, who had lived for above three years in this wild jungle abode, had once been an officer in the Bombay artillery. He had got into some scrape and was tried by a court-martial and dismissed the service. Determined never to return to England, he betook himself to the Wynaud jungle. He had been a very expert and keen sportsman when in the service; above all, he was a crack elephant-slayer.

Now, to kill elephants (where they abound as they do in Wynaud,) although a very profitable, is a very dangerous occupation. In fact, it is seldom done for pecuniary profit, although frequently by officers for sport. My host, being without other means of living, determined upon "doing the great Shikar," as the natives call it, for profit; and he killed a fabulous amount of elephants during his long sojourn in Wynaud.

We passed a very jolly evening, and in the morning I had an opportunity of witnessing the prowess of my host.

* * * * * *

After twenty minutes' struggling through undertangle, we came upon an open glade of the most beautiful turf I ever beheld. My companion dismounted. The Moplas gave him the rifles, which he carefully loaded in succession and returned to their bearers, except one, which he retained himself. Presently I heard a loud crashing among the trees, and, looking in the direction from which it came, for the first time saw a herd of wild elephants trooping through the jungle, putting aside the boughs and breaking down great arms of trees with the greatest ease.

"Now," said my friend, "you must look to yourself. I shall stand right in the path of the leading tusker. Keep with the Moplahs and watch me. When I jump on my tattoo and go, gallop after me for your life."

Before I had time to digest this advice, my companion had placed himself right in the track of the leading elephant, and there, with admirable coolness, he waited until the giant lord of the jungle was within twenty yards of him. He raised the rifle deliberately to his shoulder, pulled, and down fell the huge beast stone dead, shot through the brain. The remainder of the herd stood still as if paralyzed. Then a Moplah crept up to the daring sportsman and gave him another loaded rifle, taking the one discharged. Again the rifle went to the shoulder with the same deliberation, and the flash and the report were attended with the same result—a second elephant fell dead without a struggle, but a slight quivering of the muscles. This was repeated until every rifle was discharged, and twelve elephants lay dead before my daring companion. Meanwhile, as before, the remainder of the herd remained still, silent and motionless, as though petrified. Then a Moplah approached the hunter with a tattoo. He turned his back to the herd, sprang on the pony, and rode for his life. I was not slow to follow his example.

No sooner had he jumped on the tattoo's back than a roar I shall never forget came from the before silent denizens of the forest. Loud as the report of a great gun, it seemed like the prolonged sound of many thousand trumpets, and had barely ceased when, in military parlance, the elephants broke, and, dispersing in all directions, started in pursuit of us.

"Stick to me," said my friend. "Don't let the tangle get you down, or you're a dead man;" and away, tearing through the undergrowth, rushed our ponies, apparently as anxious to quit the vicinity of their gigantic pursuers as we were.

If danger is the great element of excellence in hunting, commend me to elephant-shooting; before it fox-hunting, even over the biggest country, pales into child's play. The enraged brutes pursued us, with terrible impetuosity crashing through the forest and sometimes gaining a fearful proximity to us. But my friend's eye for the country beat their superior force and great strength when I thought once or twice it was a "gone coon" with me. He dodged through openings in the jungle, making sharp turns and baffling his pursuers, until we were quite out of sight or hearing of them, when he pulled up in an open glade, took out his brandy flask, and handed it to me, laughing.

"Which part of the performance do you like best," he said, "the first or the last?"

"Well, as Paddy said," I replied, "if there is any difference, it's all the same as to danger and excitement. But what use are the elephants where they are?"

"I shall go back with my men to-morrow evening," he said, "and cut off the tusks; most of them are worth 300 rupees the pair, besides a hundred rupees for killing each one."

I passed another evening with the elephant-slayer, and resumed my journey next morning.

SEPULCHRE,

Or Sacred Bush, devoted to Sepulture in New Caledonia.

IN the vicinity of the residence of Aliki-Kaki, the chief of one of the principal tribes of New Caledonia, and in the midst of a forest peopled with immense trees, is found one of those mysterious thickets consecrated to sepulture. These thickets are called "The Sacred Bush," and it is not without danger and difficulty that the stranger in New Caledonia can approach such spots. The dead, as represented in our engraving, wrapped up in bundlets and stretched upon a hammock, is suspended from the branches of a lofty tree. Among certain tribes of the south-east, they place the corpse against the trunk of a tree, which is adorned with sculptures, and to which it is fastened with ligaments.

When the head of the deceased has become reduced to a skeleton, the relations carry it to the foot of an immense tree selected for an idol, in the centre of the "Sacred Bush," and which is supposed to protect the funeral abode. Here is also the spot where the offerings are deposited. This ceremony the aborigines perform at night. They bring fruits of various kinds in vases, and cook them for the dead. When the cooking is over, the relations deposit the offering by the side of the remains, and no one ever touches that which has then become sacred.

THE FEARFUL MURDERS IN PHILADELPHIA.

ON Wednesday afternoon, the 11th of April, between two and three o'clock, the city of Philadelphia was startled by the intelligence that an entire family had been slaughtered by a German laborer engaged in the service of the murdered man. The news spread rapidly, and the detectives were soon upon the ground. The following are the details of the horrible massacre, as ascertained and reported by the Evening Telegraph:

Mr. Christopher Deering resided about one-half mile from the old Point House road, and within 500 yards of the site of the well-remembered Point House, about three miles below the Navy Yard, on what is termed the "Neck."

The dwelling-house, a two story frame, is located on Jones's lane, the barn and stable being a short distance off. Mr. Deering was a cattle-dealer, and a quiet, unostentatious man. He attended strictly to his own business, and thus won the esteem of all who knew him. He occupied the farm for five or six years, having rented it from the owner, Mr. James Mitchell. Besides his own family, he had a hired man living with him, a German, whose name none of the residents thereabouts could give; also a lad, named Cornelius Carey, 17 years old, who was bound to Mr. Deering, and had been with him seven or eight years.

On Wednesday afternoon the fearful discovery was made that the entire family, with the exception of the eldest child, a boy named William, 10 years of age, who happened to be paying a visit to a relative, named Duffy, in West Philadelphia, were brutally murdered, and their bodies thrown together in the barn, a short distance from the dwelling-house. In each instance the heads were knocked in and the throats cut, in some cases to such an extent that they were nearly decapitated. There they lay, a mangled mass of humanity, piled one on top of the other. The father of the family and Mrs. Dolan were found lying side by side in the barn, terribly disfigured, and covered with hay; and in an adjoining sort of corn-crib was found the body of Mrs. Deering, surrounded by four of her children, all so terribly mutilated that identification was almost impossible; the ages of the children ranging from eight years to an innocent of fourteen months. The names of the persons murdered are as follows:

Mr. Christopher Deering, aged 37 years.
Mrs. Julia Deering, aged 44 years.
John Deering, aged 8 years.
Thomas Deering, aged 6 years.
Annie Deering, aged 4 years.
Emma Deering, aged 14 months.
Mrs. Elizabeth Dolan, aged 45 years.
Cornelius Carey, aged 17.

The last seen of any members of the family was last Friday morning, when some of the neighbors observed two of the children going over the meadow, near the house, apparently chasing up some ducks.

Instantly, on the discovery of the murder, all the resources of the police were brought to bear, and on the 13th the suspected person was found.

The man arrested is named Antoine Ganther. He formerly belonged to the 5th Pennsylvania cavalry.

The prisoner states that on Saturday, about 12 o'clock, he killed the boy, Cornelius Carey, while he was on the hay-stack; but that another man, by the name of Jacob Youder, formerly of the 11th Pennsylvania cavalry, killed the rest of the family.

The announcement of the arrest of Antoine Ganter created the most intense excitement throughout the city. The news spread like wildfire, and vengeance against the prisoner was uttered on every side. An immense crowd collected around the police-station, at the State House, and threatened to lynch the prisoner. A cousin of the murdered family wanted to take summary vengeance upon him. The prisoner was finally removed in safety to the Moyamensing prison.

Taking it altogether, it is one of the most terrible murders on record, and all its details the most mercenary and sickening.

THE VOLCANIC ERUPTION AT SANTORINO.

IN this week's number we publish a sketch of the singular phenomena which have recently occurred at the island of Santorino, off the Greek coast, showing the sinking of one island and the upheaving of another, from the action of the volcanic influences at work. Her Britannic Majesty's ship Surprise was for a time anchored close to the scene of these strange occurrences.

We now possess accurate accounts of the volcanic phenomena in the Bay of Santorino. Mr. Erskine, who visited the spot in Her Majesty's ship Phœbe, saw the second volcanic island rise out of the sea, like a fountain of lava, and as it rose high above the surface of the water, fragments of rock fell from its sides, when they cooled and cracked at angles, which left the masses without support. The first island of lava has now connected itself at both its ends with the island of Nea Kaïmenê, and the enclosed space forms a crater like the Solfatara, and is called the Volcano, being the centre of the volcanic action. Since Mr. Erskine's return, Dr. Julius Schmidt, an able observer, and the other members of the scientific commission sent by the Greek Government, have transmitted regular and detailed reports of the various phenomena that have occurred.

On the 20th of February, while the members of the commission were at the old crater of Nea Kaïmenê with their instruments, making observations on the volcano below, a fearful explosion arrested their attention, and, when they advanced to see the effect, a terrific eruption of flames, ashes and red-hot stones burst from the volcano. They had just time to spring for shelter under the overhanging lava of the old crater, but not until they had received a few burns on their skin and a few holes in their clothes. The fury of the eruption lasted only a few minutes, and when the wind had cleared away the smoke and ashes, they hastened to re-embark in the schooner at their disposal. The schooner, though moored between Nea and Mikrê Kaïmenê, at a much greater distance, was in considerable danger. The deck was set on fire in several places by the red-hot stones, and the men engaged in cutting the moorings and getting the vessel out of danger, received several burns. A Greek vessel, which was taking in pozzolana, nearer the volcano, was set on fire and the captain killed on the spot by a falling stone. During the rest of the day only slight explosions occurred, but smoke and flames were seen to issue from the volcano, and during the night, on one occasion, flames made their appearance over the old craters, both in Nea and Mikrê Kaïmenê, and around the new island that continues to grow out of the sea.

On the 22d, a curious phenomenon, which has generally accompanied this eruption, displayed itself with singular majesty. A dense column, which had its form as clearly defined as if it had been a mass of dark purple basalt, rose slowly out of the volcano in the air. It was about 600 feet in diameter, and ascended to a height of 4,000 feet. It apppeared as if a central column of fire glowed with a lurid coloring through a dense covering of ashes, mingled with smoke. For some time it preserved its columnar structure without yielding to the wind, but as the heavy matter fell, the smoke began gradually to disperse. It is interesting to compare this phenomenon with the description which Pliny gives (Epist. vi., xvi.) the cloud that issued from Vesuvius in the form of an immense pine-tree—longissimo velut trunco elata in altum—when Pompeii was destroyed and his uncle perished.

The inhabitants of Thera are greatly alarmed, and ships have been sent to enable those to escape who desire to quit the island. The danger, if not really great, is magnified by its uncertainty. The force that casts up islands of lava from the depths of the sea may topple down the town of Thera from the summit of the precipice where it stands, 1,000 feet above the level of the sea, into the gulf below. Our view is taken from a drawing made by Mr. T. Baines, Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, Great Britain.

CATTLE DRIVING IN THE STREETS.

WE look back upon the persecution of the early Christians, and later upon that of the Jews, with wonder and abhorrence, and cannot frame any reasonable theory in our own minds for such cruelty and supineness in the minds of the many to the acts of the few, and yet every day in our own persons we are witnesses to acts as bad, and these we shall in the future think of with just as much abhorrence.

We cite one of these in our engraving of cattle-driving. It is an example of what can be done to outrage a million of people living in a great city, by a few wealthy men engaged in the business of buying and selling cattle. These individuals control the trade, control the streets, buy up our law-makers, ride rough-shod over the ordinances, and laugh outright when some over-goaded beast breaks away in its desperation from its persecutors, and runs amok through the streets, crushing and maiming, upsetting side-walk merchants, butting through shop-windows, destroying property generally, and throwing a quiet part of the city into distress and confusion.

To see this thing in its perfection we will issue to sight-seekers a few instructions. The best location is on some street leading up from a ferry—say Christopher, which leads up from the Hoboken Ferry. There, at almost any hour of the day, the scene we have depicted is acted. A drove of what Solon Shingle calls "cat-tail," are hustled, shouted at, beaten with a long piece of sapling, heavy enough to fell a bullock, until their tongues loll from their mouths, and their eyes are filled with bloodshot and madness. Then their drivers, partaking of the very lunacy of the beasts, scream and shout, lay on the goads until the poor beasts have welts across their backs two inches in breadth, and dash onward through the crowded street, mad with terror and blinded with the cloud of foul dust they raise about them. Then are the drivers delighted, and fat butchers stand in entranced admiration to see the scores of crazy beasts and men—we give the beast preference—tearing along, monopolizing the sidewalk as well as the highway, and making the able-bodied to fly before them, or trampling the old and infirm, the little one or the unwary, under foot. Through the very busiest part of the town they go, stopping business, frightening horses, filling eyes, mouths and clothes with dust, stopping travel, getting even into Broadway, and at last reaching the pens or the slaughter-houses on the east side of the town, there to be turned into beef to feed the epicurean citizens of New York and vicinity and breed disease, both from their filthy keeping and unwholesome carcasses.

"Dost like the picture," good people? And yet it is simple truth.

The New Board of Health promise us reform on this point, and we shall have it, provided they can withstand the butcherly influence, and for a few weeks the cattle-drivers will keep quiet and not kill anybody of consequence—a few old women and small children are not of consequence; but if, on the contrary, the Moloch should devour one or two wealthy citizens, a prominent politician or so, a leading editor, or Gen. Grant, there will be some hope that it will meet with a violent reform.

EASTPORT, MAINE, AND THE FENIAN DEMONSTRATION.

THE country has been thrown into a state of excitement during the week by the story of a Fenian raid upon Canada, by the way of Eastport, Maine. This raid has been long threatened by the Roberts-Sweeny wing of the organization, but as there seemed no show of it, little attention was paid to the idea, until now it seems to have burst upon our north-eastern border with some earnestness. To give a clear idea of what is doing we will give one day's telegraphing from Eastport:

The Fenians are quiet to-day.

The British steamer Rossini has sailed for St. Andrew. The steamer Pylades lies off Campo Bello Island.

Two large English war vessels are here now, with steam constantly kept up, port-holes open and everything ready. The Americans are wild, and consider it a challenge.

American veterans are joining the Circles of Fenians. The Fenians are in convention.

Both the English vessels are on the wrong track.

Deserters from the English troops are joining the Circles, and active recruiting of volunteers is going on.

The Fenians have hired the Town Hall for three days, to hold meetings. There is an open session to-night.

There is another large British steamer off Campo Bello, with a large force of men ashore at work.

A number of Fenians left on a sailing vessel last night, secretly.

A large steamer, with the American flag and private signal, has just gone up the river toward St. Andrews.

SECOND DISPATCH.

The excitement continues. The Fenian's public convention is in session.

British war steamers are continually arriving, and patrolling the harbor and St. Croix River.

Fifty Fenians have left in a schooner—destination unknown.

A suspicious steamer, showing the American colors, has just passed into St. Croix River.

There are Fenian arrivals continually.

There has been a mysterious appearance of several cannon bought here by unknown parties. Cartridges are being manufactured here.

There is tremendous excitement at St. Andrews, and volunteers are deserting, while numerous mysterious disappearances of numbers of Irishmen in the frontier towns are rumored. They are supposed to have joined the Fenians.

Whole families are flying from the border.

The simple fact is that the Fenians have made some demonstration in that quarter, though to what effect time only will show. Another week will unravel the affair. We have an artist on the spot, and shall pictorially report progress.

A YEAR AGO—AND TO-DAY.

NEVER a nation since the world began that has had such violent changes, within the shortest possible space of time, as has this universal Yankee nation. We jumped in a month from a state of peace to an army of a proffered million. We jumped in three years to a national debt equal to what Great Britain has taken a couple of centuries to make. We jumped into battles, such as the world has never known, and fought them, day after day, so joined to each other, that it became hard to tell where one ended and the other began. And just as rapidly as we rushed into these things, so rapidly did we rush out.

O land, through years of shrouded nights
  In triple blackness groping
Toward the far prophetic lights
  That beacon the world's hoping—
Behold! no tittle shalt thou miss
  Of that transforming given
To all who, dragged through hell's abyss,
  Hold fast their grip on heaven.

Little more than one year ago, the crack of the rifle and the clatter of armed men could be heard through all the land. The musket was held warily in hand, and the sword rested not in the scabbard. Dead men lay unburied beneath the Southern sun, and a million of our fellows were full in the avocations of war.

To-day the clang and clatter is hushed. The soldier is honorably mustered out. He has exchanged the McClellan cap for the soft or the stove-pipe hat, and has embraced the employments of peace. His musket or sword has literally been beaten into a plow-share; and he has gone back to all the quiet ways of citizenship, not to again don the garb of war until a stern alarum shall call him to the defense of his native land. For the long deferrence of which time, let us pray.

Therefore, oh, ransomed people shout!
  Oh, banners, wave in glory!
Oh, bugles, blow the triumph out!
  Oh, drums, strike up the story!
Clang, broken fetters, idle swords!
  Clap hands, oh, States, together
And let all praises be the Lord's,
  Our Saviour and our Father.

THE NEW SUBMARINE VOLCANO AT SANTORINO, GREEK ARCHIPELAGO—APPEARANCE OF A NEW ISLAND AND DISAPPEARANCE OF AN OLD ONE.

A YEAR AGO.
AND TO-DAY.

AWAKENING.

BY MISS E. V. ROBERTS.

Look how she sits! the shadowy lids half close,
Yet do not hide the dark eyes' lustrous beaming,
The long brown tresses o'er her shoulders streaming,
The fair cheek, deep'ning in its tint of rose;
With airy visions doth her young heart teem
And bright sweet fancies haunt her waking dream;

Sweet fancies that she scarcely understands,
In all her slender grace of sixteen years;
Half shrinking from her thoughts with childlike fears—
Half grasping at her hopes with eager hands—
Too guileless yet for aught like passion's glow—
Her thoughts are pure as those which angels know.

She dreams of something that shall stir her heart,
And wake it from its calm, unruffled sleep;
A spirit brooding o'er the unfathomed deep,
Summoning into being life's best part:
Heaven's sweetest gift, yet oft earth's saddest woe,
The mystery half she craves, half dreads to know.

Wishes, for what she cannot comprehend,
Vague yearnings, for some good as yet unknown,
Some hidden treasure, to be hers alone—
With maidenhood's sweet bashful shrinking blend;
And under all, one deep, pure, earnest thought,
Life's holiest duties thus she shall be taught.

A strain of far-off music meets her ear,
A plenitude—it seemeth to beseech
Some longed for gift—it scarcely needeth speech;
But now the singer's voice is drawing near,
A rich, full, deep-toned voice, sings words which wake
Now half to break, now mingle with her dream.

The tender song that surely first was sung
In Paradise ere evil entered there,
And all was bright and holy, pure and fair,
And heaven was near—" and happy earth was young"—
And since, how many thousand years have rolled
How many wooings thus in song been told?

She waketh from her dream with sudden start:
Upon her brow and in her earnest eyes
A world of deeper thought and meaning lies;
The mystery hath risen from her heart,
She seeth now the thought with which she strove
Knowledge of woman's destiny—to love.

And to each woman's heart there comes this hour
Sooner or later, when she yearns to cling
Around some stronger spirit, and doth bring
Her treasures, affections, all to pour
Into one being—which, with wayward sway,
Perchance casts gift and giver both away.

But thou, sweet dreamer, wilt not know this fate;
To thee will many cares and griefs be given,
But all will only lead thee nearer heaven,
And draw thee closer to thy heart's true mate;
While thou, a gentle wife, wise, tender—sweet,
Shalt all his life's high purpose complete.

Bound to the Wheel

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUR WATERMAN'S MATE," "BERESFORD'S WAR," ETC.

CHAPTER LXXXII.—BROUGHT TO BAY.

TERRIBLE was the silence of that journey to Dover—a silence that no one of the three persons attempted to break. Stage after stage the post-horses were exchanged without either of the inmates of the carriage venturing to leave it; for there was not one of the three that would not have been a mortal fear as to what the other two might say during an absence, however brief.

On arriving at the hotel at Dover, Clarissa's first inquiry was if she would be able to obtain a London evening paper, in which she expected and dreaded to find a verdict. She learned she would not be able to get one till about eight o'clock next morning, but that then the latest edition of the Globe always reached the hotel.

"And what to-morrow morning's London paper?"

"Not till the afternoon, about five," was the answer.

Both question and answer were heard by Sleuth and Clarissa with equal comment.

They took supper together, as silent, and almost as wan as a party of ghosts; and then, with a few and formal words, separated—Sleuth to go to his chamber, which was on the same (an upper) floor, and the two ladies to a room just over his.

Clarissa had waited for this time to speak out, but found Phillis so overwhelmed by sleep, fatigue, and depression of spirits, that she judged it wisest to let her recruit her strength; and so they held no serious talk, and Phillis was, or appeared to be, almost immediately deep in slumber.

As to Clarissa, she pondered hour after hour on Anthony's position—on what had happened in the court; what he would think of or fear for her; and then, when she became too excited to dwell on such themes, she turned to the morrow, and to the dreadful ordeal before her, in which appeared, veiled and dim, all ideas of duty, all prospects of success.

But she, too, at last slept.

* * * * *

It is ruddy morning, and the long-looked-for paper—the Globe it is Clarissa's hands; but, to her intense disappointment, the report of the trial broke off just where it had been made known that the chief witness, Phillis, had absconded.

Then, finding Sleuth and Phillis still in their bed-rooms (the latter she had left asleep, after a night of secret struggles and anguish, of which Clarissa knew nothing), Clarissa went out, and was absent for nearly an hour, on business of a nature that seemed to have greatly disturbed her: for when she returned and saw her face in the glass of the sitting-room, where breakfast was getting ready, she stood literally appalled at the change of a few hours, and still more at the danger that he would suspect something if he saw her as she then saw herself.

Running up to Phillis, she did not meet him, for which she had not sent any message or call, so she bathed her face for some time, and thus brought back the blood to it a little, before she ventured to converse with Phillis.

Phillis was dressing, and something in the manner of her doing so—a certain shy carefulness—struck Clarissa, but she could come to no definite conclusion, and therefore was silent.

After breakfast—during which she noticed an equally strange reticence in Sleuth—she heard in Phillis's face—she heard, while writing a letter to her father, a whisper exchanged as Sleuth passed out of the room; and then, five minutes later, she saw Phillis also open the door, and go out, professedly to her bedroom, to arrange her dress for the marriage, which was to take place at noon on the day following, in an exceedingly quiet manner. Clarissa accepted the appearance of things just for a moment—for a moment only—for the next thought was one that sent her like a wild creature to the door to listen, and then up the first stairs, where she found Phillis dressed, bonnet on, just going forth.

Ashamed of her deception, and yet blushing a little at it, Phillis forgot how to frame her, for it meant no harm, but that Sleuth had suggested that it was not pleasant for any of them to have Clarissa at the marriage, and—

"And therefore," suddenly interrupted Clarissa, "he thinks he will deceive him into doing as not to create even the hopeless cry of hearsay mercy—"

"What—what do you mean?" faltered Phillis.

"Only this: he knows—oh, most far-sighted, most honorable of men!—he knows that if you are his wife, and Anthony is injured through you or your evidence—no, not even if Anthony were on the scaffold before you both!"

Phillis tore off the garments she were to have been her wedding garments, and said, with a fierce light in her eyes:

"What I may say or do now, as regards myself and him, I know not. Heaven help me! I am reckless. But as regards you and Anthony, you shall see that I do not ever intend to be a spare instant to be capable, or allow Ann to be capable, through me, of so frightful a crime as—as you have at times thought of with me. Remember all. Bad—bad as I have been—how evil I dare not yet realize to myself—but it is not too late: no. Come!"

"My own dear Phillis! I am not deceived, then! Doubting you a hundred times, as I have, in thought, always ending in the word, 'She is true to you! she will be true to you!'"

"I will; try me! But stay! Let me not overrate my powers. It may be very difficult; but I am only strong with him when he wrongs me. It were dangerous for you to expect too much. I wish—from my soul I do—that my cause is right. But now—when he is behaving so well to me—even if I confront him with this new lie—this new and most horrible fraud upon me (for he knows—he knows, what I could not tell you before—that it is not his only that I seek to save, but Ann Maude, and Mr. Maude's rights as well)—I fear if you exact too much from me—"

"Phillis, I speak—if I dare speak him—if I do what, three days ago, I did not think God had given me the power even to dare to contemplate as a possible reality—I do that, I say, for you and me? Will you, then, support me? Will you abide, word by word, act by act, before his very face, by your confession?"

"That is what I am cowardly enough to wish you to ask me to do. That I can do, at any cost to myself, if you will only support me. I am not that, if Mr. Maude be found 'Not Guilty,' you will not, directly or indirectly use, or allow to be used, my evidence. I put that to you, as the woman who—do not despise me—I believe, even yet, will be my husband."

"I trust myself and Mr. Maude to that, but on the preliminary condition that I may use every power that I can bring to bear upon him now, before the actual force of the trial, to obtain from him all we both wish and need."

"Oh, yes!" said Phillis. "Now, then, it is I who ask you to trust! I feel I shall not fail you."

* * * * *

The wretched luncheon—following on the course of time the wretched breakfast—is over, scarcely touched by either of the persons present. Sleuth has announced that he will take his usual siesta, even while he persuades himself that Clarissa does mean merely anxiety for the upshot of the trial, and for whose sake he is doing so.

But when the luncheon things are taken away, and the room is all their own, Clarissa, often murmuring in alarm and agitated gesture, now pacing and light, rises, walks to the window, then goes to the door, locks it, and returns half-way, facing Sleuth, who has leaped to his feet.

"Mr. Sleuth," said Clarissa, her voice trembling and yet filled with a kind of ringing energy and piercing quality of tone, "will you look to the window? The two men who stand there, they wait for you and are under the direction of a magistrate who knows my failure and trusts me!"

Sleuth went—how, he knew not—and there saw two unmistakable officers of justice. Near them —but not seemingly belonging to them, appearing as a mere looker-on—stood Esau. Then he seemed about to rush at or past Clarissa.

"Stop!" she cried. "Two others are on the stairs, watching this very door."

"Miss Pompess, this—this outrage—" Sleuth began.

"Depends on your for all its meaning. I will be very frank with you. I hold here—say, keep from me, or I open the door and call, and then I cannot save you!—I hold here a warrant for your apprehension for murder, issued by my father, on evidence laid before him by me. And my witness is now prepared to put before you, unless even at this late and dreadful hour you will be wise, and silence her and me by your own confession of the truth!"

Sleuth's livid face showed how accurately he estimated his danger.

"Will you tell me you tell me this? Have you heard anything? Is—is Anthony found 'Not Guilty?'"

"If he were, and you were once arrested, and through me, I could not, as a magistrate's daughter, help you, but must let you go to your fate. I do not yet know the verdict, and there is time for you, time for truth, time for restitution, time for repentance, perhaps—oh, with my whole heart do I wish it!—time for heaven's forgiveness, and such use and enjoyment of life in another country as this true-hearted, however erring woman, can help to give you. But, Sleuth, we waste time. There are before you all the materials you want. It is your life that is oibing, like the sands in an hour-glass, which I can read there, gazing idly on me. Write!"

Sleuth dropped down into a chair, took pen and paper, and waited, not again raising his face. Phillis had risen and gone near to Clarissa, and stood further off from him than Clarissa herself. He was not understood that movement. Clarissa began to dictate, and drew with her left hand, by a series of nervous and most fortunate instinct, Phillis toward her as she spoke, who leaned against her as if she were a child protected by its mother.

"I, Richard Sleuth, am the real murderer of my uncle, Silas Maude."

"Who dictates to whom so?" asked Sleuth.

"Richard, I have said so. I, who feel I have been, by my guilty connivance in many things, responsible for all, am."

So said Phillis, drawing courage from Clarissa's behavior and success.

"Mr. Sleuth, will you write?" demanded Clarissa, again. "Use what phraseology you please, excuse yourself as you can, but oh, beware of trifling here as regards your own conscience, the value of this to you in the future day!"

"I will not write blindly to any woman's dictation. Tell me, come of all, what is charged against me, and I will answer you."

"Phillis, I ask you to speak. Did this man west for you the value of the—the coat in which he went to examine the safe?"

"He did."

"Did he secretly reload his pistol?"

"He did."

"Did he change the burning wadding?"

"I believe he did."

"Did he tell you he had then, that night, obtained the codicil?"

"Yes. He said he had it in his hands before the murder, but it was taken away by the burglars."

"Did that wretch Bob come to you as a peddler, evidently looking for Sleuth, and did you or your godmother tell him facts that now make it clear he was seeking for one of the value of the codicil?"

"Yes."

"Anthony could not, then, have hidden it where it was found?"

"No."

"Mr. Sleuth will you write all that? Stay! You ask for all. Phillis, brave girl, one word more, and then I hope one day to show you and him how I can reward you for the part you who now destroy him. Did you, or did you not, when you came to the door of the bedroom, hearing the burglars inside, and were about to enter, did you then see through the key-hole, in addition to all you have told me before, this man reading a paper, which you now know proved to be a will or codicil in Anthony's favor, as the alderman had told you, when he sent you off with the letter to fetch the lawyer, that he intended to draw it, so as to be prepared against accident?"

Phillis hesitated—just a little; but Clarissa gave her a look so fiercely reproachful, and at the same time tenderly with her encircling arm; and although Sleuth, in one wild look, endeavored to stem that look, and to prevent Phillis from speaking, it was away all he possessed, Phillis did not venture to meet his gaze, but said faintly:

"I—I have already said so. I cannot now deny my words."

"Will," said Sleuth, after a pause, and with a deep mechanism of feeling that boded ill for Phillis's future—"if you—my wife that is to be—care so little for ruin, I will see why I should."

At these bitter words, Phillis, leaving Clarissa, tottered to Sleuth, and fell on her knees before him, crying:

"Richard! Richard! it is my own guilt I confess, as well as yours. After the alderman's death, I encouraged you in your doing. I would have been silent, but for reasons you know, I am and have been in the deepest wretchedness ever since. I implore you, Richard, dear Richard, to throw it off; obtain this noble lady's forgiveness, and then I will—oh, believe me, I will be true to you, and devote myself to you, more than ever, ever more, as my dear and honored husband!"

Sleuth seemed moved a little at this. He kissed her, and took her up, saying:

"Stand here, and see what I shall write. Will you excuse me, Miss Pompess?"

Sleuth began to write, and presently read aloud —strange to say, in a sonorous tone, not devoid of a certain sense of self-satisfaction

"I, Richard Sleuth, one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, now tender my voluntary declaration that it was not my cousin, but I, who killed Alderman Maude, the old man having greatly provoked me by insulting words, while I was doing my best to smooth his last hours, and having, in addition, confessed that he meant to break faith with me, and give the property already promised to me, when he took me from my humble but happy home, to Anthony Maude.

"I also declare that I destroyed an unwitnessed paper, drawn up by my uncle in Anthony's favor, and condemning the will of May 2, 1811, but which, I presume, would have been witnessed had the unfortunate gentleman lived.

"I have only to add he was dying at the time, and had been kept alive for many hours, perhaps days, beyond the natural term of his existence, by the use, in the absence of him who, in a moment of temptation, through the extraordinary nature of the opportunity, through great insults and provocation, committed an act for which he trusts to receive the pardon of God and of his country-men, but which he cannot—wherever he may be, however long he may live—hope to forgive himself."

"Will that do, Miss Pompess?"

"Let me read it," she said, approaching and taking the paper. She found it was what he had professed it to be.

"Mr. Sleuth, the codicil, if you please."

"I—I have it not here."

"Then, I fear, we cannot bring this business to a satisfactory end, after all."

"I will look, if—if you please, in my trunk in the bedroom."

"Perhaps your pocket-book?"

"My pocket-book? I—I think not. Strange! Here it is! Take it, and welcome!"

He is in Anthony's people, of course the previous will gives him his right without further question?"

Sleuth's face was a sufficient answer.

Clarissa glanced at that infernal memorandum on the back, which, more than anything else, had injured Anthony, and she was about to show Sleuth that Phillis had made even that mystery clear by confessing Sleuth had spoken to her privately about Anthony's debts, and mentioning these very particulars about Slocum—how learned she knew not—long before the discovery of the codicil.

But when she saw how the court creature trembled as she contemplated the future, she felt she should do wrong to inflict any fresh pangs on her, now that she had achieved full success. So Phillis was spared that weapon to be added to Sleuth's terrible assembly of evil recollections and moods.

"Do not fear, Mr. Sleuth—I open the door only for witnesses. Please to ring while I stand here."

Sleuth did so.

In the presence of two witnesses—hotel servants to be called—Clarissa and Phillis, Sleuth—all standing around him in deep silence—and then all signed after him.

But when the witnesses had withdrawn, Clarissa went to him, now more agitated than ever, put the warrant into his hand, said, "I do believe you had provocation—Heaven has convinced me of that," and then—how shall we record it?—she kissed him on the cheek, and Sleuth dropped his head on the table and wept. And both the women wept with him.

* * * * *

The marriage has been too long delayed by these events to take place to-day, so it is settled for to-morrow, and Clarissa, in her uncertainty about Anthony's acquittal or condemnation, her feeling for Phillis, and her dread lest Sleuth might even yet turn upon her, agrees to wait and stay with them over that day. And then the name of the boys are heard crying in the street:

"The Great Trial! Verdict! Prisoner Guilty!"

"No one!" Thank God he is safe!" murmurs Clarissa.

CHAPTER LXXXIII.—HIMSELF TO THE LAST.

It is night. Sleuth is tossing in his bed in all the throes of mortal passion—a prey by turns to hate, fear, jealous remorse, thirst for vengeance, and the blackest despair.

That two women should have ruined all at last! How could he imagine they have done nothing to save Anthony, if they had given him time, while, to some degree, saving himself!

Time! Time! That was now the last and most maddening of Sleuth's secret tortures. Had he but kept the codicil, he might, in all probability, defied the attack against him, and at last at defiance—live in another country for safety and comfort, but draw his funds from this one. Fool! Madman! Idiot! Dolt!

But must he even now submit? The codicil was useless unless the confession were also got from him. Anthony would contest, of course. He might carry out, even now, his own original purpose of a modified confession, to save Anthony. Could he? Was he not defending himself?

Could it be true? Did he sleep and dream that he was letting pass away from him a superb fortune, escaping a dim indulgence, ease, tranquility, and fame?

Yes, could not lie there, at all events. He would get up. He would most likely have no choice but submit; still, it was worth thinking about, and being prepared for.

He partly dressed himself, stopping, at intervals, a long time in intense silent thoughtfulness, and sometimes on the edge of the bed, now standing in the room just where he had brought himself to a pause, now drawing cautiously aside the blinds to look out upon the night.

No life need be lost. Of course not.

"As to injury to property, I can remedy that easily, and will."

"If I am injured myself, just a little—unluckily, I can't bear much pain—who shall dare to hint—?" No. But how?

"She put both papers—Isaw her—into a pocket-book, and that she put into the pocket of her dress. What would she do with them when she undressed? Put them under the pillow, most likely. She could not—would not have thrust them further away. How then?"

Sleuth sat down, and began to write with the materials he had in a small writing-case close by,

but after two or three lines he stopped, impatiently murmuring:

"Act first, and then talk! I can be in no danger, except that which I voluntarily incur. And I can trust myself that way. Indeed, I must venture further than my own shrinking will warrant, just because I know my weakness will keep me back—must venture a little more than I like, remembering it is to regain all.

"Phillis? Well, if she likes the bed she has made, let her lie on it, but without me! She has settled me, quite. In fact, the whole scheme becomes only the more attractive if I can punish her.

"Stay! No mistakes. I AM SAFE, as things are, but ruined, hopelessly ruined in character and estate. Still I AM SAFE; and Phillis is pretty, and will be fond enough, poor fool; and I dare say I might forget all, and work myself up some-how, after many years of toil, and disgust, and obloquy.

"Yes! and all the while I shall have to think of Anthony, the grand gentleman, with his beautiful wife, and the contrast he and I will be supposed, of course, to present, when I am nothing, he all! May all infernal— I think, once, if he would have been quiet about the past, I could have liked him, even while I envied him. Now I hate him as never, I think, before, did one man hate another. I wish, if I did venture anything, he were here to—

"Pooh! This is the very way to endanger yourself, madman!

"Do you, or do you not intend to act?"

He went to his portmanteau, took out a pistol-case, from which he drew a pistol, and carefully removed the charge.

"I won't trust myself at that game again, any-how. I'm not bad enough for that. But if I cannot manage one way, I must try another. If chance does not aid me—in her absence from the room—I must get Phillis away from her, and then frighten her! Unless, indeed—thus armed—I faced them both. Why not?"

Again he stood paralyzed by doubt—whether to take the assured safety he had secured, with the beggary he so much dreaded; or risk he hardly knew what, but as he thought, a risk that might be prudently incurred, if only he were satisfied it was best.

Anthony's image—as a prosperous gentleman, overwhelmed with congratulations on his escape from so great a "rascal's schemes" as his (Sleuth's)—decided him. He was in his trowsers, and he would put on nothing more. He took off his socks, and threw aside his braces, and ran his fingers through his hair to scatter it with wild disorder.

Then he collected his treasures—gold, bank-notes, and small matters of value—put them into his trousers' pockets with the paper he had begun to write, saying:

"All else must go."

He fetched from a dressing-room an extremely thick overcoat and put it on, to see how it would protect him; then took it off for a time. He now drew the long white dimity curtains of his bed across a chair to support them, and fasten them so that he made them reach the window blinds, which were near—the top curtains to one window, the bottom ones to the other window. He put a chair by the bedside, and a candle on it, just as if he had been using it to read by, under the over-hanging curtain, but too low as yet to set it on fire.

He saw the furniture, like the house itself, was old, handsome, but worm-eaten, and extraordi-narily dry, and that it must burn, if once that single curtain by the bed's head took light. The bedstead itself was an incipient and certain bon-fire.

The women slept over him. He breathed hard through his nostrils as he thought of them; then, in a sort of realistic spirit, he put a news-paper on the table by the candle, and got on to the bed, and began to read it, or try to read it, while reserving yet one moment as his own before making a new and dreadful venture. But he had thought it well out. No life would be in danger, no property sacrificed but what he could repay.

The newspaper catches fire, and Sleuth seems half-inclined, by his theatrical start, to try to cheat himself into the belief it was accident after all that set the fire going.

He leaps from the bed, for he is startled by the suddenness and the gigantic instantaneous growth of the fire.

He opens the door, and shouts to the whole household:

"Fire! fire! fire!"

He puts on his coat, dips a towel in the water-jug to carry in his hand, and then, after such a delay as he thinks gives time for him to seem to have put on his trowsers after being roused from sleep by the fire, runs down to the floor below, shouting as he goes—and meeting people who take up the cry:

"Fire! fire! fire!"

He hammers at the door of the two women, and is answered by a shriek from within.

"Phillis! Clarissa! the house is on fire! The staircase will be impassable in an instant! Open! open!"

The door is opened, and both the women stand there in their night-gowns, but wrapped in their traveling cloaks.

"Quick! wait for nothing! or your lives are not worth two seconds' purchase!"

Out they came, and were met in the corridors by other guests; some shrieking, some urging calmness, all rushing down the stairs in a flock.

They got safely to the bottom, and into a coffee-room on the ground story; and there, the first feeling of terror over, they are all about—under the guidance of a thoughtful head-waiter—to go to an adjoining house, when Clarissa suddenly exclaims in a low tone to Phillis:

"My papers! I must get them first!"

"I will fetch them!" cries Sleuth, who had only been waiting for some such excuse, and away he runs, hearing but not heeding—not believing—Clarissa's call to him to stop, who is in anguish about his danger, for the papers are not in the bedroom, but in the landlady's charge, to whom Clarissa—ever thoughtful where such interests were at stake—had confided them.

Sleuth flies up, leaps over two or three stairs at a time, blinded, almost suffocated, but sure now of success. He pins the wet towel round his neck, so as to cover at pleasure the lower part of his face, drops to his knees to pass along the corridor; gets confused as to the room; goes crawling first into one, then into another; grows frantic with the delay, is tempted on by the cooler air he finds as he advances, and by the fact that he is just able to bear it; but when at last he reaches the room, and knows it by things belong-ing to Phillis on the ground—a slipper and a head dress—he is scarcely able to rise to the pillow, the smoke is so dense, the heat so fearful, the flame outside the window so vivid, in spite of the inter-vening smoke.

"Not there!" He runs to the dressing-table. "Not there! Merciful heaven! is all this for nothing?" Again he hunts, but feels nowhere that which he seeks—the pocket-book with those damnatory papers inside.

He must give it up while he is safe. Yes; he has failed—that is all, and must now make the best of things. 'Tis a pity! He has failed, but he is safe. But he must hurry. The fire is fear-ful. Again, on hands and knees, he seeks his way back. As he approaches the staircase, he sees it suddenly all aglow—one rail of the banisters after another answering to the call of the flames, and laughing out, as in demoniac frenzy. That very staircase down which he must pass!

"Perhaps the stairs are burnt through!" cries the miserable man, in his first paralysis of terror.

He reaches them, turns to descend on hands and knees, lest they may be too weak otherwise to bear him, and also in the hope to shelter his face, and thus he moves—his hands in torture, burning at every touch of the floor; his knees and naked feet the same. Thus he descends back-ward, tremblingly setting his feet on the stairs in succession; each step growing hotter—more un-endurable. His shrieks for help now are heard, through all the roar and crackling of the fire, and through the confused hubbub of the people below and outside. He cannot descend! Again more and more harrowing are his cries, which are answered from below, though he is too confused to know or distinguish what is said.

He turns to face the seething, roaring gulf.

And then in that awful moment there comes back to Sleuth the remembrance of his dream on the night of the day when Anthony, sitting on the bed of the murdered man, after nailing up the room, had given him the house and land which formed the scene of his crime. Now, as then, his foot seemed glued in blood to a spot from which he could not move it, either to go back or to go down, only now he had what he had not then felt—the unendurable bodily anguish of the fire. There was before him the very gulf he had then seen. And as he thought of it all, in that won-drous swiftness of soul which enables it to concen-trate almost any amount of thought and emotion into a space so brief as hardly to be calculable—Sleuth saw in the raging gulf of smoke and flame beneath him the picture of his dream—the alder-man, with his white head thrown back, and his arms outstretched—but no longer toward his un-happy and forgiven daughter, but toward him (Sleuth), as if waiting for him, and beckoning to him by a look and gesture that Sleuth's rocking brain could no longer resist.

A hopeless glance backward, another still more hopeless downward in front, and then there is a leap, as of despair, into that awful caldron, which seems to Sleuth as if hell itself were opened for him in anticipation. He leaps madly forward, as if with one last despairing thought that he may land somewhere in sufficient safety, again to make fresh efforts. He leaps, and alights almost at the bottom of the staircase, but the weight of the falling body carries with it masses of the burning wood-work, no longer able to bear him. A great roar, as of a giant's exultation—a great, upward-shooting light—and all is over!

* * * * * *

Sleuth's danger had kept Clarissa rooted to the spot where he had left her, till she was borne fur-ther off by the seething, swaying crowd, who shifted nearer and further off, just as the fire waxed or waned.

In one of these excited movements, before the fall of the staircase with Sleuth, Clarissa got hold of the landlady and asked for her papers.

"Oh, my dear young lady, they are gone!"

The look in Clarissa's face, and then the deadly whiteness, warned the landlady, and she was just in time to receive Clarissa into her arms, and lead her away into a neighboring house.

* * * * * *

When Sleuth's dead body was found, after the fire had been partially got under, there was, also, found in his pocket, sheltered by the purse, a piece of paper, on which was written, in a blurred, indistinct, hesitating kind of hand, these words:

"Moved by the tears of these two women, both dear to me, and by my cousin's fate, I have con-sented temporarily to take on myself the burden of Anthony's crime, so far as——"

There ended the document.

A Speculative Cure.—One of the physicians of the Emperor Napoleon, M. Jobert de Lamballe, has recently become a lunatic and has in consequence been placed in a maison de santé. Three or four days before this took place, he went to call on a friend, and suddenly in the middle of the conversation he broke out into a sort of lecture on mental diseases, tracing out with vigor and brilliancy the causes, symptoms, and various characteristics of these terrible complaints. The friend listened for more than half an hour, but he was not very comfortable at seeing the then excited state of M. Jobert. Three or four days afterward he was not sur-prised to hear of the state in which his visitor was, and he then began to recall the treatment suggested by the patient himself. As M. Jobert was one of the ablest physicians in Paris, it is possible that he may be cured with his own remedies.

ROMANTIC.

One of the most beautiful actresses of the Boulevards, Paris, received daily, for about a month, a little penny bouquet of violets. She found the bouquet in the box or with the door-keeper every evening as the play was about to begin, and this simple offering of an unknown love affected her, in spite of herself.

While acting, she looked carefully around—at the boxes, the parquet, and even behind the scenes—but to no purpose; she saw nothing by which to recognize the man of bouquets. And thereupon she gave her imagination free rein, and the imagination of an actress is very similar to that of other folks.

Was he a foreign prince, who wished to captivate her heart before placing at her feet his crown and treasures? Or was he an artist, too bashful to declare his passion?

She interrogated the box-keeper, the tire-woman—in short, everybody employed in the theatre, but nobody knew anything about it. Still the bouquets came.

"Do they tell us that constancy is a chimera?" mur-mured she.

One evening, as she entered the theatre, she received a fresh bouquet of violets, and this time the flowers were accompanied by a letter. "At last?" she said, and opening it by the light of a reflector, she read as follows:

"Mademoiselle: I have loved you for a long time, for is not beholding and loving you the same thing? Every day I come to admire you, to applaud you, to delight myself with the brightness of your eyes and the charm of your voice—"

"He must be in the house," thought the actress, and she peeped through a hole in the curtain. The audi-ence had just commenced to assemble. She resumed the reading:

"Of your voice. You are indeed beautiful and charm-ing, and happy are they who may approach you. What would I not give to be near you always? Would the treasures of all the world be worth one of your smiles? No."

"Ah, that is nice!" she sighed; and turning the page she continued:

"No! And yet I dare to love you—to tell you that I love you still more. I venture to beg you not to reject my homage."

"He begins to explain himself," said she to herself, "and I shall know"—and she continued—"my homage. If this expression of my love does not offend you, place this bouquet of violets in your bosom. Oh! then I shall be the happiest of men!"

"Well," said she, "no signature, no name given; but let us see—here is a postscript."

"P. S.—If you are curious to know who writes to you, look up to the fourth tier; my legs will hang over!"

The note dropped from the hand of the actress, and her arms nearly dropped from her shoulders.

LOUIS NAPOLEON AND THE SULTAN OF TURKEY.

These two monarchs, a few years ago, so cordially united in the struggle to maintain the integ-rity of the Ottoman Empire, are both descendants of American ladies; the one a grandson and the other a great-grandson. The ladies were born in the same neighborhood, on the Island of Martinique, one of the West Indies. They were of French origin, and com-panions and intimate friends in childhood and youth. They were Josephine de Tascher and Miss S——. The history of Josephine is generally known. She went to France and was married to M. de Beauharnais, by whom she had one son, Eugene, and a daughter, Hor-tense. Some time after the death of Beauharnais, Jose-phine was married to Napoleon Bonaparte, and became Empress of France. Her daughter, Hortense, was mar-ried to Louis Bonaparte, then King of Holland, and the present Emperor of France is her son by this marriage. But now for the romance of the affair: Josephine's bosom-friend quitted the island of Martinique some time before she did. But the vessel that was carrying her to France was attacked and taken by Algerine cor-sairs, and the crew and passengers made prisoners; but the corsair ship was, in turn, attacked and pil-laged by Tunis pirates, and Miss S. was carried by them to Constantinople and offered for sale as a slave. Her extraordinary beauty and accomplishments found her a purchaser in the Sultan himself, and she soon became the chief lady in his seraglio, and Sultana of Turkey. Mahmoud II. was her son; Abdul Medjid was the son of Mahmoud; and the present Sultan, Abdul Aziz Khan, is the grandson of Mahmoud. Thus, the two sovereigns, who occupy so large a space in the world's eye, are de-scended from two American Creole girls, who were playmates in their youth, and as remarkable for their beauty and excellent dispositions as for their varied and singular fortunes. Both these women, in the height of their power, remembered the friends of their youth, and provided munificently for their welfare. Many of the relatives of the Sultaness left the Island of Martinique and settled in Constantinople, where their descendants still reside and enjoy the favor of the Sultan. The Sultaness died in 1811, the Empress Jose-phine in 1814.

A Self-Loading Ship.—M. De Coraux, of Lyons, France, has invented and constructed a ship, which he claims can load or unload itself automatically in 40 minutes. The captain and the mechanician are the only crew on board, the working and the manipula-tion of the vessel and cargo being all performed by steam applied to the ingenious machinery. The loading is carried on by trucks and wagons, which can contain corn, flour, bales, cattle, horses, etc. The vessel is, as may be expected, of a peculiar character, but its exterior bears all the signs of sea-worthiness. The great changes are on deck and the interior. The former is covered with lines of rail, reaching from one extremity to the other, while at midships there are two turn-tables. In front and rear there are two or more immense cages, containing 8, 12, or 16 wagons, and the rails on which the wagons rest are adapted exactly to the rails of the deck. A cable is hooked to the wagons, which traverse the deck throughout its length, and the stern of the boat having been previously placed on a level with the quay, which is also furnished with rails, or may be, perhaps, a portion of a terminus, the wagons glide without the least interruption from the vessel to the land, and vice versa.

The London Times.—The "Lounger in the Clubs" of an illustrated contemporary, says: "If you have studied the Times lately, you will have seen that it has, in many instances, been so utterly wrong in its political vaticinations as to bring you to the conclusion that it must of late have been smitten with blindness. Indeed, rumor says that its proprietors have been quite alarmed by its vacillating conduct, the want of fore-sight of its conductors, its egregious mistakes, and its consequent loss of influence. The profits of the paper are as large as ever—perhaps larger — but the pro-prietors see and regret that its influence is decreasing every day; and it is confidently asserted that the chief proprietor, whom I need not name, has decided, and made known his decision, that unless more caution be observed some change in the staff must be made. The rumor is current at the Clubs and in the House, and is generally believed. Some indeed say that a political censor either is, or is to be, appointed to overlook all articles before they are printed."

Value of Land in London.—Another illus-tration of the value of land in the city is afforded by the history of a little piece at the corner of Lombard street, formerly the site of Spooner & Co.'s banking-house. When these premises were pulled down, the ground was let to the Agra and Masterman's Bank for 99 years, at £6,000 a year. Owing to a change in the arrangements of that bank, it was next sold to the City Offices Company, at a premium of £70,000, and a build-ing is now being erected upon it, at a cost of £70,000, the gross rental of which is estimated at £22,000, the London and County Bank paying £12,000 for the ground floor and basement.

FUN FOR THE FAMILY

An American gentleman traveling in Ireland hired a pure native as a servant, who he thought could give him information about the country. Observing a beautiful residence at some distance, the following colloquy ensued:

Gent.—"Patrick, who lives there?"

Servt.—"It's Mr. Fitzgerald that's dead, sir."

Gent.—"What did he die of?"

Servt.—"He died of a Thursday, sir."

Gent.—"How long has he been dead, Patrick?"

Servt.—"If he had lived till next Thursday, sir, he'd be dead a year."

Gent.—"Have you taken anything to drink to-day, Patrick?"

Servt.—"I wull, sir."

Gent.—"Well, what shall it be? will you take raw liquor, or will you have grog, or shall I make you a toddy?"

Servt.—"If your honor please, I will take raw liquor first, thin I can be drinking the grog while you are making the toddy."

A waggish cobbler, once in Rome, put forth a proclamation, that he'd be willing to disclose, for a due consideration, a secret which the cobbling world could ill afford to lose—the way to make, in one short day, a hundred pair of shoes. From every quarter, to the sight, there ran a thousand fellows; tanners, cobblers, boot-men, shoe-men, jolly leather-sellers—all redolent of beer and smoke, and cobbler's wax and hides; each fellow pays his thirty pence, and calls it cheap besides. Silence! The cobbler enters, and casts around his eyes, then curls his lip—the rogue!—then frowns, and then looks wondrous wise. "My friends," he says, "'tis simple quite, the plan that I propose; and every one of you, I think, might learn it if you chose. A good sharp knife is all you need, in carrying out my plan; so easy is it, none can fail, let him be child or man: to make a hundred pair of shoes, just go back to your shops, and take a hundred pair of boots and cut off all the tops!"

The New York Herald had the following startling caption to a long editorial:

"Shall we have the cholera or some other dreadful disease in New York?"

To which the Louisville Journal replied:

"You pays your money and you has your choice."

A would-be agreeable, taking his seat be-tween Madame de Stael and the reigning beauty of the day, said:

"How happy I am to be thus seated between a wit and a beauty!"

"Yes," replied Madame de Stael, "and without pos-sessing either."

A lady was told, the other day, by a travel-ing gentleman, that every lady who had a small mouth was provided with a husband by Government.

"Ith it pothibul?" said the lady, making her mouth as little as she could.

The gentleman added: "That if she had a large mouth she was provided with two husbands."

"My gracious!" exclaimed the lady, at the same time throwing her mouth open to its full extent.

The gentleman became alarmed, made his escape, and has not been heard of since.

Woman (says the London Spectator), by a beneficent provision of nature, is exempt from the temptations to gourmandise. Few women worth a straw care a straw what they eat (?) and as few men do not care. To the last day of their lives the best and cleverest women will eat the horrid imitation of sponge called buns, and for those who can eat buns with a relish, gastronomy is an impertinence.

The Rockland Gazette, in announcing the receipt of a new work, speaks thus briefly and to the point: "We have received a book, entitled 'Arabella: a Tale of Tenderness.' The author is a fool."

Boileau being frequently called upon by an idle, ignorant person, who complained to him that he did not return his visits. "Sir," said the French satirist, "we are not upon equal terms; you call upon me merely to get rid of your time; when I call upon you, I lose mine."

The past fall, as a lady, modestly attired, was on her way to the city of New York, on board one of the Hudson River night boats, she sat quietly reading in the lady's cabin, when a flashily-dressed dame, mis-taking her for a servant, rather rudely accosted her with:

"Do you know this cabin is for the ladies?"

"Certainly I do," was the answer; "and have been wondering for some time why you are here!"

"I don't want mother to marry again," said a little boy, one morning, at the breakfast-table.

"Why not?" was asked, with some surprise.

"Because," said he, "I've lost one father, and I don't want the trouble of getting acquainted with another."

An elderly lady, telling her age, remarked that she was born on the 23d of April. Her husband, who was present, observed:

"I always thought you were born on the 1st of April?"

"People well might think so," replied the lady, "in the choice I made of a husband."

There is much wisdom in a few words spoken by an English farmer, who advised "to feed land before it is hungry, to rest it before it is weary, and to weed it before it is foul."

"Mother, did you hear sissy swear?"

"No, my dear; what did she say?"

"Why, she said she wasn't going to wear her darned stockings to church!"

A young lady, whose father is improving the family mansion, insists upon having a beau window put in for her benefit.

With what letters should poets and historians write? With E E (ease).

"You labor too hard on your composition, doctor," said a flippant clergyman to a venerable divine; I write a sermon in two hours, and think no-thing of it.

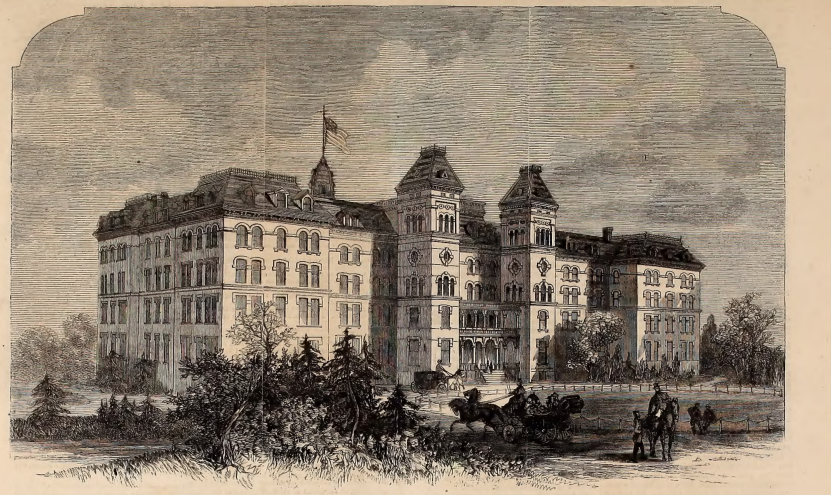
"So do your congregation," quoth the doctor.

The tears we shed for those we love are the streams which water the garden of the heart, and with-out them it would be dry and barren, and the gentle flowers of affection would perish.

A newspaper editor says he felt called upon to publish Father Lewis's sermon on the "Locality of Hell," as it was a question in which nearly all his read-ers were deeply interested.

"Johnny, how many cakes did you have on Christmas day?"

"Five: first a sponge cake, than an almond cake, then a currant cake, then a sweet cake, and then a stoma-cake!"



Henry Ward Beecher says, that he would as soon go a courting with his father's old love-letters, as go to church and carry a book to pray out of.

"I have not loved lightly," as the man said when he married a widow weighing 300 pounds.

An advertiser in one of the papers says he has a cottage to let containing eight rooms, and an acre of land.

"I haae the best wife in the world," re-marked an ill-used husband; "she always strikes me with the soft end of the broom."

"It is a great misfortune," says La Bruyere, "not to have mind enough to talk well, nor judgment enough to be silent."

VIEW OF THE UNITED STATES COLLEGE OF BUSINESS AND FINANCE, AT NEW HAVEN, CONN.

U. S. COLLEGE OF BUSINESS AND FINANCE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

"Educational Union of Business Men."

A MEETING of merchants, bankers and friends of education was held at the St. Nicholas Hotel on Saturday evening, 7th of April, to give expression and aid to the laudable efforts of the board of managers and executive officers of the "United States College of Business and Finance," New Haven, Conn., in founding an institution, whose course of study and business operations so worthily represents the needs of the mercantile and business professions. A number of those present were once students of Profs. Thomas H. Stevens and C. B. Wells, now the executive officers of the College.

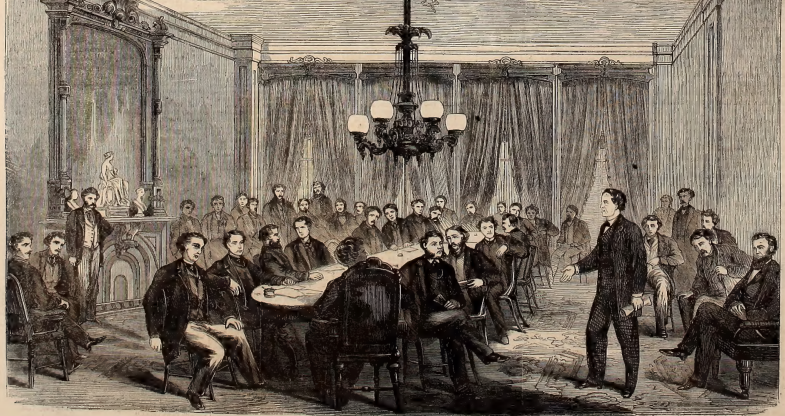
The meeting passed resolutions highly complimentary to these gentlemen, Ex-Governor Holley, and other managers, and pledged themselves to use their influence to increase the endowments for the erection of new college buildings, the establishing of additional professorships, and to cooperate together, as an association, to advance the cause of education and increase the character of the business community.

We present in this issue a sketch of the meeting, the new college building, and the resolutions adopted—believing that the public, and friends of education everywhere, will rejoice over the union of those two grand interests of our country—educationand business:

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That the mercantile and business community of New York City have long felt the want of an institution of practical education, that should thoroughly fit the merchant, accountant and banker to worthily fill their respective stations.

Resolved, That the mercantile profession of New York recognize in the "United States College of Business and Finance" at New Haven, Conn., an institution justly calculated to meet this want, increase the character and wisdom of the body collectively, and through its graduates, its members individually.



Resolved, That in Ex-Governor A. H. Holley, Hon. H. M. Welch, Wm. Williams, Darius Wells, Amos F. Barnes and R. C. Talbott, we recognize experienced business men—and talent worthy of entire confidence in them as a Board of Managers of a business and financial institution of practical education.

Resolved, That in the persons of Thomas H. Stevens, President, and Charles B. Wells, Secretary, and executive officers of the said "United States College of Business and Finance," New Haven, Conn., we see men eminently adapted by education, experience, moral worth and executive ability, for their respective positions of trust and responsibility.

Resolved, That in the hundreds of young men who have graduated under their guardianship and teachings, now filling stations of trust and profit in this city, and in the several departments under the General Government, we find unmistakable evidence of careful training in all the complicated details of trade, justly objecting none of us, and endearing Professors Stevens and Wells to all, for their special efforts in our behalf.

Resolved, That we commend their patriotism in behalf of disabled soldiers, in admitting them to the institution at half the regular rates, and that we shall co-operate in giving preference and employment to those who bear the honorable scars of war.

Resolved, That it is our duty, in consideration of the foregoing, and we hereby do form ourselves into an association under the name of "Educational Union of Business Men," under which we mutually pledge ourselves to give such assistance, and use such influence as may be in our power, to aid the graduates of said college in procuring positions and employment, and to protect them and each other in their and our legitimate rights in the profession.

MEETING OF MERCHANTS, BANKERS, AND FRIENDS OF EDUCATION, AT THE ST. NICHOLAS HOTEL, NEW YORK, ON SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 7.

A CHINOOK HEAD FLATTENING MACHINE.

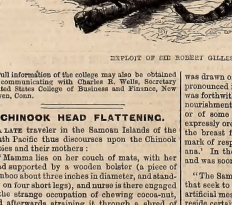
Resolved, That we, as members of the various business professions, shall labor jointly, and individually—faithfully by word and act—ever using such influence as we may possess—to increase the endowments already so nobly begun, for the erection and completion of the new college buildings, the establishing of such professorships, libraries, &c., as shall best aid the true culture for business men.

Resolved, That Henry R. Heath, of No. 354 Broadway, be hereby appointed receiver and depository for such subscriptions and endowments—to make a report of progress at the next meeting of the association.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolutions and the minutes of this meeting be published in each of the New York papers as the President shall select, and a copy of the same be mailed to Thomas H. Stevens, President of the "United States College of Business and Finance," New Haven, Conn.

The conditions upon which business men and graduates of the college can become members and avail themselves of the benefits of this Association, can be obtained by addressing Charles S. Goodwin, Corresponding Secretary, 328 Broadway, New York.



EXPLOIT OF SIR ROBERT GILLESPIE.

Full information of the college may also be obtained by communicating with Charles E. Wells, Secretary United States College of Business and Finance, New Haven, Conn.

CHINOOK HEAD FLATTENING.

A LATE traveler in the Samoan Islands of the South Pacific thus discourses upon the Chinook babies and their mothers:

"Mamma lies on her couch of mats, with her head supported by a wooden bolster (a piece of bamboo about three inches in diameter, and standing on four short legs), and nurse is there engaged in the strange occupation of chewing cocoa-nut, and afterwards straining it through a shred of rag. But where is baby? Guided by its mother's eyes, you discover, lying by the wall, three smooth, flat stones, arranged something like the brick-bat trap contrived by European juveniles for the snaring of birds, and beyond this your astonished eyes are greeted by the sight of a naked little black body and a pair of chubby legs, quite hearty and promising, and much more lively than one might expect of legs belonging to a head hidden under a heap of stones.

BUSHUKULOMPO HAIRDRESSING.

"It is, however, not a case of infanticide; the stones form but the customary cap worn for a season by the Samoan baby, and to the end that its head may be of a 'good shape.' It may suit some folks very well to be content with just whatever shaped cranium nature may please to assign them, but the Samoan is not so easily pleased; his notion of a perfect head is one that is flat from the forehead to the crown, and straight from the chin to the temples. Such heads are not commonly produced by nature, but that is no bar to the realization of the Samoan's desire; therefore, as soon as the child is born, it is at once laid flat on its back, and the top and sides of its head are walled in with flat stones, heavy enough to impede the natural development of the skull.

"This lying apart from the mother necessitates the adoption of some other mode than the natural one of feeding, and so we come at the mystery of the nurse and the cocoa-nut chewing. For the first three days the infant was fed with the juice of the chewed kernel of the cocoa-nut, expressed through a piece of native cloth, and dropped into the mouth. On the third day a woman of the sacred craft was sent for to examine the mother's milk. A little was put into a cup with water and two heated stones, and then examined. If it had the slightest curdled appearance, she pronounced it bitter and poisonous. This process she repeated two or three times a day for several days, until it was drawn off free from coagulation, and then she pronounced it sweet and wholesome, and the child was forthwith permitted to partake of its proper nourishment. Occasionally the god of the father, or of some member of the family, spoke, and expressly ordered that the child have nothing but the breast for an indefinite time. This was a mark of respect to the god, and called his 'banana.' In these cases the child grew amazingly, and was soon literally as plump as a banana.

"The Samoans are not the only savage nation that seek to improve the shape of their heads by artificial means. Near the river Columbia there reside certain Indians, who are distinguished from other tribes by the appellation of "flat-heads." In reality, however, it is only a section of the tribe—they who are called 'Chinooks'—that constantly resort to this singular custom of distorting the skull. As in the case of the Samoan, it is effected while the child is very young, and the bones are soft and cartilaginous. The child is placed in a kind of cradle, with its back lying on a board, to which it is lashed with strong thongs. The back of the head is supported by a pillow of moss or rabbit-skins, and an inclined piece of wood is so placed over the forehead that, being fastened with cords and tightly pressed down, it gradually flattens the head to the required shape. This bandage is so fastened that it is attended with very little torture to the unconscious infant—the pressure being very slight at first, but it is gradually increased. The length of time required to complete the flattening operation is from five to eight months. During this time the infant is never taken out; the bandages are repeatedly removed for the purpose of cleansing, but the head and the shoulders are carefully kept in one position. When the infant requires the breast, the outer end of the lever that comes over the nose is loosed, and the cradle, occupant and all, is lifted up and turned aside, so that the infant may come to the breast without disengaging itself, or disturbing the arrangement.'

SEPULCHRE, OR SACRED BUSH, OF KALALAS, NEW CALEDONIA.

We are not so sure but some American mothers do about as foolish things with their babes as do the Samoan mothers.

AN EXPLOIT OF SIR ROBERT CILLESPIE.

A REMARKABLE instance of the confidence of a horse in a firm rider, and his own courage, has been lately conspicuously evinced in the case of an Arab, mentioned by Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton Smith. General Sir Robert Gillespie happened, when mounted on this animal, to be present on the race-course of Calcutta, during one of the great Hindoo festivals, when several hundred thousand people had assembled. On a sudden, an alarm was given that a tiger had escaped from his keepers. Sir Robert immediately snatched a boar-spear, and rode to attack this formidable enemy. The tiger was probably confounded by the crowd, but the moment he perceived Sir Robert, he crouched to spring at him. At that instant, the gallant soldier on his gallant steed leapt right over the tiger, Sir Robert striking the spear through the animal's spine!

This horse was a small gray, but he possessed another which has become almost historical. It was a favorite black charger, bred at the Cape of Good Hope, and carried with him to India. When the noble soldier fell at the storming of Kalunga, his charger was put up for sale, and after great competition, was knocked down to the privates of the 8th Dragoons, who actually contributed their prize-money, to the amount of £500, to retain this memorial of their beloved commander. The beautiful charger was always led at the head of the regiment on a march, and at the station at Cawnpore took his ancient post, at the colorstand, where the salute of passing squadrons was given at drill and on reviews. When the regiment was ordered home, the funds of the privates running low, he was bought by a gentleman, who provided a paddock for him, where he might pass the remainder of his days in comfort; but when the corps had departed, and the sound of the trumpet was heard no more, the gallant steed pined, refused his food, and on the first opportunity, being led out for exercise, he broke from his groom, galloped to his ancient station on parade, neighed loudly again and again; and there, on the spot where he had so often proudly borne his beloved master, he dropped down and died!

HAIRDRESSING IN AFRICA.

DR. LIVINGSTONE, who touches a little on everything in his travels, from the discovery of a new river, to the fashion of an African belle's necklace, gives us a description of the modes of hairdressing upon and about the Zambesi. Its publication may give some hints to our own Fifth Avenue for next season.

LUNDA LADY.

"The hair is gathered in plaits, close over the whole surface of the head, the lines running fore and aft, and the ends hanging down in ringlets over the neck. In both sexes the patterns chosen are various. Some will have only five or seven plaits, while others will prefer as many as 30 or more. Some again have the whole of the head dressed backward; others wear the front part plaited toward the sides, with the ends hanging over the temples. Formerly young soldiers were not allowed to trees their hair until they had killed a man, when they shaved the whole of the head, leaving only a single plait. Another was added for each man killed, till they had reached the fifth, when they were privileged to wear a whole head of hair. Now-a-days, excepting in some of the remote Galla districts, the number of tresses depends on the age of the wearer, rather than on his prowess. Youths and young women usually shave the crown like a priest, while mothers and full-grown men treat the whole. Some ladies have their butter dashed on quickly, and then some scant; but the great go among the dandies to appear in the morning with a huge pat of butter (about two ounces) placed on the top of the head, which, as it gradually melts in the sun, runs over the hair, down the neck, over the forehead, and often into the eyes, thereby causing much smarting.

HANNO APPROACHING THE ISLAND OF WILD MEN OR GORILLAS.]

"They came frequently and asked for the looking-glass, and the remarks they made—while it was carefully in reading, and apparently not attending to them—on first seeing themselves therein, were exceedingly ridiculous: 'Is this me?' 'What a big mouth I have!' 'My ears are as big as pumpkin leaves!' 'I have no chin at all!' Or, 'I would have been pretty, but am spoiled by these high cheek-bones!' 'See how my head shoots up in the middle!' laughing vociferously all the time at their own jokes. They readily perceive any defect in each other, and give nicknames accordingly. One man came alone to have a quiet glass at his own features once, when he thought I was asleep; after twisting his mouth about in various directions, he remarked to himself, 'People say I am ugly, and how very ugly I am, indeed!'

"The man of a village came to our encampment, and as they followed the Bushmanlong mode of dressing their hair, we had an opportunity of examining it for the first time. A circle of bald at the top of the head, eight inches or more in diameter, is woven into a cone, eight or ten inches high, with an obtuse apex bent in front as sea a shepherd's crook, giving it somewhat the appearance of a helmet. Some have only a cone four or five inches in diameter at the base. It is said that the hair of animals is added; but the sides of the cone are woven something like basket-work. The head man of this village, instead of having his brought to a point, had it prolonged into a wand, which extended a full yard from the crown of the head. The hair on the forehead, above the ears, and behind, is all shaven off, so they appear somewhat as if a cap of liberty were cocked upon the top of the head. After the weaving is performed, it is said to be painful, as the scalp is drawn tightly up, but they become used to it. Some proved me that all the people were formerly ornamented in this way, but be discouraged it. I rubbed him to discourage the practices of knocking out the front teeth, but he smiled, as if in that case the fashion would be too strong for him, as it was for Solitaire.

"All the Batoka tribes follow the odious custom. This is done by both sexes, and though the under-teeth, being relieved from the attrition of the upper, grow long and somewhat bent out, and thereby cause the under-lip to protrude in a most unsightly way, no young woman thinks herself accomplished until she has got rid of the upper incisors. This custom gives all the Batoka an uncouth, old-man-like appearance. They are so attached to a practice that even Sebituane was unable to eradicate it. He issued orders that none of the children living under him should undergo the operation, but when their parents, and disobedience to his mandates was usually punished with severity; but, notwithstanding this, the children would appear in the streets without their incisors, and no one would confess to the deed. When questioned respecting the origin of this practice, the Batoka reply that their object is to be like oxen; and those who retain their teeth they consider to resemble zebras. Whether this is the true reason or not is difficult to say, but it is noticeable that the veneration for oxen which prevails in many tribes should have been adopted with hatred of the zebra, as among the Bakwains, that this operation is performed at the same age that circumcision is in other tribes, and that in that ceremony is unknown. The custom is so universal, that a person who has his teeth is considered ugly, and occasionally when the Batoka borrowed my looking-glass the disparaging remark would be made respecting boys or girls who still retained their teeth: 'Look at their great teeth!' Some of the Makololo give a more facetious explanation of the custom. They say that the wife of a chief, having in a quarrel bitten her husband's hand, he in revenge ordered her front teeth to be knocked out, and all the men in the tribe followed his example; but this does not explain why they afterward knocked out their own."

CORILLAS.

For nearly 200 years naturalists have been vaguely acquainted of the existence of a certain species of ape, of a physiognomy milder and more human-like than the ordinary race of monkeys. One of these, "a small ape, hideous, without cheek-pouches, and without the ischial callosities, clothed with black hair, and with a facial angle of about 60 degrees," was brought from the western coast of Africa and anatomized by Tyson. This interesting little monkey was christened Homo Sylvestris, or, as we should say, a wood-man. Tyson in 1699, entitled "The Anatomie of a Pigmie compared with that of a Monkey, an Ape, and a Man," the main features of his newly-discovered animal's organization are discussed.

This, however, by no means the earliest record we have of the existence of man-like apes. More than 2,000 years ago, Hanno, a Carthaginian, was sent out by his Government to circumnavigate the African continent. In the "Periplus," a sort of log of his marvelous voyage kept by the ancient sea-dog, we read, at starting, "it was decreed by the Carthaginians that Hanno should undertake a voyage beyond the pillars of Hercules and found Lybo-Phœnician cities. He accordingly sailed with 60 ships of 50 oars each, and a body of men and women to the number of 30,000, with provisions and other necessaries . . . On the other day, passing the streams of fire, we came to a bay called the Horn of the South. In the recess there was an island like the first, having a lake, and in this there was another island full of wild men. But much the greater part of them there were women with hairy bodies, whom the interpreters called 'gorillas.' But pursuing them, we were not able to take the men: they all escaped, being able to climb the precipices, and defended themselves with pieces of rock. But three females, and not unwilling to those who led them, were not willing to follow. However, having killed them, we flayed them and conveyed them to Carthage for we did not sail any further, as provisions began to fail."

Professor Owen expresses it as highly probable that the creature recorded on the western coast of Africa is identical with that seen by Hanno and named "Gorilla, however, whose opportunities of observation could make him the most reliable authority on all matters connected with the gorilla, differs in his report from Owen. Du Chaillu says: "The huge gorilla consumes so great an amount of vegetable food, that the considerable number could have found sustenance on such an island as Hanno mentions. Moreover, unless its habits have undergone a very great change, it is not likely that the males would have retreated and left their females in the lurch. In my experience the male invariably advances toward the foe and secures the safe retreat of its female, and on such occasions acts with ferocious courage. Again, to capture even a single gorilla by force would be impossible, as I think, impossible. None who has seen the animal in its native forests, and watched the exhibition of its enormous strength, will take such into account. It scorns prostrate, therefore, that Hanno met only the troglodytes niger, or chimpanzee, which is common in the mountainous forests of Senegambia, and which does not attack man.

So much of public attention has been drawn within a few years past to these wonderful animals, that everything bearing on their history is of interest. At present they are simply famous for though a few years ago we had an opportunity of seeing the skeleton of Dr. Wyman's fine collection of gorilla skins and bones—he opened a box which contained one, Dr. Brady—Yes, so far, we have not had the living animal—a hint that we give to Barnum.

We think it will be an interesting communication to all those who have magic-lanterns and stereoscopes, to learn that Mr. Edward Anthony, of the firm of E. & H. T. Anthony & Co., has invented, and will shortly bring to this country, after securing all Europe, and bringing away the whole of every important city there, the art of reciprocity views without number, and of every spot under the sun to which the camera penetrated. The event will form a new era in the parlor art of this country.

The name of Union Adams has become so much of a household word, that the following communication seems thrown away. The name is an index recollection of the man who has done more to create generation about them, and the secret is simply this: they have made it a point to do what they advertise, and the principle of "not for a day, but for all time," and his motto, "Live and let live," has made him a good friend always, for all buyers of shirts, hosiery and gloves.

If People who suffer from the dull stupidity that meets us everywhere in spring, and too often in all seasons of the year, knew how quick it could be cured by taking Dr. Tutt's Sarsaparilla Pills, and thereby invigorating their systems, we should have better neighbors as well as better health to deal with.

Barnum's New American Museum, Broadway, between Spring and Prince streets. This extensive establishment does not advertise in the New York Herald. Another Glittering Novelty. Every Afternoon at 2; Evening at 7½. A Grand Historical Spectacular Drama, specially adapted for the Museum, entitled THE BATTLE OF NILE; OR, THE SPECTRE OF THE NILE, with new gorgeous scenery, wonderful mechanical contrivances, and a full Drama Company. Moving Panoramas of the Nile will be introduced, with the addition of a Brass Band, Orchestra and Chorus. First appearance of the Phenomenon, MASTER ALLEY TUE-KER, the Double-Headed Nightingale, whose performance is pleasing and remarkable. A starting woman, THE SPECTRE, a wonderful, unique, and unexplained mystery. The AUSTRALIAN LIVING BIRD SHOW, comprising a great many birds never before seen. Great Living Curiosities: Giant and Giantess; Two Dwarfs; Two Quadruple Gnts; Albert Brown; Three-Legged Bull; Persian Sheep; Cosmoramas, Learned Seal, Happy Family, and a host of Rare and Curious Things. Admission, 50 cents, children under ten, 15 cents.

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND

Contains the Lady's Guide to Beauty: Useful Recipes for Housekeepers; Every Gentleman's Companion in Athletics; the Parlor Magician; How to Make all kinds of Liquors without Distillation; Recipes for Making Great Living Curiosities; Giant and Giantess; Two Dwarfs; Two Quadruple Gnts; Albert Brown; Three-Legged Bull; Persian Sheep; Cosmoramas, Learned Seal, Happy Family, and a host of Rare and Curious Things. Send orders to Box 3416, Post Office, N. Y. 533-5

To Nervous Sufferers of both Sexes.

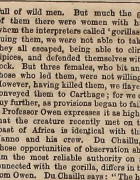
A Medical Gentleman having the past ten years cured a great many sufferers who had undergone large expenses in modes of treatment without success, is still willing to assist others from principle. On receipt of a post-paid addressed envelope, a copy of the formula of the prescription will be sent by JOHN M. DAGNALL, 7 Clinton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Razors and Rogueries of New York.

Price 50 cents. Sent free by HUNTER & CO., Boston, N. H. 549-52

SENT SOMETHING EVERYBODY SHOULD READ AND KEEP FREE BY MAIL. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, 663 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. FREE

These Curious Pastimes. 25 Cents.



Bridal Etiquette—How to Win and Woo—How to Behave—How to Dress—How to Correspond—How to Woo—How to Write Letters Correctly—How to Become an Actor.

THE LIBRARY OF LOVE. Three Amusing Volumes for 75 cents.

Poet's Companion, 25 cents. Parlor Theatricals, 25 cents. Fireside Games, 50 cents. Shakspeare's Proverbs, 25 cents. Love Oracle, 25 cents. 500 Curious Puzzles, 25 cents. Parlor Pantomimes, 25 cents. Comic Recitations, 25 cents. How to Converse Correctly, 25 cents. Address letters, W. C. WEMYSS, 675 Broadway, N. Y.

The Little Joker and A FINELY COLORED PHOTOGRAPH sent in envelope for 25 cents. Address, Box 5,607, P. O., New York.

FASHIONS FOR 1866.

FIRST PREMIUM.

IMPROVED

$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5

THE EMBODIMENT OF

PRACTICAL UTILITY AND EXTREME SIMPLICITY

Originally Patented May 15, 1860; improvement patented June 5, 1863. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with Cumming's attachment, is most Wonderful and Elegantly Constructed Novelty; is noiseless in operation, has no complicated wheels, and works horizontal, sews with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD OF ALL KINDS. The Double Running Stitch now perfect and regular than by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making it stitches each motion of the wheel. Will Gather, Hem, Ruffle, Skirt, Tuck, Run up Breadths, &c.; its compact machine needs. Warranted not to get out of order for THREE YEARS. It has taken the PREMIUMS in New York and Brooklyn, and received the FULL APPROVAL of All the principal Journals, and of those who have used it. The only Low Price Machine Patented, and that has received a PREMIUM. Beware of the same price are SPURIOUSNESS.

"This beautiful Machine makes the Running Stitch on the ends of every yard per minute."—Frank Leslie's.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand sewing."—N. Y. Tribune.

"This is a genuine, practical, cheap, sent to any part of the country per Express, packed in box, and fitted up in strong wood case, for $5. Sale Delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal cumulating Inducements. Circulars Free.

Address all orders to

FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.

tf Office, 102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

SUBSCRIBE!

FOR COUSIN CHARLIE'S MONTHLY, and get those Sparkling, Bright and Brilliant Stories. Sunbeam Papers, and Stories by Charlie Bourbon St., Chicago, Ill. year. Club Rates: Club of 10, $9; Club of 20, $16. Address as above.

COUSIN CHARLIE'S MONTHLY,

559-3 Chicago, Ill.

C. M. DUNN & CO.,

Established 1850.

Managers of the most extensive Gift Sale in the world. Have been successful in nearly 100 cities throughout the country, offer Greater Inducements than ever before.

$20,000 Diamonds, Gold and Silver Watches, Articles of Silverware, etc., worth over $1,000,000.

All to be Sold for $1 each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES.

10 Grand Piano Fortes	$800 to	$1,200
100 Diamond Rings, Cluster Pattern	400 to	600
200 Gold Hunting Cased Watches	200 to	300
100 Ladies' Gold Watches	90 to	125
1,000 Ladies' and Gents' Silver Watches	40 to	75
500 Rosewood Piano Forte Melodeons	65 to	75
1,000 Cabinet Diamond Rings	45 to	75
1,000 Fine Carbuncle and Garnet Rings	25 to	50
3,000 Sets Knives and Forks	6 to	15
3,000 Sets Gold Bows and Table Spoons	6 to	15
3,000 Napkin Rings, per pair	6 to	15
3,000 Silver Pencil Cases	6 to	15
10,000 Gold Pens, silver en case & pencil	5 to	10
5,000 Gold and Silver Vest Chain Holders	5 to	10
5,000 California Diamond Rings	5 to	10
5,000 Fine Carbuncle Sleeve Buttons	5 to	10
5,000 Vest, Guard and Neck Chains	5 to	10
5,000 Gold Thimbles, Pencils and Keys	5 to	10
5,000 Drinking Cups and Goblets	5 to	10
5,000 Gold Lockets and Medallions	5 to	10
175,000 Other Articles of Jewelry, Silverware, etc.,	6 to	25

Sealed certificates of the articles are well mixed, and sent, promiscuously, to each purchaser of a Photograph of any premium, on receiving 25 cents therefor. Purchasers pay every fine, and worth the money. After opening the certificate, it is at your option to send Dollar's worth; for the low price can not be less than One Dollar for the smallest article on our list. We will send photograph album, worth $1, bound ivory-ornamented photograph album, worth $1, which may be ordered of any certificate sent us, with the possibility of drawing a watch or piano worth $100 to $1,000.

Five Photographs, one gold watch and a silver butter-knife as premium, price for all: $1 11 for $5, with a napkin ring: 20 for $5, with a $5 picture album worth $5; 65 for $10, with a fine gold watch or 50 picture album, worth $12; 100 for $15, with a fine gold and silver jeweled hunting-cased watch, worth $25.

Agents wanted everywhere, to whom the most liberal inducements ever yet offered to those who will act as such. Send for circulars. Address as above,

C. M. DUNN & CO.,

Headquarters 130 Nassau St., New York.

Curious—$ converted into $20, $50, $100, or $1000. A sample given. Send red stamp to pay postage. Address GRAGG THOMPSON, 81 Nassau street, N. Y. 550-3

Employment at your Own Homes—either sex—suitable for a livelihood, or leisure hours, in every city and town. Business new. Address with stamp, Box 1,641 Detroit, Mich. 549-52

Bradley's Duplex Elliptic

OR DOUBLE SPRING

HOOP SKIRTS.

They will not BEND OR BREAK, like the Single Springs, but will ever PRESERVE their GRACEFUL and PERFECT shape, where three or four ordinary skirts have been thrown aside as useless. Each hoop is composed of two finely-tempered Steel Springs, braided TOGETHER and FIRMLY TOGETHER, EDGE to EDGE, forming the strongest, most FLEXIBLE, and the LIGHTEST HOOP made. In fact, for the Promenade, or the House, the Church, Theatre, Railroad Cars, Carriages, Crowded Omnibuses, etc., etc., they are UNEQUALED, combining COMFORT, DURABILITY and ELEGANCE with LIGHTNESS of Shape which has made the "DUPLEX ELLIPTIC" the

Standard Skirt

Of the present day.

For Young Ladies, Misses and Children, they are Superior to all others. Inquire for the

DUPLEX ELLIPTIC OR DOUBLE SPRING SKIRT.

Manufactured exclusively by

WEMYSS, BRADLEY & CARY,

Sole Owners of Patent.

97 Chambers, and 79 & 81 Reade Sts., New York City.

For sale in all first class STORES throughout the UNITED STATES and ELSEWHERE. 552-59

CELEBRATED

GOLDEN PENS.

These Pens are warranted not to corrode with proper usage, and are recommended to any Belle or Beau before introduced to the public. They are well tempered and smooth; made of the finest steel elastic material, plated with a BEAUTIFUL GOLDEN FINISH, giving them the most attractive appearance, and in writing and durability they are unsurpassed. They never fail in giving perfect satisfaction, and nothing could please better. Golden Pens can compare with them, many even using them in preference to the solid and more expensive article. In point of economy, they are CHEAPER than any other pen, requiring no holders, pens, or inkstands, and every way PREFERABLE. Their peculiar construction renders them durable, flexible, and their many and regood qualities make them equally suitable for the School or Counting House. Their best recommend is their being the rapid introduction they are receiving in Colleges, Banking Houses and Public Establishments generally.

CELEBRATED GOLDEN PENS are the best in the long run, one will out-wear a dozen common steel pens. One dozen, assorted, sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of gold (pocket style), sent by mail, postpaid, for 50 cents. Gentlemen's size, in neat boxes, gut in elegant case, sent by mail for $2 25. Agents wanted. Our agents are making $15 per day. Send for circulars, to

UNION GOLDEN PEN CO.,

24 State Street, Chicago, Ill.

Published this Day.

THORNTON;

OR,

The Younger Brother.

Notices from the English Press:

"The tale is full of remarkable delineation of being as true to nature as truth itself, and as strange and exciting as the wildest fiction. We can not but hope this compliment we can well put into words, when we say that the earlier portion of the work strongly reminds us of 'Ormaine' and 'De Vere.'"—London Court Journal.

"This work abounds in interest. From internal evidence it would seem written by a person conversant with mingling in the highest society."—London Quarterly Review.

PRICE FIFTY CENTS.

Mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price.

F. A. BRADY, Publisher, No. 23 Ann St., N. Y.

Patent Sharp and Long Fish Hook. Each hook has a pair of long, sharp spines upon the fishes mouth; sportsmen and boys all want them. Sample sprits wanted. Send 25 cents and stamp for two sample hooks, terms and trade prices, to BOSKIRK & CO., 213 Broadway, N. Y. 552-53

Holloway's Ointment—In sore legs, ulcers, scrofulous affections, and glandular swellings, it operates quickly, but with such regularity that surprises the most ardent expectations; its penetrating and curative properties are so well distributed by all who have given it a fair trial. It is as mild in its action as it is beneficial in effect. Sold everywhere.

NEW MUSIC FOR BRASS BANDS,

OF EIGHT OR MORE INSTRUMENTS.

Fanst March (Soldier's Chorus)—Red, White and Blue, and Russian National Hymn.—Dresden, or Country Dance Waltz.—The above are printed in Parts. Price $1 per set. Sent postpaid. OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

The Best Hair Restorer Yet!!

Can make it yourself. Warranted to restore gray hair to its original color, and to prevent the hair from falling out; has been used by thousands, and has succeeded in every instance. Warranted purely vegetable. For $1 we will send a receipt, with directions, by which each can be as sure sold for $1. Druggists and dealers supplied at wholesale. Address

VEGETABLE HAIR RESTORER CO.,

Box 5,607, P. O., New York.

PHOTOGRAPHS

Of Washington Crowning Lincoln; First Kiss of Love; Love at First Sight; Courtship; Married; My Sweetheart; Love's Young Dream; Dying at the Altar of Venus; Oriental Dancing; Spanish Coquette; Nursing Baby; Bathing Beauty; Queen of Beauty; and 24 others. Ten cents each, or $5 per 100. TOMLINSON & CO., Publishers, Boston, Mass.

Curl your Hair.

One application will curl your hair into beautiful curls and last six months; satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 50 cents. Address, M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill. 553-54

Look Here, Boys.

Full instructions by which any person can master the Art of Ventriloquism and make a world of fun and a fortune by a few evenings' practice. Sent by mail. Address, M. A. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill. 553-54

300 per cent. Profit for Agents.—Three Graded Articles everywhere needed, and sell at sight. All sent, with particulars, free, by mail for 35 cents. Address E. H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

A GREAT CHOLERA PREVENTIVE.

A will send to any address, on the receipt of $1, a great preventive that was used with entire success in the late cholera visitation. Any druggist in staging this forth in diocese. Address A. A. TRUE, Medical Electrician, Troy. Sent free by mail. 552-53

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELERY, PENS, BRACELETS, CASTORS, GOBLETS, SPOONS, FORKS, FANCY RINGS, ETC., ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time send our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms for agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Sample, Gentleman's French Transparent Cards (12 Views), $1 25 per pack; $10 per dozen; also Marked Back Playing Cards, $1 50 per pack. All by mail on receipt of Price. Address

FORWARDING AGENCY, 56 Liberty street, N. Y. tf

1,000 "Ha Haws," and 500 "Te Hes."

All in one day, by reading the laughable ADVENTURES of MESSRS. BROWN, JONES AND ROBINSON; showing where they went, what they did, and how they did it; with nearly 200 most thrilling Comic Engravings. Price only 10 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid. Agents Wanted. CHAS. L. BRIGGS, Publisher,
540-3 144 Dearborn st., Chicago, Ill.

Magic Made Easy.—100 Astounding Performances in "Prestidigitation." 16,000 sold. Only 20 cents, by mail, by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
545-52

Vieve Brower; or, Life in the Concert Saloons of New York. A rich book. Just published. Handsomely illustrated. Only 25 cents. Mailed free. Address Post Office Box 78. HOLLAND, N. Y. 542-5

LOVE! LOVE!

How to win the undying love of the fair sex. Sent by mail for Five cents. Address
J. F. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block).

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods, &c.

WAR VIEWS,

SCENERY, GROUPS, &c.

Photograph Albums, great assortment; Curies de Visite of Rulers of the World, &c., &c.
French, English and American Novelties. tfo

A CURIOSITY!!

Free to All. A Rare Treat.

Gentlemen, do not fail to send a two cent stamp, and receive a GREAT PAPER, replete with the choicest literature and rare illustrations. Send Now to
CHARLES E. MACKEY,
37 Broadway, New York.

Fresh Garden and Flower Seeds, prepaid by mail, of the choicest sorts. Also, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, 150,000 Fruit Stocks, Grape Vines, Strawberry Plants, &c., &c. Illustrated Descriptive Catalogue, gratis, to any address. Wholesale Lists for the Trade. A reliable wagon
M. M. WATSON,
Old Colony Nurseries and Seed Establishment,
547-52 Plymouth, Mass.

Courtship Made Easy.—A great work. Only 15 cents. Post by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Rarey's System of Horse-Taming.—64 pp. 15 cents. Free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

Books! Books! Books!—Buy your Books only of HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H. Catalogues free gratis to all.
549-52

WONDERFULLY STRANGE!

MADAME M. H. FERREGALTI,

Who has astonished the scientific classes of Paris and London, has successfully located herself at Albany, N. Y. Madame Ferregalti, by the aid of her wonderful instrument, known as the Electroscope, guarantees to produce a life-like picture of the future husband or wife of the inquiring, together with the date of marriage, leading traits of character, occupation, &c. This is no humbug, but thousands of testimonials can be given. She will send, when desired, a written guarantee that the picture is what it purports to be. By stating age, height, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and inclosing 50 cents, and stamped envelope, addressed to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail. Address
MADAME M. H. FERREGALTI,
545-51tf P. O. Drawer 202, Albany, N. Y.

Cough No More

DR. STRICKLAND'S MELLIFLUOUS COUGH BALSAM is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Whooping-Cough, Sore Throat, Consumption, and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.
526-tf3

Short-Hand Without a Master.

By which the method of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, Trials, etc., may be attained in a few hours. Fifty-first edition, WITH SUPPLEMENT. Price 25 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York.

500 Photographs of the most Prominent PERSONS OF THE AGE, embracing Actors, Actresses, Opera Singers, Officers of the Army and Navy, Statesmen, Authors, Artists, Clergymen, Kings, Queens, &c., &c. Send, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address Box 3,410, Post-Office, New York.
tf

Something New.

For Agents and Dealers to sell, 20 Novel and Useful Articles; profits large. Send stamp for circular.
S. W. RICE & CO.,
83 Nassau street, N. Y.

Ventriloquism Made Easy. and the Second Sight Mystery, as practiced by ROBERT HELLER and others, fully explained. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 3,410, P. O., New York. tf

VIOLINS AND BOWS

Sent by express to all parts of the United States on receipt of the following prices:

GERMAN—Solid or Brown—$2 50, $3, $4, $5, $6, $8.
DOUBLE-LINED—$6, $7, $9, $11, $13, $15, $17, $19.
FRENCH—Blocked and Lined—$8, $10, $12, $15, $20.
ITALIAN—$6, $10, $12, $14, $16, $18, $20, $30, $35.
OLD MASTERS—Very Fine Tone—$40, $50, $75 to $200.
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description, at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for price list. Especial attention given to this department.
C FREDERICK BLUME, 308 Bowery.

PileRemedy

DR. STRICKLAND'S PILE REMEDY has cured thousands of the worst cases of Blind and Bleeding Piles. It gives immediate relief and effects a permanent cure. Try it directly as directed to cure.
For sale by all Druggists. Fifty Cents per Bottle.

100 Photographs of Union Generals sent postpaid for 25 cents; 50 photographs of Rebel Officers for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Female Beauties for 25 cents; 100 photographs of Actors for 25 cents. Address 547-51 C. SEYMOUR, Box 46, Holland, N. Y.

Over Fifty Secrets numerous Jokes, Witty Sayings, &c., will be found in "SPEAR LOUNGER." Sent free for Five Cents.
tf HUNTER & CO., P. O. Box, 3,057, New York.

JOB MILLER, JR.

A Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Poetry, &c., &c. Price 10 cents. Sent orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York. tf

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry and how each should choose a wife. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide, by Mrs. FOWLER, Price $1, mailed. WELLS, 389 Broadway, N. Y. 539-52

Sensology, Psychologic Fascination, Marriage Theory, Love, How to Become Loved, Who the Opposite Sex, Marriage, &c. This queer, useful, and spicy book is sent by mail for 25 cents. Address EVANS & CO., Box 1,215, Philadelphia. tf

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement can be possessed, securing certain success in love, marriage, &c. Sent mail for 25 cents, together with a Key to tell the time married of both sexes—an extraordinary book of great value. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
tf T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ORGUENT will most certainly grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post-paid, to any address on receipt of an order.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

THE DOMINO CIRCULAR!

For Spring and Summer, with stamp, with address, Novel oddities and odd novelties. CLEMENT & CO., 64 John street, N. Y. tf

Beautiful False Mustaches, all colors. Canned by mail, postage paid, for $1 per pair. Address, BLACKIE & CO., 713 Broadway, N. Y. tf

The Beautiful Art of Enameling the Skin.—A treatise on the work of improving the skin, beautifying and preserving the complexion, making it clear, smooth, and transparent. It explains how to remove tan, freckles, pimples, &c., without injuring the skin. Sent by mail to any address. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 138 South 7th street, Philadelphia. 549-52

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses. A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips. Cannot be rubbed or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1 18 cents by mail, safely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., Perfumers, tf 138 South Seventh street, Philadelphia.

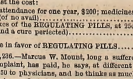
Matrimony Made Easy!



Or Mysteries of Married Life explained, with specimen Love Letters. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 3,410 P. O., N. Y. tf Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de Visite. Send for Catalogue. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send stamp.

HUNT & CO., 37 Ann St., N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also tells how to make Sweet Cider, Wine, Rum, Gin and all kinds of Cordials; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Pickles and Catching Fluids (Catching Lightpood); Ventriloquism Made Easy; Information for Everybody; how to grow Hair on the Face; Love, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents. Address Box 5,057 P. O., New York.

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine an invention urgently needed by everybody. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50 cents, that retails easily for $6. by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 529-tf

A Sure Method of Winning at All the Games of Chance, &c., sent free. Marked Cards $1 per pack, or $9 per dozen packs. Fine W. L. Cards, $1 per pack. Sporting and Playing Cards, Nos. 63 and 67 Nassau street, New York.

COLORED CARTES DE VISITE

SIXTY CENTS PER DOZEN.

I will send upon receipt of 60 cents 12 Cartes de Visite of French Gravelles in different positions, or the whole set of 50 different pictures, $2.
548-8 T. ALLUE, 64 Nassau street, New York.

Kate Vaugh.—A Rich Story. Only 15 cents. Sent free by HUNTER & CO., Hinsdale, N. H.
549-52

THE MEDICAL BALANCE SHEET.

COST OF CURE.

ILLUSTRATED BY

Facts and Figures.

READ AND COMPARE.

There are two especial points connected with the treatment of disease upon which the sick require, and have a right to expect, positive information.

In the first place they desire to know what medicines will certainly and speedily restore them to health; and in the second place, what will be the expense of a complete and thorough cure.

By contrasting the moderate cost of

Radway's Remedies

with the heavy expenses involved in employing a physician, and procuring the medicines he may prescribe, it will be seen that may be saved by resorting to the three carefully prepared vegetable remedies known as RADWAY'S READY RELIEF, RADWAY'S REGULATING PILLS and RADWAY'S RENOVATING RESOLVENT, which comprehend within remedial range all types of acute and chronic diseases. This can be made manifest by a few illustrations based on facts. To begin with the Ready Relief.

Several Thousand Per Cent.

Case 985.—Henry B. Morton, New York City, is seized with severe vomiting and purging, accompanied by cold chills and fever, which attack the bowels. A physician is called. He treats the patient for CHOLERA MORBUS. First visit, $3; cost of prescription, 75 cents. Second visit, next day, $2. Charge of treatment. New prescription, $1. Patient still suffering and sinking fast. At this stage the Ready Relief is suggested. One bottle, 50 cents. A teaspoonful in water is given and an application made to the stomach and abdomen. Pain ceases—vomiting is stopped—nervous and muscular system recovers its tone—strength is restored. Patient perspires freely, and falls into a refreshing sleep. Cure complete.

Now Balance the Account.

Physician's bill, $6; prescriptions (utterly useless) $1 75.....$7 75
Bottle of Ready Relief (which effects a cure, with three-fourths of the bottle spared for other exigencies).....50
Balance in favor of READY RELIEF.....$7 25

Case 1,103.—Freeman L. Forsyth, Brooklyn, is attacked with chills and fever. Medical man called in; charge $5 per visit. Looks in daily for a fortnight. Prescribes quinine, arsenic, morphine, &c. Prescriptions costly, averaging $1 per day. No perceptible improvement in patient. Advised to try READY RELIEF and REGULATING PILLS. Relief, 50 cents per bottle; Pills, 25 cents per box. Half-a-dozen doses of the Relief, diluted according to directions, break up the fits, and two or three doses of the Pills remove the malarious virus of the disease entirely from the system.

Post the books again:

Physician's bill, 14 visits, at $3 each, $42;
prescriptions, $10 (and no benefit).....$52 00
Relief, 50 cents; Pills, 25 cents (a portion of which effect a cure, being a surplus for future use).....75

Balance in favor of READY RELIEF.....$51 25

Case 2,631.—James B. Hendrick, New York City, night attack of violent Bilious Colic. Doctor called in. Visit, $3. Recent visit to the country. Sick. Third, in the afternoon, $3. Prescriptions, $4. Patient still in agony and pulse and strength failing. At this stage the RELIEF is administered, a generous dose of pain-arrested, and cure perfected by the assistance of a few doses of the REGULATING PILLS, in the country of the corrupt and acrid humors that caused the attack.

Compare again:

Physician's charges, $9; Prescriptions, $4.....$13 00
RELIEF and PILLS (with more than a dozen doses per day).....75

Balance in favor of the RELIEF.....$12 25

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF is a household medicine which no prudent family that understands its value will ever be without. It instantly arrests pain, and its effects are magical in subduing, soothing and nerving in cholera, cholera morbus, bilious colic, pneumonia, malarious diseases, etc., transcend those of any other preparation. It is the only antidote in existence for burns, wounds, scalds, bruises, etc., it has no equal.

Pass on to Radway's Regulating Pills.

Case 892.—W. A. Stuart, New York City, a martyr to chronic dyspepsia, complicated with liver complaint. Has tried a bill for one month after attendance, $200. Prescriptions, $100. No improvement. Appetite gone, tongue at the stomach, terrible oppression after eating, bowels irregular, complexion cadaverous, body emaciated, pain between the shoulders and in the right breast, great debility, spirits depressed. In this condition patient resorts to a course of the REGULATING PILLS. Before the first box is done, the distressing symptoms suddenly abate, and the patient, persevering in the use of the remedy, (and adopting such rules in regard to diet, etc., as common sense suggests,) is soon perfectly well. Four boxes, 25 cents each, suffice to banish every relic of the complaint.

Contrast the cost:

Medical attendance for one year, $200; medicines, $100; (or no avail).....$300
Four boxes of the REGULATING PILLS, at 25c. each (and a cure).....$1 00

Balance in favor of REGULATING PILLS.....$299

Case 1,126.—Marcus W. Mound, long a sufferer from liver complaint, has come to say, at different times, about $250 to physicians, and he thinks as much more for medicines. Is induced to try the REGULATING PILLS, with occasional doses of the RENOVATING RESOLVENT, to assist in removing from his system the effects of the mercurial treatment to which he has been subjected. Soon feels the benefit of the change. Takes, in all, five boxes of the Pills and three bottles of the Resolvent, and at the end of the course is "as well as he ever was in his life."

Glance at the account current below:

Bills for medical attendance, $350; outlay for prescriptions, $250 (so much money thrown away).....$600 00
Five boxes of REGULATING PILLS, $1 25; three bottles of RESOLVENT at $1 each, $3 25. Disease removed.....4 25

Balance in favor of REGULATING PILLS and RESOLVENT.....$595 75

The REGULATING PILLS possess the alterative, antibilious and disinfectant properties of mercury, without any of its pernicious attributes. They are manufactured in vacuo from concentrated vegetable extracts, and are an absolute specific for all disorders of the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and kidney. They tone the system while relieving the bowels from vacuid humors, and control the liver more speedily than bile or any preparation of quicksilver, or its salts or oxyds.

And now a few words about the effects of the Renovating Resolvent.

Case 1,959.—Zachary N. Lathrop, New York City, a sufferer from chronic scrofula—had been long under physician's hands; has twice had the disease suppressed with bone and lint, and mercurial ointment, but only to reappear in another and more malignant form; has been repeatedly salivated, and suffers from mercurial disease complicated with the original disorder. Supposes he has paid for medical attendance and costly drugs, such as iodine, hyd. potash, corrosive sublimate, extracts of sarsaparilla, various acids, &c., over $350. Is recommended to give the RENOVATING RESOLVENT a trial. Before the first bottle is finished there is a manifest change in the appearance of the sores with which he is afflicted. As the medicine is continued they begin to heal, and after a course of six bottles is a perfect cure. The mercury is out of his system, and the disease is not suppressed, but eradicated. Once more pure, uncontaminated blood runs in his veins, and his health is restored by natural restoratives.

Strike the balance:

Medical attendance and medication (more than useless).....$350
To six bottles of RENOVATING RESOLVENT, at $1 per bottle, by which the priceless blessing of health is restored.....6

Balance in favor of the RESOLVENT.....$344

Case 1,064.—Sergt. B. A. Coles, of New York City, a returned volunteer. Complaint, chronic rheumatism, produced by exposure during the war. Was one month under treatment, since his discharge. Received, during that time 20 visits from his physician. Visits $3 each. Cost of medicines prescribed, consisting of colchicum, gum guaiac, quinine, morphine, hyoscyamus, &c.—all expensive—and various embrocations $1 50 per week. Total cost to date. Without count pay prescriptions, $45. Not the slightest change for the better produced. RENOVATING RESOLVENT and READY RELIEF (as an external application) recommended by physicians as a dernier resort. Result immediately beneficial. Patient convalescent in three days. Within four weeks, pains, swellings, contractions and all other symptoms removed. A radical cure. Number of bottles of RESOLVENT taken, four, and half a dozen bottles of RELIEF, used as an external application.

Look again at the comparative expense:

Physicians' fees, $60; medication, $45—all to no purpose.....$105
Four bottles of the RESOLVENT, at $1 each, and six bottles of RELIEF, at 50 cents (every trace of the disease eradicated).....6

Balance in favor of the RESOLVENT and RELIEF.....$98

RADWAY'S RENOVATING RESOLVENT is the most perfect depurative, and the most powerful restorative that has ever been derived from the vegetable kingdom. It eliminates from the blood every trace of scrofulous or syphilitic virus, eradicates mercurial disease, and is the only preparation which can be depended upon for a thorough cure in tumorous, cancerous, and other consuming diseases of the flesh, bones, &c. Rheumatism, Erysipelas, and all cutaneous eruptions; it is equally efficacious as its effect is not merely to suppress symptoms, but to remove their morbid causes; the cures it effects are always permanent, one bottle of it containing more of the active medicinal and purifying principle of Sarsaparilla than is diffused through one gallon of the ordinary extracts of that root.

The above comparative view of the nuisance of ordinary medication and of the cost of cure through the agency of RADWAY'S REMEDIES, is not in the slightest degree overdrawn. It is founded on testimony in the possession of the public, and accessible to all who desire to examine it. The sole object of the ILLUSTRATE FACTS, in a familiar way, by exhibiting an between disease and the stereotyped practice on the one hand, and DR. RADWAY'S REMEDIES on the other. If, however, the balance is several thousand per cent. in favor of the latter, as an economic point of view, it is infinitely greater in a sanitary sense. To escape a cost a comparison may be instituted, but not as regards remedial results, in superiority of the READY RELIEF, REGULATING PILLS and RENOVATING RESOLVENT, over all combinations of the disease to which they belong has been made too manifold to be successfully disputed in any quarter, and is too great to admit of computation.

Account Current

RADWAY & CO.,
No. 87 Maiden Lane, N. Y.

R. R. R. Remedies sold by druggists.

MAGIC CARDS

For Performing HALLEN'S Great Tricks, with Illustrated Directions. Price $1 per pack, post-paid. Marked Cards (any style of back) price 50 cents per pack. Address, C. WELLIS & CO., No. 167 Broadway, New York. tf

Royal Havana Lottery.

Official Drawing of 5th April, 1866.

No. 32923	Grew	$100,000
No. 14,124	"	50,000
No. 40861	"	20,000
No. 18,242	"	10,000
No. 12823	"	5,000
No. 29,227	"	2,000

Being the six capital prizes.
Next split in gold. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for doubloons and all kinds of gold and silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers, 16 Wall st., N. Y.

Wanted Agents.—$35 per week—male or female, at their own business light, pleasant and honorable. For sample and terms, address, with stamp, SHAWE & CO., Detroit, Michigan. 552-54

$55 A Month.—Male or Female Agents wanted. Address, with stamp, E. E. LOCKWOOD, Detroit, Mich. 552-54

$1. BOOKS. $1.

Dollar Gift Book Sale.

100,000 VOLUMES!

Standard Works, Family Bibles, Photograph Albums, etc.,

WORTH $250,000!

All to be SOLD for ONE DOLLAR each, and a

SPLENDID GIFT,

Worth from 50 cents to $100, to be given with each Book. No Book to be sold for more than you know what gift you are to get. The Gifts consist of Gold and Silver Watches, Silver Ware, Sets of Jewelry, Sleeve-Buttons, Bosom-Studs, Chains, etc.

PLAN OF SALE.

Certificates are prepared, describing each book and naming the gift that will accompany it, with its value. These certificates are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed, and sent, regardless of choice, one to each purchaser of a beautiful Card Photograph of any prominent personage, in itself worth all we charge—25 cents each; or five for $1; eleven for $2; thirty for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred, with Premium Silver Hunting-Watch, $15.

On opening the envelope, you see what your Certificate calls for, and it is at your option to send $1 and take the Book and Gift (or any other Book and Gift of the same Value) or not. You cannot get less than $1 worth, for there are no blanks; and you may get a Bible or Album, worth $25 to $50, with a Gift worth much more.

Agents Wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered. Don't fail to send for circulars. Address BOWEN & CO., Publishers,
124 West 5th street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

$3 MAGIC TIME Observers $3

AT REDUCED PRICES.

A Superior Solid Gold Open Countenance Timepiece, with a beautiful and ACCURATE COMPASS Sunk in the Dial, elegant in style and finish, and very DURABLE. Warranted to keep Correct Time for five years. Two SIZES, in Handsome Cases. Small Size for Ladies; Large Size for Gentlemen. Price each size, $3. Carefully packed and forwarded (with full warranty) by mail, free, on receipt of price. Wholesale to agents only, $12 per Case of Six. Address orders to
M. A. NEILE & CO., Importers of Watches, &c.,
205 Broadway, New York.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH.

If you want the best fitting, strongest, and most serviceable paper collar ever offered to the public, don't fail to purchase the

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR

The most Economical Collar ever Invented.

It shows the embossed or pinked stitch equally well on both sides.

The following styles are now made:

Patent REVERSIBLE Embossed Paper Collars.	Patent REVERSIBLE Bank Note Paper Collars.	Patent REVERSIBLE Pinked Stitch Paper Collars.

To be obtained all Furnishing Goods Dealers throughout the country.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & Co., Agents, 541-530 Winthrop Square, Boston.

ITCH. (WHEATON'S) ITCH.
Salt Rheum. OINTMENT. Salt Rheum.

Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cure Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 Cents; by sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, Mass., will be forwarded free by mail. For sale by all Druggists. 541-560

ART NOTICE.

WENDEROTH, TAYLOR & BROWN'S fine MINIATURES, from Life, and Copied from other pictures. Sittings made by E. T. HALLET & CO., 799 Broadway. Please examine specimens. 550-5c

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

A NEW PRACTICAL WORK,
With 125 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost. Price $1 50, post-paid.
GEO. E. & F. W. WOODWARD,
Publishers,
No. 37 Park Row, New York.

Employment for Both Sexes.—Energetic persons of either sex in want of safe, respectable and profitable employment can procure such by sending their address to J. M. D., Box 183, Brooklyn, N.Y. tfo

Dale's Tooth Powder.

Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., Proprietors. 549-61o

100 Photographs OF FEMALE BEAUTIES sent, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address B. L. FOX, 34 Varick street, New York city. 548-51o

FLORENCE

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES.

Highest Premium Gold Medal.

FAIR AMERICAN INSTITUTE, 1865.

The best in the World. They have the Reversible Feed Motion. They have a perfect Self-Adjusting Shuttle Tension. They use same separate and distinct Stitches on one and the same machine. They have many advantages over all others.
FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO.,
505 Broadway, New York.

BARON MUNCHAUSEN'S HORSE FEAT OUTDONE.

THE MOST EXTRAORDINARY PIECE OF RECONSTRUCTION ON RECORD.

ANDY—" Hold on, William, we'll jine 'em—no fear."

UNION ADAMS,
HOSIER, GLOVER,
AND
SHIRT MAKER,
No. 637 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK CITY. tfo

Union Dime Savings Bank.
Canal Street, cor. of Varick.
Deposits from 10 cents to $5,000 received.
Six per cent. interest, free of tax.
Deposits before April 21st draw interest from April 1.
Assets—$1,802,226.26.

TO CURE
Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL and Disorders arising from excesses, take
SMOLANDER'S
Extract Buchu.
Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York; and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents. 548-600

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S AGRAFFE PIANOS.

101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. tfo

5-20, 7-30, 10-40,
AND GREENBACK
NATIONAL BANK PENS.
Secured by Patents and Copyrights. For sale by all Stationers. Manufactured by the EMPIRE PEN CO.,
Office, 23 and 24 John Street, New York.
Every variety of superior American Steel Pens and Holders manufactured by this Company. 550-5o

MAGIC LANTERN
AND Stereoscope.
We are now receiving the most comprehensive and finest importation of glass viewsever made to America. Representing scenes and objects in nearly all European cities and countries. These views are specially selected abroad by our Mr. Edward Anthony, and are adapted for the uses of either the Stereopticon or the Stereoscope.
E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,
501 Broadway.
552-53o Three doors south of the St. Nicholas Hotel.

"Self-Control," to acquire; to conquer Habit; to attain health and strength and mental vigor—A better life. Young men interested, can address, with postage, L. C. W., in care No. 5,845, General Post. New York. 552-53o

UNITED STATES PRIZE CONCERT.

TO BE GIVEN AT

Crosby's Opera House, Chicago, Ill.,

MAY 26, 1866.

125,000 Valuable Prizes, valued at $492,575 25, will be presented to Ticket-Holders, including $100,000 in Greenbacks.

NUMBER OF TICKETS ISSUED, 500,000. PRICE, $1 EACH.

This is the greatest inducement ever offered to the public, one ti cket out of every four drawing a prize. The Drawing will take place after the Concert, on the Stage of the Opera House, where 10,000 persons can witness it. A Committee will be appointed by the audience to superintend the same. All Purchasers and Agents will be furnished with correct copies of Drawing as soon as published. Tickets are for sale at the principal Hotels, Rock and Music Stores in the city, and at our Office, 133 Dearborn street, price $1 each; sent by mail on receipt of price and stamp for return.

Live Good and Reliable Agents wanted in every city, town and village in the United States, to whom great inducements are offered. References required.

SPECIAL TERMS, OR CLUB RATES.—any party procuring a club of five or more names for tickets, and remitting us the money for the same, will be allowed the following commission on it. We will send—

5 Tickets to one address for	$4 60	40 Tickets to one address for	$35 00
10 Tickets to one address for	9 00	50 Tickets to one address for	41 50
20 Tickets to one address for	17 50	AND
30 Tickets to one address for	26 25	100 Tickets to one address for	85 00

In every case send the Name and Post Office address of each separate Subscriber. Money by Draft, P. O. Order, Express, or in Registered Letters, may be sent at our risk.
All communications should be addressed to

WIGGINS, BRADFORD & CO.,
133 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill. Post-office Drawer 5913.

The Proprietors will donate to the Lincoln and Douglas Monument Fund, $3,000; also there will be $2,000 reserved from the proceeds drawing the $10,000 prize for the same purpose.

REFERENCES.—Hon. M. S. Wilkinson, ex-Senator of Minn.; Hon. Geo. Y. Lawrence, M. C. of Penn.; Hon. Alex. Mitchell, ex-Governor of Wis.; Hon. W. Kellogg, M. C. of Penn.; Hon. Magnus Dan Mace, ex-M. C. of Ind.; Hon. Ira J. Laycock, of Kansas; Hon. Wm. Lottingwell, Lyons, Iowa; Hon. Joseph Knox, of Chicago; Hon. C. Graves Smith, of Minn.; Jacob Forsyth, Agent, M. S. R. R., Chicago, Ill.; M. Rouskey & Co., Importers of Watches, Chicago; Mansell, White & Co., New Orleans, La.

N.B.—Editors of country papers are authorized to act as our Agents, and they will be allowed full commission on all tickets ordered, either for themselves or other parties who may order through them. Proposals for inserting the advertisement required.

Vineland Lands.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 50 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $30 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. Present population, 7,000. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. K. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of Solon Robinson, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune

" It is one of the most extensive fertile tracts, on an almost level position and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of this side of the Western prairies."

To all wanting Farms.

Call at the Office of the Vineland Land Company, 133 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and get a pamphlet containing a map of the tract, and full information. Or address the Company at Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

$7 FINE WATCHES $7
AT OLD PRICES.

English Silver Watches - -	$ 5, $6, $10
Pure Silver Hunting Lepines - -	$10, $12, $15
Fine 18 Karat Gold-Plated Watches	$15, $18, $20.
Fancy Compass and Thermometer Watches - -	$15, $20.
Silver Hunting Levers - -	$20, $25.
Ladies' Gold Enameled Watches	$30, $35 to $75.
Gold Silver American Levers -	$50.
All kinds of Good Watches, low.

tfo CATELY BROTHERS, Importers,
102 Nassau street, N. Y.

BEAUTY.—Autumn Curls, Crimps, Frizzes, and Silken CURLS produced by the use of Professor DE BEAUX'S CELEBRATED PARISIAN CHEVELURE. One application warrants a curl that cannot be removed by heat, steam or rain, from the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy, massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Price, by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHEPARD & CO., Chemists, 387 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 542-54o

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S
LABOR-SAVING SOAP.
This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the most delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for woolens, which will not shrink after being washed with this Soap. It has been used in hard or salt water. It will remove paint, grease, tar, and stains of all kinds. One pound extracted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons handsome soft soap from one pound of this Soap. Linch bar is wrapped in a circular containing full directions for use, printed in English and German. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.
B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72 and 74 Washington St.,
New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP. Fifty per cent saved by using B. T. BABBITT'S PURE CONCENTRATED POTASH or READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted double the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or ley in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 5 pounds, and 13 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest potash in market.
B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72 and 74 Washington St.,
New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED BY USING

B. T. BABBITT'S best Molicular SALERATUS, is made from common salt. Bread made with this Saleratus rises quick when baked, tastes like common salt, water and flour. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71 and 74 Washington street, New York. o

50 PER CENT. SAVED BY USING B. T. BABBITT'S BEST SALERATUS. Not a particle of alcohol or any kind of Cake may be made with this "Yeast Powder" in the Saleratus. No cooking is required when sweet milk is used. Nos. 64 to 74 Washington street, New York. o

$200 PER MONTH and Expenses Paid. Agents Wanted, Male and Female, to introduce a new and useful Patented Article. For further information, address, with stamp,
L. N. MATHER & CO., Manufacturers,
Cleveland, Ohio.

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers and Importers, near 4th St., N.Y., wholesale and retail dealers in Pipes and Cigar Holders cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $80 each. o639-43

INTERESTING TO ALL.

Cholera Preventative!

The undersigned have purchased from Paris, Dr. Tella's wonderful Cholera Preventive. Will be sent to any part of United States, on receipt of $1. Box $10
Albany, N. Y. CLARENCE, HENRY & CO.,
553-54o Sole Agents for United States.

CEDAR CAMPHOR

Use at Once. Clothes Moths while chrysalids are changing destroyed. All druggists sell C. C. HARRIS & CHAMAN, Boston. o

PAIN KILLER
CURE
Cholera Morbus?
DAVIS'S PAIN KILLER
Yes, and all similar diseases of the bowels. o

For Public Exhibition.

Stereoscopicons, Magic Lanterns and Dissolving Views; with pictures from all parts, and on every interesting subject, made by JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 924 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.
Priced and Illustrated Catalogue Sent Gratis. 523-54o

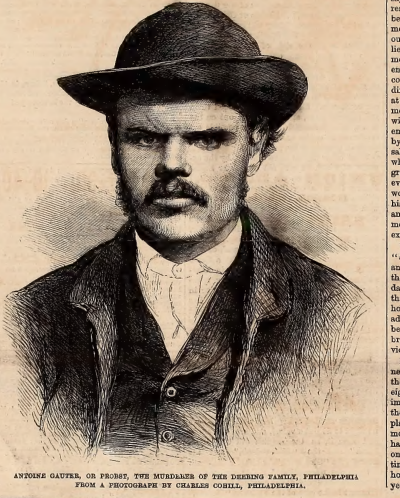
WHISKERS and HAIR force to grow upon the smoothest face in from three to five weeks by using DR. HEYDEN'S RESTAURATEUR. CAUTILLARS, the most wonderful discovery in modern science, acting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the first of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Names of all purchasers will be registered, and if entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials mailed free. Address HEYDEN, SMITH & CO., Chemists, 283 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 542-54o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1866, by Frank Leslie, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York

No. 553—Vol. XXII.] NEW YORK, MAY 5, 1866. [Price 10 Cents. $4 00 Yearly. 12 Weeks $1 00

Eight Hour Labor Movement.



We don't envy the inhabitants of Union Square, and any invalid living in its classic precincts has our sincerest pity. What with the noisy and frequent jubilees of the Loyal League Club, and military demonstrations at the Fenian palace during the day, with torch-light processions by night, their nervous systems must be sadly deranged; and though their loyalty may be proof against mere annoyance, it is at the expense of their peace and comfort. It is a characteristic of certain classes of our citizens, that if they have any grievance, real or imaginary, they must bring it before the public by a procession, the more noisy the better; and if they can drive quiet people half crazy by midnight uproar, the nearer success they fancy themselves. They make, literally, a parade of their wrongs, as well as of their numbers, and if they do not advertise their proceedings in the newspapers, they take care to do so in the streets.

Now, as regards such demonstrations in themselves, we have not a word of objection to make. They are the inalienable right of a free people, and as such, are entitled to indulgence. It is only when they are evidently the expressions of pernicious doctrines and impracticable designs that we become annoyed with the interruptions to our quiet, and ask, To what good end is all this smoke, clamor and confusion?

One of the latest of such gatherings in Union Square was the torch-light procession of working men in favor of a Legislative enactment that eight hours shall constitute a day's labor, instead of ten hours, as heretofore. It is not stated, but of course it is meant, that no proportionate reduction of pay is to take place, so that for eight hours' work it is intended that employers are to pay as much as for ten. Would it not be just as reasonable, and far more honest, to demand at once 20 per cent. higher wages? We laugh at the story of the Dutchman, who, finding his blanket too short, cut a piece off the top and sewed it to the bottom, but is this a greater absurdity than to shorten the hours of labor instead of increasing the wages? But the advocates of this measure say, by way of argument, that if labor were restricted to eight hours, as much work would be done in the shorter time as in the longer, meaning that men would work more vigorously if they did not work so long. We believe this is untrue in fact, while as an argument it proves too much. For, as to indoor employments, most of them are carried on in connection with machinery, and are either directly or indirectly dependent on the speed at which it is driven, and this speed, as every mechanic knows, cannot be materially varied without great risk. Again, as to out-door employments, independently of the fact that, by division of labor, men work almost universally in groups, and the progress of the whole is consequently measured by the progress of the slowest, it is well known that every laborer, in learning his trade, learns to work at a certain fixed speed. To this speed his muscles become, as it were, hardened, and any attempt to increase this, even within moderate limits, leads to fatigue and rapid exhaustion.

We say, also, the argument proves too much. "A fair day's wages, for a fair day's work," is an idea that every one approves. But, is not the converse equally respectable?—"A fair day's work for a fair day's wages?" To say that you are able to do as much work in eight hours as you have hitherto done in ten, is to admit that you have not hitherto done your best, and that you have eaten your employer's bread while rendering him one-fifth less service than you could have done.

In whatever way it is looked at, the hollowness of this pretext is apparent. It is not that the physical energies of men are exhausted by eight hours' work, for if the restriction were imposed, those most clamorous for it would be the first to demand "over-time," showing plainly that the demand was really for more money, not less work. As to physical exhaustion by an ordinary day's labor, does any one pretend that the work performed in over-time is worse done than that during regular hours? More complete evidence than we have yet heard, or than our experience teaches us,

ANTOINE GAUTER, OR PROBST, THE MURDERER OF THE DEERING FAMILY, PHILADELPHIA
FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY CHARLES COBILL, PHILADELPHIA.

THE INTERIOR OF THE BARN AND CORN CRIB, WHERE THE BODIES OF MR. DEERING, MISS BOLAN, AND THE CHILDREN WERE FOUND.

THE HAYSTACK NEAR THE HOUSE, WHERE THE BODY OF THE BOY, CORNELIUS CAREY, WAS FOUND.—FROM SKETCHES BY C. BAUM.

must be brought forward before such a plea can be admitted.

Supposing that the promoters of this change are sincere in their assertions as to eight hours being the limit of physical exertion, we cannot compliment them on their manhood, however we may applaud their benevolence. Porters in warehouses, clerks in our large stores, laborers in our fields, with numberless other classes of workers, would disdain the plea of being tired out by eight hours' application to their duties. Millions of our blood in other countries would smile with derision when they heard how we shirked work, and hint at the deterioration of our race. With every sympathy for the rank and file of our industrial population, we hail with pleasure every endeavor to improve their condition and lighten their toil; but this eight hour movement seems to us a step in the wrong direction, neither wisely planned nor honestly carried out.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, MAY 5, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE—We have no travelling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are impostors.

A New and Thrilling Story!

The Spectre of Cliffe;

OR,

THE FAIR LADY OF THE SHROUD.

WE commence this week a story of rare power and absorbing interest, "THE SPECTRE OF CLIFFE," which will be sure to engage and fix the attention of every reader. It is complete in plot, full of incident, and throughout healthy in tone. We have great satisfaction in presenting this story to the American public, and call attention to it here, so that persons desiring it may make their subscriptions to our paper for this number.

How Far we May Help our Friends.

IN the contest now going on between France and Spain on the one hand, and the South American Republics and Mexico on the other, our sympathies and interests are wholly with the latter. The assault of Europe on the integrity and independence of these States was as much a part and incident of the late war as the march of Lee into Pennsylvania or the St. Alban's raid. France would never have gone to Mexico, or Spain to Santo Domingo or Peru, had it not been for that war; and the movements of both were made in ostentatious disregard of principles of policy long ago clearly enunciated by us, but with the avowed purpose, as expressed in Napoleon's letter to Marshel Forey, of crippling our power and destroying our legitimate influence in America. The prosecution of the war in Mexico and the South Pacific is, in fact, therefore, a continuation of the war against this country and the institutions of which it is the founder and exponent. Nominally and technically we are at peace with both France and Spain, and we are called on to sustain a position of neutrality as respects them, while they continue their efforts to destroy Republicanism and circumscribe our power. While we do so, we are in a false position, and it may be imprudent for us to try to right ourselves by the bold and manly course of insisting by force on the observance of the Monroe Doctrine. At the close of the war, while our victorious armies were in the field and our fleet in full strength on the ocean, we might have done so with success, and finished up the rebellion in all its parts. But the sublime Optimist of the State Department let slip the golden opportunity, and we now find ourselves in the false position to which we have alluded—involved in the meshes of "neutrality." We must either fight or observe the laws of neutrality. It is, therefore, interesting to know what these are. It is our duty to observe them fairly and fully, but not to go one tittle beyond them to the prejudice of our interests, or the interests of the struggling States which command our sympathies, and who are involved in wars, the consequences of ours, and who are fighting out the fight, begun on our soil, of Republicanism against Oligarchy and Monarchy. We are called on to stand straight between the belligerents—but not so straight as to lean the wrong way.

It is our duty to do all we can for our Republican sisters, "to aid, comfort and support" them, so far as compatible with our own and international laws, and so long as we profess to be neutral. Now what can we do?

In the first place, we can sell them freely, and we like openly, arms, and all kinds of munitions of war. Mr. Jefferson, when Secretary of State under Washington, asserted, in reply to the complaints of the French Minister on this point:

"Our citizens have always been free to make, vend and export arms. It is the constant occupation and livelihood of some of them. To suppress their calling because a war exists in foreign and distant countries in which we have no concern would scarcely be expected. It would be hard in principle and impossible in practice. The law of nations, therefore, respecting the rights of those at peace, has not required from them such an internal derangement of their occupations. It is satisfied with the external penalty pronounced in the President's proclamation—that of confiscation of such portion of those arms as shall fall into the hands of the belligerent Powers."

This doctrine of the Administration of Washington has been repeatedly and uniformly asserted by our Government, and as late as the 7th of August last year, Mr. Seward said, in reply to an official letter of Mr. Romero, the Mexican Minister:

"I am not aware of any law or executive order which, at present, prohibits the exportation of arms or of money from the United States to Mexico by either of the parties at war in that country, or by the individual citizens or subjects of the respective parties. Any proceedings for that purpose must, however, not be connected with proceedings which tend to infringe the impartial neutrality which this Government has hitherto in every instance maintained. The neutrality is really the effect of existing municipal laws as well as of international law. It could, therefore, be deviated from by the Executive Government only when Congress should have directed it. To Congress alone belongs the constitutional power to declare war."

For commercial or speculative, or for that matter, any other purpose, we may sell cannon, shot, shell, and all articles of war usually called "contraband," to Mexico or Chile, without let or hindrance. They will be, of course, liable to capture by the Spaniards or French; but that is at the risk of those who buy them or send them out. Our complaint against England during the late war was not that she sold contraband of war to the rebels, as she did to us, but because she permitted armaments to be made in her ports to war on our commerce. She built ships, armed them and manned them, and sent them out on the ocean, wholly English, with the possible exception of an officer or two, and possibly a few yards of bunting at the mast-head.

What other rights have we got, by the exercise of which we may aid our sister States without infringing on the laws of neutrality? Among them is certainly the right of any citizen to leave the country and take service with Mexico and Peru. The right of one involves the right of many. If one may go alone, he may go in company with another, and if two may go, two hundred may. But no foreign officer may recruit on our soil, or give commissions, or in any way organize a force. Nothing, however, in our laws, or in international law, prevents men emigrating spontaneously to any country, whether singly or in groups, great or small. And as every man has a right to carry arms openly, they have a right to take their muskets with them.

Ships are legitimate articles of sale to foreigners as barrels, and we have a right to build them and send them out to the ports of a country at war (not blockaded), as to those of any other country, and sell them if we can. We have nothing to do with the purposes of the purchaser. He may convert them into war vessels, with no more concern to us than if they used the staves we sold him to make torpedoes instead of hogsheads. But we have no right to fit out a vessel, and arm and equip and man it, as the English did the "Alabama" and the "Shenandoah," and the French, the "Stonewall," for either belligerent.

Such are unquestioned rights, and we are therefore astounded at the conduct of the Government in the case of the steamer "Meteor," which has been seized and detained since January, and refused permission to be bonded, on the allegation that she was to be converted into a Chilean privateer. An attempt is making before the courts to condemn her for violation of our neutrality acts, which we are confident will fail. We regret, however, the pertinacity of the Government against her, and cannot too strongly condemn the unnecessary and hostile intervention of the Secretary of State in the matter. Whatever we may be called on to do to conform to the provisions of the neutrality act, we are certainly in no way obliged to stretch the interpretation of its provisions in favor of the enemies of our sister republics, who are equally our enemies, covert if not open. The denial of permission to bond the "Meteor," is confessedly an "inspiration" of the State Department, acting on a demand from the Spanish Minister. The lame "opinion" in which Judge Betts couches his denial, it is painfully apparent, is less a deduction from law or precedent than an attempt to sustain a predecision, made without the slightest reference to the law or facts of the case.

It is possible that the purchasers of the "Meteor" were Chileans, and intended to use her against Spain. The sellers perhaps agreed to put her in some neutral port, as a condition of sale, as they had a right to do. But she was not armed here, or manned here, nor is there the slightest pretense that she would have gone out of the port of New York in the precise character she purported to bear—that of an unarmed merchant ship, bound to the port of Panama. The court, whether inspired from Washington or Madrid, has no business to go beyond these facts. If it does so, it will be extra officially, and in a spirit of unseemly hostility to our friends and allies, and in outrage of the generous sentiments of the American people.

Another War!!

Bazaine and the "Budget."

WE have received the following declaration of war, which we insert pro bono publico. We shall watch the progress of the contest with breathless interest. The trouble between Austria and Prussia is now quite a secondary matter. Bets are open—"ten to one on the Budget":

A Proclamation.

"The fate of the two Emperors is sealed—Louis Napoleon and Maximilian have met their fate. Their Waterloo is at hand. The cause of all this anguish to them is a corpulent old gentleman called Bazaine, or Benzine, who is a marshal, and commands that worthy squad, called the French army. The facts are briefly these: Not having the fear of Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun and the American eagle before his eyes, this unhappy Bazaine, or Benzine—both fat and French—drew his sword on the 2d of April, in the town of Vera Cruz, and having exasperated his valor to the height of Malakoff madness by two glasses of Eau de Sacre, he made an assault upon the newsboy who was selling Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun, and he has, moreover, issued a pronunciamento, declaring war against Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun. Now, we take this opportunity of announcing that we shall carry on the war with the greatest vigor, and shall enforce the Monroe doctrine by driving Marshal Bazaine and all his mercenaries out of American Territory—North, South and Central; and therefore our respected President and Mr. Seward need not trouble themselves any more on the point; we relieve them of all further responsibility in the matter. Shall the French drive out the Budget, or the Budget drive out the French? That is the question—who can doubt the result? God, Union and Liberty!"

THE BUDGET.

IN answer to the inquiry of Gen. Tilson, in Alabama, "If the President's Proclamation removed Martial Law in that State?" the Secretary of War replies:

"The President's Proclamation does not remove Martial Law, or operate in any way upon the Freedmen's Bureau in the exercise of its legitimate jurisdiction. It is not expedient, however, to resort to military tribunals in any case where justice can be obtained through the medium of civil authority."

A MOBILE newspaper testifies to the moderation of the Northern officers and soldiers who have been retained on duty in that State:

"The sway of martial law over the State of Alabama has been as mild and as gentle as was at all compatible with the nature of that iron rule. In Major-General Woods, who has commanded this department, this people have recognized a soldier who, faithfully performing his duty to the Government whose uniform he wears, has yet not stepped out of its sphere to harass and annoy in so many ways within his power the citizens who were made the subjects of his will. The soldiers, too, under his command, have deported themselves in a manner to mark the strictest discipline, with no instance that can be recalled of unpleasant collision either with the civil authorities or the citizens. It is to the honor of the Federal army that, with some exceptions, which we care not now to notice, it has been generous to the brave foe that was forced to succumb to its power."

THE following letter is among the papers drawn forth by the Commission now investigating the Jamaica massacres. It was written by the Deputy Adjutant-General of Jamaica to Col. Hobbs, who had been sent to what were called the "insurgent districts," for the purpose of restoring order, and evinces in a striking, and we may add, a disgusting way, the spirit of the British authorities in the island:

"October 18, 11 A. M.

"Dear Colonel—I send you an order to push on at once to Stoney Gut, but I trust you are there already. Hole is doing splendid service with his men about Manchioneal, and shooting every black man who cannot give an account of himself. Nelson at Port Antonia is hanging like fun by court martial. I hope you will not send us any prisoners; civil law can do nothing. * * Do punish the blackguards well. Yours in haste, JOHN ELKINGTON, D. A. G."

"TRUBNER'S (London) American and Oriental Literary Record" pays the following deserved compliment to Mr. George W. Childs, of Philadelphia:

"To him the literary public are indebted for the most useful literary paper in America, the American Publisher's Circular and Literary Gazette, issued twice every month, and containing a thoroughly reliable record and occasional criticisms of the current literature of the United States. Its Paris correspondence, too, presents the best account of literary life in the French capital that we know of. The labor incidental to one journal is generally considered enough for one man in England; but Mr. Childs not long since courageously purchased and undertook the entire management of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, a daily paper circulating largely, but by his judicious arrangements increased to such an extent as to stand now in circulation almost at the head of the American press—only, indeed, having one competitor, the New York Herald, superior to it. A daily and fortnightly paper would seem to take the utmost powers of mortal man, but the publisher in question has recently added the Philadelphia Home Weekly to his other ventures. It seems almost incredible that one man could undertake such an accumulation of labor."

ONE of the curiosities of the British metropolis is the names of its streets, which are as disorderly and absurd as the no-government and mismanagement generally. For example: There are in London 36 King streets, 34 Charles streets, 32 John streets, 26 High streets, 25 Queen streets, 25 Church streets, 20 George streets, 18 Duke streets, 21 New streets, and so on that way. One would suppose that certain names had been the fashion, and were given to every street made until they came upon another favorite. Of late years they run hard upon Victoria and Albert streets, of which there must be a dozen of each, besides places, courts, squares, etc.

A LONDON letter-writer speaks thus of the mystical poet, Robert Browning: "Browning may be a poet for anything I can say to the contrary; but he has either got a different dictionary from mine or uses it in a different manner. People should not criticise what they cannot understand, and I do not understand a word of Browning. If there is such a thing as a St. Vitus dance of language, Mr. Browning has got that disorder."

THERE is now a pretty little steamer on the River Thames, in England, which runs 10 miles an hour without paddle-wheel or screw. She takes in water well forward, and expels it aft under each quarter, and can steer without her rudder, and can stop in less than her length when going at full speed. As all of this machinery may be below the water-line, and not liable to injury, it is worth trying.

TOWN GOSSIP.

THE car strike is over, and over, we are sorry to say, badly for the poor drivers. They have been forced by their wants back to their work. The companies would not yield to their just demands, and sent into the country to hire new drivers. The old hands knowing this, and feeling that they could not starve any longer, gave in, and are back at their work for $2 per day.

The next thing that occupies public attention is the Board of Health, and what they are doing. We think we see their movements in many little ways; such, for instance, as some activity in street-cleaning and in garbage removal—though, on both these points, if we were asked on our veracity, we could not say but what we could point out spots for the display of their talent. Occasionally, on our accustomed haunts, we miss an old familiar line of tabbies that used, after their decease, to occupy prominent positions beside the curb for a week; now they seem to disappear on the first or second day. Again, on our daily walk, there were certain areas into which we used to gaze and calculate exactly the sum total of typhoid there was in the accumulated filth of that spot. Whether it be the individual work of the Board of Health—and we never will believe that the Commissioners did it themselves—or the moral effect of their institution, which has frightened the owner or tenant into cleanliness, we do not know; but the fact is ocularly apparent to us that the spot is comparatively clean, and that the carcasses of three deceased rats, and a bushel or two of ancient cabbage, to say nothing of other trifles, have disappeared.

But there is one other thing we would like to say to the Board of Health, and we do hope they will pay attention to it. It is about green apples and other combustibles. This very day we saw a wagon peddling bananas from a street corner that were enough to breed a pestilence. They were green, hard, and astringent; and just now, with the spring weather and the yearning of every one for a dietary change, we would not be surprised but they found buyers, and we do protest that no more fearful poison could be introduced into the human stomach than this so-called fruit. We would rather have seen a wagon load of strychnine retailed in the street; and yet this licensed vendor—so his wagon said—was allowed to proceed in his traffic undisturbed. In a few weeks there will be other poisons in that way. Old women will sit on corners peddling out the green poisons to children, and the markets will be full of them. With their advent comes cholera and summer complaints, indigestion, cramps, disease and death.

Preserve us, good Board of Health, from the green fruit, and Providence will reward you with a better stock of ripe, further in the season!

What a pleasant thing it is to read that letter from the Queen of England to George Peabody. Though Mr. Peabody is not a New Yorker, yet we do feel a local interest in the man, and a strong predisposition to do him honor when he comes this way, which will be in a few days.

We haven't the letter by us just now, but the purport of it is this: Victoria, knowing how much George has done for the good of her subjects, and feeling that she can do nothing for him in return, writes him a letter, the subject matter of which is this, though not in these words: "George," she says, "you're an honest man, and have done some noble things. I hear you're going to America; and I hope you'll hurry back, for I don't really know how to spare you. I think quite as much of you as though you were an Englishman, and I would like to do something handsome for you; but as you've got more money now than you want, I can only offer you the Order of the Bath or a title of nobility—any one you like—but I know you won't have it. So, as I must relieve my mind by giving you something, I'll give you my own miniature, set in diamonds; and so God bless you, old fellow. Your affectionate friend,

"VICTORIA."

Mr. Peabody will be here in a few days, and though we hate hero-worship, we hope that something quiet will be done to show him that we feel a little proud of him.

From white respectability to black—and we are about to speak of the passing away of one who, with all the disadvantages of his color—for he was a black man—commanded the highest respect of the first of our citizens. There is hardly one New Yorker of 40 years but will pleasantly remember Thomas Downing, of Broad street, and the good lunches and dinners he has had in that famous old cellar, where all our old school of merchants—they are few and far between now—once went. Well, Thomas Downing is dead, aged 75 years, and full of honors, as well as comfortably off in a worldly way. Downing never presumed upon his successes in life, or believed that it added any to his consequence or respectability to make money, and as a result, he always commanded the respect of every white man, though he was an earnest advocate of the rights of his own color. At his funeral many of our first merchants assisted, and in the impressiveness of the occasion, one forgot that he was assisting in the last rites to the member of a heretofore despised race, and only remembered the fellow-man. Peace to his ashes!

New York progresses rapidly in the brilliancy of its salons. Billiards have become so essentially a necessity, that style is positively demanded, as well as solid comfort. Both these requisites have been met by a new suite of rooms opened at No. 9 Carroll place, Bleecker street, by Mr. Henry English. Ten thousand dollars have been spent in fitting up these rooms, which have six of Kavanagh & Decker's tables, with every belonging that luxury can suggest. Such establishments mark our progress as a people.

And now of the theatres:

We always mention the sensation of the week first, and upon that idea we make no doubt that the public would say that we ought to speak of Miss Bateman; but in that we differ. Miss Bateman is no longer a sensation, though she is undoubtedly great in her profession; her future is settled, and all we can say or not say will have no effect whatever. Her houses are sure, and that tells the whole story.

The Winter Garden wants no words from us. They are crowding the house every night with the attractions offered by Barney Williams and wife, and will continue to do so as long as these parties choose to stay.

We cannot help thinking that the only real sensation of the week has been Mr. Charles Barras, at Wood's Theatre. Mr. Barras professed nothing, but has done a great deal; he has made his audiences laugh a good honest laugh. Mr. Barras is good as the "Hypocondriac;" how he will be in other things we do not know, but we fancy that the man who can do that, can do more.

The Broadway is about to produce the Menken. We all object to the production; but we will all go and see it, nevertheless, especially when it is produced at a cost of about $500 per night. When it is produced, we shall enter into an elaborate criticism of it.

Barnum is having a great success. The "Sphinx" puzzles all kinds of people; one says it is one thing, and one says it is another, and they are all mistaken.

At the Academy, Grover's Opera Troupe have had a triumph. The secret is that the people have come to them. They have had crowded houses, and we don't know that any criticism can be offered better than that.

Every day in New York there are little private reunions, concerts, etc., which are well worth bringing before the public, but that the public might be suspected of not feeling an interest in them. But notwithstanding this suspicion, we will record a "Musical Reunion," as the title is, given by Mr. J. J. Watson, at the house of the Hon. Le Grand G. Capers, on the evening of the 18th. The performance of his pupils ought to be a pleasant thing to Mr. Watson; and were we to judge by the applause, the whole affair was a great success.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION.

One of the striking characteristics of our age is a violent mutual distrust; it is the child of avarice and commercial speculation, and has influenced all classes of society. The greatest intellects are governed by the prevailing tone of the public with which they are surrounded, however much they may pretend to be free from exterior influences of a corrupting nature. Cabinets, Governments, and Ministers are not free from suspicion, and having themselves introduced hypocrisy as a leading qualification for political preferment, the imputation of deceit nestles more closely on the threshold of their actions than it can possibly at the door of private intercourse.

If ever a scheme exhibited its own inherent absurdity and the motives in which it was cradled, certainly Confederation does so. It seems, too, to have survived the fervor which gave it birth; for, save and except the fathers of the scheme, the general concurrence of opinion is, that due weight was not given to the considerations which were opposed to its inception; that influences and causes were overlooked and disregarded which admonish them of the fatal consequences likely to flow from its establishment as a system of government. Everywhere it is met with opposition, virtual or declared. Nova Scotia, with folded arms, complacently intrenches herself behind New Brunswick, glad to view the opposition of the Brunswickers; the Nova Scotians pursue a neutral policy, which now means giving all the secret aid possible, but doing nothing openly. And wherefore all this opposition? Simply because the scheme of Confederation, from the beginning, was a mere pretense—a mean pretext, to cover the most shameful political truculency which was ever recorded. It was the plank of safety simultaneously grasped by two drowning parties; the wreck of the old and honorable Conservative party, degraded by the servility of its recent leaders and the fanatical Grits of Upper Canada. Both of these parties were tried and found wanting; and the fear of a common fate, at the hands of a liberal party, induced the former to coalesce; and to cement the bond of union, and cover a shameful deceit, Confederation was raked up and brought from the condemned records of past speculation, and put upon the tapis.

It originated many years ago in the mind of Lord Durham, who thought that it might be made the means of consolidating the races holding the soil of Canada in common; but that sagacious statesman, perceiving that it was only calculated to foster those sectarian antipathies, which are inimical to national greatness, condemned it, and showed that the only hope of ever becoming a united people in Canada rested upon a "Legislative Union;" and truly, until the Canadians have arrived at that point of confidence in one another, which leads them simultaneously to desire a Legislative Union, they are unfit for any other existence than as mere dependents of a superior power.

The tendency for federalizing their constitution has been going on since 1848, from which period dates the strange anomaly of two Attorneys-General for the same country; Federal*ism*, taking root in that and such like anomalies, has branched out into the present scheme. Beyond the circle of politicians and railway jobbers, this scheme is not popular, as shall be seen from the manner in which it was carried through. The American Government are abused as positively tyrannical for suspending the habeas corpus, for political reasons, at a time when decimation was threatened by the internecine war, which devastated the country. But what rights were violated to foist Confederation upon Canada? The representatives of the people were gagged, and forbidden the rights guaranteed by the constitution. The scheme of Federation was brought down to the Canadian Parliament, and the delegates of the people were told by the Cabinet Ministers (it is on record) you must accept this scheme as it is, good or bad; you shall not be permitted to suggest any amendments to it; it must pass as it is, or not at all. Thus, on the highest question of national importance, were the constituencies of Canada virtually disfranchised. The recent fusion of parties made the Ministers strong, and the few remaining oppositionists were borne down by the force of numbers, for they had never anticipated so shameful or general a betrayal as they witnessed on the votes of the coalition; and this faithlessness is but another confirmation of the severe adage, that "every man has his price."

The adoption of the scheme by the Canadian Parliament was the only step forward it ever made; for the people of the Lower Provinces, indignant, no doubt, at the attempt made by a few self-constituted agents to barter away their rights and liberties, rejected the "Quebec scheme," and in the recent speech from the throne, in the Parliament of Nova Scotia, Confederation is not mentioned at all. Every prejudice was pandered to, to make it agreeable to the popular palaté, and every avenue to popular instruction corrupted, that it might not be understood or explained; but for all that, it is daily looked upon with greater distrust—the objections to it are growing. People say: It is calculated to keep alive religious and natural antipathies; it was not the fruit of mature deliberation; and the best interests of the country were sacrificed for party purposes; there is great peril of a constant conflict of authority between the general and local Parliaments, as was hinted by Mr. Cardwell, in the dispatches from England; the resources of the country are not adequate to keep up such a cumbersome system. But of all these objections, that one which made a Legislative Union an impossibility is felt to be the interior dissolvent of the scheme of federation. A war of races is inevitable. The French-Canadians would not hear of a Legislative Union, for fear of being swamped, from the fewness of their representatives, as compared with the English representatives of the United Provinces. And the same result has been obtained against them by Federation—less directly, it is true, because they are given some shadow of authority by the distribution of local Parliaments; but in the general Parliament, French representatives will not number a corporal's guard, and if their distrust of the English portion of the community has any grounds in reason, the general Parliament can do with them as it pleases, having the power to annul the acts of local Parliaments within ten years after their passage. Moreover, no person in the general Parliament will be understood who does not speak English; it is clear that the French influence, in the affairs of the country, entirely depends upon the Canadians keeping themselves a united body before the public, the system of representation being based upon the population.

The practical wisdom of Canadian statesmen may be seen in the fact, that representation by population is diametrically opposed to what is known as the property qualification; how the distinction will be made, it is impossible to conjecture. Throughout the scheme of Federation, it will be perceived that in the selections from republican and monarchical principles, the Canadians have introduced as much of either as will corrupt the other, or to use a practical illustration, the elements of both, as illustrated in the proposed scheme, are like two drunken men essaying to support one another, the falling of both being in the end the result of the effort; and the fact of all emigration to Canada concentrating on the West, will give such a preponderance to Anglo-Canadians, that in a few years, perhaps, in the measure as the number of French representatives diminish in comparison with those of other nationalities, their rights may be lost sight of only as they fall into the principal design. In this scheme no portion of the population has been more cajoled than the French-Canadians; they have been caught by the local Parliament, never dreaming that the central government exercises a supervisory power, reserved seemingly for very questionable motives. In the American system the local governments are mainly invested with the right of working out the arithmetical rule laid down for the decimal revisions, but under the proposed system, the general Parliament is alone to do the work of these re-divisions of the constituencies throughout the Province. These things, and many others which appear at present but mere trifles, will ultimately be exaggerated into grievances, by classes who feel them such under the new state of things. Under Confederation, Canada will either be the theatre of an internal revolution when separated from England, or the federal system will lead to its absorption by the United States. For though the present scheme be but a botched imitation of the American system, Canadian legislators may find that they have pushed too far the doctrine of republicanism, and what with the admiration that perfect republicanism excites in the bosoms of some—for it must be remembered that emigrants from Europe are all more or less inclined that way—and the discontents which the violation of imagined right may create in the breast of others, republicanism may be a more interesting topic at no distant day than Ministers now imagine. It is singular enough that those who are now the strongest advocates for Federation, were nearly all Annexationists a few years ago, and it would appear that their earlier yearnings are, unconsciously to themselves, developing more practically now. Whatever fate may befall the British provinces in the next 20 years, the men now in power will be its authors, and many of them will live to see bloom the fruit of the seeds now sown.

Timor.

AMERICAN ART.

There are no branches of our intellectual life that have made so rapid an advance in positive excellence and in material value as those beautiful sisters of the group of fine arts—painting and sculpture. The growth of their importance seems but the work of today; for they have spread their influence and asserted their position within our own knowledge. Isolated excellence of a brilliant and special character we have always had; but the genius which has kindled into a glowing flame, whose rays have penetrated far into other lands, has had its birth in the present generation.

Twenty-five years ago art culture was at a very low ebb; we could have counted the really great names upon our fingers, and the list would have been exhausted. Two or three years later a group of young artists met in this city for pleasant intercourse; they sustained their organization for several years, constantly adding to their numbers, and gradually spreading a strong art influence. They drew around them some of the best minds of the day, poets, musicians, lawyers, literateurs and amateurs, forming a social and intellectual bund, whose influence in pleasant personal relations is acknowledged even to this day.

From out of this unpretending "sketch club" have arisen most of the names which are famous either as artists on canvass or in stone.

Great as our progress in art has been, what it might have achieved, both rapidly and permanently, had the National Academy of Design fulfilled its mission, can hardly be calculated. The material on hand was brilliant and malleable, but there was no outstretched hand from that powerful but narrow corporation to mould, direct, encourage or assist. Sheltered behind the mystic letters, "N. A.," they fervently prayed long life to the then members of that organization, so that no vacancy might occur in their ranks, which might compel them to admit some daring young outsider. Vacancies, however, did occur, but they were filled, not by the best talent, but by the most available man who would rest content with things as they were, without breathing in the august assembly the dreaded word—"progress." So they added fossil unto fossil, until the antiquity of the present N. A. has become a matter of historic doubt.

Genius, however, strong in its vitality, hopeful and determined to win, could not be repressed, and one by one we have seen our friends of long ago emerge from obscurity into the sunlight of success, with reputations not merely local but world-wide.

The oppressive action of the N. A.'s, excluding the best pictures of outsiders from the sight line, and hanging them as near heaven as possible, was unintentionally beneficent in its results. It disgusted the prominent artists, drove them from the Academy exhibitions, and prompted them, in self-defense, to exhibit on their own account. This was a move in direction of fortune; for, exhibited alone, each picture attracted general attention and individual criticism; there was no glaring daub beside it to mar its effect by distracting the eye, but it stood on its own merits, and challenged examination. Thus not only were large sums made for the artists by exhibition here and in other cities, but the painter's name became widely known, and the sale of the work at an enormous price was almost invariably the result. So the Academy's loss has been the artist's gain, and oppression has been the means of throwing large fortunes into the hands of our painters.

American art is best represented to the world by its landscape painting. In this branch, the world has acknowledged our greatness, if not our complete supremacy. Our facilities for observation embrace a wider field, and take a grander scope than can be found in any other country in the world. Whatever individual, physical, or material characteristics other nations possess, whether of form, costume, climate, color, earth, water, or air, we have them all combined in our vast continent, and all within reach of our net-work of railroads or navy of fleet boats. Our artists have not been slow to take advantage of these great natural facilities; they have sought out nature in all her haunts—in her valleys, in her mountains, in her deserts, and in her pleasant places, in all her moods and seasons, and have inscribed them on their canvas, that the world may see and know them.

To foreign people, the stupendous forms, the luxuriant growth, and the rich, bright coloring exhibited in our landscapes are matters of unqualified astonishment. But they feel the truth of the delineation, and do homage to the genius which created it. The London Art Journal, writing of a picture called "The Land of the Lotus-Eaters," by R. S. Duncanson, an American artist, makes the following remarks:

"America has long maintained supremacy in landscape art; perhaps, indeed, its landscape artists surpass those of England; certainly we have no painter who can equal the works of Church; and we are not exaggerating if we affirm that the production under notice may compete with any of the modern British school. Mr. Duncanson has established high fame in the United States and Canada. He is a native of the States, and received his art-education there; but it has been 'finished' by a course of study in Italy, by earnest thought at the feet of the great masters, and by a continual contemplation of nature under southern skies. * * * * * We may, therefore, add this picture to the many works of rare value supplied to us by the landscape artists of America. They have in their richly-gifted 'world' natural objects in such incalculable variety, that every student may be made a painter who looks on Nature with an eye ever so little educated by art. Go where they will over their boundless forests and 'everlasting prairies,' they find themes for the pencil. It is not, therefore, surprising that we find the artists of America contending successfully in a special department of art with those of Europe; nor that recent 'importations' from that country into this have raised our expectations very high as to their future."

Still we are not altogether satisfied with the direction which that branch of art has taken in America. It is too dependent upon mere form. Take, for instance, three-fourths of the landscapes now on the walls of the Academy, and they will seem, to the observant eye, like square bits cut out of an actual landscape—real forms, perhaps, but utterly devoid of that great, yet tender sentiment, which nature presents to all who study her with a loving heart, and in broad and generous appreciation. A true landscape must convey to every spectator that he is a part of it, or, at least, a distinct sense that, somewhere, there is a sentient being who mingles his nature with the unseen but deeply-felt sympathy that for ever springs from out the exquisite forms of harmony which make a landscape a perpetual hymn to the glory of the great Architect, whose forms of beauty are for ever and for ever renewed.

In the study of atmospheric effects our landscape artists have made daring strides. They have seized hold of conditions which, until lately, have seemed too outré to be grappled with, when in fact it was only the genius which was wanting to harmonize them with the accompanying forms, by the simple but unfailing rules which Nature exemplifies and teaches.

There is much more left to be said, which we shall possibly scatter through the sketches of the studios and the masters whose handicraft suggests so many prints, which can hardly be expressed without illustration.

National Academy of Design. We have taken a cursory glance at the main hall and the pigeon-holes which contain the annual exhibition of pictures at that institution, and find, amid a host of poor things, many pictures of high merit, which we shall discuss in our next. There is always one work which is the picture of the exhibition, and this year we think it will be found to be, Wier's painting of Parrott's Great Cannon Foundry in "casting" time. It is a difficult subject, broadly and strikingly treated, and is certain to attract universal attention. We shall give it the consideration it so justly merits.

CHARITABLE SOIREE AT DR. WARD'S MANSION.

When fashion holds out its hand to charity, the act is not only grateful, but it is certain to yield the happy result of a large and bountiful offering, from which no deduction in the way of expenses is permitted.

Dr. Ward's Mansion in 47th street, has long been celebrated for its beautiful picture gallery and concert-room, into which the four splendid parlors and the grand hall open, but its celebrity is better based upon the fact that its doors are always open for purposes of charity, many, many thousands of dollars having been contributed to benevolent institutions by amateur entertainments given within its walls.

The institution for which the soiree was given is the Evening School for Italian Adults. A most praiseworthy and benevolent object. The elegant concert-room was crowded with the beauty and the élite of the city. The toilets where unexceptionable, and the wearers worthy of worship, presenting a coup d'œil both brilliant and fascinating. Many distinguished characters of the sterner sex were present—among them the great sea hero, Admiral Farragut, who seemed to enjoy the fascinations of the vocal Lurlines on the stage most keenly.

The soiree was of a miscellaneous operatic character, whole scenes being given, and most of them in costume. The idea of the programme is due to the taste and experienced judgment of Wynandt Van Zandt, Esq., to whose control all the arrangements were intrusted.

Dr. Ward's Song and Chorus is a spirited composition, with a broad, telling melody and effective chorus. Mr. Whiting sung it well, needing only a little more animation and dash. Signor Fossati's grand cavatina was finely rendered, a combination of taste, spirit and force. Signor Fossati is one of our best salon singers, and is everywhere popular. Stigellis's pleasing song, Brightest Eyes, was tastefully and expressively sung by Mr. Romeyn, whose tenor voice is of sweet quality. The performance of the quartet from "Rigoletto," would have been acceptable on the operatic stage. In it we must notice the fine, rich contralto voice of Mrs. Charles Gilbert; also her rich and telling manner, which gave such color to the composition.

Mrs. Charles Farnham is really an accomplished vocalist. Her voice has been well-trained, its flexibility properly directed, and she has learned the Italian manner, which is of all others the only effective method. Her singing of the Ombra Leggera, from "Dinorah," one of the most difficult of show pieces, was excellent and effective. The execution was neat, and at the same time brilliant, and the spirit and character were well preserved.

The Ballata Quintetto e finale, from "Marie de Rohan," with chorus, was well and effectively sung. Miss Eloise Allen is a singer of great promise; her voice has splendid points, deficient only in the production of the middle register. A little careful study will remedy this, giving equality to a really fine organ.

A scene from Dr. Thomas Ward's English village opera, "Gipsey Frolic," the music of which is very quaint and pretty, was most effectively rendered. Mrs. Farnham, singing and acting with grace and spirit, and Miss Totten by her naive acting, charming voice, and sweet singing, winning a hearty and persistent encore. Mr. Farley ably assisted. Signor Archille Magni, made an effective and well-considered address.

The scene from Antonio Barili's opera, "Una Noche en Sevilla," was brilliantly effective. The ladies, Miss Totten and Miss Allen, sang charmingly and spiritedly, and, most ably assisted by Mr. Farley and Signor Fossati, won for the scene a unanimous encore. Signor Barili has written much charming music in his opera, "A Night in Grenada." We cannot, of course, judge of it as a whole, but we have from time to time heard isolated portions of it, and have found them melodious and brilliant, dramatic in form and full of character. We hope as our opera facilities expand—and they will be greatly enlarged before long—to hear this opera of Barili's in its entirety, for it has high merits that should no longer be hidden.

The violin and piano duet between Signor G. Sconcia and A. Barili was a very brilliant and effective performance. Signor Sconcia has a large, broad style, and a rich true tone, and a fine, nervous bow-arm. His execution is rapid and distinct, and he plays with fire and expression. He is an amateur, who, if in better practice could outrank nine-tenths of the professional players.

The concluding gerzetto, from Balfe's "Falstaff," was one of the most brilliant things of the evening. Most charming the ladies looked in their quaint costumes, and most charmingly they sung. Late as it occurred in the evening, this gerzetto was the theme of especial admiration.

The toilets of all the lady singers were tasteful, elegant, and well contrasted. No special mention can be made, where all were so worthy of admiration.

Thanks to the able direction of Mr. Van Zandt and the conducting of Signor Barili, the concert was a perfect success. The chorus, pupils of Barili's class, was well-trained and efficient, and the accompaniments played by Signor A. Barili and Mr. A. A. During, upon two of Chickering's most magnificent grand pianos, were both brilliant and orchestral in their effect. The Society must have gained a large addition to its funds by the results of this concert.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.—The Federal dead at Fort Pillow are being re-interred in a neat cemetery, over which a monument is to be raised. The Confederate dead remain neglected by both friends and foes. The work of disinterring the Confederate dead, buried upon private property in the Shenandoah Valley, to be re-interred at Winchester, is now being prosecuted. The graves of the National Cemetery at Andersonville are to be planted with flowers.

—— The Davenport (Iowa) Gazette says that at least 12,000,000 acres of arable land yet lie untouched by spade or plow, within the boundaries of Iowa.

—— The accredited correspondent of the Nation says that in Mississippi the 70 teachers in the colored schools are required to report monthly to the Freedmen's Bureau, specifying among other things the number of pupils of mixed blood. In the 12 schools which happened to stand at the head of the list, there are returned 287 children of pure African blood, and 777 of mixed blood.

—— The various Commanders at the South have been notified that the President's proclamation does not do away with martial law in the lately rebellious districts, and that troops will be kept at all points where they may be needed.

—— The Boston city government has appropriated $10,000 for the establishment of free salt-water bathing places for use this summer.

—— Strong proofs are adduced of the existence of a vast though unexplored cavern beneath the City of Lancaster, Penn. In sinking wells, the bottom crust, which is limestone, breaks through before reaching water, and the pumps are suspended from above by chains.

—— A white stole a chicken, and a black a hog, in Goldsboro', N. C., recently. They were each tied to the whipping-post, and subjected to 40 lashes, save one, on the bare back.

—— Florida papers and letters say that thousands of colored children are now being educated by former slaveholders of that State.

—— Mr. Winans, of Baltimore, has presented $25,000 to the managers of the Southern Relief Fair in that city.

—— The Ohio Farmer says: "To start a balky horse, fill his mouth with dirt or gravel from the road, and he'll go. Now the philosophy of the thing is, it gives him something else to think about. We have seen it tried 100 times, and it has never failed."

—— William Croft, famous in Boston some years since as a fugitive slave, is reported to be laboring successfully in Africa, both commercially and philanthropically. He has established lawful commerce and a large school at Whydan; and the King of Dahomey testifies his appreciation of him by sending him a present of six slaves.

—— A farmer in Susquehanna County recently had a suit brought against him for eight days' service in the hay-field, by a young man who voluntarily assisted the old man's daughter in raking hay as a convenient chance for sparking. The lass having discarded him and married another, the swain claimed wages of the old gentleman.

—— The following estimate, founded upon the United States census, has been made of the probable annual amount which it costs the individual members of the different churches in the country to sustain them: "A Baptist or Methodist, $3 40; a Presbyterian, $6; a Congregationalist, $10; a Roman Catholic, $14; an Episcopalian, $10; a Reformed Dutch, $22; a Unitarian, $23.

—— Miss Ann R. Adams, an ancient maiden, 68 years of age, residing at Danville, Va., is cutting a fourth set of teeth and growing a new crop of dark hair. Mrs. Elizabeth Coristy, a widow lady, 65 years of age, living in Winchester, is cutting a new set of teeth, after being toothless for years. Verily, nature abhors a vacuum!

—— A newly arrived John Chinaman in California purchased some ice, and finding it very wet, laid it out to dry in the sun. On going to look for it again, he found it had disappeared, and forthwith charged the whole Chinese neighborhood with larceny. A general riot was the consequence.

—— Bostonians are preparing for a general immersion all around through the coming season. The City Fathers have just appropriated $10,000 for baths, and men, women and children are expected to betake themselves forthwith to the aqueous element, and there remain until the work of purification is complete.

Foreign.—Prince Satsuma, of Japan, is turning his attention to the manufacture of silks for the English and American markets. The English language is now being taught publicly in Japan, under the sanction of the Government.

—— The Berlin correspondent of the London Times states that emigration to North America is daily assuming greater proportions. Up to the end of May 10,000 persons have already engaged to leave, via Hamburg and Bremen. The emigrants are nearly all northerners and Protestants, whereas 10 years ago, the vast majority consisted of southerners, many of them Roman Catholics.

—— At a newspaper office in Sydney, Australia, is a tablet informing visitors that the editor cannot be spoken to unless paid for his time. Persons desiring an audience are invited to buy a ticket of admission at the door of the waiting-room—one hour costing ten shillings; half an hour, six shillings; fifteen minutes, three shillings, and so on.

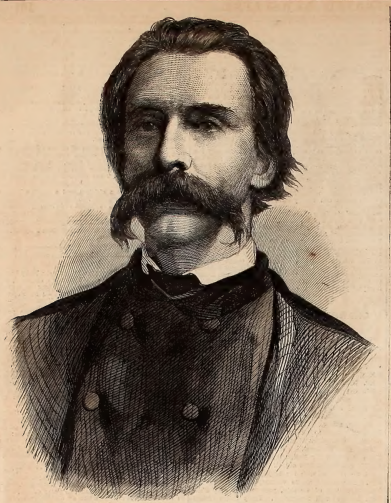
—— By the raising of the sunken ships in the harbor of Sebastopol, Russia, 36 tuns of copper, 90 tuns of iron 1,200 cannon, 4,000 balls, 12,000 cast-iron ballast pigs, 100 chain cables, and a large quantity of miscellaneous stores were recovered.

—— When the sewerage of Paris is complete, the canals will contain not only the water and gas pipes of the city, but also the telegraph wires of the city companies.

—— A bark named the Truelove, which was lately sent from England to the Davis Straits' whale fisheries, is probably the oldest vessel now afloat and in service. It was built in Philadelphia in 1764, and is consequently now 102 years old.

—— Spanish ship-owners are transferring their vessels to other nationalities to avoid seizure by Chilean and other privateers.

—— A blushing bride of 60 married to a gay young fellow of 64, committed suicide from jealousy, in Stamford, England.



—— A "noble lord" was recently fined 10 shillings, in Liverpool, for smoking in a railway carriage with the consent of the passengers.

—— A real estate suit, which has been in the Prussian courts 300 years, was lately decided.

—— The London Owl publishes the following, under the heading of "Who's Who in 1866:" "Lord Russell is a Prime Minister with a divided Cabinet, and without a party; a chief without authority, an authority with no subjects."

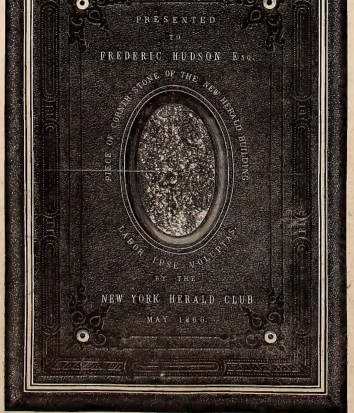
"Asphodel," a charming novel, with an anonymous author, has just made its appearance in Boston, published by Ticknor & Fields. It is a sweetly toned work, unexceptionably characteristic, and of uncommon literary accomplishment. It is also a book of the class which it is desirable to see more frequently in the boudoir and on the drawing-room table; for, independent of its romantic attractions, it carries with it many elements of refinement. However, works of this kind speak for themselves, and usually find their way in the right direction.

Two plates by Gustave Doré, taken from the series of his biblical illustrations, have found their way by special permission into the April number of the Art Journal, and give it additional interest. Besides these, there is a magnificent engraving of "The Trooper," from Herring, Bright & Baxter's painting, worth a whole volume. "New Shoes," by W. F. Fritts, is another charming plate, from H. Bourne's graver. The "Historic Devices and Badges," an interesting branch of heraldry, are beautifully executed, and in the "Memories of the Authors of the Age" (illustrated), is a highly interesting biographical sketch of Mary Russell Mitford. The Art Journal is such a magnificent publication that it will soon be found on the drawing-room table of every family of refinement and good taste.

MR. FREDERICK HUDSON, ACTING EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK HERALD.

HENRY A. SMYTHE, ESQ., THE NEWLY APPOINTED COLLECTOR OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK.

FREDERICK HUDSON, ESQ.,
Of the New York Herald.



FEW people, out of the profession of letters, have any clear notion of what constitutes editorship. The general belief is that the newspaper is made up by a single person, "the Editor," who reads all that is sent to him, and writes all that is printed—an Argus-eyed and Briareus-handed being—thoroughly acquainted with all that has happened and is occurring, and personally responsible for all the opinions and statements that appear in the columns under his control, down to the very typographical errors. This impression is mainly founded on what are known to be the experiences of some country editors, who write their own editorials, put them in type, work their own presses, and distribute their own papers, besides, as pathetically said by one of them, "attending the baby." The vast machinery of metropolitan journals, with their army of correspondents, reporters, and writers, cannot be comprehended, except by those who have had experimental relations with them, and these alone appreciate what is implied in "editorship."

To write steadily and well for any journal is a task or duty far different from that of editing it. An editor must be a man keenly alive to all that is going on around him—capable of appreciating facts and the tendencies of the times, judicial in his estimates of men and things, cool, temperate and conciliatory, never dazzled by rhetoric in whatever is submitted for the press, stern in striking out the immaterial, ready to respond to every class of inquiries; and, above all, able to discern promptly the capabilities of the hundreds who seek the doubtful honors, and still more uncertain rewards of the publicist.

Among the very few men in America who possess, in the highest degree, these varied and valuable qualifications, is Mr. Frederick Hudson, of the New York Herald, whose temporary, and possibly permanent separation from the editorial department of that journal, affords an opportunity for referring to him and his services to American Journalism without risk of being suspected of flattery or of a desire to further ulterior purposes. It is no disparagement to the man who founded the New York Herald on no capital but his indomitable will, unwearied energy, faithful industry, and active intelligence, to say that the success which has carried that journal from a bare cellar in Wall street to a palatial establishment in Broadway, and its author from being the struggling youth, living on his two dollars a week, to be the wielder of his hundreds of thousands, is in great part due to the undogging zeal, patient and careful labor, clear intelligence, unruffled temper, precise business habits, prompt executive ability of Mr. Hudson, who for 30 years has held the post of confidence and responsibility in the establishment of the New York Herald. Modest to a fault, retiring, yet firm, with thousands of men to deal with in every relation, and some relations most trying to patience and temper, it is something wonderful to say that here is a man who never which seeks for awhile—perhaps forever—the shaded, quiet pools of private life, there to reflect the sun and the stars, the rainbow, the flowers, and the bending trees, happy to have leaped the cataracts and passed the whirling eddies and the rough and narrow channels through which it has been forced in the years that have gone.

Mr. Hudson was born in Quincy, Mass., April 26, 1819, in which vicinity his ancestors, emigrating from England, settled as early as 1636. It may be said to the pride of Boston, that he was educated in the public schools of that city, which have been recently characterized by the highly civilized legislature of Texas as "a miserable failure." He commenced active life as an accountant in the warehouse of a Boston merchant, where, no doubt, he acquired some part of the method and system, as well as promptitude, which have been through his subsequent life among his leading characteristics. In the spring of 1838 he came to New York, where he was employed for some months in the Merchants' News Room—then recently established—where he attracted the attention of Mr. Bennett, then struggling to found the New York Herald, and who, in the autumn of the same year, engaged him in his then infant establishment, where he has remained to this date, with only an interval of a few weeks, giving to it the very best years of an active and well-ordered life. During this long period, as we have said, he has been the confidential and esteemed assistant of its founder, whose confidence he has repaid by a faithfulness, unselfishness, and earnestness as admirable as exceptional.

By reference to foregoing dates, it will be seen that Mr. Hudson is still a young man; but the wear and tear of 30 years of journalism are more than enough for the strongest constitution, even when, as in his case, fortified by temperance, frugality, and the utmost regularity of life. He consequently finds it prudent, if not abso-

BOOK OF AUTOGRAPHS AND RESOLUTIONS, PRESENTED BY THE NEW YORK HERALD CLUB TO MR. FREDERICK HUDSON.

WATCH AND CHAIN PRESENTED TO MR. FREDERICK HUDSON, OF THE NEW YORK HERALD, BY THE HERALD ASSOCIATION.

was betrayed into an injudicious act or expression, and who, probably, has no enemy in the world. It would require more time and space than we have at our disposal to attempt to analyze a mind and character so evenly—we had almost said so perfectly—balanced. Besides, we know that the subject of our observations would shrink from the limited notoriety which we might give to him through any such attempt. Content to discharge faithfully the duties of his arduous profession, he has sought none of the noisy honors which are too often the ambition of the slaves of the quill; and it would ill become us to ruffle the surface of a stream lutely necessary, to seek relief from his duties, for a time, at least, and will retire to a tasteful residence near Concord, Mass., where, it is to be hoped, he will be able to recuperate his energies and recruit his powers, so as to return again to the fraternity of New York journalists, of whom he has been one of the best and most respected mbers.

THE STRIKE OF THE CAR DRIVERS—SCENE IN FRONT OF THE ASTOR HOUSE, NEW YORK.—A CAR, MODERATELY FULL, ESCORTED OFF BY THE DRIVERS.

In consequence of his departure, Mr. Hudson has resigned his position as member of the Executive Committee of the Associated Press, with which he has been connected for 12 years. In doing so, he was presented with a most flattering testimonial from the remaining members, elegantly engraved and framed. A testimonial was also presented to him from the members of the "New York Herald Club," through Mr. Ryan, its Vice-President, consisting of a valuable gold chronometer, bearing the inscription:

PRESENTED TO FREDERIC HUDSON, ESQ.,
BY THE
NEW YORK HERALD CLUB,
May, 1866.

And also with an elegantly bound book, consisting of six large pages of vellum, with appropriate illuminations, and bound in a heavy brown morocco cover, richly ornamented and paneled. In the centre of the front cover is a good-sized piece of the corner-stone of the new Herald building, worked into the form of an oval, and finely polished; and around this, in gilt letters, are the words:

PIECE OF THE CORNER STONE OF THE
NEW HERALD BUILDING.
"Labor Ipse Voluptas."

UNION SCHOOL HOUSE, CEDAR FALLS, IOWA.

REST AFTER DINNER.—The natural time for dinner would appear to vary with the habits of life between the hours of 12 and 3. As was urged in the case of children, plenty of time should be given to this meal; the food taken slowly, in small morsels, and ample use made of the teeth before swallowing; and, if practicable, a considerable period for rest of body and mind should be secured between dining and returning to the ordinary duties and labors of the day. The almost invariable habit of the lower animals to remain quiet, and generally asleep, after a full meal, is some evidence in favor of this recommendation. The dyspeptic condition of many of our operatives in town and country is clearly traceable to the necessity of hurrying to and from dinner, and from dinner to work, in consequence of living at a considerable distance from the place of employment.

THE GRAVE OF ROBERT MORRIS, THE GREAT FINANCIER OF THE REVOLUTION.

I HEAR THE BLUEBIRD SING.

BY ALFRED B. STREET.

Now glows the reddened maple,
And shrewd the wood-sprouts spring,
And feathers out the beech-tree,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
The bluebird of the spring!

Now dance the lake in azure,
Its waves their silver fling;
And the wood-duck shows his plumage,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
I hear his carols ring!

From far within the forest
Soft winds sweet odors bring,
Of the tender birch and sassafras,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
Bright crest and azure wing!

The butterfly is floating
With the darning-needle's wing;
And hums the golden honey-bee,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
How swift his circles swing!

I see the little tom-tit,
And he hops and says "Ching-ching!"
And the squirrel chirps and sapers,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
What joys his descants bring!

The robin warbles sweetly,
And the swamp's keen voices ring,
And the lily globes the shallow,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
Oh, rich and radiant thing!

Around the pine-tree pillar
The mercury-vine will cling,
And the grass will grow yet greener,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
What gleams his pinions fling!

The moss will swell up plumper,
And the ground pine twine its string,
Through the flowers of all the wilderness
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
'Mid all this blossoming!

The eagle wide is launching
The vulture's haughty king;
And the fish-hawk swift is sailing,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
Bound everywhere his wing!

The oriole is coming,
And his cradle soon will sling;
And the meek bird pours the music,
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
His merry carols ring!

The aspen's leaflets quiver,
On high hints tassels swing,
Soon, soon will come the bob-o-link!
And I hear the bluebird sing:
The bluebird! the bluebird!
Sweet Hesper of the spring!

LOST.

BY VIRGINIA R. RHODES.

I stood at the window of the W—— House at ——, and looked down at the two as they passed each other with a cold salutation, and then resumed their careless walk among the tide of promenaders that traversed the sea-coast.

I could trace the thoughts in the mind of each, as, with a mocking smile on his handsome lips, Le Roy Pemberton just touched his hat with the fingers of a white aristocratic hand, on which a flashing diamond glowed and scintillated; and Walter Noyce, his blue eyes flashing proudly, inclined his head with a haughty acknowledgment as he passed. I knew that they were thinking of the night before, and of me; and my heart did not beat with the fervor to know that the two attentions I had accepted with unusual graciousness throughout the evening had sent that triumphant smile to the face of Le Roy; nor the knowledge that my refusal to dance with Walter, though my hand was given to Pemberton in the next set, had made his eyes cool ashen. No, I felt neither pain nor pleasure at the thought; my heart seemed so cold and dead that morning; and though it was the month of July, I turned away from the window with a little nervous shiver. It may have been the sway of heavy crape as we good angel left my side, or a chilly breath of presentiment that swept through my frame—I know not. I only turned away in my pride, and refused to think tenderly of the man who had withdrawn his hopes and love, and stepped aside that another might fill his place.

That Walter Noyce once loved me I knew; that he had not been repulsed, I also knew; therefore when Le Roy Pemberton, with his great wealth and old ancestral name, that made him courted and honored, sought me out and offered me a devotion that made me envied by all; and I, with love's perversity sometimes encouraged it for the sake of seeing Walter's sad look of reproach and hearing his gentle rebuke—the first reiterations of love and forgiveness were so sweet after our recent coldness—I could not understand why, because I could not always escape the attentions I sometimes permitted, he should gradually withdraw himself from my society and love, until we met at last as strangers. And now I flirted and laughed so as not to let him see how weary life had grown. Proud as himself, I determined to teach him that I would not be won unsought, and if gratification then was in the thought, it was mine to know that he suffered.

Tired of these reflections, I threw a light scarf round my shoulders, and passing down stairs, joined the group below. A merry voice hailed me. "Ah! there you are Adelle!" and Maggie Hayne's bright face danced before me. "We were all wondering what had become of you, and the rest of us girls have been doing our best to console the gents for your absence; but we haven't succeeded very well, for one long visage just passed, its owner whistling dolefully, 'She has gone from my gaze,' and I positively had to call three times before he heard me. I tried my best to amuse him for five whole minutes, and my exertions were at last rewarded by hearing him mutter assent that he hadn't seen the sunshine this morning, for absence of your smile. 'There he is!' and her rosy lips pouted saucily as she pointed to Le Roy, who was hastening toward me. He took my hands in each of his, while his eyes lighted with what appeared to be pleasure, that my own, ashamed of their poor return, insensibly fell beneath them. I blushed deeply; I knew not unless it was because I saw Walter Noyce regarding me earnestly. I well knew what construction he would place upon my deepening color, but with restless pride I turned on my arm to Le Roy without seeming to notice him, and ten minutes afterward, I saw him traversing the veranda with Miss Lyons on his arm.

Days passed, bringing to me the same round of unchanging events. No one ever thought now of associating my name with that of Walter Noyce, but each and all united on giving me to Le Roy Pemberton. I, myself, began to think that fate had willed it so to be, and strove to think of her princess as his wife. I did not stop to question the dead weight at my heart when the prospect rose before me of the cold barrier that would stand between the then and the now—Walter's wife or Le Roy's, darted swiftly through my brain.

It was a lovely night. The full moon was rising slowly toward the zenith, draping the earth in folds of shimmering light, and throwing a silly gleam on the vast bosom of the waters, that scarcely palsated beneath its tender glow.

The jeweled lamps were hung in the vault above to light the passage of the gay throng who for one earth hold off her weeds of mourning for the last day, and welcomed her with silvery robes, sprinkling diamonds in her path. It was a night to lure you to gentle thoughts and good resolves. I did not care to join the merry groups below; their light laughter and hum of conversation seemed to dull and senseless as it floated through the open window to my ear. The parlors were partially darkened, and the pale moonlight seemed to linger in the rooms, deserted by all save myself and a young girl who sat listlessly playing over, "Thou Hast Learned to Love Another." I always thought its exquisitely touching, but to-night it seemed to have a sadder refrain.

It may have been that I felt unusually sensitive, or that the words found an echo in my heart. No longer able to restrain my feelings, I passed out on the veranda, and seating myself in a secluded corner, my over-wrought feelings gave way, and I wept long and silently. I was so lost to all around, that I did not hear any one approaching, until a step sounded close beside me. I raised my head quickly, made a vain effort to appear composed, and met the calm eyes of Walter Noyce fixed with questioning pity upon me.

At any other time my pride would have cried out at being discovered unbidden in weeping; but pride had vanished to-night, and in its place was a something else that made me feel as though sweet sympathy from him would be worth more than aught else, and my voice was tremulous as I returned his greeting:

"Adelle," and his voice was low and tender, "you are in tears—may I not know the cause? If there is aught I can do to make you happy, call on me as you would on—a brother."

My heart bounded at the slight hesitation before he pronounced the last word, but it fell again as the cold title passed his lips. I gently shook my head, telling him that it was nothing but childish weakness. I saw his disappointed look, noted his quick movement toward me—and I might yet have been happy. But at that moment the notes of the piano ceased sounding, footsteps were heard on the gravel walk, and the next moment Le Roy stepped through the open window and stood beside me.

"They told me I should find you here," were his first words; and then, catching sight of Walter, he nonchalantly saluted, as he said coldly, "Ah, beg pardon; I did not know that I was interrupting so pleasant a tête-a-tête. I will not intrude a third upon you."

At any other time I would have resented his scornful words, but knowing how much cause I had given him to address me thus, I hastened to answer:

"No; do not leave us. Mr. Noyce has just finished me, although not better than life, by his quiet and enchanting view. Make one of us, and we will enjoy it together."

Walter answered, and I could see the pain struggling in his face, though his voice was firm as he spoke:

"Miss Winthrop will find in Mr. Pemberton a much more interesting, if not more appreciative companion than myself; and, therefore, if she does not forbid it, I will leave her with him, and join those below."

I inclined my head in token of assent, not seeking to detain him, for a quick pain, to see how calmly he left me, kept me silent.

"I am glad he has gone, Adelle," Le Roy whispered, bending over me. "I wanted you to walk on the beach with me, there is such a delightful breeze from the water. Do say 'Yes.' Such a night as this ought to be sufficient inducement of itself."

I rose, and tossing to the wind the white rose-bud I had been feverishly tearing to pieces, I threw away my last dream of happiness, and gave him my arm without a word.

He led me out through the throng of lifters, almost touching Walter as we passed, I knew it was him, but I dared not raise my eyes to his face, lest my courage should forsake me. We walked on in silence till we stood close by the sea. We could hear the quiet dip of the waves as they touched the sand almost at my feet; and a strange calm, like a spell, breathed from them, while the full moon shining down upon my ocean-grave, took possession of me. But his words broke the spell, and brought me back to the life I had wished was mine no longer.

But why repeat all? Why tell of the love he offered and received, and with such impassioned earnestness? Is it not enough to know that, beneath the pure, truthful stars, I dared to raise my eyes to his and give him, in return for his deep devotion, the ashes of a dead love that had been—was another's—pledged myself to be his.

I may have been a little heartless, when everybody either knew or guessed at our engagement—I cared little which—the diamond ring which Le Roy placed upon my finger soon flashed on the forefinger of my left hand, might have told them that—a week afterward, that I stood on the beach, leaning on the arm of Le Roy and the other pointing to a distant line of cliffs far beyond.

"That is the vessel that sails this day before, a small party of us, and passes directly under the spot, my eyes had been attracted by a clump of bushes, that, from the distant vessel, I had of them, appeared to be covered with heavy clusters of small snow-white blossoms, growing pure and wax-like in the shadow of the grim height. An unaccountable desire to have a spray of them seized me from the first. I said nothing at the time, however, though I carefully noted the spot where they grew, and resolved in my mind to possess them.

I waited for a day; but the next, unable to restrain my impatience longer, I made Le Roy go down to the beach with me, and, pointing to the tiny speck, in the distance that could scarcely discern it, I told of the blossoms I had seen there—how much I wanted them—and ended by asking him to get some for me. He looked at me a moment, as though to assure himself that I was in earnest, and then, measuring with his eye the dizzy height, he turned to me:

"Why, Adelie, what can have prompted you to want them? It would be sheer madness for me to undertake this proposition. I am not a fair gallery flowers, when prettier can be had at any time with far less trouble."

"That is the very reason I would have them," I replied. "Those that can be had for the simple asking, I do not crave. It is because they are almost unattainable that I wish them."

"Yes! but, Adelie, would you have me peril my life for a few simple flowers, that you would tire of almost as soon as received?"

"No! not that. But I do not think there is any danger. I noticed that the rocks were jagged, and in many ways so that is afforde every facility for climbing. Besides, the flowers are little more than half way up."

"What folly!" he exclaimed, half angrily. "You are as persistent as a spoiled child, and quite as unreasonable;" and then, probably noticing that his tone was rather harsh, he added, more gently, "Come, Adelie, do be reasonable, and give up this fancy"; and he half attempted to draw me away. I do not know what made me so perverse, but I would not give up, and some evil demon prompted me to say, as I looked straight into his eyes:

"I do believe you are afraid to go, Le Roy Pemberton."

I could see the flush mount to his brows, as he made an effort to suppress the angry words that rose to his lips, and I could not quite control himself, and the hurt I had given him quivered through his voice, as he answered, bitterly,

"Perhaps I am afraid to go, now you think I am not a coward, Adelie, and the evening tide should leave me a corpse at your feet, you would be happy!"

My face glowed, as I answered: "I don't know, that would be little worse than being tied to a wizard for life."

His face was white with agony as he answered, hoarsely:

"Heaven forgive you those cruel words, Adelie; and leaving my side, he disappeared.

All that I had said, I thought and yet I did not weep, but stood there, half frightened at the results of my rash words. I was turning to leave, when the thought, as what Noyce looked earnestly, lovingly, into mine, as he stood before me, and his low voice said:

"I have loved you, Adelie, and if it is in the power of man, the flowers shall be yours."

One pressure of the hand, and he was gone.

Like one in a dream I waited all day—for what? The return of the man I loved, and the coming of the one to whom my hand was pledged. He came at last, but not with my better than life.

It was twilight. I had not seen Le Roy since I parted from him in the morning, and as I sat there waiting for his return, I heard a rush of many feet in the hall, a suppressed murmur of voices, and passing out into the passage-way, I beheld two rough men I saw—Heaven have mercy—the fair locks of Walter Noyce, dank and dripping, the blue eyes sealed for ever, and the pour hands bruised and bleeding, holding in their death clasp a few white flowers, crushed and broken. I took it all in at one glance, and with a piercing shriek fell fainting to the floor.

I am Le Roy's wife now. He knows all, and often speaks of those dark hours after that fearful swoon, when he never hoped to claim me on earth again—the hours when the one who died for me was put out of my sight for ever. I try to be a dutiful wife, and he never knows how often I gaze on the withered flowers he keeps for me, locked up in them the death of all life's hopes.

Perhaps, in the far beyond, he is waiting for me; there, there is neither marrying, nor giving in marriage.

ANTOINE CAUTER, OR PROBST, THE MURDERER.

IMMEDIATELY after the Deering murders, perhaps the most fearful on record in Philadelphia and the neighboring cities were alive for the arrest of the perpetrators of the crime. On the evening of the 18th of April, Officer Dorsey and another were on duty in Market street, near 23d, when a man passed. Officer Dorsey said: "That man looks like the German murderer is described to be, and I will see who he is." He then walked after him, and on coming alongside of him: "Are you a German?" "No," was the reply. "I am a Frenchman." The answer was given in broken English. "Where are you going?" the officer then asked. "In the country," was the reply. "I should like you to take a walk with me," said Officer Dorsey, and the man at once assented, and went quietly with the policeman down Market street, Officers Atkinson and Walden following. He made no objection to going into the station house, but when questioned, at first was not disposed to talk. Information of the arrest was sent to the Chief of Police, but it was kept from the knowledge of the reporters for several reasons, the principal one being that there might have been an accomplice. The prisoner was searched, and two rings were found on his fingers, and a purse in one of his pockets. This was afterward identified as one that had belonged to Mrs. Deering. The news of the arrest having been quickly circulated by the police officers of the district, several hundred persons gathered around the station house, most of whom were in a state of great excitement.

Frequent calls were made to bring the prisoner out. Between eight and nine o'clock, Mrs. Mary, having reached the station house, Antoine was conducted by officers Brennan and Walden to her presence. As soon as the eyes of the old lady fell upon him, she exclaimed, in a voice tremulous with emotion: "Oh, you murderer!" The prisoner hung down his head and was silent. Mrs. Dolan then stepped up to him and removed a brush from his back—it was the one she had herself made for him to please Deering.

At the same time she remarked that some of the clothes he had on were Deering's. Antoine did not make any remark at that time about the murder, but when the officers took him down stairs and were again searching him, he, in reply to a question, remarked that he had killed the boy Cornelius, but did not kill the family of Mr. Deering; that a German, whom he afterward described, had done it all.

About nine o'clock Antoine was removed in a carriage to the Central Station, Chief Ruggles and Lieutenant Patton having him in charge. The crowd about the station was very numerous as he was being led away, and the prisoner was shown up, much to the gratification of the assembly. The news of his arrest was widely circulated after the prisoner's removal from the Fifteen street station, and a large crowd soon gathered around the Central Station. From 10 to 11 o'clock there must have been from 4,000 to 5,000 persons about Fifth and Chestnut streets.

The removal of Antoine to a photograph gallery in the neighborhood for an ante-room exhibition, that would, no doubt, have resulted in the death of the prisoner had not a large police force accompanied him. Five exhibitions of the prisoner were held, and the interest manifested by the public was shown in the great desire to obtain a copy of the picture. As soon as ready to follow the prisoner as he was being driven off, but the officers resolutely kept the crowd back.

The prisoner was held in full confession, and since, on being arranged, refused counsel, but it was assigned by the court.

The life of this one man is small reparation for his crimes, but we hope that he will soon be tried, and punishment awarded, so that the public attention may not be too long allowed to dwell on his terrible crime.

MR. HENRY A. SMYTHE,

The New Collector of New York.

THIS gentleman, who has just been appointed to one of the most important offices in the gift of the Administration, is a native of New York, and hails from one of the oldest families in the State. He was born in 1819 in Hobart, Delaware Co. His father was a prominent farmer of that place, an effort was made to the Hon. Andrew Marvine, represented that district in Congress.

Mr. Smythe, after receiving a good academic education, came, in 1836, to this city, commencing his business life as clerk in one of the leading dry-goods importing houses, but subsequently entered an extensive importing establishment in the same capacity. In 1844 he formed a partnership with the house of Francis Skinner & Co., opening the first branch in this city of that numerous Eastern manufacturing company's agencies.

In 1857 he entered the house of Smythe, Sparrow & Co., commencing it successfully through all the business perils profitably till 1864, when he retired and was appointed Assistant Treasurer of the United States, an institution wrought into being by himself, and of which he still remains at the head. In this capacity Mr. Smythe engineered the affairs of the bank in the strongest evidence that could be given of Mr. Smythe's business ability and executive capacity, as well as conservative ability, which constitutes the very qualifications requisite for the Collector of the Port of New York. Prompt even in his actions and dealings, he demands the standard of excellence from others, and can never be swerved from his own sense of duty, however great the temptation or specious the devices. Socially he is one of the most genial of men, and a warm friend, as he proved in the true Christian spirit of benevolence; frank and gentlemanly in his intercourse with his fellows, he rarely forgets a slight, and is a warm and earnest friend and supporter of President Johnson.

In appointing Mr. Smythe to this important post, the President has inaugurated an entirely new system in making selection for office. There is no political party or clique that can say "I did it." Belonging to the great commercial class of the country, all interests, commercial and political, conservative and radical, democratic and republican, have joined in the support of his claims for the place. The President has, furthermore paid a high compliment to our mechanics, with whom Mr. Smythe is popular. This class, after performing much of the labor for political moves, and furnishing a large share of the money, are seldom considered in the distribution of office. The promotion places, and especially the collectorships, are too generally given to a lawyer or some tricky politician; seldom to one of our honorable mechanics. But two of our Collectors, who can now be recalled, were selected from among the commercial men. Three—John Jonathan Thomson and Cornelius W. Lawrence, also were, without doubt, two of the most popular and efficient ones we have ever had in this city. It is believed that Mr. Smythe will follow closely their example.

THE CHOLERA TRACEABLE TO ELECTRIC INFLUENCES.

THE French press and the savans are just now making a great glorification over the discovery that the Asiatic cholera is traceable to certain electric influences, and that its movements can be marked by science and studied. Having had our attention called to the French claim of discovery, we reproduce, from the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, of November 29, 1848, an article by A. C. Gatch, M.D., having document emphatically, with diagrams, the same discovery. As this is a matter of national as well as of humanitarian importance, and as the article is understandable to everybody, we reproduce it as originally printed, dedicating for our country the credit of a discovery that will some day arouse as much importance as that of vaccination or the use of chloroform. We believe that Dr. Castle is still alive, and reading in this city:

The startling admonitions which every arrival from Europe conveys to us of the approach of that most terrible pestilence of modern times—the Asiatic cholera —have naturally attracted the attention of physicians and the public in general to its cause, nature and treatment. Much is first united there shown, the intelligent way of such sudden and appalling violence that professional and non-professional men seemed to be alike stunned and rendered incapable of investigating it with any degree of care or success. The time for inquiry has since elapsed has not been unimproved by medical observers, and a large and valuable collection of facts with regard to this disease has been accumulated. We are thus provided, to a considerable extent, with the means of substituting for mere theory the sober deductions of reason. I have myself devoted some time and labor to the collection of facts on this subject, and the result of my investigations has forced upon my mind, which I am at length encouraged to present to you, for the consideration of the profession, as the most philosophical basis for the concentration and more favorable opportunities than I had encountered for the prosecution of this most important inquiry. Strongly impressed with my theory of the origin and nature of Asiatic cholera was suggested and enforced by the facts which presented themselves as I proceeded in my investigations, and that I did not set out with it, seeking only for facts to sustain a preconceived opinion, I shall at once give you, as concisely as possible, the views which I entertain of this disease, and the grounds on which they are supported.

The dreadful influence that this mysterious agent, as an epidemic in the form of malignant cholera, has produced upon the human family, and its great fatality, carrying off 10 per cent. in numbers more than the population of the United States, need not be dwelt upon here. The cholera had been generally known in Europe previous to 1817 as occurring sporadically, and in the most aggravated and malignant form, as the "spasmodic cholera," when it burst forth and spread its desolating fury, and it made the circuit of the world in its destructive progress, whether by municipal laws, quarantine or military cordon, has ever failed for a single instant able to stay its onward course. Reason is beginning to give way to the non-contagionist of this character, but still is medical as well as non-medical science amazed, and a loss to account for the strange and irresistible waywardness of a disease which has baffled them in all its attempts or successful efforts to stay it. It has been suggested that atmospheric influences superadded and propagate the disease, and that it has its origin in animalcule floating in and filling the atmosphere, which, by their irritating effects upon the system, produce the disease. But were these the causes of malignant cholera, we should behold the disease tossed upon the winds with atmospheric caprices, borne, from point to point, in search, were to exist, of special points of the divinities and sub-divisions of the compass. This, however, is not the case, although, unfortunately, little is known of the laws governing atmospheric changes and their variations. We know, it is true, Professor Espy's ingenious theory on severe storms, and also those of others. We know, from well-demonstrated proofs, that changes are constantly occurring in the influences of atmospheric phenomena; that cold, expansion, contraction, condensation, irrespective of seasons, and but these, in an eminent degree, will, in altogether, are caused by solar heat, or, in other words, solar electricity.

It is evident that the earth was not made or created to be stationary, but that the atmosphere as an appendage of this planet, engendered within and exhaled from its body by solar and thermal electricity, or atmospheres are naturally formed and exhaled from other bodies. These subtle, ever-changing and ever-active agents, are all subject to that most powerful and subtle of all agents, electricity, which, we suppose, and we suppose, that by its subtle chemical and occult influences will be often exerted on the crust of the earth as to unfit certain portions of the surface of the globe for the healthy existence, or even continuance, of vegetable and animal life? May not various poisonous and destructive gases be engendered in the earth, during the hopes of the husbandman, and sending forth poisonous to the life and vitality of thousands in order to confound all the theories and wisdom of chemists and philosophers? Suppose, for the moment, that a superabundance of nitrogen gas were exhaled into the atmosphere. Might we not find in that phenomena a rational explanation of the excitement in certain nerves, hallucinations, pains, and the like experienced in others, and the certain effects they produce upon their system, and of long continuance? Would not a differently constituted, might exclaim to the "how dye do" of their friends, that they "never felt so well in their lives." So with a superabundance of oxygen and other gases, inflammatory and nervous fevers would be produced in peculiar temperaments obnoxious to such influences, as well as hurricanes, thunder-storms, and such like phenomena, so beautifully described by Beaver as existing in the atmosphere and influencing the surrounding population and the brute creation immediately preceding an irruption of the Mount Etna. Atmospheres thus locally affected, either by solar attraction, or by electrical-magnetic action, might produce only endemic disease, or disease from "miasmatic poisons" of the locality. Typhus, or ship fevers," and such like infections, may be accounted adequate causes, emanating from animal matter affecting the immediately adjacent portion of local atmosphere, but we cannot conceive that in the case of malignant cholera that the opposition that as the earth performs its revolutions it may be subject to such influences, now exhaling it to a more than usual amount of electric influence, and now to a more ascendant than usual? We may rationally suppose such phenomena to take place, and the influence they may exert upon human and terrestrial electricity affords abundant room for speculation. We have, for example, as an evidence for terrestro-electric force, the magnetic needle, &c., and science has discovered four magnetic poles, two of weak and two of strong magnetic power, or electric intensity—the most powerful of the magnetic poles being on the American Continent, and the weakest in Asia—the dip of the magnetic needle exhibiting the intensity. May not such phenomena as are here indicated produce, or be the exciting cause of the internal generation of the gaseous atmospheric agent, steam, which as of great electric intensity, and caloric, so as to account for disruptions of fire, through the earth's crust; the up-heaving of mountains and high lands, and the extraordinary effects of electric action, often being about a synchronous with these data as the destruction of portions of the earth's crust, or of its usually uniform level appearance, in the form of the volcanic eruptions or by earthquakes, &c., &c.? Now when phenomena, as the above, are supposed to be produced by this sub-terrestro-electric action upon the system of the earth, we may reasonably expect to see changes in the gaseous and vaporous generations of the earth's crust, which would exhibit new poles on the atmosphere of general electric uniformity, the latter deviating from certain points in the earth's eccentric stream peculiar to electric action, as all these influences are governed by magnetic laws, and the direct phenomena so inimical to animal and vegetable life.

Let us examine the course of the cholera for the short period that it appeared in each of the known lands of its western course. It has not been my object to trace the course of the disease as it emanated from the centre of its birth-place, but to ascertain, as I asserted, with the exception of those rivers running parallel with the meridian north pole or electric route, and then generally upon one bank of the river only, if in the same manner, the disease followed the phenomena of electric eccentricity, but has advanced steadily westward by what is termed "leaps," or that of "ticking" of two ships sailing against a head wind, and crossing each other's course. From its point of starting in 1817, from being an endemic disease, it rolled over the Jhumnah, of which the Delta of the Ganges, &c., forms a part, and striking a south-southeast element in direction, reached as far south as Malacca, near to the equator. Then, from the centre of its endemic position, it commenced its career in south-south-east, about 15 to 20° in its southern course, as it was on the west, and in a direction, perhaps, of about 30°, on the other tack—the "short tack" being that in which the magnetic needle pole or electric route, and by thus crossing the course of each electric track, forming the westerly movement or "leap of Fear" parallel with the base of the magnetic poles.

JESSORE AND VICINITY, the starting point of the Asiatic cholera south-westward and north-westward beyond Nepaul. Calcutta, the starting point to Malacca, and also similar to that of Bessore, but more westward in its course. Madras, from which it advanced, from the observations that I have made upon the peculiar approach of this epidemic from west to east, in a westerly course, the various eccentric angles of which the annexed diagram so clearly and satisfactorily illustrates, is meant. Its then, these "short tacks" in marine parlance, of the electric fluid, with the crust of the earth, affected and affect the exhalants forming the atmosphere in the various bays along the coast, from which arises the healthfulness and vitality of the animal and vegetable kingdoms. I believe it to be, as it were, a solar and terrestrial combat for the balance of power of the electric force, between the sun and the earth, and of the universe, until the equilibrium, from the natural laws governing them, be brought about and maintained. And that during such a period, thereto-electricity is evolved within the body of the earth, and consequently there must suffer more or less, according to their several peculiarities and susceptibilities, the animal life, and in several of the inferior races, the blood has in an incipient stage of cholera been found to be void of all the nervous power or animal electricity to overcome the non-coagulating force of the atmospheric agents. If in immaterial whether the atmosphere be filled with animalcule or with gases, as I believe, it is a well-established fact that venomous reptiles and animalcule are more numerous during the cholera season.

The production of locusts, the plagues of the east, the myriads of insects, are evidences of the same electric causes. Thus I conceive the "potato rot" to have been produced by electric causes, of which, I opine, will yet be proved to have aided as a powerful auxiliary in the cause of the late war. The current degrees modify the action of the atmosphere, as the tide-flood in the river, and the ebb, as the vital blood in the system, and to change the position of the electric fluid, as to change the position of dysentery which has afflicted our country as an epidemic, and which, in my opinion, is of the same has been exceedingly fatal as a dysentery, but, it will be seen, is not the same as the cholera.

The "black death" of the 14th century commenced in China, and, as it advanced westward, it came with a roots as has the cholera; during which period, making all due allowance for the want of the knowledge of the consequent exaggerations, undoubted testimony, that of the Arabian historian, Abulfeda, concerning changes, from sub-terrestrial agencies, occurred.

At all events, whether my theory be correct of the phenomena to which the origin of this terrible pestilence is to be traced, I have endeavored to present the statement in. I am not without confidence that it merits, and will receive, candid consideration. Medical investigation will discloss the merits of the theory; and, I trust, will result in a more successful treatment. It is not my view of the cause of the disease sustained by the facts which it presents, and the deductions which flow, and often almost instantaneous and total prostration of the vital powers, as exhibited in the case of those in the British army in India fell dead, "as if struck by lightning," and the rapidity with which the blood changes in the secretories and excretories—the state of the bloodvessels, and the appearance of the blood, and the progress of the disease, disclose to the presence and action of the electric fluid, and the consequent decomposing agency, very different from, and infinitely more powerful than, that of the decomposing agency of the human body, in this disease, so instantly affected by the poisonous gases or atmosphere, related in consequence of the subtle phenomena which I have attempted to describe, that the blood becomes to a greater or less extent decomposed, and the nervous system is affected just as improperly prepared solutions would act upon a galvanic battery—by producing corresponding changes in, and action of, the nervous system. In the study of the phenomena of this disease, as it yet internally, one great oversight has evidently been made. The total paralysis of the absorbents, secretories and excretories, which is general, and almost the first, and which is indeed the most alarming symptom, and which I believe to be the consecutive cause of the utter prostration of the entire system, has been overlooked; and classing this disease with the ordinary dynamatic affections, physiologists have conducted their investigations with a pre-conception that it was to be known, and seem to be desirous rather of reconciling the appearances which present themselves to their notice with that opinion, than of collecting facts on which to frame sound deductions. Hence the purple face, the pulse full and bounding, clammy sweat exudes upon the surface, the body, the seat of the stomach, and along the whole course of the intestinal canal, and passed off by the bowels in profuse discharges. The bile secretes, and bile principle in small quantities is discharged, and the blood is found to contain a thick unctuous matter, and the serum of the blood expressed from such a mass, when it has been permitted to remain in its body for a few days, evidently from the loss of its electric or stimulating properties and of its oxygen. Then we have the sinking of the pulse, the cold stage, asphyxia and death. The indication for the purpose of counteracting the anomalous symptoms are obvious to me, before particularly to the second and third stages of this disease.

Those wise enough to combat the disease on its first approach, and who treat the disease successful in arresting its fatal career, will of course need no further attention to the treatment; but those who have unfortunately delayed have failed to arrest the disease, or where the preventory symptoms have been neglected, and allowed to run into the second stage, I should adopt the principle which experience has taught me to be the best, and to use and a half drops of croton oil and five grains of calomel, using friction, warm stimulating drinks, sulphuric ether and nitrous ether, equal parts, in warm water, and all the usual appliances in the collapse and dysenteric affections. This treatment failing, I should then proceed to treat the disease in connexion with the above, as if the premonitory symptoms had been properly treated, but had now run into the second stage. Place the body in a vapor box, lined with two extended sheets of lead, after the manner of a shower bath, placing the patient in a horizontal position, keeping the head only exposed to the face. I would then throw a warm vapor, not exceeding 98 deg. into the box, previously placing in the box a vessel with the proper materials to generate and let free a portion of oxygen gas. Then pass an electric stream through the box, and the patient, the poles being applied to the head and feet. Bring care that the electricity was equal to that of the blood. The box of course should be placed on non-conductors with glass legs, and the top of glass also. The internal remedies would be diuretics, and the most soothing and mild, with strengthening syringes, and such as would most readily yield oxygen. I consider it of the first importance to act upon the skin and bring them to their healthy functions, as well as the skin and the liver, and by all possible means to arrest the evacuations. When the dejections are free from bile, I would recommend to be administered one dose of iodine's bile in port wine, on account of its astringent properties, as well as stimulating the absorbents and excretories of the intestines. By these means, I think, hope to bring the lacteals and excretories under the nervous influence, thus reproducing health to the system, and by the action of the skin and kidneys attract the evacuations from the excretories of the intestinal canal. In these cases, very little remains to overcome this dire disease.

NEW YORK, Oct. 25, 1848.

STRIKE OF THE CAR-DRIVERS.

LAST week our "Gossip" had something to say about the car-drivers' strike. Up to the present writing the affair stands pretty much as it did, and no compromise has been made between the employing and striking number of cars. Meanwhile the public are the sufferers.

The car-drivers receive the munificent sum of $2 per day for 16 hours' work, and are rashly demanding an advance of 50 cents per day on this pay. The ordinary hours of service are 12 to 12 or 13 to 13 hours' work, and it does seem rather hard that a man who has to be on duty for so long a time in the day should not be allotted in the handling of horses, and must have a license to practice his employment, should not have better remuneration. The companies opposing he should be paid only laborer's wages of 17½ cents per hour, or $3 for a day's work. He would be for 16 hours $2 80; whence he now asks only $2 30.

At all events, the strike must soon have, without exception, espoused the cause of the strikers—a singular fact in the history of strikes—and there is a general sympathy for the men who are now trying for.

So far they have been entirely peaceable, and have made no demonstration, save gathering about the cars and chaffing the green drivers that have been put on, or paying compliments to the kid-gloved swell-mobsmen officials, who have volunteered to drive the cars, according to each side's partisanship.

It has been a queer sight to see the cars starting from the Park or the Astor House, at each time of the day or night that they are running, and they are coming up most plentifully, and mark the good-humored eagerness with which the officials of the extreme upper parts of the city accommodate themselves to the crowded state of the interior cars.

We shall say nothing about inside; that, of course, was packed like a barrel of herrings; but on the outside they hung, they clung, they stood, they sat, they held by their teeth, and by every other mode ever invented since the world began. The top was full, the platforms more than full; some one sat in each window, and stood on the outside ledges, hanging fast to the legs of those who had seats in the windows. A conductor—upon whose veracity we can depend—told us that he had solicited, on one up trip, 107 fares, and we do not doubt it. This is pretty good for a vehicle only made to hold 24.

So far there has been no breach of the peace, the drivers contenting themselves with holding meetings, and calling upon their fellow-citizens for sympathy, which we think they have. We think they must finally gain their point, if it were for no other reason than the unpopularity of the railroad companies.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL-HOUSE AT CEDAR FALLS, IOWA.

AT Cedar Falls, Iowa, they have just completed a new school-house, and as the fact is marked one in the history of that place and that section of country, we illustrate it as we would any one public building in the commerce of our country in education and enlightenment.

The foundations for the building was built in the fall of 1863, and in the summer and fall of 1864 the brick was mostly laid. In 1865 the work was resumed, and so far completed as to fit the building for occupancy the first of this week. During the most of this time the school has been without public schools, much to the annoyance of parents and greatly to the detriment of children. The house is located in a central portion of the city, on a full block of ground, bounded by Clay street on the east and Franklin street on the west, Eighth street on the south and Seventh street on the north. It is purposed to fence the ground, seed it down, and ornament it with trees and shrubbery. The building is 61½ by 64 feet in size, and three stories and a basement in height. (The cost of the property to the district, it is now stands, is $31,815.65, and about $3,000 unpaid.)

There are five school-rooms in the building, in which it is possible to accommodate 425 pupils, but which should not be crowded more than 400. The basement is not furnished, and it is fully realized that it should be made available at once. It would provide two good rooms, capable of seating 100 pupils each. The importance of this may be seen from the fact that the present attendance of the Primary and Grammar Schools estimates that the number will be increased to 550, if it can be rendered possible to receive all applicants. (It may be a surprise to some to learn that the total number of children in the district entitled to school privileges, according to the census taken in '73—not '74—is 819 females.)

The 1st Primary Department is in charge of Miss S. V. Hatcher, the 2d, of Miss E. A. Moulton; while the 1st Intermediate Department is presided over by Miss R. C. Goodnow; the 2d by Miss S. E. Hatch. The Grammar School is in charge of Prof. G. A. Graves and Miss I. H. Harris.

We are glad to record any educational step that is of positive interest to the people at large, or to an ambitious locality.

ROBERT MORRIS, THE FINANCIER OF THE REVOLUTION.

THE name of Robert Morris is as familiar to the tongue of every republican as the name of the financial basis of our first war for independence as is that of Washington, as a military leader and statesman.

Robert Morris, the great financier of the Revolution, was born in Lancashire, England, in January, O. S., 1733. His father was a Liverpool merchant, and was largely engaged in the American trade, and when Robert was but 13 years of age, he came to America and entered the counting-house of Charles Willing, for a period of two years.

An event occurred at this period which caused him to be left an orphan in a foreign land. His father was killed by an accidental discharge of a gun from a ship which he boarded.

In 1754 was formed the partnership of Robert Morris and Charles Willing, which soon commanded merchant, and it soon became the most extensive importing house in Philadelphia. Mr. Morris made several voyages to the West Indies and Europe—and, in the course of one of these voyages, he was taken prisoner by a French man-of-war, and was for some time kept in close confinement. He was, however, liberated, and being a good mechanic, he directed his attention to building and repairing vessels, and by this means, obtained money to return to Philadelphia, and to enter upon his career.

At the opening of the Revolution, Robert Morris became strongly identified with the interests of the patriot party, and in every financial movement of the time he was self-secrificing and saving of the cause he supported. He was a member of the council that was opened in Robert Morris in the most stormy days of the Revolution, and on this committee with a wealthy Quaker, John Morton, first President of the Bank of North America, and he tells how he wasted money for the cause. He says, "I asked him what money he could give; he replied:

"Robert Morris, I am a Quaker.

The Quaker promptly replied: "Robert, thou shalt have it."

Mr. Morris supplied the money on credit; and without deception from the merit of the assistance rendered by this Quaker patriot, it was by means of that his financial means furnished by him were the munificent springs of Inexpressible comfort and supplies to the commissariat with which effectually secured our independence and furnished the foundation of the prosperous and happy condition of our nation. He owed notes for $1,600,000. They passed freely and at the value of specie, and were in time all redeemed.

In conclusion, we will only give the date and place of the death of this man, having but touched on the most salient points which within the space of three columns could be written.

This great and good man died, not on the 8th day of May, as has been stated by many, but on the 19th.

We append Dr. Brysick's certificate:

I, Frederick Brysick, do hereby certify that Robert Morris, Senior, Esq., aged 73 years, died last night of a fever."

THE Parisians are now drinking water drawn from the celebrated champagne country of Aisne. The river Dhuis has been brought through an aqueduct 85 miles in length, 74 miles of which are solid masonry work, with an incination of about six inches to the mile. A little over nine miles are in cast iron conduits across valleys, the inclination of which is about 16 inches to the mile. The water works commenced on the 1st of June, 1865, and finished in September last. They cost 16,000,000 francs.

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION OF NITRO-GLYCERINE ON BOARD OF THE STEAMER "EUROPEAN," AT ASPINWALL, NEW GRANADA, ON THE MORNING OF APRIL 3RD, 1866.—FROM A SKETCH BY GUSTAVE KRATZ.

LL, NEW GRANADA, ON THE MORNING OF APRIL 3RD, 1866.—FROM A SKETCH BY GUSTAVE KRATE.

A LESSON OF SPRING.

BY C. D. GARDETTE.

Turn shrill-voiced herald of the spring
Speeds northward in his gusty mirth,
And softer zephyrs sigh and sing
Above the slowly quickening earth.

You say you know the seasons' course,
The changes of their separate span:
But did you ever feel their force,
In looking on your fellow-man?

Come, walk the streets with me to-day;
Not those bright thoroughfares of pride
Where Fashion sets her idle sway
And damask'd draperied Wealth doth ride;

But let us seek the devious ways
Where Poverty keeps boitless door;
And, as each humble latch we raise,
Mark well the force of the spur.

Still somewhat dark they well may seem,
Scarce leavened from the winter's gloom;
But in their eyes a kindling gleam,
And on their cheeks a nascent bloom!

No more upon their shivering forms
The filthy hearth its glimmer sheds;
But God's own fire each bosom warms,
And Spring's free sunshine gilds their heads.

The grandam crones a cheerier song,
The mother's needles brisker fly,
The father's arm seems doubly strong,
And hope relights the sufferer's eye.

The merry urchins—they who wear
The motley patchwork of the poor—
Mark how their very rags look gay,
Around each sun-engirdled door!

Yes, to these toiling ones, who drift
Through dark and devious by-ways here,
Spring hath a life-renewing gift—
A quickening promise, yea! by year.

Yet, hold! Though vernal air and sun
Be each a gay and goodly thing,
Of four full seasons, 'tis but one,
And Summer cometh after Spring.

The Spectre of Cliffe;

OR,

THE FAIR LADY OF THE SHROUD.

By the Author of "Lost Sir Massingberd," &c. &c.

CHAPTER I.—IN CRAVEN.

"Who travels by Donnerbleck Scars takes a bad road," runs a local proverb in Craven; and, like most proverbs, it contains a deal of truth.

The cart-track is, in fact, so wretched, that it has no right to the name of road, especially, too, since in the winter season it is not used by any at all, but is in the sole occupation of a mountain torrent.

Such being the case even at this present, when Craven (from Craigvan, "District of Rocks") is the summer haunt of tourists, demanding to be carried everywhere in wheeled conveyances, we may imagine it was no better in the year of grace 1830.

At that very date, however, and somewhere about midnight in September, two travelers might have been seen toiling (for them there was a moon) essaying that ill-reputed way in a gig.

Western Yorkshire, as many people are aware, does not fringe the sea-coast, and yet upon the left hand of the wayfarers arose a wall of cliff, as sheer and massive as any which opposes itself to ocean-tossed fragments of rock, too, similar to those which are found on the sea-beach, strewed the track, and in such numbers as to be unavoidable. What lack of water of roadway, independent of these, was a natural limestone pavement, with fissures in it at unequal intervals.

The vehicle was a dog-cart, though, must have been made of boxwood at least, to have resisted such continuous shocks; and how the springs stood, would have been a marvel to such as were unacquainted with the fact that the gig had no springs.

"Stay, Cator, pull up, and let me out," cried one of the inmates, after a concussion which made every timber in the homely conveyance rattle and creak. "I'd rather go along upon all-fours, if that be necessary, than sit through another jolt like that. Let me out, I say."

The tone was that of would-be determination, the mixture of peremptoriness and conciliation which is the certain index of a dependent mind. The reply was equally significant of a disposition dogged and obstinate, not easily molded to another's purpose, but once hedged up, fitted to be its instrument for bad or good, without much scruple.

"Sir, where ye be, I say. My orders were, I was not to stop for love or, for that ye were unfitted to walk alone."

"Back you, sirrah—— Thunder! What a bump! I protest I thought my collar-bone was broken. How dare you talk to me in that fashion? Am I not your master, sir?"

"Ay, sir, that's like enough; but my orders come from the master of both of us. Sit you down, I say;" and the driver seized the other's wrist, as he strove to rise, and forced him down with iron grip on the seat again.

"Well, upon my word, this is pretty treatment," observed the victim, querulously; "it really is, Cator. Why, you couldn't treat me much worse if I was one of the patients."

"Well!" cried the driver, slapping his thigh, "but that is a good one. "Ah, Mr. Clement Carr, but I think I could."

"This is truly horrible," observed Mr. Clement Carr, as he clung in an agony of terror to the side-rail of the gig, which was now descending a sort of precipice, "to travel such a road as this in company with such a man!"

"Ay, hearkting it is," rejoined the driver, looking over his shoulder grimly at his unconscious companion, a short but corpulent man of middle age, who might be termed "gentleman," or for a new suit of black broadcloth and a decent hatband could carry him toward that social elevation.

"you cannot hear worse than what I say, Mr. Clement. Have you not heard strange sounds ever since we passed the Kirkstane, like the rushing and rolling of waters?"

"What is it, my good friend?—what on earth is it?"

"It is nothing on earth, Mr. Clement," responded the other, gravely; "it's the waters underneath us on their way to Hell Gates."

"I trust the ground may not open," ejaculated the stout man, piously—"I only trust the ground doesn't open with using such wicked words."

"But that's nothing to a-going to," re-turned the other, with a sneer; "so what's the use of troubling? Here we are, look, at the very edge of Boden Pot—otherwise called Hell Gates—and it's a sight to be seen. Ain't the ground just opened with a wengeance, eh, Mr. Clement?"

Upon the right-hand side of the cart-track, and separated from it by no fence of any kind, gaped a large circular chasm, the bed down in which the unseen water was bubbling and simmering as though it indeed did boil.

If Mr. Clement was a part proprietor of that famous private asylum for the nobility and gentry of aberrated intellect called the Dene, Yorkshire, was he such upon the present occasion his countenance exhibited no vulgar triumph, or even complacency. In fact,if we had not had the word of the vencular Mr. Cator to the contrary, one would have pronounced him to have been in the worst fright of his life, so abject was his appearance, as, clinging to his favorite rail, and bowing his whole weight on the side of the gig most remote from the object of his terrors, he regarded the curious natural phenomenon thus presented to his notice.

"I was born and bred in Craven myself," continued the keeper—for such was the position which the driver of the vehicle occupied when at the Dene—"and yet I have never seen this sight but once before."

"I have quite satisfied my curiosity, Cator," observed Mr. Carr, in a hollow voice, and attempting with no little difficulty, on account of a tendency of his tongue to cleave to the roof of his mouth.

"Very good, sir," replied the other, with mock respect. "I am sure your wish is my law; only, Mr. Gloster said I was to take the greatest care of this here mare: and,she's come a long way, and wants rest; and here's a nice bit of level ground to rest upon, and it is the best place, you see, to be put a-purpose for her to rest upon. I'm sure you wouldn't be cruel to animals, Mr. Clement; and despite of anything as I may say, it is my nature 'our system is opposed to violence of all descriptions,' as Mr. Gloster says, so let us bide a bit, and wait for the Boggart."

"The Boggart!" whispered Mr. Clement, horror-struck at the unaccountable name he heard him for an instant, and then redxing his gaze upon the chasm, as though fascinated by its fearful depths, as it was down upon it.

"The Boggart," commenced Mr. William Cator, calmly, "is what is more generally known as the Devil, though he is in Heaven, and not here, for the former name, as a sort of territorial title. When he is not elsewhere, hereabouts—at Staypy-the-brig, Wharfedale; at Ingleborough, Ingleby-the-by), or Withgill Wells, all country-seats of his in these parts—he is sure to be in Boden Pot. See how quite like down yonder—why, there is just where the moon catches it, like the froth on a madman's lips! One hundred and eighty feet short, I may say, Mr. Clement, and you'll see a rank grass ceases to grow: and there, at the very edge, do you see a footprint deep in the stone, what the long-legged shepherds say?"

Following the direction of the speaker's finger, his companion could just discover a bare spot upon the verge of the abyss—a spot which, at just where the moon catches it, like the froth on a madman's lips! One hundred and eighty feet short, I may say, Mr. Clement, and you'll see a rank grass ceases to grow: and there, at the very edge, do you see a footprint deep in the stone, what the long-legged shepherds say?"

Following the direction of the speaker's finger, his companion could just discover a bare spot upon the verge of the abyss—a spot which, at such a distance, might have been a natural fissure, but for the second glance, which showed it to be the impression of a human foot.

"I should think it did," remarked Mr. Cator dryly; "and it would have been death, too, if the man had not been dead already."

"Dead already?" echoed the other. "How could a dead man plant a footstep like that?"

"Ah, how indeed, Mr. Clement? You must ask the judge before whom the case was tried a century and half ago. Now, think of your not knowing that, and you a relation by marriage of the party in question! I don't mean the Boggart—although I have seen you under circumstances when you might not have stood for own brother as much—but Guy Clifford of Cliffe, an ancestor of the very man whose sudden and deplorable death——"

"Hold your witness, man; you could not be helped," interrupted his companion, earnestly. "I thought it upon himself Cator. It was a question of his life or ours. Don't you think the mare is sufficiently rested, my good friend? The sooner we're under way the sooner safely darker."

"Did not I say 'sudden and deplorable' Mr. Clement? Why, you could not have caught me up more sharply, if I had hinted at a crowner's 'quest. Guy Clifford, then, was a far-away ancestor, although in the direction, of our late lamented friend and patient; and if there had been such an establishment as the Dene in those days, ought most certainly to have been placed there under—what is our phrase?—judicious moral restraint. But there was no benevolent institution of the kind then extant, and so this mad fellow went at large. I can't tell you what he did, or rather what he did not do, to make Satan his friend, but certain he brought the curse upon the Cliffords. There's no surly storey about his having left a mother and child in the caves, under Hebble Forest, yonder, to find their way out by themselves; but, at all events, he was not a moral character, like you and me. He married a quiet wife, too. The Cliffords have often done that, although it is only of late years that they have married beneath them—nay, don't be angry, Mr. Clement; I mean no offense to Miss Grace as was that was a truer word than that, Mr. Clement. Have you not heard strange sounds ever since we passed the Kirkstane, like the rushing and rolling of waters?"

"What is it, my good friend?—what on earth is it?"

"It is nothing on earth, Mr. Clement," responded the other, gravely; "it's the waters underneath us on their way to Hell Gates."

"I trust the ground may not open," ejaculated the stout man, piously—"I only trust the ground doesn't open with using such wicked words."

"But that's nothing to a-going to," re-turned the other, with a sneer; "so what's the use of troubling? Here we are, look, at the very edge of Boden Pot—otherwise called Hell Gates—and it's a sight to be seen. Ain't the ground just opened with a wengeance, eh, Mr. Clement?"

Upon the right-hand side of the cart-track, and separated from it by no fence of any kind, gaped a large circular chasm, the bed down in which the unseen water was bubbling and simmering as though it indeed did boil.

If Mr. Clement was a part proprietor of that famous private asylum for the nobility and gentry of aberrated intellect called the Dene, Yorkshire, was he such upon the present occasion his countenance exhibited no vulgar triumph, or even complacency. In fact,if we had not had the word of the vencular Mr. Cator to the contrary, one would have pronounced him to have been in the worst fright of his life, so abject was his appearance, as, clinging to his favorite rail, and bowing his whole weight on the side of the gig most remote from the object of his terrors, he regarded the curious natural phenomenon thus presented to his notice.

"I was born and bred in Craven myself," continued the keeper—for such was the position which the driver of the vehicle occupied when at the Dene—"and yet I have never seen this sight but once before."

"I have quite satisfied my curiosity, Cator," observed Mr. Carr, in a hollow voice, and attempting with no little difficulty, on account of a tendency of his tongue to cleave to the roof of his mouth.

"Very good, sir," replied the other, with mock respect. "I am sure your wish is my law; only, Mr. Gloster said I was to take the greatest care of this here mare: and,she's come a long way, and wants rest; and here's a nice bit of level ground to rest upon, and it is the best place, you see, to be put a-purpose for her to rest upon. I'm sure you wouldn't be cruel to animals, Mr. Clement; and despite of anything as I may say, it is my nature 'our system is opposed to violence of all descriptions,' as Mr. Gloster says, so let us bide a bit, and wait for the Boggart."

"The Boggart!" whispered Mr. Clement, horror-struck at the unaccountable name he heard him for an instant, and then redxing his gaze upon the chasm, as though fascinated by its fearful depths, as it was down upon it.

"The Boggart," commenced Mr. William Cator, calmly, "is what is more generally known as the Devil, though he is in Heaven, and not here, for the former name, as a sort of territorial title. When he is not elsewhere, hereabouts—at Staypy-the-brig, Wharfedale; at Ingleborough, Ingleby-the-by), or Withgill Wells, all country-seats of his in these parts—he is sure to be in Boden Pot. See how quite like down yonder—why, there is just where the moon catches it, like the froth on a madman's lips! One hundred and eighty feet short, I may say, Mr. Clement, and you'll see a rank grass ceases to grow: and there, at the very edge, do you see a footprint deep in the stone, what the long-legged shepherds say?"

Following the direction of the speaker's finger, his companion could just discover a bare spot upon the verge of the abyss—a spot which, at such a distance, might have been a natural fissure, but for the second glance, which showed it to be the impression of a human foot.

"I should think it did," remarked Mr. Cator dryly; "and it would have been death, too, if the man had not been dead already."

"Dead already?" echoed the other. "How could a dead man plant a footstep like that?"

"Ah, how indeed, Mr. Clement? You must ask the judge before whom the case was tried a century and half ago. Now, think of your not knowing that, and you a relation by marriage of the party in question! I don't mean the Boggart—although I have seen you under circumstances when you might not have stood for own brother as much—but Guy Clifford of Cliffe, an ancestor of the very man whose sudden and deplorable death——"

"Hold your witness, man; you could not be helped," interrupted his companion, earnestly. "I thought it upon himself Cator. It was a question of his life or ours. Don't you think the mare is sufficiently rested, my good friend? The sooner we're under way the sooner safely darker."

"Did not I say 'sudden and deplorable' Mr. Clement? Why, you could not have caught me up more sharply, if I had hinted at a crowner's 'quest. Guy Clifford, then, was a far-away ancestor, although in the direction, of our late lamented friend and patient; and if there had been such an establishment as the Dene in those days, ought most certainly to have been placed there under—what is our phrase?—judicious moral restraint. But there was no benevolent institution of the kind then extant, and so this mad fellow went at large. I can't tell you what he did, or rather what he did not do, to make Satan his friend, but certain he brought the curse upon the Cliffords. There's no surly storey about his having left a mother and child in the caves, under Hebble Forest, yonder, to find their way out by themselves; but, at all events, he was not a moral character, like you and me. He married a quiet wife, too. The Cliffords have often done that, although it is only of late years that they have married beneath them—nay, don't be angry, Mr. Clement; I mean no offense to Miss Grace as was that was a truer word than that, Mr. Clement. All no pair were ever so cordially hated as they by the whole Fell-side. Well, after a pretty long series of life, and they received his full crop of tarces, as a parson would say, the squire fell sick, and was not expected to recover. About that time, in a certain day in June, one Mr. Howarth (his family live in Thropdale yet) was otter-hunting on Loding Beck—it breaks into the open both above and below the Pot here, and is still famed for otters—and there was a matter of four-and-twenty Fell-side folk with him, and a horsebuck. While they were at check, not a hundred yards from where we are standing now, a couple of men came running up to him with distressing swiftness.

"'These be well-winded,' said Howarth to his huntsman; 'never did I see men run so fast before.'

"'Why, Heaven save us! the one in gray is Squire Guy Clifford,'replied the huntsman. 'And he is he as is after, I reckon, him so close.'

"But nobody answered that, although all the hunt had got their eyes fixed upon the advancing pair. They ran on, the headlong speed, right toward the Pot (it was not called Hell Gates then), and Guy's face looked like a hunted bear's, they said, as it drew near to knee who was behind him; then he fled down the cleft, though all cried out to him to stop, and into the yawning gulf, as if for shelter, and that was the last footstep which is printed there. There was no other mark or sign. Although the man in black took the same road, Clifford's Leap they sometimes call it. There was no more otter-hunting after that; but Howarth and his friends stayed by the wife he is said the squire is dead, for he has just seen him chased by the devil into Boden Pot. And, sure enough, he was dead and buried he had been Hell at that very time. You may suppose how this was talked of over all the Fell-side; so much so, that Madam Clifford, the widow, brought her action against Mr. Howarth for publishing the scandal, that he had seen her deceased husband driven into hell; and the defense set up was this, that he had so seen him. She laid the damages at five thousand pounds. It was tried before Judge Bolby at York Assizes. The witnesses for Madam were the doctor and other two, who had been with the squire when he died. He had refused to go to bed, and insisted upon being carried to a new grey hunting-suit, in which to take the field the moment he felt better. But Howarth, on his part, had his four-and-twenty witnesses, of whom all declared that as sure as they swore to the very buttons on the said suit, which they had observed were covered with the same sort of cloth whereof the coat was made. It was impossible to resist such testimony; and the judge left it down to the jury, who said, 'Lord have mercy upon me!' said he, 'and grant I may never see what you have seen: one or two may be mistaken, but five-and-twenty cannot be mistaken.' So Madam Clifford lost her cause."

"But the Boggart!" exclaimed Mr. Clement, excited, despite his terrors, by this singular narrative.

"Well, the Boggart has haunted Boden ever since. I have seen him myself, as large as eggs, which he has cast up from the water in his rage; and listen! you will hear him cursing to himself as he down in the bowels of Hell Gates."

The bubbling and boiling had by this time subsided, but as the pair listened attentively, a dull sub-terraneous sound like the plutting of the swollen Pool against the rock—could be distinctly heard. The two men listened for a little in total silence, then Mr. Carr, in a querulous tone, ejaculated Mr. William Cator; "master has had enough of the Boggart."

Master had had so much of him, that he never spoke a word until the dark and perilous way lay well behind them, and they were moving swiftly upon that open wide of country—a common a level road.

"Are there no more boulders or underground rivers to cross?" inquired Mr. Clement Carr, with assumed carelessness.

"Nothing more, sir," replied his companion, with respect which was unmistakable apparent in his tones for the first time. "I thought you would think it rather a wild journey over them Fells."

"If I ever come that accursed road again," exclaimed Mr. Clement, breathing very hard, and wiping his face from the perspiration from which they came, "may the fiend in truth fly away with me, as these otter-hunting fools fancied they saw him——"

"I say," interrupted Mr. William Cator, checking his steed for the second time; "just you take care of what you say about the devil."

"Why? where? what? interrogated the other, apprehensively. "You told me that there was nothing more to be alarmed at."

"Don't you go making a jest in the place we're coming to, for what happened to Guy Clifford, Mr. Clement. The Cliffords are an old family, and hug their traditions after a fashion which you wouldn't understand. They're particular proud, I believe, of the ancestor as brought the curse upon them. If he didn't go downward by way of Boden Pot, it is certain that he took some other road to the same place; but it was a fine thing, and a compliment to the Cliffords to be fetched by the Prince of Darkness."

"I am sure they are welcome to any superstitions they please," observed the other, with a grating laugh. "Folly of that sort is always a step in the right direction, and I trust that one member of the family, at least, may always qualify himself for a residence at the Dene."

"Ay, you may call it superstition, Mr. Clement Carr; but if you had lived boy and man for a quarter of a century within a mile of Cliffe Hall, you would not be so glib with your tongue."

You are an ignorant and uneducated man Cator," returned the other, loftily, "and therefore such credulity, fostered by local prejudice, is in your case only natural."

"Very good, Mr. Clement," answered the other, dryly. "Perhaps we shall differ less about that matter to-morrow morning."

"Why to-morrow morning less than now, my good Cator?" inquired the other, with an air of careless patronage.

"Because you will have slept upon it, sir, which is said to often alter a man's opinion, and more especially as you will have done so in Cliffe Hall."

"But there's nothing against the Hall, my good Cator,'a there? Mrs. Clifford has never breathed a syllable of anything unpleasant?"

"Nothing, sir, nothing, except those tales which 'credulity, fostered by local prejudice,' is so apt to invent, and which 'ignorant and uneducated' folks are so ready to believe. But yonder is Cliffe Hall itself; we shall have a couple of hours' sleep before daybreak yet, if we push on."

"I shall not go to bed to-night," said Mr. Clement Carr, decisively; "it will scarcely be worth while."

Mr. William Cator chuckled aloud.

"And look you, Cator, perhaps our staying in the house may be looked upon as an intrusion at this period of family affliction. To-morrow night we will sleep at the Hall."

"There is no inn, Mr. Clement," returned the driver, maliciously. "Here are the Lodge gates; please to hold the reins, while I get out and ring the bell."

CHAPTER II.—BROTHER AND SISTER.

It was the quietest hour of the twenty-four. The high harvest-moon at full was flooding the silent woods with mellow light, and crowning the eternal hills with a diadem opaline. Through the iron gates, the avenue stretched fair and wide, and the broad oaks threw each a shadow of itself on the eastern sward as perfect as though it were a cast mantle. At the end of the long vista rose the midmost tower of Cliffe Hall; and on both sides, beyond the wide lawn, vast masses of stately mansion, or at least of its girdling terrace, could be seen, sleeping in the moonbeams like some enchanted pile of fairyland. Around it sped wood the park, wooded and knowled, the ferny coachings-place of many a noble herd; and where faded it, as far as eye could range, rose the dark back-ground of Bolkie Forest and Fell.

Fat and lazy, the porter-lodge and cruel, Clement Carr sat in the springless gig looking like a vulgar Vitellius. The countenance of Mr. William Cator, also who did not deign to have awaken the lodge-keeper (although he hung on to the bell as though he were taking part in a bob major) with his first, nor yet his second summons, wore such evil grim as the stone deer-hounds that sat on either side the portal.

When the gates were opened at last, he lashed the mare into a gallop, as though she had been the cause of their long detention. Still, even these men, as they emerged from the double line of oaks, standing like sentinels whose officer of the watch was time itself, and beheld the various proportions of the castle (for such in truth it was), each significant of its epoch, but harmonized one with the other by the revolving years—even these men, I say, could not restrain a characteristic outburst of admiration.

It was not, indeed, the picturesqueness of this edifice, girt by the moat, built by the hanging moat, and far less any of the historical associations which might have hallowed it from turret to basement-stone, that the gig-load claimed their regard, but the more practical consideration of how considerable an income the proprietor of such a domain must necessarily possess, who could keep it in such due order and repair; for, old as Cliffe Hall was, there was not a vestige of decay about it; the lawns that sloped down to the moat-side where smoothly shorn, and set with banks of flowers; from the stone terrace which, gray-walled, and with fruit-trees, came news of a trim rose-garden, in every odorous breath of the cool autumn air.

"Fine place, Cator!" observed Mr. Carr, as they drove over the stone bridge, but thinly clothed with ivy, the work only of late years, and replaced the less convenient drawbridge. He spoke not only approvingly, but with a certain air of part proprietorship, which did not escape his companion's attention."

"Very true, Mr. Clement," returned he. "It's been in the family for one shape or another, more than five hundred years. They say it growed to this, bit by bit, from a single tower—that to the west, I think it was, where the walls are sixteen feet thick, and the windows mere holes with bars to them. Wonderful old-fashioned, our little business is, Mr. Clement? But these great places don't change hands very readily. You may smile in your noble-born way, sir, but Miss Grace as was is doubtless a very clever woman; but the Cliffords of Cliffe—— Strike me blind, but that's the lodge-keeper's bull-dog, as made my heart go pit-a-pat. Did you ever hear such a howling in your life? It really seems as though they had overheard us, and guessed what we were thinking of. Them very blood-hounds, or pastrywas their fathers before them, have been here these three hundred years."

Not even a puppy, they say, has ever been parted with by the family; only a full-grown one was killed by the king's order, or something like it, for eating the gate-keeper's child in Squire Guy's time. He swore it was such a piece of tyranny as he would never put up with; but the dog was hung for all that; and the story goes, that his master buried him in the chapel yonder, and got excommunicated by his priests for so doing. Hang the dogs; I hope their chains are strong! Well, it's one way of rousing the house, at all events."

The feelings of Mr. Clement Carr (who sat on the side next the kennel) did not admit of articulate speech; but he got down with much more agility than could have been expected of a gentleman of his proportions, and running round the back of the gig, applied himself to the iron knocker of the nail-studded front-door with a will. The courtyard in which they now were was formed by three sides of the castle, which stared upon them from a score of curtained windows, as from sightless eyes; but through both shutter and curtain of one of them gleamed a pale and sickly light, telling of wakefulness and watching even at that slumberous hour.

"That is Squire Ralph's own chamber," observed Mr. Cator, nodding cautiously in the direction in question; "and if you'll take the advice of so humble an individual as myself, you will not make such a dreadful noise."

The shocks which Mr. Carr was administering to the oaken door did indeed reverberate over the whole building; and the baying of the bloodhounds, mixed with the rattle of chains as they strained to break their bonds, made up a hideous clamor. The latter noise, however, only incited Mr. Clement to fresh exertions; and when the door was suddenly opened in front of him, he rushed frantically in, crying:

"The dogs, the dogs! Shut it, lock it; never mind Cator," without casting a glance at the person who had admitted him. If his alarm had permitted him to do so, it would probably have taken another direction.

He who stood in the doorway, glancing in speechless indignation from the intruder in the gig to him who had made so unceremonius an entrance, was evidently no serving-man. His face, though haggard and, at the moment, puckered with rage, wore an air of conscious superiority very different from the well-weighed supercilicusness of a hall-porter; while his apparel, although disheveled, as though he had sought repose (as indeed he had) without undressing, was rich and even elegant. But what rendered him most peculiar, and put it out of the question that he could be merely a retainer of the of the establishment, was that he wore his hair, of which he had an enormous quantity, notwithstanding that he was far advanced in years, in plaits, as race-horses do in these days, and from out of them his gray face peered inquiringly, as a river-god's is sometimes pictured to do from his fell of bulrushes.

"How dare you make this clamor at my door?" he broke forth after a little. "Who are you, fellow, in the gig, and who is this cur, whom you have brought with you?"

His inquiry was addressed to Mr. William Cator, but referred to Mr. Clement Carr, who, having climbed up to the huge marble mantelpiece of the hall by means of a chair, had cleverly kicked it over, so as to isolate himself from all attacks of blood-hounds or others; and there he sat, with his legs swinging from the impetus of his exertions, but by no means from the careless confidence which sometimes begets that motion in persons similarly circumstanced.

"My name is Cator, sir," returned the driver, baring his head, and speaking with unwonted humility. "We have just come over from the Dene."

"I might have known it," muttered Ralph Clifford, gravely, for it was the Squire of Cliffe Hall himself who stood before them. "Have I not been forewarned these three times?"—Then he added aloud, "Come in, sirrah; a groom will take your horse. When did my poor brother Cyril die?"

"We regret to say, sir" quoth Mr. Clement Carr from the mantel-piece—"I speak for Gideon and myself—that the sudden and deplorable demise of Cyril Clifford, Esq., took place yesterday afternoon, at twenty-seven minutes and a half exactly to four o'clock."

"Come down, sir, and tell your tidings in a fitting manner!" cried Ralph Clifford, in a terrible voice. "Could no messenger be found to bring such evil news to Cliffe Hall less like an ape than thou?"

Thus adjured, but by no means displaying the nimbleness of the animal to which he had been likened, Mr. Clement descended from his post of vantage.

"The poor gentleman had bad paroxysms for nearly a week, sir; his unhappy malady——"

"Stop!" thundered the master of the house; "not another word, if you value your life. Rupert, my son, what is it?"

The change in Ralph Clifford's tone as he spoke the last few words was like a summer south wind after a tornado. He addressed them to a youth of about eighteen, who had just entered the hall with a lamp in his hand; he had a dressing-gown loosely cast about him, as though he had just left his couch, and his large blue eyes wandered wildly and inquiringly from his father to the strangers. Accompanying him was another lad, about a year his junior, whose appearance afforded a singular cantrast to that of the former. They were both well-favored; but whereas the elder was a true young Saxon, auburn-haired and ruddy, with the silver down upon his cheek, already turning to golden, the younger might have been born under an Italian sky, so dark and passionful his eyes, so bronzed his face from brow to pointed chin.

"I was waked by the knocking, father," replied the youth who was called Rupert; "and Ray said he was sure he heard voices in the hall; and so Ray and I——"

"Will go quietly to bed again," interrupted a woman's voice with quiet decision. The speaker had entered noiselessly by some door in that part of the great hall which lay in shadow, so that it was impossible to say how long she might have been there. But she now glided forward into the full light of the moonbeams—really a wonderful vision. She was a blonde, such as might well have been Rupert's mother, but that she was much too young—about eight-and-twenty at most—yet she had no likeness to the boy beyond that of complexion, while her expression was singularly different. In Rupert's eyes, there was a look of indecision, of vacillation, almost painful to contemplate; while those of the lady shone clear and steadfast as a star. Her mouth, too, was firm and resolute, although, when she smiled, this did not mar its sweetness; and her voice, though somewhat incisive, was clear and musical as a struck stalactite.

"Both to bed, my good lads," continued she; "these persons are not robbers, that your assistance is needed; while whatever news they bring will keep till breakfast time."

The lads retired, although reluctantly, with their faces to their inexorable stepmother (for such she was); and not until their footsteps had died away along the vaulted stone passage, did she again break silence.

"Cyril is dead, I conclude," said she.

Bound to the Wheel.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GUY WATERMAN'S MAZE," "REUBEN'S WAR," ETC.

CHAPTER LXXXIV.—ANTHONY'S COMFORTER.

It would be wrong to say the doctor did not feel acutely the position he was in before the world, in connection with Anthony's supposed guilt and actual condemnation. He, a magistrate—a distinguished "scholar," as he was pleased to think himself, and a gentleman of unblemished reputation—to be thus shown in friendly alliance with a convicted murderer! But, whatever he thought or felt, he acted nobly, and with a kind of chivalrous devotion, to the unhappy prisoner, during the absence of Clarissa. Having convinced himself that his daughter was substantially in the right, both as to her belief in Anthony's innocence and her consequent attitude toward him, he accepted the inevitable annoyances very much as he accepted a violent storm when he happened to be exposed to it abroad—that is, he looked round on things in general with a more than ordinarily stern front, as if there were in his breast a kind of latent protest, suggestive at once of his entire comprehension of the case, and of his perfect magnanimity of non-interference in being willing to be silent.

Life to Dr. Pompess was just now somewhat like the Roman general's field of campaign; and if he did not come, see, and conquer, he felt habitually that he did a grander, because less showy thing—he came, saw, and said nothing. If no one else felt the sublimity of this, no matter; the doctor did, and was content. And yet, during the three eventful days following the verdict, people noticed how irritable he was—how short and explosive in his speech—how deep in the gloom of the shadow that had fallen upon his house and fortunes.

But immediately after post-time each morning, he went off to Anthony, staid with him a considerable time, did his best to allay Anthony's increasing alarm about Clarissa's own safety, and only left him when he found they were both mentally exhausted, and had not a single idea left untried for the business of comforting each other.

During these meetings, the two men were not personally demonstrative in their mutual relation. Their talk was not of that, but of Clarissa; of Sleuth's schemes; of Esau's inexplicable absence, which troubled Anthony; of the movement that was going on with regard to a deputation of influential persons to the Home Secretary, to ask for a reprieve, so that there might be time to investigate the mysterious questions that all confessed were involved in the affair. It was of these things they talked, and not of what each felt toward the other, though the doctor's heart always warmed a little, on entering the cell, to see how Anthony's face lighted up, and to feel how his hand clung at the grasp of meeting.

The trial had begun on Monday and ended on Tuesday. On Tuesday, therefore, Phillis and Sleuth had gone off, and Clarissa after them in pursuit. It was now Friday, and the two men were again together, and waiting evidently in deep anxiety for some one—an anxiety so deep, indeed, that they could scarcely speak to each other, but only thought, "When will that door open?—when will she appear?"

Again and again does Anthony ask for a certain letter, which the doctor had received the day before, and then brought to him. Anthony now read it once more through, as if to try to obtain from it an answer to some new mental speculation. This was the letter:

Dover, Wednesday Afternoon.

MY DEAR PAPA—All goes well. If I do not deceive myself as to the decisive character of what has been accomplished here this morning (but only, dear papa, through that warrant you gave me), you will see me on Friday; at what hour, I am quite unable now to say. Please, dear papa, to go off with this instantly to Anthony. I shall have much to tell you both when we do meet, but am at present too deeply agitated to write more.—Ever your affectionate and devoted daughter, CLARISSA POMPESS.

P.S.—Dear papa, would you mind, for Anthony's sake, being early and near to the prison—say at the hotel—when not with him, so that he might be spared the anguish of the delay in my coming first to you at Petersham, and then our going off to him? I am sure I may answer my own question with Yes. So, if I don't find you at the hotel, I shall seek you at the jail.

The doctor came at eleven; it is now twelve; and every minute of that hour has seemed to both, an evidence—fearful as is the accumulation of the whole—that Clarissa is not succeeding,; for both have thought and said that, in spite of her words as to her own period of arrival, she had intended to be with them early, or she would scarcely have asked the doctor to be so.

The prison clock has scarcely finished the delivery of the last stroke of twelve—and Anthony has a horror of that clock, its sound is so monotonous and slow, as if always remembering, and oppressed by its occasional duty to count the last minutes of the condemned—when the door opens, and a warder, not Clarissa, meets the expectant eyes.

He hands a letter in silence to the doctor, and then goes out.

The doctor looks at it, looks at Anthony, and then, as if to get nearer the light, goes away from the prisoner toward the window, and there reads. There was no "dear," or "dearest papa," at the beginning—no, not even though Clarissa knew the doctor liked to see all formalties carefully observed, even in time of distress; for, as he was accustomed impressively to say, "That's when character shows itself."

However, he was now as little inclined as his daughter to think of formalities; and as he happened unthinkingly to turn his head a little round toward the cell, so as to have the light from behind him upon the paper, Anthony was able to see expressed on his face, in the strong light from the window, the emotions that letter called forth.

DOVER, Thursday Morning.

I am almost out of my senses; but I try to be calm. I pray to God to keep me calm. I think he will to the end, which cannot now be far off. Come to me as quickly as you possibly can. Say nothing to Anthony. I thought to have done without you—to have surprised you. Oh! God help me! But I am punished. Father, Anthony's fate now depends on the sense or humanity of the Home Secretary. He must listen to us. Do come to me without a moment's delay. I have lost my great reliance. Sleuth is dead. The horrible particulars will be in the papers. Look for the name of Richards, his traveling name.

I am now just leaving Dover with Phillis. The post-chaise waits me at the door, and I shall be at the hotel at Charing Cross—the one nearest to the Government Offices—by evening. Stamp I have written to, and he will, I doubt not, be waiting for me.

Fresh misery! I was deceived about the posts. You cannot, I find, get this to-night, as I had supposed, nor before the morning of to-morrow, Friday; and we must have this night for counsel and preparation for to-morrow. What shall I do? What shall I do?

I am so confused myself, I dread to confuse you; and the slightest error may now be fatal.

There is but one plan. I must go on as fast as it is possible to go, to London, take this with me, and send it by special messenger the instant I arrive. Yes, that I think, will do.

The position is dreadful, but not hopeless—oh, not hopeless! God would not see so great an iniquity perpetrated. If I were not so utterly broken down, mind and body, I should not have been so wicked, so mad as ever for a moment to doubt it.

FRIDAY, Early Morning.

I am better—better, thank God! Don't be frightened, dearest papa, when I tell you that somewhere on the road I fainted away, and there was a good deal of time lost in going to bed, but Phillis was kind; that moved her—and—and that is all. I am better, and write this within two stages of London.

London at last! and waiting, dearest papa, for you. I will not again frighten myself—though it is now eight o'clock! Stamp, I hear, is in the coffee-room at breakfast. They promise me a messenger and a gig in a few minutes, and seem anxious for me. Haste! haste! dearest father.

CLARISSA.

The doctor guessed how the four hours that had elapsed had been expended; first, in delays as to the messenger, then in the long drive to Petersham, and then in the equally long drive to the jail.

The doctor's first movement is to stalk across the cell, and to strike with his gold-headed cane loudly on the door, shouting:

"Warder!"

The warder was waiting outside, as if prepared.

"Where is the man who brought this?"

"In a gig, your worship, at the gates."

"Tell him to order round my carriage without a moment's delay, and never mind his own vehicle till he has seen me off."

The warder gone, how was the doctor to deal with Anthony? Tell him the truth. Impossible. Tell him a lie? Impossible. He must tell him nothing. He must smile it off, and get away as he could.

"Anthony, my—my dear boy——"

Anthony heard and noticed the unusual affectionateness of the words, and there was something in his face that the doctor found he could not look on without a rising in the throat and a swelling about the eyes that it would be preposterous—shocking—to give way to; so he tried again to speak in a rapid, cheerful tone.

"Well, Anthony, she's in London, and wanting me, and there's business to be done; and I needn't tell you we shan't be long before we are both back with you."

Anthony caught the doctor's hand—held it fast, immovable—and gazed in the doctor's face with so earnest, searching, and pleading a look, that the doctor began to lose his mental balance and feel dizzy.

"It's all right, Anthony—that is—I mean, it will be—must be. Good-bye!"

"Doctor," said Anthony, in tones so low, so thrilling, and so strangely quiet, that the doctor could not understand them, and he looked at Anthony, and was then more puzzled than ever to see a smile—sad enough, no doubt—but still a smile—on his face. "Doctor, you won't forget your own teaching, will you, in past times?"

"My teaching, Anthony?"

"Yes, about truth under all circumstances."

The doctor colored a little, as if caught, and Anthony went on:

"Oh, doctor, don't be afraid of me! Only tell me all, and you shall not be ashamed of me. You shall not, indeed. Try me!"

"Ashamed!" echoed the doctor, and then his breast heaved with emotion. The sonorous voice, as it struggled to speak, became broken and rugged. He strove manfully to restrain those unmanly demonstrations; but at last the nature within was too much for the convention without, and he suddenly cried out:

"Oh, Anthony! my son! my son!" and threw himself upon the breast of the hapless prisoner.

If aught could have assuaged the bitterness of Anthony's spirit after he had read Clarissa's letter and hurried her father off, it would have been this first burst of genuine affection on the part of the doctor, and the cruel devotion of that letter.

FEARFUL EXPLOSION AND DISASTER AT ASPINWALL,

Isthmus of Panama.

ONE of the most fearful disasters that has ever occurred, happened on the 3d of April, on board the steamer European, then lying at the wharf at Aspinwall. We will tell the story from the letter of a correspondent who saw the affair:

"The European, an iron Clyde-built propeller, of 1,634 tuns, is one of a line of a Liverpool company, who own about 25 steam sea-going vessels.

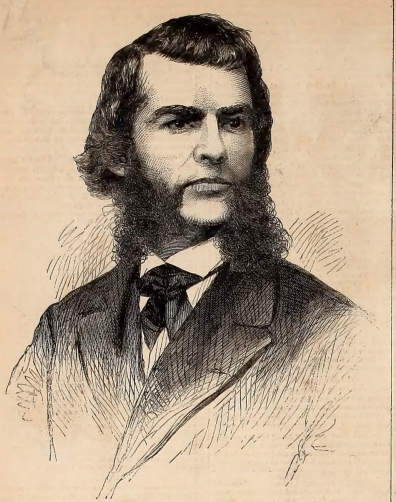
"The European left Liverpool on the 1st day of March, touched at Port-au-Prince, Kingston and Carthagena, and arrived at Aspinwall on the 1st day of April. She landed goods at all the ports named above, and took in some freight at Carthagena for the return voyage. She hauled into her wharf at Aspinwall on the 2d, in the afternoon, and when the explosion took place, a gang of laborers stood on the wharf ready to receive and take away cargo, while a dozen or so of blacks from the shore were between decks, ready to take it out. They were only waiting for the clerks of the Panama Railroad Company to check the goods, who were, fortunately, that morning a little late, as they were gathered around and dispatching the Panama train, which should have gone at 6:30 o'clock. Had the train gone on time, a dozen or more American clerks must have been killed, and probably many merchants and others, who were also waiting for the train to start. The explosion took place in the after between-decks. A volume of fire and white smoke ascended high in the air, carrying up with it 20 or 30 men from the hold and vessel's decks, spars, bales of goods, portions of the upper deck, etc., etc., the goods unrolling as they went up and descended in the red flames, forming, as described by those who were at a sufficient distance to take in the effect, one of the most terribly magnificent spectacles ever witnessed. Almost simultaneously with the explosion the great iron and slated roof of the railway company's stone freight house was seen to lift itself a little from its walls and then dropped down inside of them, smashing the lighter goods piled in the house, and killing several persons upon whom it fell.

"Capt. Coale, who was on deck, was so blown to pieces as to be scarcely recognizable. Mr. Swainson, clerk of the Steamship Company, was blown on the wharf and killed. Mr. Glass, Chief Officer; Mr. Parson, Second Officer; Dr. Burrows, Surgeon; Mr. Nisbet, Engineer; Edward Davis, Carpenter; and about a dozen firemen and sailors were instantly killed. The whole of the gang of 10 or 12 laborers who were in the after between-decks, as well as most of those waiting on the wharf to go to work, were killed. Altogether not less than 60 persons, probably more, lost their lives. Out of about 20 wounded, taken to the Panama Railroad Company's hospital, seven or eight died. During the next two days after the accident, six bodies were washed on shore.

"The Caribbean, a fine new steamer of the same company, occupied a space on the opposite side of the wharf from the European, and received great damage from the explosion. As soon as possible she left the wharf and anchored at a safe distance. I went on board of her, and found her spar and main decks covered with debris of the wharf, and the exploded ship, as well as shreds and broken packages of linens, calicoes and half-burned cloths, as also with the ruins of her own cabins and houses, which in many places were shattered to atoms. All the boats of the Caribbean on deck and at her davits were broken into thousands of pieces. Both her main and spar decks were sprung; and 13 of the iron girders, 12 inches deep, of the spar deck, were broken off near the sides of the ship. The damage to the Caribbean cannot be less than $50,000. Strange to say, not a person was injured on the Caribbean.

"The fluid known by the name of nitro-glycerine, is the same that exploded in Greenwich street, New York, last November, wounding several persons and blowing out the front of the Wyoming Hotel. The compound was first made about 15 years since by M. Pelouze, of Paris, who thought it too dangerous for practicable use. A short time since, Mr. Alfred Nabel, a Swedish chemist and engineer, thought he had so improved upon M. Pelouze's receipt as to avoid this difficulty, and established a house for its manufacture, at the head of which he placed a younger brother. Mr. Nabel claimed that the compound was insoluble in water, that it cannot be ignited by simple contact with fire, "thus removing all risk of accidental explosion in store. The discharge can only be effected under certain circumstances, indicated in the directions for using the article. On applying a lucifer match to the oil, the latter decomposes without explosion, and on removing the match, the fire immediately extinguishes. It can bear without danger, 212 degrees of heat (Fahrenheit), but explodes at about 360 degrees." But notwithstanding the claim which Mr. Nabel made, that the oil could be manufactured and used with so much safety, one day in January, 1865, Mr. Nabel's factory, together with his brother and workmen, were blown into such little particles, that no trace of building or workmen was ever after discovered. Of course the cause of the explosion, as was that of the Wyoming Hotel, and now of the European, is wrapped in mystery. This oil is described as being in color of a light yellow—a compound of glycerine (the sweet principle of oils) and nitric acid, its chemical formula giving 18 parts of oxygen; and Mr. Nabel claims that as by combustion, the carbon takes 12 atoms of oxygen and the hydrogen 5, it complete combustion leaves a surplus 0 only. He states that each 100 parts of exploded blasting oil leaves a residue of: carbonic acid 58; water 20; oxygen 3½; nitrogen 18½=100; and that as the specific weight of the oil is 1.6, one volume produces 1,298 volumes of gas—that is to say steam 554; carbonic acid 469; oxygen 39, and nitrogen 236. 'Weight for weight the blasting oil bears very favorable comparison with gunpowder, which is calculated ordinarily to produce about 250 volumes of cold gas only; the nitro-glycerine would consequently appear to be, other things being equal, about five times as effective as gunpowder.' Mr. Nabel claims more than this, for he says it is difficult to determine the degree of heat produced by an exploding substance, and that, according to theory, the blasting oil on account of its complete combustion, ought to develop a more intense heat than gunpowder, and thus the heat developed by the explosion of nitro-glycerine is twice that generated by gunpowder, and from this calculates that nitro-glycerine compared with gunpowder, possesses about 13 times its power, when volumes are considered, and eight times its power for equal weight.

"The invoice in question consisted of 70 cases (one case produced all the damage in Greenwich street), and was shipped by Guion & Co., European Express Agents, to Bandmann, Neilson & Co., San Francisco. On the same invoice was one box percussion caps, marked to go on deck as 'dangerous,' but no mark was made against the oil.



"The latest reports from Aspinwall gives the following as the number of killed and wounded:

There have been buried up to the present time	26
Missing from the ship	12
Missing from the shore	8
Seriously wounded in hospital, of whom five will probably die	17

Besides these there are a number at their own homes slightly wounded."

A MAN who had a case in court said, "That if he lost in the Court of Common Pleas, he would appeal to the Supreme Court, and from thence to Heaven."

"And there," replied a gentleman, "you will be sure to lose, for you will not be present to answer for yourself, and no attorney is ever admitted there."

MR. T. H. STEVENS, PRESIDENT OF THE U. S. COLLEGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

PROFESSOR THOMAS H. STEVENS,

President U. S. College, New Haven, Connecticut.

In this week's issue, the reader will find sketches of two men who are peculiarly adapted for their places. And the recent meeting of merchants, bankers, and business men, at the St. Nicholas Hotel, New York, very properly recognized that fact, by passing resolutions highly complimentary to them as true workers in their professions —giving character to the business community.

Professor Thomas H. Stevens is President of the United States College of Business and Finance, New Haven, Conn., an institution recently founded, and under the direction of a board of managers, among whom we notice some leading New York merchants, Ex-Governor Holley, and other well-known men. It has a three years' course of study, and owing to the many entering, steps are now being taken by our merchants to erect new buildings, at a cost of not less than $200,000, with every facility for turning out first-class business men. Mr. Stevens is one of those few men who combine great talent as an executive and organizer of intellectual and manual labor. He possesses great power of government, and scarcely ever fails to secure, and always retains the entire confidence of those committed to his care, by presenting principles and truths so clearly and forcibly, as to at once convict and convince. Of calm demeanor and pleasing address, he possesses much force of character, and once undertaking anything, makes every circumstance yield to its accomplishment. Though a native of Virginia, most of his youthful life was spent in Ohio, where his parents removed when he was quite young. Thrown by necessity upon his own resources, when not eight years of age, by the death of his father, he passed several years upon his uncle's farm in the West—afterward served an apprenticeship at the cabinet business—then a close military and literary student for some four years, following which he became the founder and chief military instructor of one of the most prominent New York State chartered institutions; an academy second only to West Point. Many of his pupils held high commissions in the army, during the late war, and yielded no little strength and service to the Union cause. He subsequently spent some seven years as a commercial student, while in business in the cities of New York, Baltimore and Cincinnati.

Seeing the great need of education and reform in these great centres of commerce, among their merchants, bankers and business men generally, he has thrown his whole energies toward the founding of an institution that shall, by a three years' course of study and severe discipline in all the minutiæ and details of trade, turn out young merchants and bankers, who shall give more character and dignity to the business and the dignity he awards to labor, his sympathy and appreciation for those who are struggling for light, endear him to thousands. Being yet in the prime of life, the future opens to him a wide field for usefulness and honor.

MR. C. R. WELLS, SECRETARY OF THE U. S. COLLEGE, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Mr. C. R. Wells, Secretary of U. S. College, New Haven, Connecticut.

The subject of the other sketch, Mr. C. R. Wells, the Secretary of the same Institution, is also well and favorably known to the mercantile and business profession; and, although still a young man, has, by his long and varied experience in that branch of education, clearly proven his right to the important position he holds.

financial interest of the who's country. "Heaven helps those who help themselves," has been he's motto from the outset. Self-centure, the study of books, but more the study of men and things, have given him enlarged views and liberal ideas. Of general impulses, naturally benevolent, his action in favor of disabled soldiers,

He possesses a naturally energetic nature and an active mind, is an able correspondent, and an earnest and forcible lecturer on all topics connected with his profession.

Mr. Wells is a native of New York, and early in life gave evidence of his adaptation for and attachment to the cause of education.

THE RECENT NAVAL ENGAGEMENT BETWEEN THE ALLIED FLEET OF PERU AND CHILE AND THE SPANISH FLEET ON THE 7TH OF FEBRUARY, AT CHAYANUE.—SKETCHED BY PEDRO C. RODRIGUES.

Having received a thorough preparation at the Franklin Collegiate Institute, he spent some time in the City of Rochester, studying for his chosen calling, then entered upon the responsible and arduous duties of a teacher's life. Since that time he has given his whole attention and devoted his entire energies toward the development of that practical and popular system of commercial training which has gained for the institution he represents so universal a reputation.

The Board of Managers, therefore, have much reason to congratulate themselves upon having in the United States College of Business and Finance, New Haven, Connecticut, the right men in the right place. Every merchant in this city should co-operate with the "Educational Union of Business Men" in raising the required endowments for the new building, shown in our last week's issue.

Mr. H. R. Heath, 354 Broadway, has been appointed receiver and depository for that purpose.

THIEF SMELLING IN ABYSSINIA.

In Abyssinia they have a delightful mode of finding out a thief; a mode, which, in spite of its simplicity, we should hate to see transferred to this country. Our own detectives are smart, and, give them but the slightest clue, they are supposed to be able to unravel the most intricate affairs; but they are nothing to the Lebashi of Abyssinia, for they know not of the mode by which they shall track out a thief by the smell.

THIEF SMELLING IN ABYSSINIA.

THE MADRID BROOM MERCHANT.

Dr. Krapf, a late traveler in Abyssinia, gives us information on this point. He says:

"It is very noticeable the mode adopted in Ghos for the detection of thieves. The Lebashi (thief-catcher) is much feared, and belongs to the servants of the State. When a theft has been committed, the sufferer gives information to this official, upon which he sends his servant a certain dose of black meal compounded with milk, on which he makes him smoke tobacco. The servant is thrown into a state of frenzy, in which state he goes from house to house, crawling on his hands and feet like one out of his mind. After he has smelt about a number of houses—the Lebashi all the time holding him tight by a cord fastened round the body—he goes at last into a house, lays on its owner's bed and sleeps for some time. His master then arouses him with blows, and he awakes and arrests the owner of the house; who is forthwith dragged before the priests, and they make the victim of the robbery swear that he will not assess more than the real value of the articles stolen. The person on whose house the entry is made is regarded as the thief, and is forced to pay, whether he be innocent or guilty. No wonder that the population trembles when the Lebashi is seen in the streets, and that everybody tries to be on good terms with him, as there is no saying when he will make his appearance in the house."

THE TRAVELLING TINKER OF MADRID.

We do not know, though, after all, but that the Abyssinian mode may be just about as certain in detecting the thief as our method.

VICTOR HUGO AND DUMAS.—A close observer, writing from Paris, draws these physiognomical sketches of the two great authors. In it he describes Hugo thus: A magnificent head—the brow piled up square and compact, where all the intellectual organs seem well and evenly developed. Immense ideality, above which the moral faculties arch the head into a well-rounded dome. The hair grey, and cut close to the head. Eyes not large, but deep and intense, with a soft fire. Large ears. Nose in harmony with the rest of the face, which inclines to squareness. Mouth expressive of determination, yet full of feeling. Thick moustache, and very short, grey beard. Of Alexander Dumas he says he has a face whose features have an unmistakable look of the negro about them. Bald, bright, jovial, somewhat coarse, and decidedly earthy. Indicative of a tough epidermis and strong constitution. Plenty of self-esteem and vanity.

DEATH AND THE COMPADRE.

MR. WALLACE, a late traveler on the Rio Negro, tells many stories and legends of the people, from which we select one, of Mr. Death and the Compadre:

"A man and his wife were conversing together, and discussing the unpleasantness of being subject to death.

"'I should like to make friends with Death somehow,' said the man; 'then, perhaps, he will not trouble me.'

"'That you may easily do,' replied his wife; 'invite him to be god-father to our little boy, who is to be baptized next week. You will then be able to talk to him on the subject, and he surely will not be able to deny so small a favor to his compadre.'

"So Death was invited accordingly, and came; and after the ceremony and the feast were over, as he was going away, the man said to him:

"'Compadre Death, as there are many people in the world for you to take, I hope you will never come for me.'

"'Really, compadre,' replied Death, 'I cannot promise that; for when God sends for any one, I must go. However, I will do all I can; and I will, at all events, promise you a week's notice, that you may have time to prepare yourself.'

"Several years passed on, and Death at last came to pay them a visit.

"'Good evening, compadre,' said he. 'I have come on a disagreeable business; I have received orders to fetch you this day week—so I'm come to give you the notice I promised you.'

"'Oh, compadre,' said the man, 'you have come very soon; it is exceedingly inconvenient for me to go just now; I am getting on very nicely, and shall be a rich man in a few years, if you will but let me alone. It is very unkind in you, compadre; I am sure you can arrange it if you like, and take some one else instead of me.'

GROUP OF DAMARA, AFRICA, PIPES.

"'Very sorry,' replied Death; 'but it can't be done anyhow. I've got my orders, and I must obey them. Nobody ever gets off when the order is once given, and very few get so long a notice as I have been able to give you. However, I will try and if I succeed, you won't see me this day week; but I don't think there is any hope. Good-by!' When the day came, the man was in a great fright, for he did not expect to escape. His wife, however, hit on a plan, which they resolved to try. They had an old negro man in the house, who generally used to be employed in the kitchen. They made him exchange clothes with his master, and sent him away out of the house; the master then blacked his face, and made himself as much like the old negro as he could.

"On the evening appointed, Death came.

"'Good evening,' said he; 'where is my compadre?' I'm obliged to take him with me.'

"'Oh, compadre,' said she, 'he didn't at all expect you; and has gone on some business into the village, and won't be home till late.'

"'Now, I am in a pretty mess,' said Death 'I didn't think my compadre would have served me so; it is very ungentlemanly of him to get me into such a scrape, after all I have done for him. However, I must take somebody—who have you in the house?'

"The woman was rather alarmed at this question, for she expected he would have started off immediately to the village to find her husband; however, she considered it best to be civil, and so replied:

"'There's only our old nigger, that's in the kitchen, getting supper ready. Sit down, compadre, and take a bit, and then, perhaps, my husband will be in; I'm sorry he should have given you so much trouble.'

"'No, I can't stay,' said Death. 'I have a long way to go, and must take somebody; so let us see if your old negro will do.' And he walked into the kitchen, where the old man was pretending to be busy over the fire. 'Well, if compadre won't come, we must make the nigger do.'

"So saying, Death stretched forth his finger,

THE MADRID PIPE SELLER.

and the man fell dead. So you see, when a man's time has come, go he must; the cunning of ten thousand cunning men will not save one."

STREET CHARACTERS OF MADRID.

In former numbers of this paper we have given sketches of street character in Madrid, Spain, and to-day we take from the portfolio of our artist four more of these specialities for illustration. Our own streets display every phase of the peddler, but not of that marked national character found in cities of the old world. With us the larger portion of street peddlers are foreigners, but not so with them; in the streets of Madrid the native is seen in his full bloom, and the vendor of any description of truck may boast, possibly, the pure Castilian blood.

Everything under the sun is hawked through the streets of Madrid, from a penny-whistle up to a gold watch, and the hawker is of a like character with his goods.

First on our list comes the seller of brooms, with his stock, manufactured, perhaps, by his own family, in their wretched hut in the suburbs.

THE FRUIT SELLER OF MADRID.

While he is peddling his assortment, the dirty tribe at home are drowsing lazily over their work, to provide him with goods for the morrow. When his day's trading is over, his earnings will be spent in a mess of fruit, some meal, an onion or two, a bit of cheese, and, perhaps, if he is very successful, a bottle or two of sour red wine, enough to set the teeth on edge.

The pipe-seller or the fruit-peddler is but a repetition of the other. The first is ready always for business, either a sale or a trade; occasionally, perhaps, to pick a pocket, or appropriate any inconsidered trifle that lays in his way.

The traveling tinker, like our own tramp of that species, does not confine himself to cities alone, but extends his travels to any part of the kingdom where pots are bottomless and pans want mending. The clink of his hammer is heard among the vine-clad hills, as well as in the streets of Madrid, and when he cannot get coin as a reward for his exertion, a few grapes or a bit of black bread will answer as well.

DEATH AND THE COMPADRE.

THE NAVAL FIGHT AT CHAYANNE.

We regard all the movements of Chile and Peru at this moment as of equal importance with our own, and in that light we record the late naval engagement between the allied Chilean and Peruvian fleets and the Spanish men-of-war as a matter of the highest consequence.

The affair came off on the 7th of February, and the vessels engaged were the Peruvian frigate Apurima, 450 guns, and the corvette America, of 12 guns, the Chilean schooners Covadonga, of 6 guns, and the corvette Union, 12 guns, against the Spanish frigate Blanco, of 40 guns, and the frigate Villa de Madrid, of 60 guns—being 97 guns against 100.

The result was a brilliant engagement of two hours' duration, in which each were badly damaged, and in which the gunners of the allied squadron showed consummate skill in gunnery. They pulled the Villa de Madrid 17 times, and struck the Blanco once before the water line. The Spanish ships finally drew off in distress, returning to Valparaiso.

This is the second Chilean victory; and though they did not this time capture the Spanish ships, yet the thing is quite as great, as it displays the weakness of their opponents.

A few more such blows to Spanish arrogance in South America, and we will have another backing down similar to that at St. Domingo.

DAMARA, SOUTH AFRICA.

Smoking.

"A QUIET pipe" would seem to be unappreciated among the chief of the savage tribes inhabiting South Africa; indeed, if the natives of Great Britain could see how pipes as a fair sample of South African smokers, the custom there may be said to take the maddest and most fanatical form it is possible to conceive, and one that more nearly than anything else approaches—shall the humiliating thing be said?—the deliberate drinking-bouts common to "young bucks," and even elderly gentlemen of a quadrupedal turn, in civilized England in the past century.

"A small quantity of water is put into a large horn—usually of a koodo—three or four feet long. A short clay pipe, filled either with tobacco or hashish, is introduced, and fixed vertically into the side near the extremity of the narrow end, communicating with the interior by means of a small aperture. This being done, the party present place themselves in a circle, observing deep silence, and with open mouth, and eyes beginning with delight, they anxiously abide their turn. The chief man has usually the honour of applying the lighted coal of the pipe. From the moment that the orifice of the horn is applied to his lips, he seems to lose all consciousness of everything around him, and becomes entirely absorbed in the enjoyment. As little or no smoke escapes from his mouth, the effect is soon manifested by the parent. His features become contorted, his eyes glassy and vacant, his mouth covered with froth, his whole body convulsed, and in a few seconds he is prostrate on the ground. A little water is then thrown over his body, proceeding not unfrequently from the mouth of a friend; his hair is plentifully dried; or his head unceremoniously thumped with the hand. These somewhat disagreeable applications usually have the effect of restoring him to himself in a few minutes. Cases, however, have been known where people have died on the spot, from over-charging their stomachs with the poisonous fumes."

BODY SNATCHING.

ONE of the ablest professors of his time was Joshua Toole, who had created a fine museum of preparations at his house in Blenheim street, where he taught the more important branches of his profession. One day a man might there see a ring at the bell; the house paid recognizing the summons, proceeded to the door, and admitted, as usual, the following men bearing a heavy burden in a sack. Not a word passed, the sack was put down, some money laid in the hands of the bearers, and they, with rather more than their accustomed alacrity, were preparing to depart, when the doctor, by the dim light he carried, noticed a movement in the sack.

"Hullo" he cried, "this subject's not dead."

"Then kill him when you want him," was the laughing reply, and both men rapidly disappeared into the dark street.

Pursuit was out of the question, so the house pupil with the mortifying conviction that he had been the victim of a hoax, lost no time in untying the sack, determined to have a reckoning with at least one of the confederates. A stalwart Irishman stepped out at the first summons, but he swore so loudly that he had not got come to life, and second so certain that the man was bound to provide for him for the rest of his existence, that the greatly embarrassed pupil, as a last resource, sent for his professor. Brookes heard the story with undisturbed countenance, and at the end seemed to sympathize with the man's extravagant ideas.

"My good fellow," he answered with a grim smile, "nothing can be more natural. Counsel for murder will arrange everything. To-night you must be content with such accommodation as I have at my disposition. Mr. Watkins, show him into the theatre."

"Oh, it's nothing fond of theatres, is he," exclaimed his visitor, following, well pleased, the steps of his conductor. He saw the light the latter carried hastily enabling the Irishman to see two or three figures of birds of prey, and he hardly knew what, in the dusk, as he passed rapidly through a large room, when he stepped hastily on the threshold. This was a strong floor, in a large place, and every object could be distinctly seen in it.

Brookes made a sudden stop, his hair stood upright on his shock head, his eyes started from their sockets, his knees knocked together in a quiverquee of fright. He stood for a moment with open mouth, white face, and staring eyes, then, with a yell loud enough to have awakened the dead (he beheld there in horrible states of preparation) from their long sleep, he sprang back into the yard, dashed past a wolf that leapt at him as far as his chain would permit, fell by a venture that with outstretched wings was about to make a grab at him as he advanced, rushed through a street door that had been conveniently left open for him by the grimly grinning professor, at the top of his speed fled up Blenheim Steps into Oxford street, and then ran in the direction of Seven Dials, as if pursued by the terrific inmates of the anatomical theatre with whom he had been expected to pass the night.

REMARKABLE HISTORY OF A TORPEDO BOAT.

A SECRET report of the defenses of Mobile, Alabama, narrates the eventful history of a torpedo boat, as follows:

It was built of boiler iron, was about 36 feet long, and was manned by a crew of seven, eight of whom worked the propeller by hand. The skulls steered the boat and regulated the depth below the surface of the water. She could be submerged at pleasure to any depth desired, or could be worked upon the surface. In smooth, still water her movements were exactly controlled, and her speed was about eight knots. It was intended that she should approach any vessel lying at anchor, push under her keel, and drag after her a floating torpedo, which would explode on striking the bottom or sides of the ship attacked.

She could remain submerged more than half an hour without inconvenience to the crew.

Soon after her arrival in Charleston, Lieut. Payne, of the Confederate navy, with eight others, volunteered to attack the Federal fleet with her. While preparing for their expedition, the steamer, a passing steamer caused the boat to sink suddenly, and all hands, except Lieut. Payne, who was at that moment standing in the open hatchway, perished. She was soon raised, and again manned by volunteers, Lieut. Payne being appointed to command her. While lying near Fort Sumter she was capsized and again sunk in deep water, drowning all hands except her commander and two others.

Being again raised and prepared for action, Mr. Ansley, one of the constructors, made an experimental cruise in her in Cooper river. While engaged in a great depth, from some unknown cause, she became unmanageable, and remained at the bottom of the river for nearly the whole crew of nine died men.

She was then raised by Lieut. Dixon, of the navy of Mobile, Capts. Hobart and Brewer, with eight others, and towed to the city and harbor by steamers, and docked with a floating wooden vessel over her.

Her mission at last accomplished, she disappeared from sight, her crew, "doubting in their own fate, but it is believed they went down with the enemy.

MADAME DROUYN DE L'HUYS' GREAT BALL.

A LADY correspondent of the London Guardian, writing from Paris, gives the following account of this splendid affair:

Nearly 5,000 persons were present, and notwithstanding the immense number of rooms which were appropriated to such official receptions, the crush was very great. The Emperor and Empress were both present, though masked and in dominoes, as were the Prince and Princess of Hohenzollern. The latter presented were a Pompadour toilet of great richness and elegance, and a Watteau dress of white muslin. In the course of the evening, a Chinese procession passed through the rooms, the principal figures in which were tons and conveying on a gorgeous car the Empress of China, surrounded by her attendants, and followed by a lively, magnificently attired. One of the chief attractions of the entertainment was the ball-room, which was one in which the Baron Gros made his public entry into Pekin. The accoutrements, dresses, &c., were all specially made, concealed, and sent to Paris in the train of the French army, brought over after the expedition. The ball-room was decorated with the flags of the nations represented, with receive flowers and with Pekin lanterns. The supper-room was decorated so that were by which the Empress received on the top of the grand staircase. A train of green velvet of several yards in dimensions, and embroidered with golden dragons, on the body and lower part of the skirt being trimmed with the finest and most precious Chinese furs. She wore a head-dress of the same fur was literally one mass of diamonds, and necklace, bracelets, and ear-rings to the amount of 2,000,000 of francs, ($400,000) No dress in the silent could compete with that Empress, for the richness and taste of the toilets, and the amount of diamonds and precious stones, especially among the married Russian ladies. Such is the importance now-days attached to these kind of entertainments, and to the fact that the Duke and Madame de Metternich, the Countess de Pourtales, and several other fashionables, appeared in simple dominoes.

ONLY A LITTLE BROOK.—A simple but very touching incident has been related to us, says the Maine Farm, in connection with the last words of a beautiful little girl in Bath, who lately died at the age of nine years and eleven days. She was very feeble before she died, as the sorrowing friends stood around her bed, watching for the moment when the gentle breath, the last faint fluttering of the little pulse, they measure from her lovely form, would be at an end, with natural dread from the unknown way that was so speedily before her. Her father spoke of the beauties of the mysterious river which separates us from the bright heavenly land, and of the angels who beckon and fear to stem the flood. But after a time her fears subsided, she grew calm, and seemed to forget her long, dark way, till at the very last she brightened suddenly, and with a countenance radiant with joy, cried her sweet face, "Oh, it is only a little brook!" she cried, and so passed over to the heavenly shore.

[We clip the following from the Chicago Sunday Times of April 22:

UNITED STATES PRIZE CONCERT.—OFFER OF $100,000 to Subscribers.—The liberality and boldness of Messrs. Wiggins, Bradford & Co., ought to be of themselves sufficient guarantee to the reliability of the rare inducements which they are offering to subscribers of their great prize concert, on May 18, of this year. It is a proposition to distribute among the holders of a few high hopes on drawing the big prizes to cast suspicion against enterprises of this character when they have failed to strike the lucky numbers. Where tickets have had ever been given unreliable, they could not militate in any degree to the honest enterprise which now solicits these gentlemen after the gifts are fairly distributed, for not less than a thousand dollars each, to be awarded to the fortunate, including one gift of $30,000, and one gift of $20,000, and a number of others of $5,000, $4,000, $3,000, $2,000, and other high figures all in good currency. In addition to this, 25 houses and lots, and a number of pianos, will be awarded to another to the holders of successful numbers. Besides all this, there will be 11,000 gifts, ranging from silver watches to a costly family Bible, making altogether one chance out of every four that a rich prize may be won.

The drawing will be done openly, in the grove board at Crosby's Opera House, in the presence of thousands, and under the supervision of gentlemen selected by a committee whom the audience itself will select. Order and fair dealing, under the circumstances, are unavoidable. At least 100 subscribers will be made independently rich by the gifts they will get, and the rest of those who hold the successful numbers will receive handsome and valuable gifts.

The number and undoubted character of the references of Messrs. Wiggins, Bradford & Co., give stability and reliability to their enterprise, and this prize concert is commended as a means of safe investment to those who desire an interest in any enterprise involving a small risk for the prospect of great gain. The projectors promise also to donate to the Lincoln and Douglas Monument funds $3,000. Further details of this great enterprise may be found in an advertisement in another column.

FASHION.

We desire to call the attention of our rural subscribers to a book published in this city by Messrs. George E. & F. W. Woodward, No. 37 Park Row, an old established and reliable firm. The book is called "Woodward's Country Homes," and is a practical teacher to enable every one to erect a home. It is what every country house should have, and is illustrated with 822 designs, all for $1.50. And when we are talking of these publishers, we feel a wish to mention their paper, The Horticulturist, a sturdy, sensible monthly magazine, based upon practice and study. There is no paper of its kind in the country that can compare with it.

If People who suffer from the dull stupidity that meets us everywhere in spring, and too often in all seasons of the year, knew how quick it could be cured by taking AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to purge the blood from their systems, we should have better neighbors as well as cleaner blood in our veins.

Barnum's American Museum,

Broadway, between Spring and Prince streets. A splendid success. Every Afternoon at 2; Evening at 7½; Saturday Afternoon at 2. Lecture Rooms, specially adapted for the Museum, entitled: THE EARTH, QUAKE; or, THE RIDE OF THE CZAR, with new gorgeous scenery, wonderful mechanical contrivances, and startling effects. Miss Nile introduced, will add the addition of a Storm Scene, with peculiar effects. Admission, 25 cents; Children under ten years of age, 15 cents. Admission, 50 cents, Children under ten, 15 cents.

300 per cent. Profit for Agents--Three Queens, Jubilee, Empress, and Princess Dolls, sell at sight. All sent, with particulars, free, by mail for 35 cents. Address H. MARTIN, Hinsdale, N. H.

Something Worth Knowing—Curious Artificial Trick. Sent to any address for 25 cents. Address JAMES J. SHANNON, Station D, Bible House, New York City.

SUBSCRIBE!

FOR COUSIN CHARLIE'S MONTHLY, and get those Sparkling, Bright and Brilliant Stories. Subscribe Early, and secure the first Number. Terms, $1 per year. Club Rates: Club of 10, $9; Club of 20, $16. Address all communications to

COUSIN CHARLIE'S MONTHLY,
550-3 144 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

SENT FREE. SOMETHING EVERYBODY SEND FOR IT W.C. WEMYSS, 379 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Those Curious Fasteners. 25 Cents.—Good Books, 15 cents each. Curiosity Made Easy—Artificial Flowers—Wax Flowers—Fancy Work Made Easy—Mind your Stops—Hard Words Made Easy—How to Write Letters—How to Become an Actress—Also THE LIBRARY OF LOVE, Three Amusing Volumes for 50 cents.

Poet's Companion, 25 cents; Book of Beauty, 10 cents; Book of Riddles, 10 cents. Shakspeare's Proverbs, 10 cents. Dream Book, 10 cents. 100 Curious Puzzles, 10 cents. Parlor Pantomimes, 25 cents. Comic Readings, 25 cents. Brownie's Comicality, 25 cents. Address letters, W. C. WEMYSS, 379 Broadway, N. Y.

Holloway's Pills—DEPRESSION OF SPIRITS.—These pills relieve the body, and the mind simultaneously becomes healthy change. They remove all obstructions, purify the blood, correct depraved humors, regulate the stomach, and renovate the system. Sold everywhere.

AMERICAN POCKET TIMEKEEPER.

FIFTY CENTS EACH.

The most novel and useful invention of the age. Constructed of the best materials, scientific principles, and warranted to denote solar time with greater accuracy than any $100 watch. Sent by mail, post-paid, in a neat, gilt case, with white enameled dial in gold or silver gilt, 50 cents. Sent by mail, post-paid, to any part of the world. Address AMERICAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY, P. O. Drawer 484, Cohoes, N. Y. 553-554

THE STANDARD

AMERICAN BILLIARD TABLE

AND

COMBINATION CUSHIONS.

Approved and adopted by the Billiard Congress of 1863. The best and only reliable Billiard Table manufactured. Balls, Cues, and every article relating to Billiards, for sale by PHELAN & COLLENDER, Corner of Crosby and Spring Streets, N. Y.

The Way to Make from One Dollar to One Dollar and Fifty Cents in an evening, with other information, will be sent to any one enclosing two stamps. Address A. WOLCOTT, Cleveland, O.

FOR 1866.

Bradley's Duplex Elliptic

OR DOUBLE SPRING

HOOP SKIRTS.

They will not SPOIL or BREAK, like the Single Springs, but will ever PRESERVE that CHARMING and GRACEFUL shape, where three or four ordinary skirts have been thrown aside as useless. Each hoop is composed of two finely-tempered Steel Springs, braided TOGETHER and FIRMLY together, never to break, forming the STRONGEST, most Flexible, and still the Lightest Hoop made. In fact, for the Promenade, in the House, in Church, Theatre, Railroad Cars, Carriages, Crowded Assemblies, etc., etc., they are UNEQUALED. Misses' Skirts, Durability and Economy with that Elegance of Shape which has made the "DUPLEX ELLIPTIC" the

Standard Skirt

OF THE FASHIONABLE WORLD.

For Young Ladies, Misses and Children, they are Superior to all others. Inquire for the

DUPLEX ELLIPTIC (or double) SPRING SKIRT.

Manufactured exclusively by

WEBB, BRADLEY & CARY,
The Sole Owners of Patent.

97 Chambers, and 79 & 81 Reade Sts., New York City.

For sale in all First-Class STORES throughout the UNITED STATES and ELSEWHERE. 553-59

CELEBRATED

GOLDEN PENS.

These Pens are warranted not to corrode with proper usage, and to wear for any length of time before Introduced to the public. They are well tempered and smooth, made of the best steel elastic material, and plated with a BEAUTIFUL GOLDEN FINISH, giving them the most attractive appearance. While in flexibility and durability they are unsurpassed. They never fail in giving perfect satisfaction, and nothing excepting the finest Gold Pens can compare with them, many even using them in preference to the gold and more expensive article. In point of economy, they are CHEAPER than any other pen, while their looking, writing qualities, and every way PREFERABLE. Their peculiar construction and excellence of material, with the very low prices now in common use, have given them a most extensive sale, and numerous good qualities make them equally suitable for the School or Counting Room, their best recommendation being the rapid introduction they are receiving in Colleges, Boarding Houses and Private Establishments generally.

CELEBRATED GOLDEN PENS are the best in the long run, one will out-wear a dozen common steel pens. One dozen, sent by mail, post-paid, in neat morocco gold pocket style, sent by mail, postpaid, for 50 cents. One gross, in neat boxes, put up for retail trade, sent by mail for $3 25. Agents wanted. Our agents are making $15 per day. Address as follows:

UNION GOLDEN PEN CO.,
183 Main Street, Cincinnati, O.

springs open in the fashes month; opens a perfect trap-catch with them. More agents wanted. Send 50 cents and stamp for sample books, terms, and trial pencil, to JOSEPH BRIGGS, 335 Broadway, N. Y. 552-53

Curl your Hair.

One application will curl your hair into beautiful curls and last six months; satisfaction given or money refunded. Price 50 cents. Address, M. A. JACKSON, Calhoun, Ill. 553-54

Look Here, Boys.

Full instructions by which any one can master the Art of Ventriloquism and make a world of fun and a fortune by a few hours' practice. Price, by mail, 25 cents. Address A. JAGGERS, Cincinnati, O. 553-54

A GREAT CHOLERA PREVENTIVE.

I will send to any address, on the receipt of $1, a great preventive that was used with so much success in both the cities of Europe in the terrific fearful cholera disease. Address A. A. TRUE, Station D, New York City. Send free by mail. 552-53

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND

Contains the Lady's Guide to Beauty; Useful Receipts for the Housekeeper; Hints to Sportsmen; Parlor Theatricals; the Parlor Magician; How to Make all kinds of Liquors without the use of Distilling Apparatus; How to Detect Counterfeit Bills and Spurious Coin; the Tricks of Gamblers, Fortune Tellers, Dropper and Sharper Tasks exposed; How to make all kinds of Powders, Rouges, Salve, Curling Fluids, Hair Dyes, etc.; How to make the Whiskers and Moustache grow; all kinds of Salutation; Various Tricks with Cards; Manner and Form of Notarial Facts, Proveries of all Nations, Poetical Quotations, Abbreviations, Nicknames, etc. Price 25 cents. Send orders to Box 3410, Post Office, N. Y. 553-5

MERCHANTS, BANKERS,

And others should send to all parts of the United States by HARNDEN'S EXPRESS, 45 Broadway, tfo

OUR PUBLICATIONS!

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE 10 CENTS, OR $4 A YEAR.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper,

ON SPANISH-AMERICAN EXCHANGE,

Published Weekly.

Within the United States, $12 a year, in Currency.

Ready to be sent by mails for Cuba, Mexico, Central America, Brazil, Peru, Chile, and all the South-American Republics—$12 yearly, in gold.

Frank Leslie's Illustrirte Zeitung,

Or German Illustrated Newspaper,

Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or $4 a year.

Frank Leslie's Chimney Corner,

Published Weekly—price 10 cents, or yearly, $4.

The Great Magazine of Fashion:

Frank Leslie's Lady's Magazine,

Published Monthly—price $3.00 a year.

Frank Leslie's New Monthly.

Price 15 cents, or $1 50 a year.

Frank Leslie's Children's Friend,

Published Monthly—price 10 cents, yearly $1.

Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun.

Published Monthly—$1 50 a year.

GIFT SALE.

The Days of Brass Jewelry are Over.

SEND TO THE COSMOPOLITAN JEWELERS' ASSOCIATION.

Gold Gift Sale

Under the management of Messrs. CALKINS & CO., well-known as the conductors of this, the most extensive enterprise of the times, having branches in nearly 100 cities and towns. Every article of jewelry in the mammoth stock of over $2,500,000 is WARRANTED GOLD, or NO SALE. All to be disposed of at the one average price of Two Dollars each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you will receive.

SPLENDID LIST OF ARTICLES, ALL TO BE SOLD FOR TWO DOLLARS EACH!

5	Superior Grand Piano Fortes	$800 to	$1,200
50	Splendid Seven-Octave Pianos	400 to	800
150	Melodeons, the Best Makers	100 to	200
175	First-Class Sewing Machines	50 to	150
200	Rosewood Musical Boxes, 32 airs	75 to	250
250	Mahogany " " 24 airs	50 to	200
250	Diamond Rings	50 to	200
500	Gold Hunting-Case Watches	75 to	200
500	Gold Ladies' Enameled Watches	50 to	300
1,000	Silver Hunting-Case Watches	35 to	100
1,000	Silver Open-Faced Watches	15 to	50
250	Silver Dining Sets—Splendid	75 to	300
500	Silver Salvers and Urns	50 to	250
500	Silver Tea-Sets—Complete	50 to	300
2,000	Gold Vest and Neck Chains	18 to	50
3,000	Gold-Chased Bracelets	15 to	30
2,000	Gold Chatelain and Guard Chains	18 to	40
2,000	Gold Brooches, Lava and Coral	8 to	15
5,000	Gold Brooches, Opal and Emerald	15 to	40
5,000	Gold Ear-Drops, Jet, Lava, Coral, Mosaic, Opal and Emerald Set	8 to	46
5,000	Gold California Diamond Breast-pins	6 to	20
3,000	Gold Sets Soltaire Buttons and Studs	12 to	25
3,000	Gold Thimbles, Pencils, &c.	6 to	15
10,000	Gold Lockets, double glasses	8 to	25
10,000	Gold Lockets for Miniatures	6 to	20
3,000	Gold Toothpicks, Crosses, &c.	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Plain Rings	6 to	10
5,000	Gold Chased or Engraved Rings	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Shield and Signet Rings	8 to	25
10,000	Gold California Diamond Rings	6 to	20
10,000	Gold Pearl, and Fancy Stone Rings	8 to	25
7,500	Gold Sets Ladies' Jewelry, Jet	15 to	25
10,000	Sets of Ladies' Gold Jewelry, Cameo, Pearl, Opal and Emerald	15 to	50
10,000	Gold Pens, with Silver Holders	6 to	12
5,000	Gold Pens, with Gold Holders	10 to	25
5,000	Silver Goblets and Cups, all styles	6 to	12
3,000	Silver Castors and Wine Holders	15 to	50
2,000	Silver Fruit and Cake Baskets	20 to	30
1,000	Silver Card Cases	15 to	25
3,000	Silver Egg Stands	18 to	40
2,000	Silver Ice Pitchers	20 to	50
6,000	Silver Cake, Pie, and Fruit Knives	8 to	25
20,000	Dozen Silver Teaspoons	8 to	15
10,000	Dozen Silver Tablespoons	15 to	25
10,000	Dozen Silver Forks and Knives	15 to	40
1,000	Dozen Silver Nut Picks	12 to	20
5,000	Sets Silver Napkin Rings	8 to
10,000	Engravings in Rosewood Frames	6 to	15
5,000	Engravings in Gilt Frames	6 to	15
1,000	Fine Oil Paintings	25 to	100
6,000	Pearl Pocket Knives—six blades	6 to	15
3,000	Ivory and Pearl Back Combs	10 to	25
5,000	Pearl and Gold-Headed Canes	15 to	25
15,000	Photograph Albums, all styles	6 to	30
1,000	Opera Glasses	10 to	30

THE COSMOPOLITAN ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURING JEWELERS.

CALKINS & CO., Managers,

169 and 171 BROADWAY, N. Y.

☞ Has been organized with the special object of doing away with the enormous profits paid by the people to jobbers and wholesale and retail dealers in their goods, making articles for which the manufacturers receive on the average but $2 cost the customer at retail from $8 to $12, after passing through three or four hands. This splendid stock of the leading and most fashionable styles of Solid Gold Jewelry, Watches, and Silverware, worth $2,500,000 at retail prices, will all be sold for $500,000, or at $2 for each and every article [the exact average manufacturer's cost].

Remember this is emphatically a Gold Gift Sale, including no brass, or so-called Plated Jewelry; and every article is sold at the one average price of Two Dollars each, including Gold and Silver Watches, Splendid Pianos, &c. The Plan, Sealed advertisements, describing each prize, are well mixed, and sent regardless of choice to every customer—insuring $10 worth for $2. The proof ☞ We guarantee to send any customer, in exchange for the least article drawn, for $2, a Splendid Engraved Silver Butter Dish valued at $10, or a Photograph Album valued at $6, and you have the possibility of getting a

FINE GOLD WATCH OR PIANO.

Price of Envelopes 25 cents each.

2 for 50 cts., with a beautiful Card Photograph.

5 for $ 1.00	"	Silver Butter Knife, worth $		1.00
11 for 2.00	"	Silver Napkin Ring	"	2.00
17 for 3.00	"	Silver Salt Spoons	"	3.00
30 for 5.00	"	Set Silver Tea Spoons	"	6.00
65 for 10.00	"	Set Silver Forks	"	12.09
100 for 15.00	"	Silver Hunting Watch	"	25.00
200 for 30.00	"	Ladies' Gold Watch	"	50.00
400 for 60.00	"	Gents' Gold Watch	"	100.00

In all cases upon receipt of the money the premiums as above will be sent with the Envelopes.

Agents will be allowed 10 cents on every Envelope, provided their remittance amounts to over $1. Agents will collect 25 cents for each Envelope, and remit 15 cents to us, either in cash or stamps.

Address CALKINS & CO.,
169 and 171 Broadway, N. Y.

LOVE! LOVE!

How to win the undying love of the fair sex. Sent by mail for Five cents. Address
J. F. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO.,

501 BROADWAY (St. Nicholas Block).

Photographic Materials, Stereoscopic Goods,

WAR VIEWS,

SCENERY, GROUPS, &C.

Photograph Albums, great assortment; Cartes de Visite of Noted Persons, &c., &c.
French, English and American Novelties. tfo

A CURIOSITY!!

Free to All. A Rare Treat.

Gentlemen, do not fail to send a two cent stamp, and receive a GREAT PAPER, replete with the choicest literature and rare Illustrations. Sent Gratis.
CHARLES E. MACKEY,
tf 267 Broadway, New York.

Fresh Garden and Flower Seeds, prepaid by mail, of the choicest sorts. Also, Fruit and Ornamental Trees, 150,000 Fruit Stocks, Grape Vines, Strawberries, &c., of the best kinds. Priced Descriptive Catalogues, gratis, to any address. Wholesale Lists for the Trade. Agents wanted.
B. M. WATSON,
Old Colony Nurseries and Seed Establishment,
547-52 Plymouth, Mass.

J. H. WINSLOW & CO.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY EVER OFFERED TO SECURE GOOD JEWELERY AT LOW PRICES.

100,000

WATCHES, CHAINS, SETS OF JEWELERY, PENS, BRACELETS, CASTORS, GOBLETS, SPOONS, FORKS, NAPKIN RINGS, ETC., ETC.

Worth $500,000!

To be sold for ONE DOLLAR each, without regard to value, and not to be paid for until you know what you are to get. Send 25 cents for a Certificate, which will inform you what you can have for $1, and at the same time get our Circular containing full list and particulars, also terms to Agents, which we want in every Regiment and Town in the Country.
J. H. WINSLOW & CO.,
208 Broadway, New York.

VIOLINS AND BOWS

Sent by express to all parts of the United States on receipt of the following prices:
GERMAN—Red or Brown—$2 50, $3, $4, $5, $6, $8.
DOUBLE-LINED—$5, $7, $9, $11, $13, $15, $17, $19.
FRENCH—Blocked and Lined—$8, $10, $12, $15, $20.
ITALIAN—$6, $10, $12, $14, $16, $18, $25, $30, $35.
OLD MASTERS—Very Fine Tone—$40, $50, $75 to $300.
MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS of every description, at lowest New York prices. Send stamp for price list. Especial attention given to this department.
o FREDERICK BLUME, 208 Bowery,

Over Fifty Secrets, numerous Jokes, Witty Sayings, &c., will be found in "THE LOUNGER." Sent free for FIVE CENTS.
tf Address, P. O. Box 5,057, New York.

JOE MILLER, JR.

A Book crammed full of Jokes, Comical Stories, Witty Sayings, Funny Puns, Laughable Conundrums, Humorous Poetry, &c., &c. Price 10 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York. tf

---

Matrimony.—Why every man should marry Why every woman should marry. All may marry to know. Read the Illustrated Marriage Guide and Medical Adviser, by WM. EARL, M.D., 200 pages. Mailed in sealed envelopes on receipt of 25 cts. Address 12 White Street, New York.

Senseology, Psychologic Fascination, Marriage Happily Attained, How to Become Rich, Win the Opposite Sex, Marriage, &c. This queer, useful, and spicy book, sent by mail for 25 cents. Address EVANS & CO., Box 1,215, Philadelphia. tf

---

"Psychomancy."—How either sex may fascinate and gain the love, confidence, affection and good will of any person they choose, instantly. This simple mental acquirement all can possess, securing certain success in love, marriage, etc., free by mail for 25 cents, together with a guide to the unmarried of both sexes—an extraordinary book, of great interest. Third edition; over 100,000 copies already sold. Address
tf T. WILLIAM & Co., Publishers, Philadelphia.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY ONGUENT will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address on receipt of an order.
R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

THE DOMINO CIRCULAR!

For Sporting Gentlemen. Send stamp, with address, Novel oddities and odd novelties. CLEMENT & CO., 64 John street, N. Y. tf

---

Beautiful False Mustaches, all colors. Cannot be told from natural ones. Mailed for $1 per pair. Address, BLACKIE & CO., 713 Broadway, N. Y.
tf

The Beautiful Art of Enameling the Skin! WHITE FRENCH SKIN ENAMEL, for whitening, beautifying and preserving the complexion, making it soft, fair, smooth, and transparent. It quickly removes tan, freckles, pimples, etc., without injuring the skin. Warranted. Sent by mail for 50 cents. Address HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 133 South 7th street, Philadelphia. tf

---

Beauty.—Hunt's Bloom of Roses. A charming, delicate and perfect natural color for the cheeks or lips; does not wash off or injure the skin; remains permanent for years and cannot be detected. Price $1 18 cents by mail, securely packed from observation. HUNT & CO., PERFUMERS, tf 133 South Seventh street, Philadelphia.

Matrimony Made Easy;

Or Mysteries of Making Love fully explained, with specimen Love Letters. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 3,410 P. O., N. Y. tf

---

Stereoscopic Pictures and Cartes de VISITE, latest importations. Also, New Books and Sporting Articles. Send for Circular.
000 PIERRE BIBON, 27 Ann St., N. Y.

The Book of Wonders tells how to make CIDER without apples or any other fruit. It also contains the Hunter's Secret, how to catch Fish and all kinds of Game; how to make all kinds of Liquors; all kinds of Onguents and Curling Fluids; Gambling Exposed; Ventriloquism Made Easy; Information of Importance to Ladies; how to gain the Love of any one, &c., &c., &c. Sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents. Address Box 5,057 P. O., New York. tf

---

DON'T BE FOOLISH.

You can make Six Dollars from Fifty Cents. Call and examine, an invention urgently needed by everybody. Or a sample sent free by mail for 50 cents, that retails easily for $6, by R. L. WOLCOTT, 170 Chatham Square, New York. 5291y

---

MUJAVIRO
THE MOST DELICIOUS OF ALL PERFUMES.
SOLD EVERYWHERE.

548-51

A Sure Method of Winning at All the various games of Cards, Dice, &c., sent free. Marked Cards $1 per pack, or $9 per dozen. Address W. L. CRAWFORD, Manufacturer of Playing Cards, Nos. 65 and 67 Nassau street, New York. tf.

1,000 "Ha Haws," 500 "Te Hes,"

All in one day, by reading the laughable ADVENTURES of MESSRS. BROWN, JONES AND ROBINSON; showing where they went, what they did, and how they did it; with nearly 200 most thrilling Comic Engravings. Price only 50 cents. Sent by mail, postpaid. Agents Wanted. CHAS. L. BRIGGS, Publisher,
550-3 144 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

FIRST PREMIUM.

IMPROVED

$5 SEWING MACHINE! $5

THE EMBODIMENT OF
PRACTICAL UTILITY AND
EXTREME SIMPLICITY.

Originally Patented May 13, 1862; improvement patented June 9, 1863. The celebrated FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE, with CRIMPING attachment, a most Wonderful and Elegantly Constructed Novelty; is NOISELESS in operation, uses the STRAIGHT NEEDLE, and works horizontal, sews with DOUBLE OR SINGLE THREAD of ALL KINDS. Makes the Running Stitch more perfect and regular than by hand, and with extraordinary rapidity, making 16 stitches to each evolution of the wheel. Will Gather, Hem, Ruffle, Shirr, Tuck, Run up Breadths, &c.; the strongest machine made. Warranted not to get out of order for THREE YEARS. It has taken the PREMIUMS at New York and other STATE FAIRS, and received the FULL APPROVAL of ALL the principal Journals, and of those who have USED THEM. The ONLY LOW Price Machine Patented, and that has received a PREMIUM. All others at the same price are INFRINGEMENTS.

"This beautiful Machine makes the Running Stitch at the rate of several yards per minute."—Frank Leslie's.

"It uses a common needle, sews very rapidly, and is so easily understood that a child can use it."—N. Y. Independent.

"With single or double thread, it silently yet very rapidly, with a common needle, makes the running stitch exactly like hand sewing."—N. Y. Tribune.

Single Machines, all complete, sent to any part of the country per Express, packed in box with printed instructions on receipt of price, $5. Safe delivery guaranteed. Agents wanted everywhere. Circular containing Liberal Inducements sent free.
Address all orders to
FAMILY GEM SEWING MACHINE CO.,
tf Office, 102 Nassau Street, N. Y.

WONDERFULLY STRANGE!

MADAME M. H. PERREGAULT,

Who has astonished the scientific classes of Paris and London, has now permanently located herself at Albany, N. Y. Madame Perregault, by the aid of her wonderful instrument, known as the Horoscope, guarantees to produce a life-like picture of the future husband or wife of the patron, together with the date of marriage, leading traits of character, occupation, &c. This is no humbug, as thousands of testimonials can assert. She will send, when desired, a written guarantee that the picture is what it purports to be. By stating age, height, complexion, color of eyes and hair, and inclosing 50 cents, and stamped envelope, addressed to yourself, you will receive the picture by return mail. Address
Madame M. H. PERREGAULT,
542-51o P. O. Drawer 202, Albany, N. Y.

Short-Hand Without a Master.

By which the method of taking down Sermons, Lectures, Speeches, Trials, etc., may be attained in a few hours. Fifty-first edition, WITH SUPPLEMENT. Price 25 cents. Send orders to P. O. Box 3,410, New York. tf

---

500 Photographs of the most Promi- NENT PERSONS OF THE AGE, embracing Actors, Actresses, Opera Singers, Officers of the Army and Navy, Statesmen, Authors, Artists, Clergymen, Kings, Queens, &c., &c. Sent, post-paid, for 25 cents. Address Box 3,410, Post-Office, New York. tf

---

☞ Something New. ☜

For Agents and Dealers to sell, 20 Novel and Useful Articles; profits large. Send stamp for circular.
S. W. RICE & CO.,
tf 83 Nassau street, N. Y.

Ventriloquism Made Easy, and the Second Sight Mystery, as practiced by ROBERT HELLER and others, fully explained. Price 15 cents. Send orders to Box 3,410, P. O., New York. tf

---

Photograph Cards for Gentlemen.—Sample, 25 cents; French Transparent Cards (52 views), $1 25 per pack; $10 per dozen; also Marked Back Playing Cards, $1 50 per pack. All by mail on receipt of Price. Address
FORWARDING AGENCY, 58 Liberty street, N. Y.
tf

Curious.—$ converted into $20, $30, $50, or $100. A sample given. Send red stamp to pay postage. Address JAMES THOMPSON, 81 Nassau street, N. Y.
550-3

Employment at your Own Homes—either sex—suitable for a livelihood, or leisure hours, in every city and town. Large profits realized. Address, with red stamp, for particulars, DR. WARNER, 54 East 12th street, New York City. 552-55

The Little Joker and A FINELY COLORED PHOTOGRAPH sent in a sealed envelope for 25 cents. Address, Box 5,057, P. O., New York.

To Nervous Sufferers of both Sexes.

A Medical Gentleman having the past ten years cured a great many sufferers who had undergone the usual expensive modes of treatment without success, is still willing to assist others, by sending (free), on the receipt of a post-paid addressed envelope, a copy of the formula of cure employed. Direct to DR. JOHN M. DAGNALL, 9 Clinton street, Brooklyn, N. Y. tfo

---

Every Man his Own Printer.

CHEAPEST AND BEST. Price of Presses, $10, $16, $23 and $30. Price of an Office, with Press, $15, $28, $40, $48, and $71. Send for a Circular to the LOWE PRESS COMPANY, 23 Water street, Boston. tf

---

MAGIC CARDS

For Performing HELLER's Great Tricks, with illustrated directions. Price 15 cents per pack. Marked Cards (any style of back) price 50 cents per pack. Address C. WILLIS & CO., No. 167 Broadway, New York. tf

---

Royal Havana Lottery.

Official Drawing of 5th April, 1866,

No. 20952	drew	$100,000
No. 15224	"	50,000
No. 15965	"	25,000
No. 21067	"	10,000
No. 12023	"	5,000
No. 8483	"	5,000

Being the six capital prizes.

Prizes paid in gold. Information furnished. Highest rates paid for doubloons and all kinds of gold and silver.
TAYLOR & CO., Bankers, 16 Wall st., N. Y.

Wanted Agents.—$50 per week—male or female, at their home; business light, pleasant and honorable. For sample and terms, address, with stamp, SHAWE & CO., Detroit, Michigan. 552-54

$55 A Month.—Male or Female Agents wanted. Address, with stamp, E. E. LOCKWOOD, Detroit, Mich.
552-54.

THE GREAT NEW ENGLAND REMEDY

DR. J. W. POLAND'S

WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

"It was early in the spring of 1855 that this compound was originated. A member of my family was afflicted with an irritation of the throat, attended with a disagreeable cough. I had for months previous thought that a preparation, having for its basis the inside bark of white pine, might be so compounded as to be very useful in the case of the throat and lungs. To test the value of it in the case alluded to, I compounded a small quantity of the medicine that I had been planning, and gave it in teaspoonful doses. The result was exceedingly gratifying. Within two days the irritation of the throat was removed, the cough subsided, and a speedy cure was effected. Soon after this I sent some to a lady in Londonderry, N. H., who had been suffering for some weeks from a bad cough, occasioned by a sudden cold, and had raised mucus streaked with blood. She soon found relief, and sent for more. She took about 10 ounces of it, and got well. J. B. Clark, Esq., editor of the Manchester Daily Mirror, made a trial of the same preparation in the case of a severe cold, and was cured immediately. He was so highly pleased with the results, and so confident of success attending its sales if placed before the public, that he finally persuaded me to give it a name, and send it abroad to benefit the suffering. In November, 1855, I first advertised it under the name of White Pine Compound. In two years from that time there had been wholesaled in Manchester alone $100 worth, where it took the lead of all the cough remedies in the market, and it still maintains that position. There is good reason for all this; it is very soothing and healing in its nature, is warming to the stomach, and pleasant withal to the taste, and is exceedingly cheap.

"As a remedy for kidney complaints, the White Pine Compound stands unrivaled. It was not originated for that purpose; but a person, in using it for a cough, was not only cured of the cough, but was also cured of a kidney difficulty of 10 years' standing. Since that accidental discovery many thousands have used it for the same complaint, and have been completely cured."

The above was written by Dr. Poland in 1860. Since then, as in Manchester, the White Pine Compound has taken the lead of all Cough remedies, as well as preparations for the cure of Kidney difficulties, in every city, town, village and hamlet throughout the New England States.

The past year has given great opportunity to test the virtues of the White Pine Compound. It has been an unusual time for Colds and Coughs, and very large quantities of the White Pine Compound have been sold and used with the happiest effects. It speaks well for the medicine, and the people where it is prepared are high in its praise.

One bottle of this Compound is generally sufficient to remove a bad cough, and frequently I have known persons to have a cold entirely removed in two days by using less than half a bottle. From one to two teaspoonfuls is a large dose. I sometimes put a little white sugar and hot water with it, when taken on going to bed.

The limits to which I purposely confine myself in this circular will not allow of that full expression which I would like to give in favor of the White Pine Compound. It is universally admired by all who use it; it has attained to such a popularity among those whose opinion is valuable indeed, that VANITY may possibly, in part, prompt me to record more here than hurried people will have patience to read; so I will stop, by merely recommending to all who need a Cough or Kidney remedy to test the virtues of the WHITE PINE COMPOUND.

TESTIMONIALS.

A very large number of important testimonials have already been received from Physicians, Clergymen, Apothecaries, and, indeed, from all classes of society, speaking in the most flattering terms of the White Pine Compound.

Dr. Nichols, of Northfield, Vt., says:

"I find the White Pine Compound to be very efficacious not only in coughs and other pulmonic affections, but also in affections of the kidneys, debility of the stomach, and other kindred organs."

Rev. J. K. Chase, of Rumney, N. H., writes:

"I have for years regarded your White Pine Compound as an invaluable remedy. I can truly say that I regard it as even more efficacious and valuable than ever. I have just taken the Compound for a cold, and it works charmingly."

REV. H. D. DODGE,

of West Randolph, Vt., who is a practicing physician, as well as preacher, in a letter to Dr. P., dated May 21, 1863, says: "I find it an excellent medicine in kidney disease."

The White Pine Compound, advertised at length in our columns, is not only as to its name inviting, but is a highly approved medicine. Dr. J. W. Poland, the inventor, has the confidence of the many who know him, a confidence which he enjoyed while laboring usefully many years as a Baptist minister. His experience as a sufferer led him to make experiments, which issued in his medical discovery."—Boston Watchman and Reflector.

The editor of the Manchester Daily and Weekly Mirror, in a leader of the daily, thus speaks of the Compound:

"The White Pine Compound is advertised at much length in our columns, and we are happy to learn that the demand for it is increasing beyond all previous expectations. It is the very best medicine for coughs and colds we know of, and no family that has once used it will ever be without it. We speak from our own knowledge; it is sure to kill a cold, and pleasant as sure. The greatest inventions come by accident, and it is singular that the White Pine Compound, made for colds and coughs, should prove to be the greatest remedy for kidney difficulties known. But so it is. We cannot doubt it, so many testimonials come to us from well-known men. Besides, the character of Dr. Poland is such that we know he will not countenance that what is wrong. For years a Baptist clergyman, studying medicine to find remedies for his ailments, with a delicate, consumptive look, standing with one foot upon the grave, he made the discovery which has saved himself, and called out from hundreds of others the strongest testimonials possible. We have known Dr. Poland for years, and never knew a more conscientious, honest, upright man, and we are glad to state that we believe whatever he says about his White Pine Compound."

Should you think favorably of this medicine, be careful, when purchasing, that it is the WHITE PINE COMPOUND that is offered to you, as we know that other preparations have been palmed off for it by unprincipled dealers.

THE WHITE PINE COMPOUND

is manufactured at the

NEW ENGLAND BOTANIC DEPOT,

106 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON,

GEO. W. SWETT, M.D., Proprietor,

under the supervision of

REV. J. W. POLAND, M.D.

DR. SWETT will attend to the business department, to whom all orders should be addressed.

Sold by wholesale and retail dealers in Medicines everywhere: DEMAS BARNES, Park Row, New York; F. C. WELLS & CO., 115 Franklin street, New York; JOHNSTON, HOLLOWAY & COWDEN, Philadelphia; BURNHAMS & VAN SCHAACK, Chicago, Ill.; JOHN D. PARK, Cincinnati, Ohio, COLLINS & BROTHER, St. Louis, Mo., General Agents for the West.

$1. BOOKS. $1.

Dollar Gift Book Sale.

100,000 VOLUMES!

Standard Works, Family Bibles, Photographs Albums, etc.,

WORTH $250,000!

All to be SOLD for ONE DOLLAR each, and a

SPLENDID GIFT,

Worth from 50 cents to $100, to be given with each Book. No Book to be sold for until you know what gift you are to get. The Gifts consist of Gold and Silver Watches, Rich Ware, Sets of Jewelry, Sleeve-Buttons, Boom-Studs, Chains, etc., etc.

PLAN OF SALE.

Certificates are prepared, describing each book and naming the gift that will accompany it, with its value. These certificates are placed in sealed envelopes and well mixed, and sent, regardless of choice, one to each purchaser of a beautiful Card Photograph of any prominent personage, in itself worth all we charge—25 cents each; or five for $1; eleven for $2; twenty-six for $5; sixty-five for $10; one hundred, with Premium Silver Hunting-Watch, $15.

On opening the envelope, you see what your Certificate calls for, and it is at your option to send $1 and take the Book and Gift (or any other Book and Gift of the same value) or not. You cannot get less than $1 worth, for there are no Blanks; and you may get a Bible or Album, worth $20 to $50, with a Gift worth much more.

Agents Wanted everywhere, to whom great inducements are offered. Don't fail to send for circulars. Address BOWEN & CO., Publishers, 124 West 5th street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

MAGIC TIME

$3 Observers $3

AT REDUCED PRICES.

A Superior SOLID SILVER CHRONOMETER TIMEPIECE, with a beautiful and ACCURATE CHRONOMETER BALANCE Movement to keep Correct Time for years. Also, the Same Watch, in Small Size for Ladies; Large Size for Gentlemen. Price each only $3. Carefully packed and forwarded (with full warranty) by mail, free, on receipt of price. Wholesale to agents cent, $12 per Case of 6. Address orders to

M. A. NELLE & CO., Importers of Watches, &c.
206 Broadway, New York.

ECONOMY IS WEALTH.

If you want the best fitting, strongest, and most serviceable paper collar ever offered to the public, don't fail to purchase the

PATENT REVERSIBLE PAPER COLLAR

The most Economical Collar ever Invented.

Showing the embossed or printed stitch equally well on both sides.

The following styles are now made:

Patent REVERSIBLE Enameled PAPER COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Bank Note Paper COLLARS.	Patent REVERSIBLE Printed Stitch PAPER COLLARS

To be obtained at Furnishing Goods Dealers throughout the country.

MARCH BROS., PIERCE & Co., Agents,
541-350 Winthrop Square, Boston.

ITCH. (WHEATON'S) ITCH.
Salt Rheum. (OINTMENT.) Salt Rheum.

Will cure the Itch in 48 hours; also cure Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Chilblains, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Price 50 Cents; by sending 60 cents to WEEKS & POTTER, Boston, will be forwarded free by mail. For sale by all Druggists. 541-660

ART NOTICE.

WENDEROTH, TAYLOR & BROWN'S fine MINIATURES, from Life, and Copies from all other pictures, Buttings made by E. T. KELLEY & Co., 792 Broadway. Please examine specimens. 553-3o

WOODWARD'S COUNTRY HOMES.

A NEW PRACTICAL WORK, With 122 Designs and Plans of Houses of moderate cost. Price $1.50, post-paid.

GEO. E. & F. W. WOODWARD, Publishers,
No. 37 Park Row, New York.

Employment for Both Sexes.—Energetic persons of either sex in want of safe, respectable and profitable employment, can procure such by sending their address to J. M. D., Box 153, Brooklyn, N. Y. tfo

Dale's Tooth Powder.

Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., Proprietors. 549-61o

100 Photographs OF FEMALE BEAUTIES sent, securely sealed, for 25 cents. Address B. FOX, 34 Varick street, New York city. 552-350

FLORENCE

LOCK STITCH

SEWING MACHINES.

Highest Premium Gold Medal,

FAIR AMERICAN INSTITUTE, 1866

The best in the World. They have the Reversible Feed Motion. They have a perfect Self-Adjusting Shuttle Tension. They make four separate and distinct Stitches on one and the same machine. They have many advantages over all others.

FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE CO.,
$37.49o 505 Broadway, New York.

THE CAB DRIVERS' STRIKE.

GUS—"Ha! ha! they can't start that car!"
SAM—"I'll bet it!"
GUS—"Oh!"
SAM—"Why, who ever saw such a car-go?"
SAM—"That's it."
SAM—"Ah!"

UNION ADAMS, HOSIER, GLOVER, AND SHIRT MAKER,

No. 637 BROADWAY,

NEW YORK CITY. tfo

POLLAK & SON Meerschaum Manufacturers, 692 Broadway, near 4th St., N. Y., wholesale and retail at reduced rates. Pipes and Holders are cut to order and repaired. All goods warranted genuine. Send stamp for Circular. Pipes $6 to $80 each.

TO CURE

Diseases of the STOMACH and KIDNEYS, RHEUMATISM, DROPSY, GOUT, GRAVEL and Disorders arising from excesses, use

SMOLANDER'S

Extract Buchu.

Price ONE DOLLAR. Agents for the South and West, D. BARNES & CO., New York; and BARNES, WARD & CO., New Orleans. BURLEIGH & ROGERS, Boston, Mass., General Agents. 546-59o

CALENBERG & VAUPEL'S AGRAFFE PIANOS.

101 Bleecker Street, Second Block West of Broadway. Warranted for Six Years. tfo

UNITED STATES PRIZE CONCERT.

TO BE GIVEN AT

Crosby's Opera House, Chicago, Ill.,

MAY 30, 1866.

125,000 Valuable Prizes, valued at $492,575 25, will be presented to Ticket-Holders, including $100,000 in Greenbacks.

NUMBER OF TICKETS ISSUED, 500,000. PRICE, $1 EACH.

This is the greatest inducement ever offered to the public, one ticket out of every four drawing a prize. The following Prizes are a few among the many to be drawn (full list see Circulars):

1st Grand Prize in Greenbacks - -	$30,000
2d Grand Prize in Greenbacks - -	10,000
3d Grand Prize House and Lot - -	10,000
4th Grand Prize in Greenbacks - -	5,000
5th Grand Prize House and Lot - -	5,000
6th Grand Prize in Greenbacks - -	3,000
7th Grand Prize in Greenbacks - -	2,000
8th to 33d Grand Prize G'backs, $1,000 each -	25,000
34th to 66th Grand Prize in Greenbacks, $500 each - - - -	16,000
66th Grand Prize, House and Lot	5,000
67th to 91st Grand Prize House and Lots, $2,000 each - - -	46,000

The Drawing will take place after the Concert in the Stage of the Opera House, where 10,000 persons can witness it. A Committee will be appointed by the audience to superintend the same. All Purchasers and Agents will be supplied with correct lists of drawing as soon as published. Tickets for sale at the principal Hotels, Book and Music Stores in the city, and at our Office, 153 Dearborn street, price $1 each; send by mail on receipt of price and stamp for return postage.

Live Good and Reliable Agents wanted in every city, town and village in the United States, to whom great inducements are offered. References required.

SPECIAL TERMS, OR CLUB RATES.—Any party procuring a club of five or more names for tickets, and forwarding us the money for the same, will be allowed the following commission viz.: We will send—

5 Tickets to one address for - -	$4 50
10 Tickets to one address for - -	9 00
20 Tickets to one address for - -	17 50
50 Tickets to one address for - -	42 50
100 Tickets to one address for - -	85 00

In every case send the Name and Post Office address of each separate Subscriber. Money by Draft, P. O. Order, Express, or Registered Letter, may be sent at our risk.

All communications should be addressed to

WIGGINS, BRADFORD & CO.,

153 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill. Post-office Drawer 6913.

The Proprietors will donate to the Lincoln and Douglas Monument Fund $2,000; also there will be $2,000 reserved from the person drawing the $30,000 prize for the same purpose.

REFERENCES.—Hon. M. H. Wilkinson, ex-Speaker of Minn.; Hon. Geo. Y. Lawrence, M. C. of Penn.; Hon. Alex. Randall, ex-Governor of Wis.; Hon. Wm. Montgomery, ex-M. C. of Penn.; Hon. Major Dan Mace, ex-M. C. of Ind.; Hon. Jos. A. Harsha, Hon. Wm. Kellogg, ex-M. C.'s of Illinois; Hon. Edwin Knox, of Chicago; Hon. C. Graves Smith, of Minn.; Jacob Forsyth, Agent, M. & R. R., Chicago, Ill.; M. Kronberg & Co., Importers of Watches, Chicago; Messrs. Wells & Co., Bankers, Green Bay, Wis.

N.B.—Editors of country papers are authorized to act as our Agents, and they will be allowed full commission on all tickets ordered, either for themselves or other parties who may order through them. Proposals for inserting this advertisement requested.

Vineland Lands. To all wanting Farms.

Large and thriving settlement, mild and healthful climate, 30 miles south of Philadelphia by railroad. Rich soil, which produces large crops, which can now be seen growing. Ten, twenty and fifty acre tracts at from $25 to $50 per acre, payable within four years. Good business openings for manufacturers and others. Churches, schools and good society. It is now the most improving place East or West. Hundreds are settling and building. Present population, 7,000. The beauty with which the place is laid out is unsurpassed. Letters answered. Papers giving full information will be sent free. Address CHAS. R. LANDIS, Vineland Post Office, Landis Township, New Jersey.

From Report of SOLON ROBINSON, Agricultural Editor of the Tribune.

"It is one of the most extensive Fertile tracts, in an almost level position" and suitable condition for pleasant farming, that we know of the side of the Western prairies."

$7 FINE WATCHES $7
AT OLD PRICES.

English Silver Watches	$ 6, $8, $10
Pure Silver Hunting Lepines	$15 Each.
Fine 18 Karat Gold-Plated Watches	$13, $15, $20.
Fancy Compass and Thermometer Watches	$15, $20, $25.
Silver Hunting Levers	$30, $35.
Ladies' Gold Enameled Watches	$20, $25 to $75.
Gold Silver American Levers	$30.

All kinds of Good Watches, low.
CATELY BROTHERS, Importers,
tfo 192 Nassau street, N. Y.

BEAUTY is only skin deep, Golden, Flaxen, and Silken CURLS are produced by the use of Professor LA BARRE'S PARISIEN LE CHEVELUX. One application warrants a set to curl the most straight and stubborn hair of either sex into wavy ringlets or heavy, massive curls. Has been used by the fashionables of Paris and London with the most gratifying results. Does no injury to the hair. Sent, by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars mailed free. Address BERGER, SHUTTS, & CO., Chemists, 285 River Street, Troy, N. Y., sole Agents for the United States. 564-6o

50 PER-CENT SAVED By USING

B. T. BABBITT'S
LABOR-SAVING SOAP.

This Soap is made from clean and pure materials, contains no adulteration of any kind, will not injure the most delicate fabric, and is especially adapted for woolens, which will not shrink if after being washed this soap is used in hard or salt water. It will remove paint, grease, tar and pitch in all kinds. One pound warranted equal to two pounds of ordinary family soap. Directions sent with each bar for making three gallons soft soap from one pound of this Soap. Each bar is wrapped in a label having full directions printed in English and German. Ask your grocer for "B. T. Babbitt's Soap," and take no other.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., New York.

MAKE YOUR OWN SOAP. Fifty per cent. saved by using B. T. BABBITT'S CONCENTRATED POTASH or READY SOAP MAKER. Warranted to be the strength of common Potash, and superior to any other saponifier or lye in the market. Put up in cans of 1 pound, 2 pounds, 3 pounds, 5 pounds, and 13 pounds, with full directions in English and German for making Hard and Soft Soap. One pound will make 15 gallons of Soft Soap. No lime is required. Consumers will find this the cheapest Potash in market.

B. T. BABBITT,
Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington St., New York.

50 PER-CENT SAVED By USING

B. T. BABBITT'S best Medicinal SALERATUS, Pat. "made from common salt." Bread made with this Saleratus contains more nutriment than when made with common salt, water and flour. Nos. 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72 and 74 Washington st., New York.

50 PER CENT. SAVED BY USING B. T. BABBITT'S STAR YEAST POWDER. Light Biscuit or any kind of Cake may be made with this "Yeast Powder" in 15 minutes, when ready for the oven, if no other wheat mush is used. Nos. 64 to 74 Washington street, New York.

$200 PER MONTH and Expenses Paid. Agents Wanted, Male and Female, to introduce a new and wonderful invention. For further information, address, with stamp,

L. N. MATHER & CO., Manufacturers,
tfo Cleveland, Ohio.

STAMMERING

cured by Bates's Appliances. For descriptive pamphlet No., address SIMPSON & CO., 377 West 23d St., N. Y. 609o

INTERESTING TO ALL.

Cholera Preventative!

The undersigned have purchased from Paris, Dr. Tells's wonderful Cholera Preventive. Will be sent to any part of United States, on receipt of $1. Box 910 CLARENCE HENDY & CO.,
552-54o Sole Agents for United States.

For Pubic Exhibition.

Stereoscopicona, Magic Lanterns and Dissolving Views; with pictures of Martyrs, and of every interesting subject, made by JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 224 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Priced and Illustrated Catalogue Sent Gratis. 553-6o

WHISKERS and HAIR forced to grow upon the smoothest face in three, three to five weeks by using DR. SEYBOLD'S RESTAURATEUR. CAUTION.—Beware of the wonderful discovery in modern times, setting upon the Beard and Hair in an almost miraculous manner. It has been used by the Ton of Paris and London with the most flattering success. Nurses of all parentage will be registered, and entire satisfaction is not given in every instance, the money will be cheerfully refunded. Price by mail, sealed and postpaid, $1. Descriptive circulars and testimonials free. Address BERGER, SHUTTS & CO., Chemists, 285 River Street, Troy, N.Y., sole Agents for the United States. 564-6o tfo BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

ECONOMY TO ATTEND TO IT EARLY.

CEDAR CAMPHOR

effectually prevents injury to clothes, etc., from MOTHS, and cheaply enough if you attend to it now. Every druggist has C. C. HARRIS & CHAPMAN, Boston. o

Children's Carriages—every variety. L. F. TERRY, 419 Broadway, opposite St. Nicholas. 549-52o0

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1866 . by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 554 VOL. XXII.] NEW YORK MAY 12, 1866. [PRICE 10 CENTS. $4.00 YEARLY. 10 WEEKS $1.00.

Withdrawal of the French from Mexico —Austria Warned.

We cannot agree in the interpretation put on the recent correspondence between the American and French Governments concerning Mexico, which has been accepted by a large part of the press, as telegraphed from Washington. "Official announcement of the evacuation of Mexico by the French" is a rather strong way of stating that the French Government has assured our own as Mr. Drouyn de Lhuys does in a letter of the date of April 5th, that "The Emperor has decided that the French troops shall evacuate Mexico in three detachments, the first being intended to depart in the month of November, 1866; the second, in March, 1867, and the third, in November, 1867"—a year and a half from this time.

Whatever pretext may be assigned for this protraction of the French occupation, no one can be deceived as to what it means. It is clear to the meanest apprehension that it is

THE FREIGHT DEPOT OF THE PANAMA RAILROAD, PREVIOUS TO THE EXPLOSION OF APRIL 3.

THE APPEARANCE OF THE DEPOT IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE EXPLOSION.

THE PANAMA RAILROAD FREIGHT DEPOT, ASPINWALL.—WORKMEN REMOVING THE DEBRIS.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY J. MARTINEZ, ASPINWALL.—SEE PAGE 116

thus designed to give time for Maximilian to obtain men from other sources to replace the French troops, while France may continue, as heretofore, to supply the means, quite as important as men, to keep up the so-called empire.

It would have been interesting if the French Minister, in announcing the proposed evacuation, had told us frankly what "arrangements" have been made between his master and Maximilian, in view of the contemplated withdrawal. It is not to be supposed that France has given up the "indemnities" so ostentatiously put forward as one of the grounds of her intervention in Mexico; nor is it to be supposed that she has failed to secure some material and ample guarantee for the money she has spent and the loans to Maximilian which the Government has guaranteed. It is not improbable that rumor speaks true, when it says that France has obtained a mortgage on some portions of Mexican territory, and a lien upon the revenues of certain ports, where her agents will remain, supported by the French Foreign Legion, which is under a contract with Maximilian for six years. If so, the evacuation is an empty term—a trick to quiet the people of the United States. And that it is so, appears from facts not to be overlooked.

Simultaneously with the settlement of the arrangement between France and Maximilian, another arrangement, taking the name of treaty or convention, was made between Maximilian and his brother of Austria, which was signed on the 15th of March. Under it, 6,000 Austrian troops are to be supplied to the so-called Mexican Emperor this year. The money for fitting out and dispatching these troops, the Vienna papers tell us openly, had been secured, in Paris, two months before. Now, as Mexico notoriously could not raise a cent on her own responsibility, it follows that this money has been advanced by France, or under her guarantee!

The evacuation, then, amounts to this: the substitution by France of Austrian troops in Mexico instead of her own—France, as before, sustaining, at last, for the purpose of carrying out her original intent of obtaining "indemnities" through a mortgage on the country, and of founding an Empire as a counterpoise to the United States and as a check on Republicanism.

In the dispatch from Washington, we are told, in capital letters, that "France accepts the principle of neutrality as defined by the United States." It should have said, As defined by Mr. Seward, in the letter to which that of the French Minister, conveying the terms of the evacuation, is a reply. This letter has all the prolixity of Mr. Seward's dispatches, and loses much of its force by the way in which the points are pen-downed and elaborated. It is nevertheless, the ablest document that has thus far appeared from his pen, and as it is the "principle of non-intervention," as defined in this letter, that the French Government has accepted, or appeared to accept, it is important to ascertain what it is, and how far it has, in reality, been accepted.

In the first place, in a previous letter of the French Minister, he says that the Emperor is striving to make with Maximilian "arrangements which, by satisfying our [French] hopes and interests, will permit us to consider at an end the service of our army in Mexico. We fall back on that moment upon the principle of non-intervention, and from that moment accept it as a rule of conduct. Our interest, no less than our honor, commands us to claim from all, the uniform application of it. Trusting the speech of royalty which animates the Cabinet at Washington, we expect from it the assurance that the American people will themselves conform to the law which they invoke by observing in regard to Mexico a strict neutrality."

In reply to this particular passage, Mr. Seward writes:

"The United States have not claimed, and they do not desire to insist, what arrangements the Emperor may make for the establishment of a system of institutions for Mexico. It would be on our part an act of intervention to take cognizance of them. We adhere to our position that the war in question has become a political war between France and the Republic of Mexico, injurious and dangerous to the United States, and to the republican cause in Mexico. We ask only that in this sense and character it may be brought to an end. It would be unfriendly on the part of the United States to suppose that, in desiring or pursuing preliminary arrangements, the Emperor contemplates the establishment in Mexico, before withdrawing his forces, of the very institutions which are against the material prosperity of France, and which against his intervention by the United States. It would be still more unfriendly to suppose that the Emperor that he accepts the United States' principle of non-intervention only as a means to overthrow republican institutions. On the contrary, we understand him to be accepting it as the immediate means of withdrawing from and the service of the republic of Mexico, to which that service is justly due, and will look without stipulation or condition on each act upon the ground of non-intervention, on which he is henceforth agreed with the United States. We cannot understand his right of the United States that we ourselves will abide by our own principles of non-intervention in any other sense than as the expression the people of Mexico shall have reached that, in the operation, effects and from but should be free from the operation, effects and consequences of any political and military interference. We will ourselves respect their self-established sovereignty and independence. In this view of the subject, we can consider his appeal pertinent to our case, and we are willing to rely in this respect, we may, upon the Emperor frankly. He knows the form and character of this Government. The nation can be found only by treating which have the concurrence of the President and two-thirds of the Senate. A formal treaty would be objectionable, as unnecessary, except as a disavowal of bad faith on our part, to disarm suspicion in regard to a matter concerning which we have given no cause for questioning our loyalty, or rise such a treaty would be refused upon the ground that the application for it by the Emperor of France was unhappily a suggestion of unfriendliness or unfriendly reservation, or purpose on his part, in withdrawing from Mexico. Diplomatic assurances, given by the President in behalf of the nation, can at best be but the expressions of confident expectations on his part, and the personal administration, ever changing in consequence and adaptation to the national will, does not misunderstand the settled principles and policy of the Government. Explicit assurances, therefore, are made by the President in any case wherein it would be useful for any reason, speculative, political, or of public policy by the treaty-making power of the Government, to declare or announce negotiations.

"With these explanations I proceed to say that, in the opinion of the President, France need not the moment delay her promised withdrawal of military forces from Mexico, and her practical adoption of non-intervention into full and complete practice in regard to Mexico, through any apprehension that the United States will prove unfaithful to the principles and policy of non-intervention which they have long been and duty to maintain in this now very heightened controversy. The power of this Government, from the beginning, is a guarantee to all nations of the respect of American people for the sovereignty of the people in every other state. We received the instruction from Washington to act against slavery in our early intercourse even with France. The same principle and practice has been adhered to throughout all our own statesmen, interpreted by all our jurists, maintained by all our Governments, and sustained by every practical dissent, on all occasions, by the American people. It is, in reality, the chief element of foreign intercourse in our history."

To all this M. Drouyn de L'huys answers briefly:

"We never hesitate to offer to our friends the explanation they ask from us, and we hasten to give to the Government of Washington all those which may enlighten it on the purposes we have in view. We have said to it at the same time that the certainty of seeing, at the end of a short and determined delay, the question of Mexico settled by the country, after our departure, a prey to a new intervention, would hasten the moment when it would be possible for us, without compromising the interests which we have to defend, to withdraw our troops, and put an end to an occupation the duration of which we are anxious to shorten as much as possible. In his dispatch of the 11th of February last, Mr. Seward has insisted on his part on the principle that out of the United States has contracted, during the whole course of its history, and the present moment which it receives from Washington, by practicing invariably the principle of non-intervention. It is, then, with pleasure that I mention the appreciation that it should show itself under the head in which may concern the United States, we have the assurance with entire confidence. We find therein a new motive to hasten sooner or later the execution of measures intended to prepare for the return of our troops."

To know whether the tardy withdrawal of French troops from Mexico means anything practically, we must know what the arrangements of the French Government with Maximilian are. If France is to acquire territory in certain contingencies, or is empowered to send troops to Mexico, or occupy ports, or collect revenues in certain contingencies, while the United States is bound to look on, in observance of its pledge of neutrality (after having disclaimed even the right to know what the aforesaid arrangements are), then we are bound ourselves and left France free. If the "arrangement" binds France to pay, transport, or support other mercenaries than her own are withdrawn (and of an "arrangement" unknown to us), then our pledge of neutrality is a self-imposed fetter, while France is free to follow the dictates of "her interests and honor."

Does Louis Napoleon think, when he binds us to observe "strict neutrality," as a condition to his abandoning an established line of invasion, that it becomes a part of our duty to passively permit him to replace his troops with Austrians, paid out of his exchequer or otherwise? If so, this is a still deadlier blow. The principal robber cannot delegate to a subordinate the consummation of a burglary, while giving to the policeman on his beat the right to steal an more, on condition that the policeman will maintain strict neutrality between the accomplice and the victim! Mr. Seward is not to be caught in a worldling, and has given the world to understand that our "neutrality" as between France and Mexico, or between the big ruffian and his victim, is not to be understood to be a concession to all little villains to come in and do their will on Mexico. That France intended to bind us up in such a manner, is clear enough from the terms of the dispatch, and by nothing of the deductions to be drawn from Napoleonic antecedents.

But, as we have said, if France intended to have us thus tricked, we have no doubt she will find out her error in the dispatches to our Minister in Austria, wherein he is told that he "cannot be too earnest or emphatic in expressing to the Court of Mexico, that troops from Austria to Mexico, inasmuch as "the United States cannot regard with unconcern a proceeding which is in effect to reinforce the military power with the invaders of Mexico to subvert the domestic Government of the Republic, and build up foreign imperial institutions."

In a later dispatch Mr. Seward instructs Mr. Motley to represent to Austria "that in the event of hostilities being carried on hereafter in Mexico by the troops of Austria, under the command or with the sanction of the Government of Vienna, the United States will feel themselves at liberty to regard those hostilities as constituting a state of war by Austria against the Republic of Mexico. And in regard to such a war, waged at this time, and under existing circumstances, the United States could not engage to remain as silent or NEUTRAL spectators."

This is explicit. Austria is warned that if she attempts to interfere in Mexico, or send more troops there, the United States will not remain neutral, but will interfere in behalf of Mexico. Austrian troops cannot come in as the French troops go out, except at hazard of war with the United States. Nor can Austria be allowed to be the cat's-paw of Louis Napoleon, for the purpose of pulling his chestnuts out of the Mexican fire. That master of the art of deception will now perceive that he has met a tougher set than the United States in a one-sided neutrality, and that he cannot do indirectly that which he has disclaimed the intention of doing directly.

We shall not be surprised to learn, when Mr. Seward's dispatches to Austria reach Paris, that the Emperor will regard them as incompatible with the position of neutrality, and revoke his order for the evacuation of Mexico. Nothing but the obvious hopelessness of the success of his Mexican scheme will induce him to submit to the humiliation of a diplomatic defeat.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.
537 Pearl Street, New York.

NEW YORK, MAY 12, 1866.

All Communications, Books for Review, etc., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 537 Pearl street, New York.

NOTICE.—We have no travelling agents. All persons representing themselves to be such are impostors.

Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

We congratulate our readers upon the passage of the bill establishing the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. That such an association of humane individuals was necessary to give energy and vitality to laws long since enacted, but which slumbered on the statute book, no one could deny whose eyes and ears were not closed to the distressing scenes of cruelty daily disheartening our streets. By this Act, the powers of the police are placed at the disposal of the society, and a summary jurisdiction of any police magistrate is therefore prompt justice to offenders. We take a pride in believing that by our frequent exposures of the wanton cruelties inflicted on the dumb animals that contribute to our comfort and necessities, we have in some measure been instrumental in awakening attention to this great evil, and we are sure the public will learn with pleasure that now the means of its suppression are simple and within the reach of every one.

The names of the gentlemen who are incorporated by the Act are a sufficient guarantee that the rights of the poor will be preserved, while the strictest justice is measured out to those who have with impunity so long brought disgrace on our civilization. The by-laws of the society will shortly be published, and be put in the hands of all who choose to aid in the good work. No new laws are needed. Those at present in existence are ample enough, if the will power to enforce them is given. So let the outragers of horses look to themselves. There are those now to watch you, who do not want your money, and are independent of your censures. You shall not, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, force your horses to drag one passenger more than your vehicles have been for. You shall not load your street-cars with 60 passengers, when 30 are as many as your poor beasts can draw with any regard to mercy. You shall not overcrowd, for profit, your coal trucks to within the bounds of moderation. Look to it, drivers of carriages, public or private, that your cruel bushes be less seldom heard. There are those around you now who have the means of summarily teaching you the mercy which hitherto you have not known, or have despised.

We trust the power of the society will not stop at the repression of these too common cruelties. There are others, more difficult to reach, which are not less abhorrent to all right feeling. If any future attempts are made to drive a horse 20 miles within an hour, we invoke the assistance of the society to punish all concerned in so brutal a sport. Let the driver of Dexter, who of late has perished miserably in the trial. The sports by which a debased portion of our population amuse themselves, carried on in obscure haunts and hidden from the light of day—cock-fighting, dog-fighting, bear-baiting, and others of like character—will, we earnestly hope, be crushed by the strong hand of the law, and no longer will be called to attack in the Roas pavement in Broadway, the cause of so much suffering to horse-flesh. It may be a forced construction of powers to punish cruelty that they may be used to abolish the causes that lead to it. It is one thing to fine a man for inhuman use of a whip, but a totally different thing to deprive him of his whip altogether. Cruelty is one result of deficient education, or of indifference, or misdirected keenness of disposition. This society has to deal with facts or results as it finds them, but the function of education, or prevention of wrong by instilling right principles, is a different part of the social system, and the two must not be confounded. Both work to obtain the same end, but begin at opposite sides, and use essentially different tools. We wish the society every success, and would aid it by all the means in our power; and if we venture a doubt whether its "prevention of cruelty to animals" will bear so wide a construction as to authorize their putting an end to every means or instrument of suffering, it is not from any desire to limit their sphere of usefulness, but rather from a fear that they may undertake too wide a range, and seek to achieve undeniable good by undesirable means.

In another column we give the text of the Act, and the laws which it will rewivify, and our country readers will not fail to observe that the provisions of the Act extend over the whole State.

The society was organized on the 26th of April, by the appointment of the following officers: President, Henry Bergh; Vice-Presidents, Hon. J. T. Hoffman, Rev. H. W. Bellows, Peter Cooper, George Bancroft, Hon. C. P. Daly, G. T. Trimble, W. H. Aspinwall, Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts, and A. T. Stewart; Secretary, W. C. H. Waddell; Treasurer, W. McMurray; Executive Committee, James T. Brady, R. B. Ruggles, J. D. Wolfe, H. Grinnell, Ang. Belmont, J. J. Cisco, Simeon Draper, Gen. D. Butterfield, Frank Leslie, T. C. Acton, John A. Kensing, W. M. Webb, W. H. C. Waddell, C. Addonis, and Joseph F. Beach.

The position taken in our article of last week as to the right of our people to sell arms and munitions of war to belligerents, has been sustained by the Attorney-General of the United States, in a decision under an order from Gen. McDowell, commanding the Military Department of California. In this order Gen. McDowell prohibited the exportation of arms and munitions of war, by way of the frontier, into Mexico. On remonstrance from the Mexican Minister, the order was brought before Attorney-General Speed, who pronounces that the General had no right to issue such an order, and that it is a principle that merchants may lawfully sell at home to belligerent purchasers, or carry themselves to the belligerent power, contraband articles, subject to the rights of seizure in transitu. The right of the neutral to transport, and the hostile power to seize, are existing rights, and neither party can be arrested on the other with a criminal act. This is the view taken by Chancellor Kent.

THE spring has come, and the eagles in the Central Park are as noisy as ever, and a part of them in good condition and thoroughly independent. They are fellows, however, we fear, unable to go upon their perch, and covered with all manner of unclean things. The house, as the French say, for whose health our climate is unfavorable. Indeed, it is said, that as far south as Mexico on this continent, the bald eagle abounds. French eagle has been a failure. The American eagle also is subject to sickness in this climate. Matters are now improving, and with them at first they eat and drink well, and begin to scream as if to the manor born. This, it is said, attracts the attention of every passing bird to the locality of scent, and the result of this discovery is, that the stranger "gets fits," and has to be sent home; or dies, being buried with the usual ceremony. The three birds in the Central Park merit your sympathy and a passport.

SIR MORTON PETO is about to publish a book in London on the "Resources and Prospects of America, ascertained during a visit to the United States in the Autumn." There is no doubt that Sir Morton will do ample justice to his subject and to those who have so kindly entertained him during their country. He was a great favorite with the people here, and though his visit was brief, he accumulated a very extensive stock of knowledge.

GOV. SHARKEY, of Mississippi, in his examination before the Reconstruction Committee of Congress, gave it as his opinion that the negroes of that State would only largely decrease during the war, but have decreased since, and that they will continue to decrease to extinction. He thinks that there are not more than as many blacks now in the State as there were slaves before the war. The census of 1860 shows there were then 436,000 slaves in Mississippi, and it is hard to believe that 218,000 have disappeared, even including the considerable number who left the State during the war. We cannot assign no reason for this decrease, but merely aware the fact. If it be one, it furnishes a subject for the philosophers. The negroes of Peru have rapidly decreased since their emancipation, but the causes are there obvious, and are such as do not exist with us.

A BILL has passed the House of Representatives directing the issue of five cent pieces, to be composed of copper and nickle, and prohibiting the issue of any more "fractional currency" under the denomination of ten cents. This new coin will be just twice the amount of one dollar. The penalties against counterfeiting it are the same as against counterfeiting other Government coin.

A MEMPHIS paper recently expressed itself very violently against an article in a New York magazine on Jeff. Davis. It declares itself unable to express its indignation at the author, who "flaunts his dirty hoofs in the face" of the great state prisoner, and who is a "hired scribbler" and "penny-a-liner." The "wretched author," it turns out, is Gen. Jordan, who was connected with the Secret War Department, and Beauregard's Chief of Staff!

The following table exhibits the deaths from cholera in the city of New York, during what are known as "the cholera years":

	Deaths.	Native.	Foreign.
1832	3,515	1,027	2,488
1834	971	393	578
1849	5,071	1,627	3,444
1854	2,509	946	1,563
Total	12,064	3,561	8,093

The subjoined lament of the London Spectator might be taken up by some American Jeremiah. It says:

"What with authors, publishers, and the kind of guild into which literary men have a tendency to form themselves, existing men have quite enough to look after than too severe. There ought to be theatrical criticism left to London, very judicial criticism, and, but for the fight soldiers are now making, there would soon be no critique at all to make. A nation, it appears, may not to be fed, nor to be entertained, and prose literature is to be analyzed, but we shall want an Index Expurgatorius merely to keep out rubbish."

Prof. Joseph Henry, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, and Vice-President of the "National Academy of Sciences" (if anybody knows what both of that is), has transmitted to Congress a report on "weights, measures and coinage," in which it is admitted that a reform in our present system is found to be "exceedingly desirable." The conclusion thus far is worthy of the classic Bunsby. We quite agree with Prof. Henry, that the entire adoption of "the French metrical system" would neither be desirable or easy, and that England and the United States, being by nature far more to do with matters of this kind than the "regenerators" of Mexico, might readily agree upon a system which should recommend itself to common unit, and a system, which "in time would probably become universal."

The Government on the subject of the "National Academy of Sciences"—illustrious corporation!—nevertheless, "go in" for the Gallic arrangement "grammes, milligrammes, centigrammes, and "centos" and "kilos," and all that outlandish sort of stuff. But then what could be expected from the "Smithsonian Academy of Sciences?" Some such insignificant affair as the "Franklin Institute" might produce a rational and practical suggestion, but the "National Academy of Sciences!" Never!

We do not look to Texas any more than to Alabama for political wisdom among its legislators. Just imagine a law-giver asserting (whether with quid in cheek and bowie-knife in hand, we are not informed) that "the school system of New England is a magnificent failure!" And that, too, with George W. Kendall, the most enterprising citizen, the most active, and most successful journalist of Texas—a graduate of a common school in Vermont!

BOOK NOTICES.

The American News Company have just published "The Naval Lieutenant," a charming nautical romance. The author is one of F. S. Arundel's best productions, and is full of romantic sensations.

The Chicago Illustrated—a very promising publication, before us—has some excellent illustrations of that city. The whole appearance of the journal is very creditable to the Western artist.

A good portrait of Daniel S. Dickinson is found in the December number of the American Phrenological Journal. The number is one of uncommon interest, and replete with instructive information.

The Illustrated Monthly, for May, is an interesting number, and contains, among several other articles of average merit, a poetical elucidation in the yellow-plush style.

AUSTRIA AND MEXICO.

Letter from Mr. Seward to Mr. Motley.

Department of State, }
Washington, April 16, 1866. }

SIR—I have had the honor to receive your despatch of the 27th of March (No. 158), which brings the important announcement that a treaty called a "Mutual Supplementary Convention" was ratified on the 15th of that month by the Emperor of Austria and Prince Maximilian, who claims to be an Emperor in Mexico. You inform me that it is expected that about 1,000 volunteers will be shipped under the treaty from Trieste to Vera Cruz in June, and that at least as many more will be shipped in the autumn. I have heretofore given you the instruction to ask for explanations, frank and candid, calculated to inform the Government of Austria that the levying of military expeditions to be sent under such an arrangement as the one which seems now to have been consummated would be regarded with serious concern by the United States. The subject has now been further considered in connection with the official information thus recently received.

The time seems to be arrived when the attitude of this Government in relation to Mexican affairs should be more clearly defined and distinctly made known to the Emperor of Austria and all other Powers whom it may directly concern. The United States, for reasons which seem to them to be just, and to have their foundations in the laws of nations, maintain that the domestic Republican Government with which they are on relations of friendly communication, is the only legitimate Government existing in Mexico; that a war has for a period of several years been waged against that Republic by the Government of France, which was begun with a disclaimer of all political or dynastic designs; that that war has subsequently taken upon itself and now distinctly wears the character of an armed intervention to overthrow that domestic Government, and to erect on its ruins a European dependency, to be occupied by military force. The United States, in view of the character of their own political institutions, their proximity and intimate relations toward Mexico, and their just influence in the political affairs of the American continent, cannot consent to the accomplishment of that purpose by the means employed. The United States have, therefore, addressed themselves, as you know, to the Government of the Emperor of France, and have asked that its military forces engaged in that unjustifiable political invasion may decide to withdraw from it, and be withdrawn from the country.

It is not necessary to enter into details on this subject, which was fully considered by the Congress of the Government of France, in herewith transmitted for your special information. These views have not induced the true situation of the question. It will also enable you to satisfy the Government of Austria that the United States must be no less opposed to military intervention for political objects hereafter to be made by the Government of Austria than they are opposed to any further intervention of the same character by the country to which France. You will, therefore, act as an early a day as may be convenient, first in the case in the foregoing manner to the attention of the Imperial Royal Government of Austria.

You are authorized to state that the United States distinctly desire that Austria, Prussia and Russia expedient to come up on the same ground of non-intervention in the affairs of Mexico which is taken by the United States, and to which they have invited France. You will communicate a copy of this despatch to the Government to this proposition. This Government could not but regard as a matter of serious concern the despatch of any troops from Austria for Mexico, while the subject which you are thus directed to bring before the Austrian Government remains under consideration. I am, sir, your obedient servant, WM. H. SEWARD.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

The following are the Laws, already enacted, as well as

THE ACT

To Incorporate the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals:

Section 1. That Hamilton Fish, Henry Grinnell, J. J. Astor, jr., George Bancroft, Shepherd Knapp, Prof. Howard Potter, Wm. A. Duer, Marshall O. Roberts, Brown, Horatio Potter, Thomas H. Taylor, Erastus Corning, Peter Cooper, Dr. Henry W. Bellows, Dr. Wm. Trimble, John D. Wolfe, Henry W. Bellows, Peter Cooper, Robert L. Stuart, Charles Lanman, John Jay, Isaac Bell, Joseph Lapsley, John Van Buren, Hamilton Fish, Daniel Parish, John J. Cisco, Oakley Hall, Rob. McCloskey, Wm. Curtis Noyes, Edward G. Stock, Horace Greeley, Samuel B. Ruggles, Wm. Kent, Samuel Osgood, Theodore Roosevelt, Richmond, Wm. H. Webb, James Gallatin, Harper Brothers, James Lenox, Frederick A. Y. T. Schuyler, Henry Ward Beecher, D. C. Kingsland, James W. Gerard, Joseph F. Beach, Geo. T. Strong, Robert Ray, Wm. Cullen Bryant, Archibald Russell, Benj. R. Winthrop, John A. Kennedy, Thomas Kinnicutt, Geo. W. Blunt, Horace Anderson, Jos. Griswold, Simeon Draper, Robert L. Stuart, Andrew Warner, Wm. Allen Butler, Jas. M. Halsted, Lemuel Bangs, Jas. Lenox, Robert Lenox Kennedy, A. C. Kingsland, E. A. Washburn, M. S. Beach, John D. Jones, Peter Leslie, Wm. Leggett, Wm. H. Aspinwall, Chas. A. Bristed, Thos. C. Acton, Wm. McMurray, James Roosevelt, Geo. W. Ruggles, Wm. Curtis, all of the city of New York, and such other persons as may be associated with them, in conformity with this act, and their successors, are hereby constituted and created a body corporate, by the name of "The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals."

Section 2. The said corporation shall consist of a President, ten Vice-Presidents, one Secretary, one Treasurer, an Executive Committee of fifteen members, and such officers as shall from time to time seem necessary to the society.

3. The foregoing officers shall be chosen among the members of the said society.

4. A library may be created for the use of the society.

5. The said society shall have power to make rules of its members, for the government of the same, for the collecting and disbursing and keeping of the moneys, and for the general regulation and management of its affairs, provided the same shall not be contrary to nor inconsistent with the laws of the State or of the United States, and the same when made and adopted at a regular meeting, shall, until modified or rescinded, be equally binding as the act upon the society and its officers and members.

6. The said society shall not, in its corporate capacity, hold real estate exceeding in value, at any one time, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars.

7. The police force of the city of New York, as well as of all other towns, villages and municipalities in the state, shall, on occasion may require, aid the society, its members or officers, in the enforcement of the laws now in force or may hereafter be enacted for the protection of dumb animals.

8. One half of the fines collected through the instrumentality of the said society, in the county of New York, shall be paid over, when collected, to the said society, for the use of the same.

9. The powers of the said corporation shall cease and determine if the same shall not be organized within two years from the passage of this act.

10. This act shall take effect immediately.

Transportation of Animals by Railroads.

1. No railroad company in this State, in the carrying and transportation of cattle, sheep, or swine, shall confine the same in one car for a longer period than twenty-four consecutive hours without supplying food, water or other causes, without unloading for rest, water and feeding, for a period of at least five consecutive hours, and shall not receive or reload cattle, sheep, or swine from other railroads or other cars for a longer period of time than consecutive hours immediately preceding such loading or reloading, without unloading the same for rest for the ten hours.

2. Any railroad company which shall violate any provision of this act shall, for each and every such violation, forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than one nor more than one hundred dollars, to be sued for and collected in any court of competent jurisdiction in any county in which any of the people of the State of New York, one-half of the penalty when collected, to be for the use of the people, and the balance to the county in which the penalty shall be collected.

3. This act shall take effect immediately.

Cruel Treatment of Animals.

Every person who shall, by his act or neglect, willfully and cruelly beat, wound, torture, mutilate, or cruelly treat any horse, mule, ox, cattle, sheep, or other animal, whether belonging to himself or to another person, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor; and every owner, driver, or keeper of any such horse, mule, ox, cattle, sheep, or other animal, who shall cruelly overdrive, overload, overwork, or unnecessarily torture, or deprive of necessary food or drink, or shall unnecessarily fail to provide proper shelter for any such animal, or cruelly abandon any such animal, or cause the same to be done, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor; and every person who shall be convicted of any misdemeanor, for a second offense committed within one year after the first conviction, shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, or county jail, or by fine not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Cock-Fighting.

Every person who shall set on foot, or instigate, or encourage, or promote, or be connected directly as a witness, principal, or judge, or do any act toward the furtherance of any cock-fighting, bull-baiting, or fighting between persons with their fists commonly called a prize fight, or fighting between animals of any description, as dogs, or bulls, or bears, or between dogs and rats, or dogs and badgers, or any other animals, or shall be present as a spectator at any such fighting, baiting, or combat, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, or county jail, for a term not less than ten days, nor exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars.

Duty of Magistrates.

Section 58. Upon complaint under oath that any offense is about being committed, shall issue warrant to any officer of the county, to proceed and prevent the same; and in case of a breach of the civil peace of the county, and arrest the persons, who shall give bond in $1,000 that he will not for one year offend in like manner.

The Health Board.

Section 44. Cattle shall not be bound or tied by their legs when carried, nor shall fluid freely within the vehicle which carries them.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Domestic—The Columbus (Miss.) Index complains that recently in that city "several freedwomen, dressed in the latest style, walked up to their carriages before some of our principal stores, and called the clerks to bring out goods for their inspection."

—A recent issue of the Mendota Post has the following: "Last week, in counting the beans of the rising sun fell upon the inflated corpse of Tommy Cooke, a thief and burglar, who escaped from the jail. He was taken off the vengeance of the Vigilantes around his head, and bearing on a label the single legend, 'Pickpocket.'"

—It is related by the Carson Appeal that the Lieutenant-Governor of Nevada is in jail as an inmate of the Prison, having received a lot of new uniform clothing for the convicts, and tried it on with their duds. He was immediately apprehended, taken before a justice of the peace, and sent to prison on an escaped convict.

—On Virginia River, Arizona, 20 miles above the mouth of the Colorado, is a belt of grape rock all, but feet high, sparkling and clear as crystal.

—The Sacramento Union has a report of deaths in San Francisco, accordion to the Bulletin of that city, exhibits a smaller rate of mortality than can be shown by any other city in the United States.

—A letter from Montana, in the Walla Walla Statesman, says that the Indians are likely to join the meeting of treaties sold, and for the next month, by keeping a good look out, the settlers will be able to prevent any of them from getting away.

—The number of rations issued to Arkansas by the Freedmen's Bureau to Whites and Blacks, respectively, during the first quarter of the current year, was as follows:

Month.	To Whites.	To Blacks.
January, 1866	47,920	11,696
February	44,033	9,817
March	103,291	31,445
Total	195,243	52,958

—A correspondent writes from Nebraska, advises for a "first-rate, up-to, A No. 1 housemaid," and adds the following: "Nebraska is a good place for young ladies, like needle-work, visiting and entertaining company will be done by the lady of the house."

—The San Francisco (Cal.) Scientific Press says the rain fall on that city from September 1, 1865, to March 1, 1866, was 19.64 inches. The fall in Nevada for the same period was 39.92 inches. This is about the usual proportion. Nevada is situated on the east side of Sierra Nevada, and the middle western slope of the Sierra Nevada.

—On Saturday, the 3d of June, the Central Park will become open for the first entertainments will be given by order of the Park Commissioners, under the charge of Mr. Ullmann.

—A recent issue of the Montana Radicator has an account of the most extensive mercury mine in that section. It says: "The evidence adduced two weeks ago as to the existence of a vein of period of the right kind, in an extraordinary issue of monstrous proportions, by the Messrs. Hamilton, who have sold to the claim of Dr. Parks in East Chance Gulch, opposite the end of Broad street. The vein is now developed to a depth of 30 feet, a discovery of as very rich, in a somewhat decomposed state, from 12 to 18 inches in width, and can be traced for measures 19 inches; and in a distance of 6 inches it widens to 3 feet. The ore is of the character of the Almaden Rory. This rust, which must have belonged to the Spanish Government, and was adopted at the Spanish up the gulch than where the mine lay, and some a foot in width, the red rock, and 17 feet from the surface of the ground."

—The shipments of cotton from this port, exclusively of those to Mexico, ending April 14th, were to the unusually heavy amount of 11,150 bales, of the cotton 1,000 bales were sent to Liverpool, 10,150 to Havre, 486 bales, valued at $9,210,472; to Hamburg, 1,101 bales, valued at $20,919; to Bremen, 1,000 bales, valued at $120,360; to Havre, 485 bales, valued at $9,210; and to Bremen, 1,000 bales, valued at $19,000. The total of the preceding week's exports was 20,110 bales, or a total for the season of 1,000,000 bales. Of the average of 3,507 bales per week. The total number of bales, or an average of 3,507 bales per week. The total number of bales, or an average of 3,507 bales per week. Sept. 1, 1865, there have been received at this port 1,491 bales, or a total for the season of 21,571 bales; and exported from the port, 1,000 bales, or an average of 1,000 bales a week for the season. On the basis of even the reduced average value of 400 bales exported during the week, the shipments of cotton from this port in the 28 weeks since September 1, 1865, have been equal to nearly $10,000,000.

—About a month ago a lady named Davis died in Killingly, Conn., and was buried. The body was not buried, and the next day it was ascertained that the coffin had been opened and the corpse carried off. Last week the body was returned in a new coffin; and the remains of the lady who had been buried in the old coffin were found to be those of a man, who was originally interred. Upon examination, the body was found to be that of a man, and covered with a thin coating of ice. The diseased limb had been cut several inches above the knee, and the stump was bandaged. The body was simply wrapped in a sheet. During the week Mr. Jesse Davis, husband, visited and superintended the burial. Mr. Davis, who is a well-to-do farmer, stoutly maintains that the body was that of his wife, and that she died of a very unusual and complicated disease, he had deemed it best not to submit the remains for medical science to justify the disinterment of the body and the examination of the remains. The theory of the writer says that having made the examination, he had learned the body was not that of Mrs. Davis, and that not intering it, on the ground that the earth was frozen so deep as to render it impossible.

—The Sussex (N. J.) Register relates a singular piece of natural history which is at this date. It is of a Mr. Lorenzo Demarest, who summoned his partner to his house, and after a few preliminary remarks, opened with the further statement that the night previous his house, with the exception of himself and family, was fired and burned him, and drew his cold hand over his breast and face, and then exclaimed, "Thank God, I have saved his father's hand not taken). "That," said he, "means that I have saved my property." He then said that he wanted his body conveyed to a certain place for interment. He also directed that a coroner be not summoned after his decease, and that great care should be taken that he be buried. At midnight of the same day the aging he was found dead in his bed.

—The Leavenworth (Kansas, Kansas, spread to their seat for all to build a church, promising to soon as he gets to found a home for their benefit in a few years. The appeal says: "One hundred dollars may be a large sum to you, but in the population of our side is very great, for; for it takes one priest of such things as we have to offer the obligation. The settlers will be gainers, as they will have the largest to call masses or any other service by paying only one the sum of $100."

—A letter from San Antonio, Texas, says the Government cousels, the descendants of the herd imported some 10 years ago from Egypt, excite the curiosity of strangers. They number about 90, are all mules and asses, some still unweaned. Only seven of the males are alive.

—At a dancing match in Chicago, recently, a burnt black girl danced after hours consecutively, when her partner acknowledged himself fairly beaten and very much used up. Another took six hours, and the prize was quietly won to breakfast.

—The boys of Norfolk are stimulated into the Cross Topping in that city at the price of one ham-cut a piece. The animals are said to be the highly relished food of the locus.

—The editor of a paper published in the mountains of California tells of gathering wild flowers in the morning and washing them soon in the evening.

—The Paris (California) Times says that the great last silver mine of Monterey has been discovered. It is a wide belt or rich ore, 12 miles long!

—A secret was threw a piece of railroad iron into the window of a passenger train, near Mobile, a few days ago, by which means he stole the pocketbooks, captured, and dragged after the most approved patriarchal fashion.

—It is estimated that the whole oil territory of Pennsylvania will produce 10,000,000 barrels of crude ago for $200,000, and now it is held to be worth $20,000,000 at the wells.

—The people of East Tennessee, disgusted by the conduct of the "bolting" members of the State Convention, and balancing that United and Western Tennessee have interests totally distinct from each other, are advocating the separation of a division of the State.

—A girl, not 14 years of age, died recently in Smithfield, R. I., from an overdose of opium, which she had been taking in large quantities for a series of weeks to stop the pain of consumption.

—The death of a Mormon bishop is thus announced in a Salt Lake paper: "He was 97 years old, leaves an interesting family of 11 wives and 47 small children to mourn his death."

—Quartermaster-General Meigs is contemplating the removal of the remains of Union soldiers from the battlefields of Virginia, Maryland, and other battlefields of the rebellion, along the line of fields re-conferences of the rebellion, along the line of the Potomac, from Washington to Alexandria to the Rappahannock Crossing. The remains will be disinterred, placed in metallic cemetery, and buried in stone vaults, under ground, over which cairns or pyramids of stone are to be erected.

—Of 9,247 places where interesting inquires and bear are sold in the city and suburbs of London up to the last report of the Metropolitan Police Board, only 1,344 were licensed. The sale of beer and spirits goes without license from the city through the internal revenue collectors of the United States, who have all to pay the tax due the general government. There remains unaccounted for 7,903 establishments. The revenue desires who honestly pay their license fee.

Foreign.—A recent letter from Rome states: "The winter has been very mild and agreeable. Hitherto still the weather. Rome was never so crowded as at present. Every hotel is full, and many are come here from the United States."

—The following table corrected to the present date) gives, in square feet, the amount of space allotted to each nation in the Paris Parisian Wyatt's Fair:

France and French Colonies	459,432
Great Britain and Dependencies	325,781
Prussia	81,013
States of the Zollverein	81,963
Austria	80,077
Belgium	41,830
Italy	41,830
Russia	31,916
United States of America	31,916
Switzerland	23,937
Sweden and Norway	23,937
Holland and the Dutch Colonies	23,937
Spain and Colonies	15,958
Turkey	13,965
Portugal and her Colonies	13,965
Brazil	8,373
States of South America	8,373
China, Japan and South Asia	8,373
Africa and Oceanica	8,373
Denmark	6,979
Greece	6,979
Brazilian Principalities	6,979
Mexico	6,979
Persia and Central Asia	6,979
Mexico and Central America	5,585

—In England, the summary of British exhibitors and their allotments of space in the Paris Exhibition of 1867 has just been made up, and shows the following results: The total number of proposed exhibitors exclusive of fine arts, is 2,280; in 1855 the number was 4,041. Total space demanded, 260,000 feet; space allotted in section exceeds 300,000 square feet, exclusive of space devoted to machinery.

—The Duke of Northumberland has petitioned the House of Lords to grant to him the right to which he bore his name, and which has for more than two centuries been borne by the Percy family, and which is of the true ground. To secure a new approach from Charing Cross to the Northumberland House, Northumberland 24 Yorks with to demolish Northumberland House.

—In Melbourne, Australia, a new style of house-cleaning is now working up 300 tons a week, has been constructed, which is capable of cleaning at one operation. It is expected to do the work at a cost of 7s. 6d. about 34 cents for each ton, which is about one-half the cost of cleaning 2,000 tons per week is calculated at 6d. 12½ cents in each ton. The bed of the river is composed of 1,000 cubic contains about 40 cents' worth of gold per ton, could be worked at these rates.

—Recent Atlantic Cable has ten shedding wires galvanized instead of plain. With this exception, it is the precise counterpart of that it landed last fall. Galvanizing is usually considered to weaken iron wire about 10 per cent. The breaking of the wire in submarine strength is given: the wires stretch a little, so that the heavy cable to bear the shock of waves, and the breaking strain is really increased to nine tons.

—While the daughter of a wealthy farmer at old curiosity shop in the city was displaying a Malay dagger to a purchaser, recently, the weapon fell from the handle and struck the floor, when the blade limb began to swell immediately, and had to be amputated at the knee. On testing the weapon, it was found that the point had been dipped in poison.

—We have heretofore made mention of the fact that the English military authorities have given attention to Gen. Pickett, the rebel commander, and the last advices from over the water tell us that the Emperor Napoleon has done the same. From a telegraphic letter, saying that he means to look into his affairs and "do the business interest." Gen. Morris formerly commanded a regiment of Zouaves.

—The year 1867 is fixed as the centenary year of all lovers of music, when a grand festival is to be observed at Rome with great pomp, and other celebrations are to be held in Paris, Vienna, Naples and the city blindly attractive, both to the religious of the Catholic world and to the curious of every grade. A grand Ecumenical Council is to be held, a coronation of the Emperor and Empress, and numerous events of a kind. The idea of the centenary originated, it is said, with Pius IX., who was struck with the idea while meeting the last year to celebrate the centenary of Dante. It has been adopted and applied it to mother and a higher subject.

MR. E. E. ALISON, in a contribution to the Quarterly Journal of Agriculture on the Tenerife, says that the canary bird—"When I saw it first in its native country, was scarcely recognize it was the same species as our domestic yellow warbler, so much is the latter altered by domestication and repeated crossing. The native bird is grey on the wings, the body is green and the back a very dark gray. It builds on bushy trees or high shrubs, lays from four to six pale-blue eggs, and sometimes hatches six times in a season. I was surprised to find that each flock has a different song. The note is between that of a skylark and a goldfinch, but more musical than that of the latter. It is very tame, and generally dies in a couple of years if kept in a cage.

EXTERIOR OF THEATRE, MACAO, CHINA.—FROM A SKETCH BY H. HILDEBRANDT.

EXTERIOR AND INTERIOR OF THE THEATRE AT MACAO, CHINA.

Our readers who are accustomed to the scenic excellence of the New York Theatres, more especially the Winter Garden, Wallack's and Niblo's, will be, doubtless, amused by comparing them with those of a nation which boasts a stereotyped civilization of 4,000 years—and it will be interesting to them to learn how the Celestials manage their entertainments.

A Chinese theatrical entertainment is, we believe, rather disrespectfully, termed "sing-song,"—why, we are at a loss to imagine, unless it be that the words are intoned or sung, as in a French vaudeville, or at the opera. But here all resemblance ends between the Celestial theatricals at Macao and the gayety, and eclat of the Parisian vaudevilles.

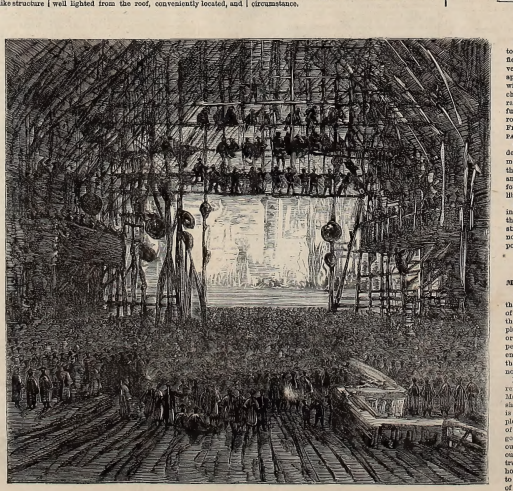
Messrs. John Chinaman & Co., the proprietors and managers, have certainly been at no great expense in the construction and decoration of "the house;" or, it it be owned and conducted by a company, it is one formed on the strictly "limited liability" principle. It seems to be nothing more than a vast barnlike structure of bamboos, thatched with straw and laced with calico or skins. Perhaps the funds are all realized up in payment of the strong cast or great "stars" engaged. Into the quality of the acting or singing, however, Herr Hildebrandt gives us no insight; and probably, if we actually witnessed the performance, we should only be in the position of a French friend of ours, who, though he rather prided himself upon not understanding a word of English, insisted upon accompanying us to hear "Brother Sam," and whose visage—we mean that of our French friend—was the picture of melancholy during the whole evening.

The acting or singing can hardly be bad; for, judging by the "queue" outside and the crowd inside, it draws good houses. But whatever its relative merits, there is one arrangement from which even the manager of the perennial Barnum's might take a hint. His Chinese brother keeps open all day long; the single performances of two hours' duration immediately succeeding one another! Hence, however, sometimes arises a little difficulty: the Macaoese (is that the proper adjective?) are so passionately fond of the drama or sing-song, that they will not retire on the conclusion of the performance for which they have paid. Yet to this emergency the manager is quite equal —and here is another valuable hint for Mr. Barnum. It appears that a sort of fire-engine, or hydraulic force part of the properties of a Chinese theatre, and the machine supernumeraries bring to play vigorously on the laggards, the result generally being to effectually damp their enthusiasm and drive them out. But should this fail, resort is had to stronger measures—water is exchanged for fire. Fusees, hand-grenades, or some such projectiles—in reality, we suppose, a virulent sort of the pretty Chinese toy fireworks —are discharged at or among refractory lingerers, who, we have little doubt, rush out from this final assault, some of them in a burst of fiery indignation.

We do not know that we have any further recommendations, suggested by these drawings, to make either to theatrical managers or others. The stage, we see, is lighted from the sky above, and the body of the house kept in darkness—an excellent arrangement for a daylight representation. The interior of the Macao Theatre resembles, it must be confessed, an immense cage more than anything else. As regards the auditorium, there is a pit, promenade, or "arena," but there appear to be no boxes, stalls or reserved seats of any kind—at least, those who want such luxuries must climb for them and perch upon the bamboo framework of this very queer theatre.

THE FREIGHT DEPOT OF THE PANAMA RAILROAD.

THE illustrations on our front page tell the story of the late explosion and its terrific effects, of which we gave an account last week, better than words. The freight depot of the Panama Railroad was one of the finest structures of the kind on the continent, composed wholly of stone, iron and glass, and apparently proof against anything less destructive than a thunderbolt or an earthquake. It was 300 feet long, 80 feet wide, well lighted from the roof, conveniently located, and arranged for the reception and delivery of goods, having a long wharf extending from its side, at which the largest vessels could be moored, and admitting trains of cars into which merchandise could be transferred directly from the ships, and in turn from the cars to the vessels. The Artist has given an excellent sketch of the depot as it was, and as it is; while the group of workmen removing the debris, promise the speedy restoration of a building so necessary to the convenience of the Railroad Company and the interests of commerce.



On the right is seen the wharf, some 400 feet in length, on each side of which vessels discharged their cargo, and which was also destroyed.

In front is a lagoon, or small bay, the native market place, where fish, fruits and vegetables are brought for sale by dusky hucksters, whose costume and manners are not very well adapted to the requirements of modern society. Between the depot and the wharf were the offices, where the books were kept, and the business of the company done. The clerks were fortunately absent at the time of the explosion, and owe their lives to this circumstance.

On the left, the railroad track passes, for the purpose of switching off trains, as the requirements of business may demand. In front everything was admirably arranged for convenience and durability, while architectural propriety was duly regarded.

Aside from the destruction of property, the company will suffer great inconvenience from the want of a suitable and safe place for the storage of the immense amount of freight passing through their hands, but their well-known energy will soon restore what has been so suddenly destroyed, while there will remain only the regret that so many lives have been prematurely sacrificed. The material for rebuilding can be readily obtained along the line of the railroad, from quarries that have supplied stone for all the uses of the company, while the iron girders supporting the roof will be forged at the shops in Aspinwall, or sent on from New York.

In a short period few traces of the present ruin will be seen, and a new structure, as massive and imposing as the former one, will be erected in its place, the busy scene of trade from all parts of the world.

INTERIOR OF THEATRE AT MACAO, CHINA, DURING A PERFORMANCE.

GETTYSBURG CEMETERY, PENN.

ONE of our Artists, now on a tour of inspection over the old battle-fields of the late war, has sent us some very interesting sketches of the present appearance of Gettysburg. Our readers will doubtless recollect that this sepulchre of departed heroism was inaugurated on the 4th of July, 1865, and for full particulars of the spot and its surroundings we refer them to No. 512 of FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

Our sketches are so graphic that no description is needed. Such a memorial is the most eloquent discourse that can be uttered against the folly and wickedness of all wars, save those founded on national honor and the liberty of the people.

In after years many a mournful actor in the past struggle will come to drop the tear of regret over a fratricidal strife, never, we trust, to be renewed, not even in the windy warfare of politicians.

MAY DAY.

Moving In and Moving Out.

OF all the villainous customs that have ever afflicted a people, that of making a single day in all the year the one upon which one dwelling or place of business must be occupied, or delivered up, is the worst. It is peculiar to New York, and for its exemption all other cities may be truly thankful, even though they have nothing else to be thankful for.

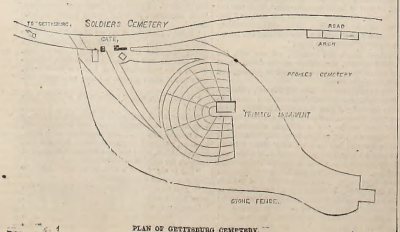
Bright and early the day that is rendered poetical by May Queens and May Queens; by the rich warm sunshine of spring, and the singing of birds, is turned into a pandemonium by the plotting of landlords and the weakness of tenants. On that day our household gods are rudely torn from their shrines, our hearthstones are deserted, and with our worldly property mounted on a truck, hired at the small price of $5 per hour, breakage included, we start out to find a new resting-place for the sole of our feet.

But the mere act of moving

THE ENTRANCE TO GETTYSBURG CEMETERY, PENNSYLVANIA.—FROM A SKETCH BY SIR. E. TAYLOR.

nothing. It is like the criminal who is to be executed. There is nothing in the dying—it is the preparing to die. So it is with moving. It is the preparation, the hunting of all household rubbish from the spots where it has lain concealed and dusty for years. The packing! In boxes, in baskets, in bags and jars! How the mahogany is wrapped in swaddling clothes, and the china in straw! Alas! to no effect, for the first is bruised and the last broken. How everything is piled so carefully, to be ready for the hoarses on the eventful morning, and how all the family sleep the night before—and a good many nights after, for the matter of that—on the floor, because the bedsteads are all taken down, so as to be ready.

And at last comes the fatal day. Three men, an Irishman, a Dutchman, and a negro, are engaged to assist the carman. The Irishman makes his appearance at such an unpleasantly early hour as to lead to the surmise that he has not been to bed at all, and with such an unpleasantly unsteady gait as to suggest fearful visions of his unfitness; visions which are presently illustrated by his missing step and bringing up in a sitting position in the area, from which he cannot be got to budge until he is assisted by the police an hour or two later, when he is found in a solidly somnolent condition. The Dutchman and negro arrive about eight o'clock, an hour after the carman, and then comes the tug of war. The negro never does anything without noise, the Dutchman, on the contrary is quiet, sleepy, and stolid, disappearing every half hour, and coming back round the corner wiping his mouth and smelling strongly of beer.



SOLDIERS' GRAVES AT GETTYSBURG CEMETERY. (3,555 UNION SOLDIERS BURIED HERE).

Chairs and tables are ruthlessly seized and hurried on stairs. Boxes are dragged with a heavy thump on step to step, and looking-glasses are rushed through space at a rate that forbids collisions with safety. Before you have had time to breathe, "the other family," shows itself, and crowds the hall, the stairs, and the stoop with their own traps. A piano is trotted into the hall, and set up in such a way as to monopolize that thoroughfare, and cause a collision between the rival helps, to your damage—one mirror and a full chamber set goes to the dem bow-wows, and making it necessary that you should personally throw yourself into the breach, to put a stop to threatened bloodshed.

And still the crash goes on. People slip down-stairs with heavy loads, and land at the bottom a total wreck; and people slip up-stairs and pick up unconsidered trifles, which they throw out of the window to waiting pals below, while still other people do other things quite as unpleasant and unprofitable, but which it is impossible to help on this day; perhaps they even can't help it themselves.

And this is the way a May day goes. Noise, dust, crash, and confusion. Broken furniture, smashed china, punched pictures and muddy beds mark its career, until at night you gather the family chickens together to consider supper and a spot to roost. In this moment it is found that the basket in which Cæsar and his fortunes were, or Cæsar's bread and butter, which is all the same, is missing. Not a bit of cold meat or a slice of the staff of life is to be found, and there is nothing for it but that Paterfamilias must go out foraging; and go out he does—though by this time it is raining quite smartly—and after an hour returns soaked, with some bread, butter, smoked beef, cheese, and stich other comfortaris as can be found in the usual round of Dutch grocerydom. In due time the supper is devoured, hunger supplying the sauce, and amid the debris of furniture and mixed up generalities, one after the other of the family are stowed away, so ending May day, though not to ending their troubles. Next comes cleaning, putting down carpets, putting up bedsteads and hanging curtains, until at last if the family is settled and over the fatigues of May day on the 1st of June, they have done well, and should congratulate themselves.

PLAN OF GETTYSBURG CEMETERY.

BATTLEFIELD HOUSE, GETTYSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.

CHANGES.

BY EDWARD C. BIGG

WHEREVER mortal man may move
Where'er his restless feet may rove,
Or his inquiring mind may range,
He finds inscribed on all things—"CHANGE."
No man, no work, e'er yet had birth,
Nought so substantial on the earth,
But Time's rude touches soon will show
That all is fleeting here below.

Where once I hunted 'mid deep woods,
Or fished in Oulcoat's cooling floods,
And heard the partridge drumming near,
Luxuriant meadows now appear.
The plain old Manse, where I was born
Has been of former covering shorn,
And now enlarged and painted new,
Presents its richer walls to view.

Another, where I long have lived,
Has through its storms of years survived,
But like old garments, patched and rent,
A mournful sight its walls present.
Though from beneath its roof I've moved,
I'll ne'er forget the home I loved,
Made sacred by the life of those Whose lovely forms in death repose.

Where once no house appeared in sight,
And thieving wolves howled through the night,
Kind neighbors came and settled nigh,
Who love to talk of days gone by.
Those grey-haired, toil-worn pioneers
Did much that now the valley cheers;
And when their friends shall be bereft
Of them, their hikers will be left.

No scene on tell what changes lie
Within the future. Ev'n to-day
This little hamlet may become
To scores of strangers now a home.
Where now the farmer plows his fields,
Or counts the sheaves that harvest yields,
A goodly village may arise,
With steeples pointing to the skies.

Where now we hear the city's hum,
Some traveler in the years to come—
Some Layard of that distant day—
May, with wondering eye, survey
The moldering heaps of ruins vast,
The buried glory of the past;
And stand on his own foothills
Resounding through deserted halls.

Of all the changes Time may bring,
I will not now attempt to sing;
Of this I'm sure—that God is just;
He changeth not—in Him I'll trust;
For when I read aright His laws,
I see for every change a cause;
And while I do my duty here,
No change of time can make me fear.

The Spectre of Cliffe;

OR,

THE FAIR LADY OF THE SHROUD.

By the Author of "Lost Sir Massingberd," &c. &c.

CHAPTER II.—CONTINUED.

RALPH loved his head, overcome with sorrowful thought; but when she rose close to him, and placed her fragile hand in his, he carried it to his lips, and kissed it tenderly. As he did so, she, with the air of one to whom sovereign power is nothing new, inclined graciously toward the messenger.

"How did it happen? Tell me, Clement."

"For these three days past" (the husband and wife exchanged a meaning glance) "the poor gentleman has been getting worse and worse; at last he grew very violent. Gideon visited him at most yesterday afternoon, and Mr. Clifford seized the opportunity of the open door to push out, and cast himself over the well-staircase. He was killed upon the spot."

Ralph shuddered, and shuddered.

"That will do," said he; "I will hear more at another time. The servants are now aroused, and will see that you want for nothing. I am sorry that I spoke to you so roughly, sir;" and with a stately inclination of his head, Ralph Clifford moved thoughtfully away.

"Why is not Gideon here?" inquired Mrs. Clifford, when the door shutting close together, as soon as she had spoken, left a pause with a cord clasp.

"He is hurt," answered Clement, shortly. "They had a struggle for it, he and the other."

"I thought so," answered the woman, quietly. "He must have been hurt, indeed, not to have come himself. It is very unfortunate."

"Well, I am sure I had rather he had come than I," answered Clement, sullenly. "Such a dreadful road as we had to travel, and not much of a welcome at the end of it from one's own sister. Why, I believe your husband thought at first that I was no more a gentleman than Cator here."

"I dare say he did," returned Mrs. Clifford, dryly. "My husband is very peculiar."

"Peculiar!" echoed Mr. Carr. "I think so indeed. Why, his hair alone is enough to frighten one. He ought to be at the Dene himself; I'm sure he is make enough."

"Hush!" returned the lady, imperatively. "You will have an excellent breakfast, Clement, and whatever you please to call for in Cliffe Hall is at your service; see, then, that you make yourself at home—so well, that you need not remember that you have any other home. Speak not one word about the Dene. You will find attendance yonder."

She shot one look of intelligence toward Cator, which was returned swifter than shuttlecock, and followed her husband to his chamber.

"That's pretty treatment of a brother," ejaculated Clement, but not until she was well out of earshot. He is to be disappointed on the coming of it all at last, for I'm sure we've had enough to put up with."

"You had every revenge, too, Mr. Clement," observed the other, grimly.

"One has paid for it," answered Vitellius, with an ugly look; "but the husband is not the wrong side still. I am longing for the day when we shall cry quits."

"The road there is in good hands," returned the keeper of luxuries; "Miss Grace as was, is a clever woman; and in the meantime let us punish the larder."

The morning that witnessed the arrival of the messengers from the Dene was many hours older when Mrs. Clifford sat down to breakfast in her own boudoir, attired in deepest black, and wearing an air, if not of respectful sorrow, at least of serious thought. Through the bay window opposite she could mark from where she sat the golden ruinous of the autumn woods of Cliffe and the windings of its well-loved stream, that, at the beginning the thread of pearl, which, like a long necklace, gem laid, now seen, now in maiden's bosom, decked the swelling hill, down to the far distance, where, a river broad and shining, it yet was lost in haze and mist. The table was spread before her, and all its course was fair; whether with the moorcock and ptarmigan upon the heathery hill, or in the well-stocked Park, where the gentle does strayed down to know their beauty, or in the broad rich level beyond, while with farms, and with yellow with ripe corn. It was the plain which pleased her best, because it was the richest; for it was greed that kindled in Grace Clifford's eyes as she gazed upon that lordly scene. All was hers as far as those eyes could range, to live in and be mistress of; but if the proud dowagers of Cliffe had possessed a throne so far, she would have hungered still for more. All was hers, but for her life only—to enjoy, but not to possess. True, she could remain there all this life-long, credited at alone, never hoped or thought (although she sometimes dreamed, in spite of herself) of anything better; it mattered, she only loved herself, and therefore it could matter nothing into whose hands this wealth should pour, when her own life-tenure is over. Nevertheless, it was that thought which darkened her fair face, and marred her brow, as she gazed forth upon that scene, whose peaceful beauty should have found its own reflection there—To enjoy, but not to possess. "Nay," answered those tight, short lips, "but that cannot be. I must possess before I can enjoy it." She beat her little foot against the floor, once, twice, and yet again, but not in passion; rather, indeed, the depths of her subtle heart, rarely indeed was evidenced upon the surface. There was one answering rap from beneath, and after an interval, a side-door opened behind her, and a young girl entered the room. Mrs. Clifford did not even turn her head, but sat with her rapt gaze still fixed upon the view without.

"Breakfast waits, Mildred," said she, thoughtfully. "You are late this morning. Have you heard the news from the Dene?"

"Yes, papa," replied the girl. "Mr. Cyril Clifford is dead."

"Ay, child; the ground behind us then at least is safe. Mothers are said to become sane once sometimes, and stretch their fettered hands again for what was once their own; but the dead lay claim to nothing—not even to the lord of Cliffe at last. I place my feet firm on the second step—but it is still far to climb. Do you feel strong, Ethelred?"

She did not speak these words as a mother to address her niece at all, and she seemed well now mechanically, when no contempt was meant.

"I am strong enough, aunt—for a child," replied Mildred Leigh, coldly. "What would you have me do?"

Swift as a snake, the lady of Cliffe turned round and placed her hand upon the shoulder of her niece, as she sat at table, so near that not a quiver of the lip, not a trembling of an eyelid could escape her gaze.

"Listen, Mildred; you are no fool, although you would fain that I should take you for one. You are not a baby, either. Girls have been wooed and won, ay, and been widowed, too, before they have reached your age. You know for what those years have been given you—and how to use them. You do not plait that raven hair so unstrungly to please yourself alone. Boys like that color always"—she glanced aside to the mirror, glistening in the cabon panel like floating ice on a dark sea, at her own unctuous tresses—"but 'tis the blonde that lasts. You will be gray, child, before me. Your time is short, young as you think yourself—for you are not minus it. Look you, because Ralph Clifford wears his hair like you, and having collars filled with goodly wine, persists in drinking—because he is young, and lives in a half-dream, through poring on his ancestors, and looking for their curse to fall on him and his, you think perhaps that he himself is mad."

"I, aunt? Nay, not I?"

"Who, then, child? Who has dared to think my husband mad? Your face does not pay compliments. Was he mad to marry me?" A twinkling at the corner of the girl's mouth—the hint of the beginning of a smile—had brought this question swift as the quivering wire upon a tower draws the lightning. "Well, and what then? Are not all men mad to marry? By heaven, if I were maid, I'd call no man my own, my purse my own; nor would I have children praying for my death, or heirs of any kind. I would not buy the best of wives at such a price. And yet, I suppose, you think there is no man so rich but that he might give both land and gold to make you his, and yet be no ayendthrift."

"I have never thought about it, aunt," replied Mildred Leigh, colorless as virgin marble, and some sculptor whose name she knew by it to his purpose. Not a muscle moved, and the long lashes that were drooped beneath them were as if in slumber.

"You lie—you lie!" returned Mrs. Clifford, slowly. "Not thought about it, and a girl! Why, girls think of nothing else. Why not confess it, Mildred? You have some right to value yourself highly. Are you not my niece—the nearest to the mistress of Cliffe Hall? Are you not a lady born? Can you not paint? Can you not play? Ah, what a lure is there—the rounded arm upon the harp, the sloping hand, the fingers twinkling on the jet-black keys! Can you not sing as any siren can? What would a man have more? But, Mildred, I am the born sone of these fine things, but scarcely could read a line out of a book; or if you could, would have had none to listen to you, since all were rude and outlurebes about you; your father a boor, dead in a drunken brawl; your mother a evil memory; your brothers hated by all who knew them, and most hated by those who knew them best—driving a base trade basely! You had been your fortune —as it was mine, child—you might have said indeed: 'Should any man of rank and wealth—let alone a Clifford—be attracted and the richest in all the country-side—propose to marry me, and take me from this sordid roof, and make me mistress of his ancestral home, he surely must be mad.' So, niece, when I saw you smile, or thinking of a smile just now, when I said: 'Was he mad to marry me?' I was neither angered nor surprised."

"Nay, aunt," answered the girl, in a depressed tone, "I was thinking like that indeed. But having heard you say yourself that Uncle Ralph was likely some day to——"

"Never, Mildred!" interrupted Mrs. Clifford—"never, never! You are mistaken. You never heard me say so; and if you dreamed you heard me, you were mistaken. Ralph Clifford is sane enough, but he will not live long."—Mildred pushed aside her plate, its contents almost untasted, and leaned back in her chair with her hand pressed to her brow.—"Nay, I wish I could think otherwise, child," continued her aunt, softly; "but I cannot. Gideon or Gideon's —which I can afford so ill to lose just now as his. But he has not many years, perhaps months, to pass before the Dene. When I am widowed here—well-dowered though I be, and free to live my life out at the Hall—things will be altered; I shall not be free from cares then. Ralph Clifford at Hall for some still more hateful mate—a gipsy from the forest, like as not, some large-limbed wench that knows how to poison." Her hands closed tightly as she spoke, so that the pink nails of her fingers stabbed her delicate flesh, and she opened them again hastily as if for air. But for that, she must need have seen Mildred's tell-tale cheek pale, and the color rush impetuously over cheek and brow. But the lady of Cliffe had passions of her own to hide, and her face averted, though she, spoke on. "Where I have ruled, I will rule still to the end; and it is you who must help me to do so, as the mouse helped the lion in the fable." She paused, as if waiting for a reply, but no answer coming save in the quick throbbings or the girl's heart, inaudible to her own ears, but to the more terrified ears they seemed to fill the room with sound, Mrs. Clifford added: "Do you know how you must help me, Mildred?"

"No, aunt."

"By being a dutiful and faithful daughter-in-law. You must marry Rupert Clifford, and that soon."

"But I do not love him, aunt."

"So much the better for you. Your judgment, when you come to rule him, will be the less likely to be blinded."

"But he does not love me," faltered the girl.

"Even if such were the case," answered Mrs. Clifford, coldly, "there are means to make him without much trouble. But he does love you, and you know it, Mildred; for I know it, and you must need have learned it before me. When he was your boy-lover, he was a mere baby but yesterday, and strove to kiss it—pshaw, never blush for that; it was only I who witnessed it—you were right not to suffer him. You did very well; but do not say that Rupert is indifferent to you. That was not the first love-passage between you two, as I presume. Ay, so I thought. Why, what a trembling dove is this, that the very mention of her future master should set all her feathers in flutter!"

Mildred Leigh did tremble, yet not with the timidity of love, but rather as the dove, whose wings are spread when the hawk is poising, and threatening to stoop.

"By my faith!" as the Clifords say, although I doubt whether one of them ever had enough to swear by, but you play the maiden prettily, Only, look you, Mildred," added her aunt, changing her tone of tolerant but unexpected contempt, "do not over-act it; or, rather, keep your more frigid moods for me, but to your lover thaw a little. You may let him kiss your hand next time—not snatch your fingers away, as though his lips were springes. I thought to have had a very different role to support, girl, when I brought you to Cliffe Hall last year; I deemed you would want a duenna or Mistress Prudence to say, 'Hang back! hang back!' Why there is not a handsomer lad than Rupert Clifford betwixt this and Cavel, and fitted with all the graces that are dear to fools of your age; while as for those matters to which a woman, if a wise one, sets her mind, there is scarcely a better match in all the north. 'That luck was mine,' say all folks here, yet yours is twice as good. Ralph Clifford was neither young nor fair to look upon; and he had even another woman's sons, and Cyril was alive; while you—you moping, milk-faced fool, beware how you anger me with tears! I have not got that far upon my way to be balked by a girl's mad fancy. Mad! There never was a Clifford half so mad as you would be if you said 'No' to Rupert; for if you lose him, Mildred—who are as poor as any beggar, dependent on my bounty for your very garments —you lose all you see from yonder casement—wealth; and station, that makes the proudest smile upon you; and power, that bends the stiff neck of the poor; and you gain—Mildred, be sure of this—a life-long enemy in one who never yet has failed to work her will!"

"I know it well," answered Mildred, hopelessly; I will endeavor not to shrink; I will strive to love your strange Rupert."

"I care not for that, girl; strive you to marry him. Now, get you gone, for I have wbis to weave that demand my most deliberate thought. This Carr, here, he is your uncle, child, but not your equal. Give him your finger-tips, but not to kiss. Be cold and stately to him, and especially in the presence of Ralph Clifford. Do not fear less this should anger him; it will be easy enough to be affable when you have become great; for a smooth word from one who is in honor heals all.

CHAPTER III.

CLIFFE HALL, like every building of that age, had a gloomy look. There was an air of solemn repose about it which hushed the careless voice. The ground-floor was shrouded in gloom. Either the windows were recesses, broad within, but narrowing in the thickness of the wall to the merest slits, or they were hidden by the terrace parapet. Moreover, where the panes were moderately large, many of them were of stained glass, and blushed with the knights and dames of the house of Clifford. The library, in particular, which should have been the best lighten room of all, was the one that was hemmed in by the roof of the terrace, and entered from within by a descent; the sun even at noonday only made a sort of splendid gloom there. The walls were completely through the painted shields of Sir John and Sir Gwinnet, of Sir Bevis and Sir Mark, before they passed the window. This window had once been the chief armory, and still bore traces of the use to which it had been put, before the mighty tomes, standing shoulder to shoulder, had enough room left to be taken down alone and read, garrisoned the room. Above the shelves glanced many a fair device, deserving to be the cognizance of mace and spear, of axe and harquebuse; and upon the oaken panels, between the shelves, shone whole sheaves of ancient weapons, the gleanings of many a harvest-field of war.

Upon the morning of the interview between Mildred Leigh and her aunt, that excitement was occupied, as it usually was at that period of the day, by Rupert and Raymond Clifford. They were sitting within the same arched window, and close to the casement, in order to get as much light as possible for the occupations in which they were engaged. The elder was poring over an old ill-printed volume of romances, the younger was engaged in making a fish-hook attractive for trout.

"I wish you wouldn't whistle so, Ray," observed the former, lazily; "how is one to read?"

"I didn't know you were reading, Jue; you seemed to me to be only thinking."

"Only thinking," sighed Rupert; "but that is much harder work than reading."

"Is it?" replied the other, carelessly. "I never do either, and therefore am no judge. What are the important matters which demand your attention so urgently this morning, that my whistling Charles le Maine's hunting' would interfere thus? I was doing it solely out of compliment to your Jacobite tendencies."

The elder did not reply, but sat with downcast eyes fixed on the floor, on which the rich heraldic blazons were thrown, tracing idly with his foot the fantastic course of brief bend and riding, scrange and fret. After a little, he broke silence, with:

"I wish I was you, Raymond."

"That is an old wish," returned the other, laughing. "Do you, who know so much, then, desire to be ignorant? Or, being heir of Cliffe, would you exchange it for a younger brother portion?"

"There are worse things than being poor," returned the young man, gravely; "but it was not of mere station I was thinking. I envy you your happy disposition, your never-dagging spirits, and those pleasures which the simplest poverty never fail to afford. I envy you your very strength of limb, Raymond, and the manly beauty of your face."

"Really, Jue, you make me blush," replied the other, laughing; "but as I am accustomed to such pretty speeches from the ladies, I assure you, Mrs. Clifford was so good as to tell me, in confidence, only three days ago, that I was a fool, and I wonder if there is such a thing as a white sandal?"

"Hush, Ray, hush! The walls of Cliffe have ears!"

"Their talent for hearing, Jue, is, however, a very modern accomplishment; just two years old, as I reckon, this day. You may shake your head, brother, but until our good father brought that woman hither, what things we spoke only reached the ears for which they were intended."

"She is our father's wife, Ray, and—and——" Rupert stopped and stammered.

"And we should respect her for his sake, you were about to add," observed Raymond coolly. "Upon the contrary, I protest. It is mainly with his account that I hold her so vile. He is a changed man since he married her; he loves not as his boys as he used to do; and as for poor me, it is well if he does not end by hating me. Do you remember telling me that ancient story of the Greek creature, half woman, half serpent, fair without, but foul within, with whom men fell enamored, and so perished? There must be some glamour about this woman, or our father could never be so enmeshed."

"I have read, Raymond, that men, when old, are more liable to the enchantments of love than even in youth."

"I can scarcely believe that, Rupert," exclaimed the younger, gravely, after a little pause.

"And scarcely can I, brother; yet a wise man has written it, who had himself been young. It is certain that Mrs. Clifford is gentle and comely; and there lies magic enough in that without sorcery."

"Comely!" echoed Raymond, with abhorrence. "I could as easily admire the comeliness of a viper. Gentle! ay, the stealthy gentleness of a tigeress, as she creeps upon her unconscious victim. You smile incredulously, Rue; you have only seen her velvet foot—but I have seen its claws."

"She has, I do think, been cruel to you, Raymond."

"Nay, brother, say rather she has been herself to me; to my father and to you she has never revealed her true character. How strange it is, Rue, with all your brains and book-learning, that you cannot read a wicked woman! You see how our father's melancholy deepens daily—how his mind withdraws itself more and more from all wholesome matters, to brood over the sad fortunes of our house; and yet you cannot see who casts the shadow, and ever thrusts herself between him and the fostering sun."

"It needs no woman to make a Clifford sad," returned Rupert, gloomily; "to blacken the annals of our race would indeed be a superfluous task. There is scarcely a chamber in this house which is not eloquent of our crimes or shame: and if we go out of doors, there is no tongue but wags to the same tune."

"They wag not so to me, brother; never, at least, since I pitched Gawain Harrison into Nettle Hole for prating to me about Guy Clifford. It is understood now, when I go a-fishing, that I want a man to carry my basket, not to tell foolish stories against my ancestors. Why, half a century hence, that righteous chastisement of Gawain at my hands will have swollen into an attempt to murder a vassal. Does heaven set its face against us, think you, more than against other folk, or is it not rather that we have rejected its alliance? You might just as well complain that we do not sit here in the pure sunlight, when we have shut it out ourselves with yon painted pride. I swear that I would rather be that peasant-boy, keeping sheep upon Ribble Fell-side, than be cursed with ancestors whose memory so dispirited me. If Guy Clifford did leap into Boden Pot, what then? Are you and I, and all his descendants, obliged to jump after him? Come, sweep these cobwebs from your mind, Rue, or one day they will do you a mischief?"

"What mean you by that, sir?" cried Rupert, starting to his feet, his blue eyes gleaming with rage. "How dare you say such things? You call others cruel, but none have ventured to wound me thus far."

"My dear Rue," returned the other with astonishment, and a pity that he strove in vain to conceal, "what have I said to anger you? I declare upon my honor, that I meant nothing more than such morbid thoughts were bad for anybody. Have we not now the saddest proof of it in our poor——"

"Be silent; do not mention him," interrupted Rupert, menacingly. "I tell you, I will not hear his name."

"What! not my father's?" returned Raymond. "I was merely about to repeat that his melancholy arises mainly from encouraging such fancies."

"Perhaps," answered Rupert, with an effort after self-control—"perhaps it does. I misunderstand you, Raymond; I did not mean——"

"I am sure you meant me no harm," replied the other, laying his hand kindly on Rupert's shoulder. "Come now with me a-fishing in Ribble Beck."

"I will join you there, Ray, presently; but I have something else to do first, I have indeed. I would rather be alone for a little." Rupert said this walking hastily toward the door, as though afraid lest his brother's importunity should overcome his own resolution.

Raymond's eyes followed him with genuine sympathy until the door had closed behind him. "Poor Rue, poor Rue!" he murmured. "God grant that thou mayst not bring the curse down on thine own head. It is no wonder that such prophecies work out their own fulfillment, when they have minds like thine to deal with. I wish with thee that thou and I could but change places. Rubbish of that sort might be shot here, I fancy," striking his broad chest a sounding blow, "without much damage. I am none of your dreamy ones, thank God! It is eleven o'clock. There are one, two, three good hours of fishing before me; and then, ah! then, for my sweet Mildred!"

